In the photograph on this page, the reader sees, to the left and in the immediate foreground, the traditional house of Dives, the rich man mentioned in the parable with Lazarus. Although the present building is unquestionably of modern date, the tradition, preserved in every detail, is so closely associated with this structure, that the "house of Dives" has become one of the sights of the Holy City. At the gate of this mansion, the traveler is told, sat the beggar, "desiring the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table," while the dogs came and licked the sores (Luke 16: 19–31.)

THE TRADITIONAL "HOUSE OF DIVES" IN JERUSALEM.

(From a photograph brought from the East by the Proprietor of "The Christian Herald.")

The dramatic sequel to the parable — the beggar in Abraham's bosom, the rich man in torment—was designed as a tremendous rebuke to the self-seeking and hypocritical Pharisees, and the ungodly rich generally.

By the great body of Scripture commentators, the story of Lazarus and Dives is regarded as a parable only—one of those marvelous spiritual illustrations which Jesus so frequently employed while teaching his disciples, or addressing the multitudes. The parable, as an object-lesson in logic, was at once fascinating and convincing, chaining the attention and swaying the mind of the hearer. Moreover, this particular instance is the more notable because it is the only case where a proper name is used by our Lord in a parable. For this reason, some writers have regarded Dives and Lazarus as real personages, and one very old Hebrew tradition gives the name of the rich man as Dobruk. Some interpreters declare Lazarus to have been a well-known mendicant in Jerusalem in Christ's day, and others, claiming still more detail, have even attempted to define his disease. Whether a real or imaginary person, he was one of a class, who, in all ages, have lain prone and helpless at the gate of affluence. Probably a man of Dives' stamp would not object to such beggars in his court, as their presence might be regarded by the world as evidence of his generosity.

Looking at the picture, one can, in imagination, again people the scene with life. The wealthy scribes and the proud Pharisees, both classes contemptuous of all beneath them socially and intellectually, and especially offensive because of their arrogance toward the poor; the crowds of "common people" from the lowest ranks in Jerusalem, who followed the Saviour and gladly drank in his words; the elegant aristocrat and the beggar almost jostling each other, yet with a vast social gulf between—these were the surroundings of the Master when he spoke this immortal parable which is as typical of the relations of the rich and the poor at the present time, as when it came fresh from his lips eighteen centuries ago.

It was not designed to show that Dives was personally responsible for the woes and miseries of his neighbor. The great truth emphasized by the parable is the existence of a social chasm dividing the poor from the rich, a gap too seldom bridged by sympathy and commiseration. The rich have the duties of a larger stewardship to fulfil, and if they fail in these, their condemnation is great in proportion to their neglected opportunities.

All wealth is a trust from the Lord, and rightly administered, it becomes a blessing to the human possessor and all who come into relations with him. Employed in the gratification of personal ambitions and tastes, however cultured or artistic, wealth fails to afford its possessor any enduring satisfaction. Negative goodness is not enough. Our modern Dives may build fine houses, entertain in princely fashion, be a patron of art and letters, and have friends unnumbered; yet if his wealth is unconsecrated, and if he does not realize the responsibility of his stewardship, and

(Continued on page 459.)

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Matt. 12: 31, 32, "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men," etc. Heb. 12: 17, "He found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears."

AS sometimes you gather the whole family around the evening stand to hear some book read, so now we gather—a great Christian family group—to study this text; and now may one and the same Lamp cast its glow on all the circle!

You see from the first passage that I read that there is a sin against the Holy Ghost for which a man is never pardoned. Once having committed it, he is bound hand and foot for the dungeons of despair. Sermons may be preached to him, songs may be sung to him, prayers may be offered in his behalf; but all to no purpose. He is a captive for this world, and a captive for the world that is to come. Do you suppose that there is any one here who has committed that sin? All sins are against the Holy Ghost; but my text speaks of one especially. It is very clear to my own mind that the sin against the Holy Ghost was the ascribing of the works of the Spirit to the agency of the devil in the time of the apostles. Indeed, the Bible distinctly tells us that. In other words, if a man had sight given to him, or if another was raised from the dead, and someone standing there should say, "This man got his sight by Satanic power; the Holy Spirit did not do this; Beelzebub accomplished it:" or, "This man raised from the dead was raised by Satanic influence," the man who said that dropped down under the curse of the text, and had committed the fatal sin against the Holy Ghost,

Now, I do not think it is possible in this day to commit that sin. I think it was possible only in apostolic times. But it is a very terrible thing ever to say anything against the Holy Ghost, and it is a marked fact that our race has been marvelously kept back from that profanity. You hear a man swear by the name of the Eternal God, and by the name of Jesus Christ, but you never heard a man swear by the name of the Holy Ghost. There are those here to-day who fear they are guilty of the unpardonable sin. Have you such anxiety? Then I have to tell you positively that you have not committed that sin, because the very anxiety is a result of the movement of the gracious Spirit, and your anxiety is proof positive, as certainly as anything that can be demonstrated in mathematics, that you have not committed the sin that I have been speaking of. I can look off upon this audience and feel that there is salvation for all. It is not like when they put out with those life-boats from the "Loch Earn" for the "Ville du Havre. They knew there was [illegible] the passengers, but they were going to [illegible] to-day we man the life-boat of the Gospel, and we cry out over the sea, "Room for all!" Oh that the Lord Jesus Christ would, this hour, bring you all out of the flood of sin, and plant you on the deck of the glorious old Gospel craft!

But while I have said I do not think it is possible for us to commit the particular sin spoken of in the first text, I have for my reason of the second text to call your attention to the fact that there are sins which, though they may be pardoned, are in some respects irrevocable; and you can find no place for repentance, though you seek it carefully with tears. Esau had a birthright given him. In olden times it meant not only temporal but spiritual blessing. One day Esau took this birthright and traded it off for something to eat. Oh, the folly! But let us not be too severe upon him, for some of us have committed the same folly. After he had made the trade, he wanted to get it back. Just as though you to-morrow morning should take all your notes and bonds and government securities, and should go into a restaurant, and in a fit of recklessness and hunger throw all those securities on the counter and ask for a plate of food, making that exchange. This was the one Esau made. He sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and he was very sorry about it afterward; but "he found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

There is an impression in almost every man's mind that somewhere in the future there will be a chance where he can correct all his mistakes. Live as we may, if we only repent in time, God will forgive us, and then all will be as well as though we had never committed sin. My discourse shall come in collision with that theory. I shall show you, my friends, as God will help me, that there is such a thing as unsuccessful repentance; that there are things done wrong that always stay wrong, and for them you may seek some place of repentance, and seek it carefully, but never find it.

Belonging to this class of irrevocable mistakes is the folly of a misspent youth. We may look back to our college days, and think how we neglected chemistry, or geology, or botany, or mathematics. We may be sorry about it all our days. Can we ever get the discipline or the advantage that we would have had had we attended to those duties in early life? A man wakes up at forty years of age and finds that his youth has been wasted, and he strives to get back his early advantages. Does he get them back—the days of boyhood, the days in college, the days under his father's roof? "Oh," he says, "if I could only get those times back again, how I would improve them:" My brother, you will never get them back. They are gone, gone. You may be very sorry about it, and God may forgive, so that you may at last reach heaven; but you will never get over some of the mishaps that have come to your soul as a result of your neglect of early duty. You may try to undo it; you cannot undo it. When you had a boy's arms, and a boy's eyes, and a boy's heart, you ought to have attended to those things. A man says, at fifty years of age, "I do wish I could get over these habits of indolence." When did you get them? At twenty or twenty-five years of age. You cannot shake them off. They will hang to you to the very day of your death. If a young man through a long course of evil conduct undermines his physical health, and then repents of it in after-life, the Lord may pardon him; but that does not bring back good physical condition. I said to a minister of the Gospel, one Sabbath, at the close of the service, "Where are you preaching now?" "Oh," he says, "I am not preaching. I am suffering from the physical effects of early sin. I can't preach now; I am sick." A consecrated man he now is, and he mourns bitterly over early sins; but that does not arrest their bodily effects.

The simple fact is, that men and women often take twenty years of their life to build up influences that require all the rest of their life to break down. Talk about a man beginning life when he is twenty-one years of age; talk about a woman beginning life when she is eighteen years of age! Ah, no! In many respects that is the time they close life. In nine cases out of ten, all the questions of eternity are decided before that. Talk about a majority of men getting their fortunes between thirty and forty! They get or lose fortunes between ten and twenty. When you tell me that a man is just beginning life, I tell you he is just closing it. The next fifty years will not be of as much importance to him as the first twenty.

Now, why do I say this? Is it for the annoyance of those who have only a baleful retrospection? You know that is not my way. I say it for the benefit of young men and women. I want them to understand that eternity is wrapped up in this hour; that the sins of youth we never get over; that you are now fashioning the mould in which your great future is to run; that a minute, instead of being sixty seconds long, is made up of everlasting ages. You see what dignity and importance this gives to the life of all our young folks. Why, in the light of this subject, life is not something to be frittered away, not something to be smirked about, not something to be danced out, but something to be weighed in the balances of eternity. Oh, young man! the sin of yesterday, the sin of to-morrow, will reach over ten thousand years, ay, over the great and unending eternity. You may, after awhile, say, "I am very sorry. Now I have got to be thirty or forty years of age, and I do wish I had never committed those sins." What does that amount to? God may pardon you; but undo those things you never will, you never can.

In this same category of irrevocable mistakes I put all parental neglect. We begin the education of our children too late. By the time they get to be ten or fifteen we wake up to our mistakes, and try to eradicate this bad habit, and change that; but it is too late. That parent who omits, in the first ten years of the child's life, to make an eternal impression for Christ, never makes it. The child will probably go on with all the disadvantages, which might have been avoided by parental faithfulness. Now you see what a mistake that father or mother makes who puts off to late life adherence to Christ. Here is a man who at fifty years of age says to you, "I must be a Christian;" and he yields his heart to God, and sits in the place of prayer to-day a Christian. None of us can doubt it. He goes home, and he says, "Here at fifty years of age I have given my heart to the Saviour. Now I must establish a family altar." What? Where are your children now? One in Boston; another in Cincinnati; another in New Orleans; and you, my brother, at your fiftieth year going to establish your family altar? Very well; better late than never; but alas, alas that you did not do it twenty-five years ago!

When I was in Chamouni, Switzerland, I saw in the window of one of the shops a picture that impressed my mind very much. It was a picture of an accident that occurred on the side of one of the Swiss mountains. A company of travelers, with guides, went up some very steep places—places which but few travelers attempted to go up. They were, as all travelers are there, fastened together with cords at the waist, so that if one slipped, the rope would hold him—the rope fastened to the others. Passing along the most dangerous point, one of the guides slipped, and they all started down the precipice; but after a while one more muscular than the rest struck his heels into the rock and stopped; but the rope broke, and down hundreds and thousands of feet, the others went. And so I see whole families bound together by ties of affection, and in many cases walking on slippery places of worldliness and sin. The father knows it, and the mother knows it, and they are bound all together. After a while they begin to slide down steeper and steeper, and the father becomes alarmed, and he stops, planting his feet on the "Rock of Ages." He stops, but the rope breaks, and those who were once tied fast to him by moral and spiritual influences, go over the precipice. Oh, there is such a thing as coming to Christ soon enough to save ourselves, but not soon enough to save others!

How many parents wake up in the latter part of life to find out the mistake! Some parent says, "I have been too lenient," or "I have been too severe in the discipline of my children. If I had the little ones around me again, how different I would do!" But you will never have them around again. The work is done, the bent to the character is given, the eternity is decided. I say this to young parents—those who are twenty-five or thirty or thirty-five years of age—who have the family altar to-night. How do you suppose that father felt as he leaned over the couch of his dying child, and the expiring son said to him, "Father, you have been very good to me. You have given me a fine education, and you have placed me in a fine social position; you have done everything for me in a worldly sense; but, father, you never told me how to die. Now I am dying, and I am afraid."

In this category of irrevocable mistakes I place, also, the unkindnesses done the departed. When I was a boy, my mother used to say to me sometimes, "Dear, you will be sorry for that when I am gone." And I remember just how she looked sitting there, with cap and spectacles, and the old Bible in her lap; and she never said a truer thing than that, for I have often been sorry since. While we have our friends with us, we say unguarded things that wound the feelings of those to whom we ought to give nothing but kindness. Perhaps the parent, without inquiring in the matter, boxes the child's ears. The little one, who has fallen in the street, comes covered with dust, and, as though the first disaster were not enough, she whips it. After a while the child is taken, or the parent is taken, or the companion is taken, and those who are left say, "Oh, if we could only get back those unkind words, those unkind deeds; if we could only recall them!" But you cannot get them back. You might bow down over the grave of that loved one and cry and cry and cry—the white lips would make no answer. The stars shall be plucked out of their sockets, but these influences shall not be torn away. The world shall die, but there are some wrongs immortal. The moral of which is, take care of your friends while you have them; spare the scolding; be economical of the satire; shut up in a dark cave, from which they shall never swarm forth, all the words that have a sting in them. You will wish you had some day—very soon you will—perhaps to-morrow. Oh yes. While with a firm hand you administer parental discipline, also administer it very gently, lest some day there be a little slab in the cemetery, and on it chiseled "Our Willie," or "Our Child," and though you bow down prone by the grave, and seek a place of repentance and seek it carefully with tears, you cannot find it.

There is another sin that I place in the class of irrevocable mistakes, and that is lost opportunities of getting good. I never come to a Saturday night but I can see during that week that I have missed opportunities of getting good. I never come to my birthday but I can see that I have wasted many chances of getting better. I never go home on Sabbath from the discussion of religious theme without feeling that I ight have done it in a more successful ay. How is it with you? If you take a ertain number of bushels of wheat and catter them over a certain number of acres land, you expect a harvest in proportion the amount of seed scattered. And I ask ou now, have the sheaves of moral and piritual harvest corresponded with the advantages given? How has it been with ou? You may make resolutions for the uture, but past opportunities are gone. In ie long procession of future years all those ast moments will march; but the archngel's trumpet that wakes the dead will ot wake up for you one of those privileges. sau has sold his birthright, and there is ot wealth enough in the treasure-houses heaven to buy it back again. What does at mean? It means that if you are going get any advantage out of this Sabbath ay, you will have to get it before the hand heels around on the clock to twelve toght. It means that every moment of ir life has two wings, and that it does ot fly, like a hawk, in circles, but in a raight line from eternity to eternity. It eans that though other chariots may eak down, or drag heavily, this one nevdrops the brake, and never ceases to run. means that while at other feasts the cup ay be passed to us and we may reject it, id yet after a while take it, the cup-bearers this feast never give us but one chance the chalice, and, rejecting that, we shall ind no place for repentance, though we ek it carefully with tears."

There is one more class of sins that I put this category of irrevocable sins and that lost opportunities of usefulness. Your siness partner is a proud man. In ordinv circumstances, say to him, "Believe in hrist," and he will say, "You mind your siness, and I'll mind mine." But there is been affliction in the household. His art is tender. He is looking around for mpathy and solace. Now is your time. peak, speak, or forever hold your peace. here is a time in farm-life when you plant e corn and when you sow the seed. Let at go by, and the farmer will wring his nds while other husbandmen are gather-g in the sheaves. You are in a religious eeting, and there is an opportunity for u to speak a word for Christ. You say, must do it." Your cheek flushes with nbarrassment. You rise half way, but ou cower before men whose breath is in eir nostrils, and you sag back, and the pportunity is gone, and all eternity will el the effect of your silence. Try to get ack that opportunity! You cannot find You might as well try to find the fleece at Gideon watched, or take in your hand e dew that came down on the locks of e Bethlehem shepherds, or to find the me of the first robin that went across radise. It is gone; it is gone forever. hen an opportunity for personal repentnce or of doing good passes away, you ay hunt for it; you cannot find it.' You ay fish for it; it will not take the hook. ou may dig for it; you cannot bring it up. emember that there are wrongs and sins at can never be corrected; that our privileges fly not in circles, but in a straight line; at the lightnings have not as swift feet s our privileges when they are gone, and t an opportunity of salvation go by us an ch, the one hundredth part of an inch, e thousandth part of an inch, the milonth part of an inch, and no man can vertake it. Fire-winged seraphim cannot me up with it. The eternal God himself annot catch it.

I stand before those who have a glorious rthright. Esau's was not so rich as ours. Sell it once, and you sell it forever. remember the story of the lad on the Arctic" some years ago—the lad Stewart olland. A vessel crashed into the "Arc-c" in the time of a fog, and it was found hat the ship must go down. Some of the assengers got off in the lifeboats, some ot off on rafts; but three hundred went to he bottom. During all those hours of camity, Stewart Holland stood at the signal gun, and it sounded across the sea, boom! boom! The helmsman forsook his place, the engineer was gone, and some fainted and some prayed and some blasphemed, and the powder was gone, and they could no more set off the signal gun. The lad broke in the magazine and brought out more powder, and again the gun boomed over the sea. Oh, my friends, tossed on the rough seas of life, some have taken the warning, have gone off in the lifeboat, and they are safe; but others are not making any attempt to escape. So I stand at this signal gun of the Gospel, sounding the alarm. Beware! beware! "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Hear it that your soul may live!

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN COREA.

Bishop Ninde, of the Methodist Church, who recently returned from a missionary tour in China, Japan, and Corea, has this to say about the outlook in the last-named country: "Corea is comparatively a new field, but it is a most promising one. The Christian community there is small in numbers; but the spirit of the Corean people is most kindly, and it would not surprise me to hear before many years that the Coreans were coming over en masse to the Christian faith. It is a remarkable fact that the two most influential men in the Corean cabinet are firm believers in Christianity and warm advocates of its general acceptance in the country. The king in an interview expressed great gratification that so many teachers (missionaries) had come from America to Corea to aid his people in reaching a higher civilization, and hoped that many more would come. These words seemed to me remarkably significant when I remembered that the laws of Corea still make it a capital offense to preach or profess the Christian religion. I was most favorably impressed with the character of the native Christians in Corea. No mission field has found finer examples of Christian integrity, consistency, and courageous, self-sacrificing devotion than I met among our native Christians in Corea. Only a small fraction receive pecuniary aid, either directly or indirectly, from the mission, and in more than one instance that came under my notice, large pecuniary sacrifices have been made for conscience' sake. When Christ makes up his jewels, some of the most shining ones will be gathered from this infant Corean church."

A NEW Y. M. C. A. BRANCH.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New York has the happiness of claiming the magnificent gift of Mr. Samuel Inslee of New York City, having fulfilled the conditions imposed. These were to raise $200,000 before July 1, purchase lots and sign contracts for a new building. It is understood that the $200,000 was given by twenty-six friends of the Association. The Association now becomes owner of the building at 545 Broadway, which Mr. Inslee offered. It is worth over $200,000. The Association's new branch is to be erected on 57th street, west of 8th avenue.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

(Continued from first page.)

his abundant opportunities of helpfulness, the end will be bitterness and despair. It is to the rich who fail to use their opportunity of doing good, therefore, rather than to the active evil-doer, that the parable of Dives and Lazarus is to be specially applied

None of the Saviour's parables has made a deeper impression on the world than this. Lazarus' woful condition is so universally commiserated that in many languages his name has become a synonym of penury and suffering. Lazzaroni, lazaretto, and lazar-house are terms familiar in southern Europe, and which the church of the middle ages adopted from the Jerusalem beggar. Streets, prisons, and hospitals, convents and religious societies in different lands have received the name of the patient sufferer whom God honored. Famous poets have sung his praises, and books have been written concerning him. In almost every instance Dives has been accepted as the type of the rich men of all the ages who do not live up to their opportunities, and who leave the world no better for their having lived in it.

Repeatedly are we reminded in the Bible that riches are vanity and vexation of spirit; that they bring in their train a multitude of sorrows and inconveniences; that they harden the heart and keep the soul apart from God; that they beget selfishness and inhumanity and forgetfulness of the claims of others; that they cannot bring happiness, and that they are liable to take wings and fly away. But where wealth is administered for the glory of God and the benefit of our fellow-men, enabling its possessor to feed the sick and the hungry, clothe the naked, and the widow and the fatherless, relieve human suffering, and bring comfort to sad human hearts, it will produce a sweet satisfaction which the world cannot give, and the world cannot take away.

THE CONDEMNED CHRISTIAN CHURCH AT FATRA, BLACK SEA.

HOW A HINDU CAME TO CHRIST.

The following encouraging incident is related by a Christian missionary in India: "One of the pleasant experiences of mission life came to Brother S. last week. Some time last November his ayah (nurse) brought a heathen cousin to live with her. She remained there about three months, during which he endeavored to bring her to a knowledge of the truth, and was ably seconded by his ayah's efforts to make the Scriptures plain. Teaching was carried on in the privacy of their own room, but seemingly all in vain. She still kept up daily visits to the pagoda. She left P—— at Conference time and since then until last week was to all appearance lost to Christianity. Last week, when I took Mrs. R. to A.——, she found out that I had been there through our servant, and made known to me her faith in Christ and her desire to be baptized On questioning her, I found out the seed sown in P—— had fallen in good ground, though hidden from the eyes of men. She came to me to be baptized last Thursday. Mr. S—— happened to call and he had the pleasure of baptizing the woman."

The Gospel by the Black Sea.

How a Little Christian Flock in Fatra Lost its Church Home.

FROM the borders of the Black Sea, a region only heard from at long intervals in connection with the work of the Gospel, a most interesting letter comes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, detailing the tribulations of a little congregation of faithful souls in an intolerant district. The letter is given below:

FATRA, TURKEY, May 3, 1895.

This place is by the Black Sea, near the station of Marsovan. The Lord's work commenced in this city some ten years ago, and wonderful progress has been made in a short time. Before 1886, there were a few Protestants here, who sometimes had the opportunity of hearing a sermon. In 1886, the missionaries of Marsovan decided to send one of their theological students to preach here for five months. His work was very successful, for the harvest was ready for the sickle. So they continued to send him here every vacation time thereafter. The brethren here decided to call him as their preacher, and they did so, and he continued the work three years with good results.

In the time of this worker (Mr. Krikor Bombulia), the present building was erected, which they used as a church, boys' and girls' school, and also a dwelling-place for the preacher. (It is shown in the photograph.) On the upper floor is the hall, which was used as church and girls' school room; the boys' school being under the church. On one side of the building is the deep sea, on the opposite side, the street. On either hand are houses occupied by enemies of the Christian work that was being carried on in this humble church.

In 1889, the Greek members of the community desired to hear the Word preached in their own language (the preacher being an Armenian, used the Turkish), and they accordingly called as pastor Mr. Athanasius Longinides. Two years later, (through the influence of the Greeks, as was charged), the brethren who first used the building were prohibited by the government from doing so. The pretext upon which this prohibition was issued was that the building, having been erected as a house, had no lawful permission to be used as a church or school. For more than a year, the little congregation were without a church home. They had neither schoolhouse nor gathering-place. At this trying time, their preacher received a call from Athens, and accepting, he left them absolutely shepherdless. At last they called N. P. Manushersides and that devoted preacher and man of God responded to the invitation. At first the meetings of the brethren were irregular and many were afraid to come. Sunday meetings were held in the open air in the fields, until the chill winds of the approaching winter compelled them to seek shelter. It was boldly decided to resume meetings indoors, until the government should absolutely make such a course impossible. To the surprise and delight of the little congregation, there was no interference by the officials whatsoever, although the fact of the meetings being held was well-known. All were very thankful to God for this respite.

Since these events, the congregation has received word from friends in Constantinople that permission may soon be granted to them to use some other building. Pastor and people do not abandon their beloved church edifice, humble though it be, without a pang. Pastor Manushersides writes that when the photographer set up his camera to make the photograph of the prohibited church for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, there was much excitement among the people dwelling in the neighborhood. Mothers called in their children from the street, saying to them: "Go away! the Protestants will take your photographs; and if they do, without doubt you will become Protestants also." And the children fled in terror.

The Christian pastor and his people are now making an effort to build another church in the central part of this city, which will be sufficient for all their needs. For such a building, 300 liras are required. (A gold lira is equal to $4.40 American money). It is believed that 100 liras may be realized from their interest in the old building, which Constantinople is familiar with the history of the Fatra congregation's troubles and is in hearty sympathy with their efforts.

JOURNEYING TO CANAAN.

S. S. Lesson for July 28. Num. 10: 29-36. Golden Text Num. 10: 29. By Mrs. Baxter.

GOD'S ancient people are a type for us. The things which happened unto them are "by way of figure, and they were written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come" (I. Cor. 10: 1-11, R. V., margin). In their journeyings in the wilderness especially are they a figure for us. The purpose and the plan of their journeys was unique. No map or book of travel, even if such had existed in their time, could have helped them. They were not in their travels as other men whose object is to accomplish, if a business journey, the extent of distance to be traveled in the shortest time, with the least fatigue possible. Nor yet was it like a journey of pleasure, when the object is to take in all that could be of interest, or which would please the eye, or the ear, or gratify the taste or the intellect.

God's Avowed Object

in the journeys of the people was quite another: "The Lord hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness that he might humble thee, to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or no" (Deut. 8: 2). Consequently the route chosen, the manner of travel, the time employed, etc., etc., all were consistent with God's purpose for his people. Who could know, but he who knew the heart, the circumstances which would most humble its natural pride? Who could test obedience as he could, who was both the Creator of his creatures and the Giver of his laws?

As soon as the tabernacle was set up, God covered it with the cloud of his holy presence, a shadow by day, but a fire by night, and not only the people of Israel, but also the people of the lands around them, could see that God walked among his people, a living, present God. "And wherever the cloud was taken up from over the tent, then after that, the children of Israel had encamped. At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the Lord they encamped, as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle, they remained encamped. And when the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle several days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord and journeyed not." It was indeed a faith life: they knew not whither they should be led, and could make no provision for exigencies which might arise, they must be content that God knew, and they must put to the proof, every day and hour that he was faithful. The bread they ate was miraculously given, the water they drank equally so, their light by night was the presence of God in the fiery pillar, and he himself was their Guide. They were as much removed from the necessity of care or anxiety as though they had been creatures of another world, who were not subject to the same physical necessities for the maintenance of life as we are.

And this is the figure, the object lesson, which he has chosen for us in these last days; in this dispensation of Worship in the Spirit.

It is our privilege no less than theirs, indeed far more than theirs, to shew forth by our lives, by our real contact with him, that our holy God is a living God, never for a moment absent from his people who put their trust in him. The sin of man is: "They have turned every one to his own way," they have thought they could do better for themselves than God could do for them, and have ignored the great fact that God has created man for himself, and that God does not exist for us. A people in the midst of the nations content to be thus led by the intimate and absolute direction of God, actually dependent upon his daily miracle of sending bread from heaven for them, and whose water supply was equally miraculous, could not but awaken among their neighbors the question, "What God is he who thus guides, thus cares for his people? Is he not, must he not be, the one only true God, and ought we not to worship him?"

Oh how miserably the Church of Christ has failed to come up to her high and heavenly calling! The pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire are not the characteristics by which she can be recognized! Moses said to his God: "Wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people that are upon the face of the earth." (Ex. 33: 16). "They are not of the world even as I am not of the world." (John 17: 16). But also the Church of Christ, like the Jews of old, has desired to be "like all the nations" instead being a separate people, and the Spirit of the Lord has been grieved, so that it is only individuals here and there, and by no means in the church as a body, that the true pilgrim spirit is to be found, and on them only does the presence of the Lord rest, covering them and manifesting God in them, when it is day and all is light, and shining like a fire upon them, and out from them in the night season, when all is dark and they pass through trial and suffering.

As a whole, converted people, the church of Christ, have settled down as though their home were on earth: they have treasure here, honor here, hopes and expectations here. The things of earth affect them, their choices, their studies, in fact the root and spring of their life is here, and their spiritual life is made simply an appendage to their earthly life! Even in their very work for God there is as much taking root down here as if the Lord were not at hand, and as though he had never charged his people to wait for him. In many congregations the words of Jeremiah are true: "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and Thy People Love to Have it so."

This is the saddest of all: the general tone of the churches of the day is: "I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing." (Thes. 3: 17), instead of mourning over the sin and shame of the church's union with the world, the loss of her pilgrim character, and her consequent powerlessness to bring the world into touch with God!

Moses could say to Hobab, his brother-in-law, whom he met in the wilderness—"We are journeying;" and Hobab could see that the whole nation was on a pilgrimage. But can the Church of Christ say truthfully in our day: "We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said: I will give it you?" Does every day find us a step nearer heaven and a grade more heavenly? Is earth left farther behind? Are its ties looser? Are its hopes and expectations—are all the things which it has to offer of less and less value in our eyes because "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." If not, can we wonder that our feeble assertion, "We are journeying" meets with derision and contempt from those who see no pilgrim spirit accompanying the words, and no loosening of the ties of earth which proves that we are in earnest?

But they who really serve a living and true God, and wait for his Son from heaven, do purify themselves even as he is pure (I. John 3: 3); they do watch and pray always, that they may be accounted worthy, to escape all these things which shall come to pass (Luke 21: 36) (in the time of trouble), such can truly say: "We are journeying; we are not at home here." And yet, perhaps, none are so contented with all they meet with here on earth, for they know it is for but a short time. They know the plan of God to conform them to the image of his Son, they trust his leading, and give up all calculations as to whether it might not have been better had they taken another road. He shines through them, the cloud and the fire is easily perceived in those who are true pilgrims. They can say to the worldly ones, and they say it with all their heart, and all their life justifies them in saying it: "Come with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE ARK OF THE COVENANT.

THE stay of the people in the neighborhood of Sinai, appears to have been continued about eleven months. Their arrival is timed as the third month. As the year now began with the Passover, we may conclude that this would correspond with June of our year. They were still in the same place when the time for celebrating the second Passover came around. Two months later, or about May, they started again on their march in obedience to the signal that had been appointed. This, the record says, was the rising of the cloud that hovered over the Tabernacle, which, being luminous, was visible night and day and served them as a symbol of their God. It has been suggested that the cloud was produced by the smoke of the sacrifices and that its rising could be arranged by suspending the offerings at any time when Moses desired to move the camp. The record, however, attributes it to divine action and as such it was evidently regarded. During the eleven months' sojourn, a great deal had been done in the way of organization. The Tabernacle had been reared, an order of priesthood appointed, leaders chosen for thousands, for hundred and for tens, who were invested with power to decide minor disputes; and a number of laws were enacted to serve as a nucleus of the code which became the statute law of the nation. It was a very different people that resumed the march from the base of Sinai, from the crowd of fugitive slaves that had rested there in their flight nearly a year before. The mob had become a nation. The people had learned much during their stay. If any of them had regarded their deliverance from the servitude and cruel oppression of Egypt as the beginning of a time of ease and pleasure, and freedom from restraint, they discovered their mistake. The nation had a high mission. It was to be the spiritual teacher of all nations and could be fit for its mission only by painful discipline and by learning self-denial and by the observance of law. The world of our day, eager to eliminate the supernatural from history, is disposed to scoff at the idea of this organization being of divine origin, and of Moses receiving from God the laws in the Mount. But the impartial student, examining the laws and the institutions, and seeing their adaptability to the present circumstances and future development of the nation, does not find the story so difficult to believe. The theory of unaided human origin for this constitution is more incredible. The work finished, so far as it could be at that stage, the great caravan sets out on its march toward Canaan. In the lesson we are introduced to an interesting character. There have been some disputes as to the identity of Hobab; but the most natural theory is that he was the brother of Zipporah, the wife of Moses, and accompanied her with their father Raguel or Jethro to the camp as described in Exodus 18. Moses wanted him to go with them, and assured him that he should participate in whatever good befell the nation, but Hobab declined. Then Moses approached him on another side and pointed out to him how valuable his experience and knowledge of the desert would be to the people. This argument appears to have succeeded, for in Judges 4: 11, the descendants of Hobab are mentioned as part of the nation. Although little is said of the man it is sufficient to command respect. The man who would not adopt a course of life because of what he would gain, but adopted it when he found it gave an opportunity of usefulness, must have been a man of lofty character and a valuable acquisition to the nation. The world in any age has need of such men.

Come thou with us and we will do thee good. Moses did not understand Hobab's character. He was not the kind of man who could be hired by rewards. There are some men who cannot work for pay. They must put all idea of payment out of their minds before they can do good work. The only stimulus that comes to them is love of the work or of the people for whom they work. Ruskin contends that in every department the best work has never been done for hire. "Pay your soldiers as you will," he says, "the entire goodness of the fighting depends always on its being done for nothing; or rather less than nothing, in the expectation of no pay but death. Examine your writers and artists; for ten pounds you have a 'Paradise Lost,' and for a plate of figs a Durer drawing; but for a million of money, neither. Examine your men of science; paid by starvation, Kepler discovers the laws of the orbs of heaven for you; driven out to die in the street, Swammerdam discovers the law of life for you. . . . No pay is, indeed receivable by any true man; but power is receivable by him in the love and faith you give him. So far only as you give him the can he serve you. That is the meaning of the question the Master asks always: 'Believest thou that I am able?'"

Thou mayest be to us instead of eyes. The idea placed the matter in a different light and the man who could not be secured by bribes, was won by the chance of rendering service. "We must get Symonds," said a committee of philanthropic men who were arranging to give work to some poor seamstresses and tailors in an English city. Symonds was the manager of a wholesale clothing firm, a shrewd organizer, and a Christian. It was felt that no man could contribute so much as he to the success of the new enterprise, if he could be secured. The chairman of the committee, a man who had risen from nothing, went to Symonds and having ascertained what his salary then was, bluntly offered him a higher one to transfer his services to the new enterprise. He belived in putting the proposal plainly in business terms. Symonds thanked him, but declined. Later another member of the committee went to see him. He said nothing about salary. "You know the business," he said, "and you know how much distress there is among these people. Now we want to help them intelligently and we do not know how to do it. You know, and you can give effect to our good wishes. Think of the benefit you can confer. Think of the numbers of starving people who will have work if you come." The settled it. The man who could not be tempted away from his situation by money, gladly left it for the new position for the sake of the poor whom he could help.

The ark went before them. The trouble in the journey of our lives is that we too often arrange them ourselves, and pray such blessings as we need, instead of trying to God's guidance. There is an old monkish parable that shows this. The story runs that a hermit was much concerned about the growth of a young olive that he planted near his cave. He thought his tree wanted water, and he prayed to God for rain. The rain came and watered the tree. Then he thought the warm sunlight would do it good, and he prayed for sunshine, and the sun's rays poured upon it. The sapling still looked feeble, and the hermit said it needs frost to brace it. He prayed for frost, and that night the ground was hard. But still the olive did not thrive. Sometime afterward in his journey he saw a strong and beautiful olive tree outside the cave of his brother hermit, and asked him about it. In the same time telling him his experience. "God sent me everything I asked for," he said, "but my tree is dying." The other hermit shook his head. He said, "God knows best what the trees need. I asked him to take care of my tree, and did not presume to tell him how. You see how it thrives."

"OOM PAUL," AND HIS PEOPLE.

ev. Josiah Tyler, Missionary, Records his Impressions of a Visit to the Boer Republic in the Transvaal—An Unprogressive Folk, with Many Good Qualities.

THE Transvaal, which is the richest and most important Dutch possession in South Africa, embraces an area of 125,000 square miles, and is for the most part, high and healthy. Its foreign population is estimated at 60,000, the majority speaking the English language. At least 500,000 natives reside within its borders. Pretoria, the capital, named after Pretorius, President of the first Transvaal Republic, with a population of 12,000, is growing rapidly, and will soon be united by rail with Port Natal, 433 miles distant. The nearest seaport is Delagoa Bay, a Portuguese possession, 240 miles away on the east coast. Pretoria is already united to Cape Town by a Grand Trunk Railroad 1,000 miles long. On great occasions, which call together Dutch redicants (pastors) and communicants in large numbers from incredible distances, such as the Naacht-Maal, or Lord's Supper, the city is in a state of great excitement. Huge wagons, (their bed-rooms as well as coaches) are drawn up in the Public Market Square, and the time not occupied in religious meetings, baptisms, confirmations, etc., is devoted to purchasing supplies for months to come. Peddlers and German Jews have then a busy time. The Dutch are devout in their way, but they do not hesitate to combine business with their devotional gatherings. The large, costly government buildings in the city are on a scale of magnificence that indicates a healthy treasury.

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS, PRETORIA.

Johannesburg, the centre of the gold-mining industry, has a population of 40,000, chiefly English. Had the few Boers living there seven years ago, been told that, by the present time, under their farms, a gold-mine would be worked, yielding 136,000 ounces of the precious metal per month, and that a city would spring up, comparing favorably in architecture with New York or Philadelphia, they would have said: 'not unless a miracle is wrought;" but it is even so. It is interesting to watch the gold-mining operations in this largest "mushroom city" of Africa, the progress of which is limited only by the mechanical capacity to crush and extract the metal, and by the labor involved. In 1889, 675 stamps were at work. In 1890, 865. Now there are over 2000, pounding away at the rich ore. Crushing machinery used is chiefly that of an American firm, and it is made in New York City. In 1893, the precious metal produced in the Transvaal, amounted to about $21,000,000, or one fourth of the world's gold, which is estimated at $105,000,000 a year. Ten years from now, the yield will amount to many millions, and the South African Republic may regulate the world's finances.

Theoretically, the Transvaal is a republic, but practically an oligarchy. The term of presidential service is five years. Burghers qualified to vote, choose an executive council, of which the president is chairman. Officers of the Volksraad, or Senate and House of Representatives combined, must belong to some Protestant church, but any one of sufficient ambition and no religion, can easily adjust that matter.

The revenue comes chiefly from the pockets of the "Uitlanders," or foreigners, who have not obtained the privilege of franchise.

As viewed in the light of the present, the Boers seem to be an anachronism; possibly, but not probably, some great social, intellectual and moral upheaval may lift them out of their dormancy and unprogressiveness, but many of them are apparently as slow to receive the civilization of the world as the native races.

The "Voortrekkers," as Dutch pioneers from the Cape were called, had Huguenot blood in their veins, and contended bravely with gigantic obstacles. In the early part of this century, the British legislation, being repugnant to their tastes, they "trekked" in vast numbers to the north, in quest of a home, where they could worship God and live a Puritanical life. Theal, in his history of "South Africa," gives a graphic account of the perils they encountered and their sublime faith. Alas! that they should thus retrograde!

In 1840 to 1850, the antipathy of Dutch settlers to the English was so great, that in breaking in a refractory ox to the yoke, they called it "England," and beat it unmercifully. An English trader was once asked by a Dutch "vrouw," (wife): "Do you think that any Kaffir will get to heaven?" "Yes," he replied. "Then I do not wish to go there," she said.

A Scotch physician, traveling among the Boers, came at sundown to a dwelling, ten miles from the nearest habitation of white men. He asked for accommodations. "No," said the Boer, "there's the road, go on." "But," said the doctor, "I am your friend, and surely you will not deny me shelter?" "I have no friends here," he replied. "I will show you that I am your friend," replied the doctor, as he took the saddle from his horse. Inquiring about the health of the family, he learned that one of the children was ill, and offered help, taking out at the same time a small box of medicines. The Boer's wife had a pail of water ready to pour on his head, but her wrath was appeased when she found out his profession.

BOER FARMERS, GATHERING TO COMMUNION AT THE DUTCH CHURCH, PRETORIA.

Although hating the English, who, they complain, deprived them of the "fairest portion of South Africa," to Americans, and particularly American clergymen, they were generous and hospitable. Fifty years ago, Rev. Daniel Lindley, a missionary of the American Board, preached to them, taught their children, and won their confidence. While traveling in Boerdom, if I simply mentioned his name, it served as a passport to their homes.

The size of some Dutch farms excited my surprise. I visited one comprising 60,000 acres, well stocked with sheep and cattle, and yet I was told that once when a party of Englishmen were dining with the owner, there were not spoons enough in the house with which to eat the soup. In the average Boer dwelling there is neither beauty nor comfort. Dutch houses generally swarm with children, but for want of education, they grow up devoid of thought, except that which concerns their property in sheep and oxen. Some are miserly, and afraid to put their gold into banks. A Boer once took a large amount to an English bank, and after getting his receipt, inquired: "What have I to pay?" He was told that he would get interest for it, and suddenly suspecting that the business was a fraud, withdrew it and took it home. Another kept about $30,000 in gold in a chest under his bed, his safe-guard being a Winchester rifle that always hung over it. He would not keep bank notes, but exchanged them for gold as soon as possible. It is lamentable that they do not appreciate libraries, museums, lecture halls, and educational privileges, and are not liberal-minded enough to provide for intellectual necessities. Boer simplicity is often astonishing. An Englishman from Natal once went into the Transvaal, with a hundred or more watches for trading. For each watch he obtained a sheep, and soon had a large flock to drive home. On his return, he was told that the watches looked well, but did not keep good time. "Let me have them," said the Englishman, "I will see that they are all made right; when I come again I will return them to you." The fellow obtained both sheep and watches, and then went to "pastures new."

PRESIDENT PAUL KRUGER

Superstition reigns among them as it does among all all uneducated people. Last year an English balloonist was giving an exhibition in Pretoria, unknown to some of the farmers. As he descended in a parachute, a Dutchman going into town with his produce, saw him. Leaving his ox-wagon, he rushed into the city in the greatest excitement, saying: "The devil has descended from the clouds; I saw him with my own eyes!"

The Boers are fond of fat mutton, which they devour in great quantities. It seems to put flesh on their bones and add to their avoirdupois. Taking breakfast once with a farmer, I saw no butter on the table, but plenty of mutton tallow, which was used as a substitute. Coffee drinking is with them a sine qua non of comfort and friendship, an institution of long standing. Upon arriving at their homes, the cup is brought out and frequently replenished. The Vrows drink it without stint, and this with sour milk, "bil tong" (dried beef or venison) and vegetables, makes them uncomfortably obese. Thanks are offered at every meal by the pater familias, and prayers morn and evening with the better class are not neglected. Psalms, drawled with a nasal twang, do not seem conducive to devotion, but perhaps those who do not understand their dialect are not competent judges. Boer fathers generally observe the excellent practice of presenting to each child at birth a lamb or calf, so that when married, the children often take quite a flock to their home. The farmers are good riders, have fine horses, and are excellent marksmen, but in war, have not the dash of trained soldiers. For fighting, they have no special fondness. Burghers often pay large sums to provide substitutes. It is a matter of grief to them that their resources as to game are now so limited. No longer can they bag in a few hours, as formerly, hippopotami, giraffe, koodos, spring-bok, and a variety of birds.

Paul Kruger, or Oom Paul (Uncle Paul), the President of the Transvaal, is a hale, hearty, well-preserved man of sixty-seven years. The older Dutch people are fond of him, and through their influence, he has lately been re-elected. Had Englishmen been allowed to vote, Colonel Joubert, a younger and more progressive man would have been chosen to fill the office. Though not quite so old as the President, or with the varied and dangerous experiences with the vengeful Zulus that some have had, he is a power in the land. The manner in which he conducted the late campaign with a recalcitrant chief in the Upper Transvaal, reflects on him great credit. He stands a good chance of being the next President of the Republic. Kruger has some excellent qualities, but is somewhat narrow-minded. His salary amounts to $40,000 with an extra allowance for "coffee." He has, besides, several farms, from which he can obtain all the mutton, beef, vegetables and fruit he needs for his table, and can live handsomely without touching his salary. Oranges from his farm he sells to a distiller, who converts the fruit into wine. His simple piety often appears in public utterances, as, for instance, at the "Paaderkraal Festival," a season of as much importance in Boerland, as the "Fourth of July" is to the United States. It commemorates emancipation from British rule, and victories in Zululand. The President said: "I hope that in your hearts you comprehend that the work you have come here for, is to praise God for his goodness as shown to us. I perceive that new-comers also have assembled here, and I rejoice at it. God's mercy and goodness have been extended to you, my people; and to you also murderers, you thieves and robbers, for you also are interested in this ceremony."

The President is somewhat brusque, if we may credit reports of him. Dining once with Sir Henry Loch, the Governor of the Cape Colony, champagne was handed to him by the waiter. He gave the servant a look which the narrator said was well-calculated "to send him into his boots." He drank a mixture of water and milk.

Boer environment in the Transvaal is essentially British. Whether that Republic, with its sister, the Orange Free State, will join hands with other South African territories, and form a vast Republic, remains to be seen. Present appearances indicate such a result. One has not inaptly said, "The truest and best development of Boer interests will be found in a cordial co-operation with an enlightened and non-bureaucratic British policy."

JOSIAH TYLER.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

Lillie M. Cooper, Cal.
Jacob Klein, Ill.
C. J., Leivasy, W. Va.
Eldon R. Garner.
Mrs. Viola Gillogly, Ohio
A daughter and sister, Oxford, Pa.
Louis De Lancett, New York.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, not to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

THE OCEAN SCARE.

WE find some trepidation among those who are expecting to visit Europe this summer. Absurd! There never was a safer time to cross the ocean than now. Pilots and captains and stokers were never more careful than they will be this season under the remembrance of former calamities. The safest time to be on the rail-train is just after a collision. Pack your valise (far better than a trunk for going great distances), and go on ship-board cheerily.

The sea is a nurse for a thousand aches and disquietudes. You cannot hear the door-bell there, and no telegrams will chase you, as the submarine wire has no stations midway the Atlantic. There may be dangers on the sea, but there are dangers also on the land. Better not walk down the street, for a wall may drop on you. Better not ride in a carriage, for a horse may run away with you. Better not eat your dinner, for a wicked servant may have dropped some poison in it. If a man wants to hunt up dangers, he can find whole flocks of them, multitudinous as quails starting up at the first snap of his fire-lock. Better get your accounts settled for the next world, and then quit all your apprehensions, and, if you can afford the time and the money, go across the Atlantic, and see the churches, and towers, and institutions which were old when Christopher Columbus was a baby. And, as we may not see you again before you go—good-bye! We will look after things as well as we can while you are gone. Put a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HEPALD in your pocket as a sort of life-preserver, and do not let the mule carrying you up the Mer de Glace drop you off while trying to remove a fly from his ear by the stroke of his hind foot. As you sail down the bay, we shake out after you our newly-ironed white pocket-handerchief. There is a French word with which people generally wish each other a happy voyage, but as our supply of French is limited, we do not wish to draw unnecessarily upon it.

OPEN-AIR SERVICES.

WE are glad at the announcement of so many Sabbath-school conventions and preaching services in the open air. That is right. We may want more religion in-doors, but we most certainly want more religion out-of-doors. Get it started in the woods, and on the beach of the sea, and perhaps the whole atmosphere of the country will get permeated with it. In no other way will our storehouses and shops be evangelized. There are thousands of churches that are stark and cold and [illegible] wide-awakenings. Let us have enough warmth in the air to melt these icebergs. We want a revival deep and strong enough to save the ministers as well as the laity. If men ordained by the laying-on of hands are nervous and fearful they cannot drive amid such lively scenes, let them get down off the driver's box, and warm-hearted laymen take their places. The Lord's chariot has started, and he who will not help draw it shall be run over.

POOR PREACHING.

THERE never was a time when in all denominations of Christians there was so much attractive sermonizing as to-day. A large number of sharp, earnest, consecrated men are now being sent into the ministry. Stupidity, after being regularly ordained, is found to be no more acceptable to the people than before, and the title of Doctorate cannot any longer be substituted for brains. Perhaps, however, there may get to be a surfeit of fine discourses. Indeed, we have so many appliances for making bright and incisive preachers, that we do not know but that after awhile, when we want a sleepy discourse as an anodyne, we shall have to go to the ends of the earth to find one; and dull sermons may be at a premium, congregations of limited means not being able to afford them at all; and so we shall have to fall back on chloral or morphine. Are we not, therefore, doing a humanitarian work when we give to congregations some rules by which, if they want it, they may always have poor preaching?

I.—Keep your minister poor. There is nothing more ruinous than to pay a pastor too much salary. Let every Board of Trustees look over their books and see if they have erred in this direction, and if so, let them cut down the minister's wages. There are churches which pay their pastors seven hundred dollars per annum. What these good men do with so much money we cannot imagine. Our ministers must be taken in. If by occasional fasting for a day our Puritan fathers in New England become so good, what might we not expect of our ministers if we kept them in perpetual fast? No doubt their spiritual capacity would enlarge in proportion to their shrinking at the waistcoat. The average salary of ministers in the United States is about six hundred dollars. Perhaps by some spiritual pile-driver we might send it down to five hundred dollars; then the millennium; for the lion by that time would be so hungry, he would let the lamb lie down inside of him. We would suggest a very economical plan: give your spiritual adviser a smaller income, and make it up by a donation visit. When everything else fails to keep him properly humble, that succeeds. We speak from experience. Thirty years ago we had one, and it has been a means of grace to us ever since.

II. For securing poor preaching, wait on your pastor with frequent committees. Let three men some morning tie their horses at the dominie's gate, and go in and tell him how to preach, and pray, and visit. Tell him all the disagreeable things said about him for six months, and what a great man his predecessor was, how much plainer his wife dressed, and how much better his children behaved. Pastoral committees are not like the small-pox—you can have them more than once—they are more like the mumps, which you may have first on one side and then on the other. If, after a man has had the advantage of being manipulated by three church-committees, he has any pride or spirit left, better give him up as incorrigible.

III. To secure poor preaching, keep the minister on the trot. Scold him when he comes to see you because he did not come before, and tell him how often you were visited by the former pastor. Oh, that blessed predecessor! Strange they did not hold on to the angel when they had him. Keep your minister going. Expect him to respond to every whistle. Have him at all the tea-parties and "the raisings." Stand him in the draught of the door at the funeral—a frequent way of declaring a pulpit vacant. Keep him busy all the week in an out-door miscellaneous work; and if, at the end of that time, he cannot preach a weak discourse, send for us and we will show him how to do it. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, but if the plan of treatment we have proposed be followed, we do not see that any church in city or country should suffer any longer from poor preaching.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

J. A. B. Montpelier, Vt. When and by whom was the French Academy founded?

In 1635–36 by the great Cardinal Richelieu.

Inquirer. ——. Should I be doing right to marry a man who has divorced his wife? He is a member of the church and a man of good moral life.

If the man had Scriptural cause for obtaining a divorce (see Matt. 5: 32), there is nothing in that fact that bars you from marrying him. The offence there indicated cancels the marriage bond, and leaves the wronged partner free to contract another marriage.

Gazelle C——, a young friend in Ionia, Mich., who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, sends us a little poem on "The Stars," the concluding stanza of which is:

Hearts that are filled with the light of God's love,
Shine like the beautiful stars above;
Shine with a light that shall last for aye!
Though bodies may perish and stars decay.

J. M. Minch, Providence, R. I. Who built the railway between Jerusalem and Joppa, recently described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD?

France raised all the capital, Turkey gave the concession, Belgium furnished half the rails and coal, and England the other half, Poland and Switzerland sent the laborers and engineers, Greece furnished cooks and American and German engineers made the surveys.

"Subscriber," Canadian, Tex. Is not the period between the coming of Christ for his people and his coming in judgment to be a thousand years?

If you mean the final judgment of the Last Day, that is the length of the period as we understand the Scriptures. But Christ's coming in judgment on the nations to establish his kingdom and reign will, we believe, be a very short time after his coming to withdraw his waiting people from the earth. Probably three and a half or seven years.

M. A. S., —— Is it impossible to find out the true names of the Wise Men who brought gifts to the infant Christ; the Rich Young Ruler; the Woman of Samaria, and the penitent thief?

Early Christian writers give the names of the wise men as Balthasar, Melchior, and Gaspar, but there is no way of ascertaining what authority they had for the statement. They may be correct or not; there is no advantage in knowing their names. As to the names of the other persons you mention, there is not any tradition having the semblance of authority.

S. M. Slinger, Fruitport, Mich. How did the custom to which Pilate alluded (Matt. 27: 15-17) of releasing a prisoner originate?

In the Roman habit of respecting the religious feelings of conquered peoples and conciliating them when it could be done without yielding their power. The passover was a great Jewish festival and the Roman governors showed a kind of respect for it by remitting the sentence of some prisoner who had transgressed Roman law. The pleasure it gave was enhanced when the culprit's offence was political, as the Jews would be likely to esteem as patriotism an offence which the Romans would treat as rebellion.

Theodore Danielson, Newberry, S. C. A preacher here contends that the soul is not immortal. Is not the contention contrary to scripture?

The doctrine is held by some who are firm believers in the truth of the Bible. They contend that immortality comes only through Christ, and that people who do not savingly believe in Christ do not live forever, but suffer the second death. Several passages appear to contradict the theory. Prominent among them are those that speak of eternal punishment, the parable of Dives and Lazarus and Christ's reply to the penitent thief. Persons holding the doctrine, which is called "the doctrine of conditional immortality," have suggested very ingenious methods of explaining them. One of the most prominent modern advocates of the doctrine was the late Dr. R. W. Dale, who lectured at Yale a few years ago.

Newman Sheldon, Lamont, Ia. 1. Is it not likely that the Church is as much mistaken about the second coming of Christ as the Jews were about his first coming? 2. Was the coin found in the mouth of the fish (Matt. 17: 27) a Roman coin or one miraculously created by Christ for the purpose?

1. The large majority of the Church are very likely to be mistaken. They avoid prophecy as a subject it is unprofitable to study, and therefore can learn nothing about the second advent, as it is only from prophecy that anything can be learned of it. The common mistake now appears to be the converse of that of the Jews. The Jews expected a temporal king, when it was a spiritual king that came; the church expects a spiritual King when the prophecies teach that it is as a temporal King that Christ will reign. 2. As the money was used in the payment of tribute, it would appear to have been an ordinary Roman coin. It is possible, however, that the coin was in itself a miracle. There is nothing on which to base an opinion.

Fred. Baldwin, Harrisburg, Pa. What countries are most in need of missionary work at the present time?

Tibet, Afghanistan, Beloochistan and Turkestan are practically virgin fields, and Arabia, the Soudan, the Congo (both French and Belgian territory), and New Guinea are all greatly in need of workers. China, Korea and Formosa may also be placed in the latter category.

H. F. Morris, Shalersville, O., writes:

In your last number of June 26 is an article entitled, "Getting old Gracefully," and you say, "don't worry because the time comes on when you must go into the next world." It never worries me to think of going into the next world—that is the thought of dying—but the condition after I leave this earth. Ah! that is what worries me. You say that John Knox, Harriet Newell, Mrs. Hemans, and the bright and beautiful Christian stars of earth will be our company there. How can that be? Granted that I have made the very best use of the humble talent I have, still there is a great, wide gulf between them and myself.

I admire a master-mind, but when I look upon the world and see men and women with wonderful capabilities, then realizing that these gifts are attributes of the soul, and consequently will never die, why will not our conditions be the same in the next world—the same great gulf between us? My faith in the Lord is strong enough to smother every doubt, and I believe it will be all right, some way; yet what can cure the aching heart that longs for attainments that can never be reached?

M. V. W., West Philadelphia, sends this letter in behalf of "Dumb Christian" (whose letter appeared in THE MAIL-BAG three weeks ago) and others in like predicament.

I became a Christian before I was twelve years of age. At fifteen, I had never offered prayer before anyone. I was naturally very timid and retiring. God's providence, our home in Philadelphia was broken up and we moved to the country, where I found many who did not attend any church or Sabbath School. My mother gathered the children together and formed a Union Sunday School, which she was superintendent herself. Many Christians of different denominations helped, including the District school-teacher and her brother, who were Friends. My eldest brother was a librarian and my younger brother was in a class. They were neither of them, at that time, Christians. One Sabbath, my mother was too ill to go to Sunday School and I found there was no one to lead the School myself. I did not see how I could. Then came the thought, "I am going to talk with God." I knelt and prayed. Ever since I could pray anywhere, for I feel God's presence so much that I forget the eyes of all others. In talking I have found, "Out of the abuffdance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

E. C. A., Woodstock, Ill. 1. When were the Apocryphal Books added to the Catholic Bible? 2. Was the addition made before the Reformation, and if so, why was it excluded after that time by the Protestants?

Pope Innocent I., early in the fifth century, and Pope Galasius, in the latter part of the same century, each gave catalogues of the books forming the Canon of Scripture, including five books of Solomon, Tobit, and the Books of Maccabees. At the same time some other so-called apocryphal writings were rejected. Previous to this, the doubtful books of the Old Testament had been used publicly in the service of the Church, but with expressed doubts or limitations as to their authority. The Council of Trent, however, included them all except two. 2. Yes; long anterior to the Reformation. The Apocrypha was never known by that name until the Reformation so designated it. The Roman Church itself had virtually discredited it for centuries. The English and German Reformers, influenced by the revival of the study of Hebrew and the recognition of the authority of the Hebrew Canon, collected the doubtful books into a separate group, and in Luther's first edition of the German Bible (1534), they were printed together as Apocrypha. Wycliffe's and Cranmer's Bibles also contained them, printed in this way. Gradually the Apocrypha ceased to be read in the Protestant Churches, or even referred to, and for over three hundred years it has not been included as a part of the Canon of Scripture, or as having any place in the office of Divine worship.

S. M. A., Phila. We have no further information on the subject than already published.——S. McCraw, Springfield, Mo. His name was John Houston, a native of Manhattan, Kans., and he is now engaged in evangelistic work in the South.——Geo. R. Brown, Salisbury, Md. 1. Dr. Talmage is now on a preaching and lecturing tour in the West and Southwest. 2. The words are almost synonomous, "itineracy" meaning the practice of itinerating, and "itinerancy" more specifically the system of rotation in use among the clergy of the Methodist Church.——Reader, Paleo, Kan. 1. We will find the whole poem in a volume entitled, "Shine in Life," published by Putnam & Sons, New York. 2. They are quite suitable for the family reading. 3. To some, such writings may be helpful, to others not. 4. No. 5. No.——J. Smith, Belmont, Neb. In education probably they need teachers.——Hattie McPherson, Wallaceburg, Ont. New York City is sufficient address.——A. Walker, Howell, Mich. It is a delusion. Mrs. Eddy's writings are not in any sense inspired.——Jacobus, Riceville, Ia. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." There is little truth and much exaggeration in these stories.——Reader, Plymouth, Cal. Yes, the offer is still open.——C. W. Smith, Morton, N. Y. You can obtain the books on American birds of J. P. Lippincott, publisher, Pine street, New York.——W. H. Spencer, Richmond, Va. We cannot inform you. Write to a commercial agency.——H. P. Cook, Roxbury, Conn. Get Jamieson, Faussett & Brown's Commentaries from Revell, publisher, 112 5th Ave., New York.——Mrs. H. R. Voth, Kroan, Coconino, Arizona. 1. Yes, he is still living. 2. We have the letter, but prefer to express no opinion upon it

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

JAPAN'S ACQUISITION.

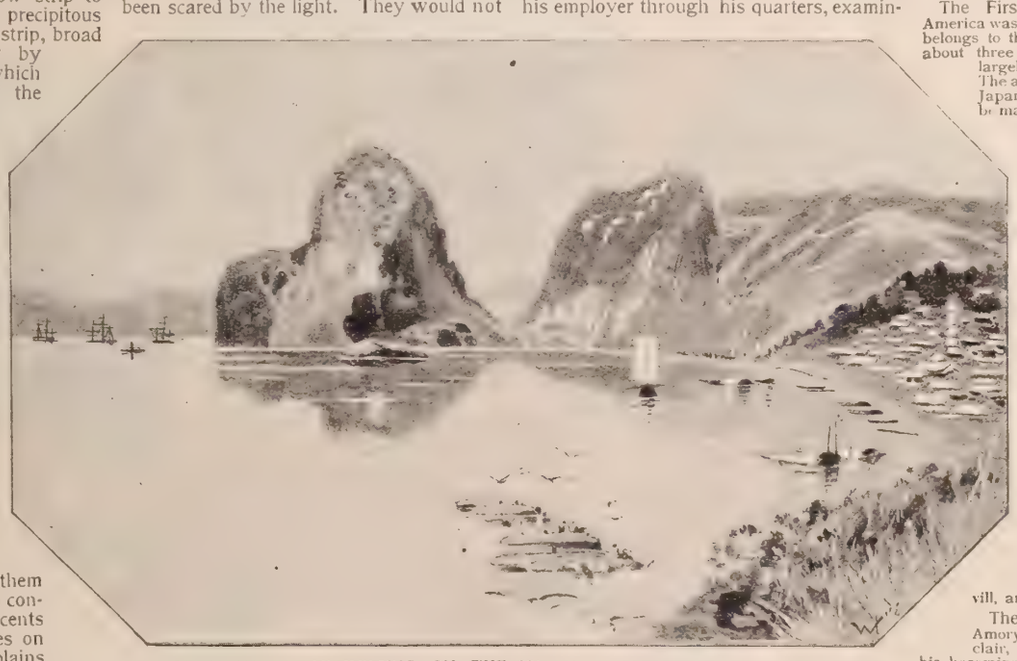
ONLY one territorial acquisition has been won by Japan as the fruit of her magnificent triumph over her ponderous enemy. Yielding with surprising discretion to the bullying demands of Russia, she has abandoned the rights given her by treaty to possessions on the mainland, and contents herself, as best she may, with the island of Formosa, the one increase to her territory. The island lies off the south-east coast of China, from whence it is separated by a strait about ninety miles wide. It is 240 miles long by eighty wide, or about half the size of Ireland. Its physical conformation is peculiar. A high range of mountains runs north and south, making practically two countries of the island. There is the mountain region in the centre, occupied by wild tribes that the Chinese have never been able to subdue; the narrow strip to the east terminating in a high precipitous coast line; and the western strip, broad and alluvial, occupied chiefly by Chinese and other foreigners, which is the most civilized part of the island. Tea and rice plantations abound in the Western strip, and pine-apples and other tropical fruits are cultivated. The chief value of the island, however, is its coal deposits which have already been worked near Kelung, the principal town. Sulphur and petroleum have also been found and it is believed that iron may exist in the mountain districts. It is estimated that there are nearly two million persons on the island belonging to various tribes. The aboriginal inhabitants are supposed to be of Negrito stock. They appear to have been conquered some long past time by Malays, with whom they amalgamated. They are untamable savages, fierce, ignorant and degraded. Between them and the Chinese there has been continual enmity, and their descents from their mountain fastnesses on the peaceful villagers on the plains have been marked by awful butcheries. Their naked bodies are tattooed with records of their achievements, and their appearance with their immensely long arms is scarcely human. The Japanese expect to overcome them, but are aware that the task will be long and arduous. They promptly took possession of their new territory. The Chinese made a feeble resistance, after declaring a republic and making the Chinese governor, President. The Japanese soon put an end to opposition and landed a force on the island which they believe is sufficient to deal with the savages. If the Japanese are right, and they are able to subdue these aboriginal tribes, the Chinese settlers will be better off under the rule than they would have been had the attempt to set up a republic succeeded. If they have not the dignity of governing themselves, they will at any rate be protected from their savage foes. That condition is more desirable, and it is a type of the situation in the spiritual world. The man who attempts to govern his own life is not so safe, nor so useful, as he who has given himself over to the rule of Christ.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. 10: 23).

Electricity as a Detective.

A Chicago journal reports the ingenious detection of two thieves by the combined aid of electricity and photography. A cigar-dealer found that his stock was disappearing at a rate which did not correspond with his money receipts. He felt sure that he was being robbed, and that the thieves worked in the night. He sat up several nights to watch, but the thieves were evidently aware of his presence and did not come. But the first night that he left his store, the depredations were resumed. He consulted the police but they failed to detect the robbers. Mentioning the matter one day to a friend who is an electrician, the suggestion was made that has led to the solution of the difficulty. A camera was brought in, with a flash-light attachment, and focussed on the case where the cigars were kept. An electric apparatus was fixed so that the opening of the case would close the circuit, and operate the camera. The next morning there were no cigars missing, but on the plate in the camera were the images of two terrified faces, evidently belonging to the thieves, who must have been alarmed by the sudden glare of the flash-light. They had decamped without their booty, but with the portraits as evidence, they were speedily found and arrested. They did not know that their portraits were taken until confronted with them in court, but had simply been scared by the light. They would not have ventured on the robbery had they been warned of the measures adopted for their discovery and identification; but warning is not always sufficient. Men go on in secret sin, although the Bible explicitly warns them that a day of complete exposure is coming.

It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light. (Eph. 5: 12, 13.



THE PROMONTORY OF KELUNG ON THE ISLAND OF FORMOSA, CEDED TO JAPAN.

An Unknown Betrothal.

At a wedding celebrated recently at Atlanta, Ga., a curious fact was disclosed. The bride and bridegroom belong to families which were near neighbors twenty years ago, but have been separated since then. Their parents, and especially their mothers, were warm friends, having known each other from girlhood. They were often together, and the bright little two-year old boy was loved not more tenderly by his own mother than by her friend, who was as much attached to him as to her own one-year old daughter. The boy's mother expressed the hope that when he grew up, he would marry her friend's daughter, and the other lady laughingly wrote a paper, formally betrothing her child to the boy. The separation of the families came not long afterwards. The boy went to school and college in the North, and the girl graduated and became a school-teacher at Atlanta. They did not meet until some law business took the young man to Atlanta about a year ago. He was then twenty years old, and had to be introduced to the teacher when they met, as they were quite unknown to each other. The wedding of the other day is the outcome of the acquaintance then formed. The bride's mother who still lives was present at the ceremony, and told the story of the infantile betrothal. She was very happy, having some of the joy that Christian parents have when the child whom they have consecrated to Christ in its infancy, voluntarily ratifies the act by becoming united to him by a living faith. As Solomon said to such a child:

Thy father and thy mother shall be glad, and she that bear thee shall rejoice (Prov. 23: 25).

A Servant's Recommendation.

A New York lady who has been residing in California relates an experience she had there which somewhat astonished her. She a great deal of difficulty in keeping her housemaid and cook. One day when both servants had left and the family was in the difficulty, which was frequently occurring, of having to do its own work, a bright little Chinaman came and offered to fill both positions. After some hesitation he was engaged on trial. He proved capable and industrious. The meals were well cooked and punctually served, and the kitchen and the rest of the house had never been kept so clean. The man was a perfect treasure and the family was relieved of its recurring embarrassments. He remained over two years and then resigned that he might return to China. On the day he left, he took his employer through his quarters, examining everything and asked if the condition was satisfactory. He was assured that it was and that the lady was sorry to lose his services. He expressed his own satisfaction with the treatmemt he had received and said that he had left a recommendation. The next Chinaman who came explained what his predecessor meant. A curious hieroglyphic on the kitchen wall had directed him to look under the sink. There he found an oblong piece of paper covered with Chinese characters. These he deciphered for the lady's benefit as stating that she "was good allee timee; no scold much; no cheat of wages." It was, the lady said, a novel experience to her to receive a recommendation from a servant. She had been accustomed to give recommendations, not to receive them. But the testimony that obligations to social inferiors have been fulfilled may become more valuable than it is in our present social conditions. There will be a day when nothing will be so important as the testimony that the duties of common charity have been performed; for Christ will say:

Inasmuch as ye did it to these, my brethren, ye did it unto me. (Matt. 25: 40.)

An Old Man's Ecstasy.

A pathetic incident of the recent breaking of the long drought in Kansas is told by a traveler who was in that region at the time the rain came. He was driving across a bridge over a creek that was running bank full after being dry for months, and noticed an old settler sitting on the bank with his feet hanging in the stream, bailing up the water first in one hand and then the other, and letting it trickle back into the creek. The traveler spoke to him, but the old man seemed not to hear at first, and continued to bail up the water as though in a dream. When he did finally hear and look up, his face was wreathed in a happy smile and tears were running down his cheeks. The traveler made some remark in the way of inquiry as to the old man's actions. The old settler bailed up a double handful of water, and with a voice that trembled with the intensity of his realization of all it meant, he rapturously cried: "It's water, friend, it's water!" Probably the old man had never in his life been so glad to see a full stream, but then he had experienced the bitter need of water. It is so with the joy of the newly converted soul. The offer of salvation may have been heard with indifference hundreds of times, but when the need of it is really felt, there is no joy so great as comes from the invitation:

Whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely. (Rev. 22: 17.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Much-disputed question of Nuns as teachers in the public schools of Pennsylvania has been decided by the passage of a law by the Legislature making it illegal for teachers to wear any sectarian dress.

The List of University honors this Year Includes the somewhat unusual item of the degree of Doctor of Laws being confered on a woman. The recipient was Mrs. Alice F. Palmer of Harvard, and the degree was conferred by Union College.

The First Japanese Christian Church in America was recently dedicated in San Francisco. It belongs to the Methodist denomination, and has about three hundred members, who contributed largely toward the building of the edifice. The assistant minister and the organist are Japanese, and the church organization will be managed by the Japanese members, with very little help or interfence by Caucasians.

The School for Christian Workers at Springfield, Mass., reported at its annual meeting that notwithstanding the general complaints of hard times, calls had been received for more than three times the number of workers that the Institution could furnish.

A Society of Applied Christianity has been organized at Flushing, L. I. It proposes to supply defects in the work of churches where doctrine is more prominent than the practical application of Christ's teaching to daily life. It is understood that Prof. George B. Herron of Grinnell College, Ia., is to be the chief adviser of the Society, and that it will have the support of several prominent philanthropists.

A Believers' Conference and Christian Workers' Convention is to be held at Scranton, Pa., commencing this day (July 17) and continuing till July 21. Among the speakers who have promised to attend and take part in the exercises are Rev. A. B. Simpson, Rev. Stephen Merritt, Rev. James Scovill, and Mr. Charles N. Crittenton.

The Strong Disinclination of Dr. Amory Bradford to leave his church at Montclair, N. J., has set at rest the reports of his becoming pastor of Carr's Lane Church in succession to the late Dr. R. W. Dale. The church has invited Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Newcastle, to become its pastor.

The English Women's Total Abstinence Union has issued an appeal to clergymen of all denominations, and to the officers of the churches, urging the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper.

It is a Significant Sign of the Times that a Dispatch received a few days ago by the American Bible Society from its agent in Peru, acknowledges the receipt of a case of Bibles. It had safely passed the Custom House at Callao. It is only four years since Penzotti was imprisoned there for circulating the Bible.

From an English Correspondent we Learn that Gypsy Tillie Evans, who has many friends in this country, has undergone the operation which was ordered some time ago by the physicians, and that she is now well on the way to recovery. Special prayers were offered in her behalf in many of the churches in which she has labored.

The First Chinaman to Enter the Ministry in New York State is Hui Kin, who was ordained on June 30 at University Place Presbyterian Church. He has been educated under the care of the Presbytery, and has been very successful in mission work among his countrymen. He will hold Chinese services in New York, and hopes eventually to organize a church of converted Chinamen.

The Ocean Grove (N. J.) Summer School of Theology opens on August 7, and will hold three sessions each day until Aug. 16. The morning sessions will be devoted to lectures on Philosophic and Systematic Theology and Church History. The afternoons will be occupied with discussing methods of practical work, including Christian Sociology and pastoral labor. In the evening the sessions will be of a more general character, and will be held in the main auditorium, and the themes, although more adapted for lay audiences, will be related to Gospel work. The sessions will close with the Oratorio of the Messiah, under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch. Among the speakers will be Judge Tourgee, Bishop John P. Newman; Dr. G. K. Morris, of Boston; Dr. C. J. Little and Dr. Milton S. Terry of the Garrett Biblical Institute; Dr. S. F. Upham of Drew Theogical Seminary, and President J. W. Bashford of Wesleyan University. All inquiries should be addressed to Rev. J. E. Price, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GRACE CORWIN'S PRIVATE MISSION.

GRACE Corwin isn't going abroad. Her father and mother said she might, and Mrs. Van Amburgh, who chaperones the party, wanted her very much, but Grace had conscientious scruples, and would not have so much money spent on her pleasure this year. I wish I had been in her shoes."

Fanny Dean was talking with Ruth Raynor. Grace was the friend of both, and was, in a worldly sense, better off than either, being the only and idolized child of wealthy parents. Judge Corwin lavished indulgences on his fair young daughter, and had never been know to refuse a petition of hers in all her life of twenty charming years.

"Papa," she had stood smiling in the doorway of his den, waiting to be invited in, for it was understood in the household that even the petted child did not intrude on the Judge when he was looking up cases.

"Come in, my darling," he said, holding out, so to speak, the golden sceptre.

She needed no second bidding. In an instant she was seated on his knee, both arms around his neck, her soft peachy cheek and golden hair laid against his grizzled beard.

"Papa, I don't want to go to Europe. I don't; I prefer to stay at home."

"But, Grace, why so fickle? I thought it was understood that you had been studying art with a view to going about picture galleries and cathedrals; that you had planned the whole route with Mrs. Van Amburgh; that your very dearest friends among the girls were, some of them, going, and that it was to be, from start to finish, a first-class lark. I had fuss enough to coax your mother into saying yes to what she thought a wild-goose-chase of a notion, when it was first presented, and now Gracie says she doesn't wish the trip after all. What does she wish? Tell father, sweetheart."

You see these two were very deeply in love with one another, and very full in one another's confidence. It is a pleasant thing for father and daughter thus to enjoy reciprocal and unstinted affection.

"To tell the truth," said Grace, looking her father straight in the face, clear-eyed and fearless, "I want the thousand dollars it would have cost you, papa, and liberty to spend it just as I choose."

"What can you do with a thousand dollars here at home? Mamma provides for your needs here, my daughter."

"Ah, but" said Grace, "I don't want it simply for my own pleasure. I want the money deposited in a bank to my account, with leave to spend it just as I please, the understanding being that I will do nothing wrong, and that you and mamma shall know where every dollar goes. I want to make a great many girls happy with the cost of the trip I don't take this summer."

"What put it into your head, little girl?"

"Well, partly it came from a visit with mamma to the mission she is interested in, away down in the Bowery, and partly from a talk I had with a girl of my own age, in a shop where I was buying some shirt waists yesterday. The girl was very pale and tired, and she made a mistake in waiting on a customer. The floor-walker spoke to her very sharply, and the tears came into her eyes. I talked to her a few moments, and found out that she had a sister ill with pneumonia and has lost her rest; working all day in the shop, and sitting [illegible] Papa, things are not fairly divided in this world, with some having so much and [illegible] I am [illegible] I want to have a private mission of my own, for the next six months."

"You shall do as you choose, my dear," the judge answered at last, kissing her, and smoothing the golden hair of which he was so proud. "Now run away, I must be earning money fast, if my daughter is to give away a whole thousand dollars."

It is strange that even the best men often have a sense that they are a little wasteful, when they bestow liberally in charity or for the church, while they never dream of feeling so if they spend equally large sums on their families or their residences.

Judge Corwin went to the bank, after awhile, and opened an account for Grace with one thousand dollars.

"He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," he said, taking himself to task, as he realized that he did not quite approve of what he was doing.

"It ought to bring in good results, that investment," he said. "It will in one way; Grace will be with us, and now, when she does go over the water, her mother and I will be of the party."

He went home to dinner and handed Grace her bank-book with a real gentleman-of-the-old-school courtly bow.

"There, my dear Miss Corwin, is the amount of your letter of credit for the summer. Make a good use of it, and I will be satisfied."

I am afraid I cannot begin to tell you how much Grace did with that money. She knew a dear old lady who was suffering with cataract. Part of Grace's fund paid a famous oculist to operate on the veiled eye, and its vision was restored. A hundred dollars mysteriously floated in one morning to the breakfast table of a home missionary. Fifty dollars sent singing books and a fine addition to the library of a Sunday School in Maine. A widow, struggling on the tiniest of incomes, was helped to a summer outing for herself and her children. Twenty-five young women were sent to the Seaside Rest for three weeks. Grace found many ways to dispose of her money, and every dollar of it did good, and as she was careful not to let her left hand guess what her right hand did, no harm was done to any one by her beneficence. She received no begging letters. She was imposed on by nobody. She simply enjoyed her private mission, all through one happy summer, and made every spot her consecrated money touched to bloom like a garden of the Lord.

"I think, Kitty dear," said the Judge to his wife, one day, when the two were in their own chamber and conversing confidentially, "I think we might initiate our Grace to advantage. 'There is that scattereth and yet increaseth.' I will give away more hereafter and so shall you."

"And Henry," the wife spoke earnestly, "put it in my power, please, to act as independently as Grace has done, these last months. Give me my separate allowance for benevolence. I have never had one, you know."

It was on her husband's lips to say, "You have had my pocket-book at your disposal," but he restrained himself. In his wife's face was a look of repressed eagerness which went to his heart. He simply said,

"Kitty, I am a man under authority, I will do whatever you wish. I ought, long ago, to have thought that there might be a choice for you in our way of managing home finance. Thanks to Grace, we will move on more satisfactorily from this day."

Wives will admit that this result was one of the very best, when Grace's private mission came to balance accounts.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on July 7, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends: "Friend," Maryland, for a widowed daughter who has little children whom she is not teaching to pray. ——A Believer, Bristol, Vt., for two dear friends. —— "Reader," Cherry Camp, W. Va., for a son whose reason is tottering through the liquor habit. ——F. L., Binghamton, N. Y., for a brother, that a change of heart may be worked in him which shall be complete and permanent. —— "A Distressed Mother," Chicago, whose son is being alienated from his family and deceived by his unprincipled wife, that the latter may be converted and turned from her wicked ways, which are involving many in sorrow and apprehension. —— "Wife and Mother," Strong, Me., that her husband and son may be converted. —— "A Worker for Christ," Riverside, Kans., on behalf of a brother-in-law who is opposing Christian work and doing much harm to young people; also for the conversion of a drunkard, the husband of a dear friend. —— "Sister in Jesus," Aiken, S. C., for the conversion of a precious one whose besetting sin is the love of intoxicating drink. —— "Reader," New Castle, Pa., for the conversion of a dear friend, a physician, now suffering from nervous prostration, a good, kind, generous man, but not saved —— "Subscriber," Ohio, for the conversion of three beloved brothers and their wives. —— "B," Vt., for her husband's conversion in spite of his indifference and his expressed dislike of religion; also for a beloved son who lacks the one thing needful. —— "Daughter and Sister," for the salvation of a dear brother and sister, and that her mother and herself may have more grace.

For the Restoration of Health. R. W. C., Rock Cave, W. Va., that God would mercifully restore the use of his side to a friend at Louisville, Ky., who has been ill two years. —— "Believer in Prayer," for the recovery of self and friends from a painful disease. —— "Mother," Ashland, Va., for the restoration of hearing. —— "Believer," Buffalo, that a Christian young man recently become insane, may recover his reason. —— "Lover of Jesus," Lebanon, Ill., that her husband may get some relief from a distressing cough which is wearing his life away. —— Subscriber, Alameda, Cal., that God would hear the prayers of many years for the recovery of hearing. —— "Reader," Evansville, Ind., for recovery from long sickness. —— W. H. F., Atlanta, Ga., for the recovery of hearing and health long since lost.

For Special Blessings. A. M. H., Buckhannon, W. Va., for deliverance and protection for a persecuted family. —— L. G. Grey, that two orphans may be helped of God in their struggle to maintain themselves; also that a persecuted family may be supported and encouraged. —— "Believer," Baltimore, Md., that God would interfere on behalf of a man in financial stress that justice may be done in his case. —— "Bereaved," for God's blessing on a stricken family and for guidance in great trouble. —— "Anxious Parents," Fabius, Ark., that in some way the means may be provided for a worthy son to finish his course in college. —— "Broken-hearted," Kansas City, Mo., to whom everything seems dark, that God would mercifully restore the lost and give more faith. —— "Agonized Mother," Atlanta, Ga., who complains that her own prayers are unanswered and has lost her faith, that God would give her new light and patience in answer to the prayers of others who still have faith and that some token may come to her in her dark lot. —— I. H. N., Philadelphia, Pa., that the blessing mentioned in Psalm 133: 3 may be granted of God. —— "A Despairing Soul," Chicago, Ill., that in some way God would change her environment and surroundings that she might be enabled to lead a virtuous, Christian life and that help might come speedily lest the present pressure of temptation prove too great for her strength.

If we had the name and address of the writer of this letter, perhaps we might be able to interest some Christian friend in her case who might help.

A GROWING MISSION.

The spiritual work of the Harlem People's Mission, at No. 2418, Second avenue, New York, is in a most encouraging condition. Large audiences attend the services, and much good has already been accomplished in a populous part of the city, where the mission field is still far from being fully occupied. The Mission Sunday School is greatly in need of teachers; the school is regularly crowded with street children, but the absence of a number of teachers in the summer months has depleted the list of available workers. About one hundred and fifty children now come regularly every Sunday afternoon. Mr. Joseph Bennet is Superintendent of the school.

A FLORAL PONY-WAGON.

A Festival of Flowers.

One of the Prettiest Spectacles of t Summer Abroad, in which Royal Takes Part.

AN attractive annual eve in many old-world co tries, is "The Festival the Flowers." In Sp and Italy, especial these fetes are look forward to by the pe antry with rare antici tion, and the skill and artistic ingen employed in getting up the floral desi and decorations for the great day itself something remarkable. Gaily decora carriages, wagons, and wheelbarrows, se literally hidden amid blooms and foliz horses and oxen are seen in many-colo floral trappings, and men women and c dren wear wreaths and necklaces of b and blossoms strung together like t beautiful ones woven by the girls of moa, which they cast over the shoulder their guests at feasts. France, Engl and Germany have followed the exar of their more southerly neighbors, floral fetes are now almost regular oc rences every year in those countries. Mexico, the fete of the flowers is one of greatest events of the whole year, and California, where nature is prodigal in gifts of fruits and flowers, these festi have been a great success.

Last month, a floral fete was held at

A DECORATED WHEELING BABY-CHA

Royal Botanic Society's Gardens, Lon which was probably the finest in man spects ever held in England. It was tronized by royalty, and the Prince Princess of Wales with their daughters Dukes and Duchesses of York and and a big assemblage of other very guished people took an active inter Thousands of young people attende fete, and the floral designs and device tered in the competition were varied beautiful. We reproduce on this pa few of the most striking ones (from the don "Illustrated News"), to which p were awarded. There were hundre others almost equally pretty and displa the marvelous effects that can be pro by skilful floral combinations in the h of clever artists.

ANIMALS' FEAR OF EARTHQUA

Not only man, but all the lower ani are stricken with terror when the grou is shaken by earthquake. An observ of animal life has been noting the behavi of animals during a recent earthquak in Europe. A railway guard observed at some minutes before the first shock as felt, an owl, chained to a tool-house, ed as if for help, and horses were obs ed running as if for their lives up a hill before the first shock. Pigeons and h on a tower were observed to fly arou it every time that a shock was near. Sparrows and red-breasts also fluttered out and seemed to overcome their fear of m. The most excited of all were the hens. They trembled before a shock occurred and fell on their knees and sides. The dogs howled the whole night.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon the proprietor, and also upon those who sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

MISSIONARIES PROTECTED.

A little Band of Workers at Ch'en-tu ved From Massacre—Their Station.

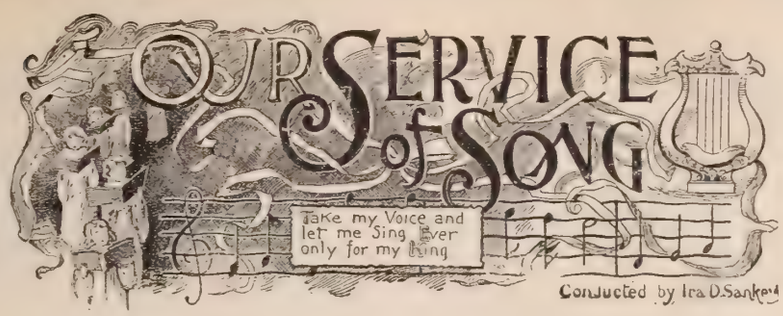
DURING the troublous period immediately following the close of the Chino-Japanese war, Christian missionaries in certain parts of China were in daily peril of massacre at the hands of fanatical mis. News came to this country of a ricat Ch'en-tu, in which it was feared th the missionaries had been slain by the mi but it fortunately happened that, alth gh the mission property wa destroyed, the workers thselves were protected by th Chinese authorities. These fac have already been mentioned briefly in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Wing in "China's Millions," D Herbert Parry gives this interesting description of Ch'en-tu "Ch'en-tu, the chief city of the province of Si-ch'uen, is a lar and busy centre, with a population of possibly about 300,00, lying in the midst of an extensive and very fertile plain everywhere traversed by water-courses. The city is enclosed by a broad wall, which has a circuit of nearly ten miles, and has very extensive suburbs outside its north, south, and eastgates. A royal city in past centuries, the remains of its palaces are still visible. The various trades and crafts occupy the respective quarters, and prominent among these are the silk weavers and silk merchants, the embroiderers, the clothiers, and the Cantonese wax dealers. The people have the general character of quietness, friendliness, and industry, the least peaceful element being, no doubt, the Mahometan and Manchu. We do not know of the city being visited by Protestant preachers earlier than about thirty years ago, when Dr. Jo and another made a short stay. The work of the China Inland Mission was commenced in 1881 by Messrs. Clarke and Ri and their wives. For some years, the house at the north end of the city was the sole evangelical light-centre in this great city, and the whole of the surrounding plain, with its many busy cities, until in 1887 work was begun by Dr. Pruen at the west end, in close proximity to the Manchu quarter; and then, in 1891, at the south end of the city by the American Methodist Mission, and in 1892 in the east section by the Canadian Methodist Mission, followed by temporary residence of the C. M. S. The work of the various missions is still in the preparatory stages, but there is the prospect of largely increasing influence, especially in connection with Medical Mission work.

The progress of the work in our own Mission has been slow and uphill. It has comprised public preaching, Medical Mission work, classes for Bible instruction, book-selling, and day schools, and not least, the quiet work in the guest halls. The present most apparent result of all the seed sowing, represented by the above methods of work, is in the small Christian company of about forty persons, exclusive of a score or so of others.

One of the early members is now a much esteemed evangelist at Lu-chau; another is helping at Kia-ting, a third is evangelist and pastor of the Mei-chau Church, whilst a fourth is valued as a helper in the work at Kwan-hien, and another who has been useful in two cities, received his first years of practical training in Ch'en-tu. The Ch'en-tu Church has now in hand a project which must exercise its spirit of giving for some years to come, namely, the building of a public place of worship outside the mission house, three-fifths of the sum needed, the beginning of a movement against footed to be of native giving. There is also the binding, which deserves and needs our prayerful sympathy. With Ch'en-tu as a centre, we draw on the map a circle having a radius of seventy miles."

HELPFUL BIBLE PASSAGES.

In general it may be said that those portions of the Bible help one most which do most to open his eyes to his real relations to God. How many have read the story of the Pharisee and the publican, for instance, again and again, admiring its tender beauty but without fitting it closely to themselves, until some day as they read over the familiar words again, it flashes upon them that the parable has a personal application. In themselves they see revealed, not without shame, the supercilious spiritual pride of the Pharisee. In themselves, like the publican himself although not yet perceiving the hopefulness of the fact, they become conscious of a guilt unbearable without forgiveness. So sometimes a word, or prophecy, sometimes a psalm, sometimes an utterance by our Lord sometimes an exhortation by an apostle is what we need at the time. It is hard indeed to decide that any part of the Bible helps us most, although of course there are some portions which are more are less incidental to the others and the mission of which is not to help us as they do. The whole Bible, therefore, should be read and studied that we may learn the use and value of its various and different parts.



HO, EVERY ONE THAT THIRSTETH.

(Isaiah 55: 1.)

CARRIE E. BRECK, arr. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

1. Ho, ye, ev - ery one that thirst - eth, Come and sat - is - fy your need;....
2. Ho, ye, ev - ery one that thirst - eth, 'Tis the lov - ing Sav-iour's call; ....
3. Ho, ye, ev - ery one that thirst - eth, He is call - ing you to - day;.....
4. Ho, ye, ev - ery one that thirst - eth, Hear the gos - pel trum-pet sound;...

You may drink of liv ing wa - ters, On the bread of life may feed.
To the ban - quet He pro - vid - eth, Come, and wel - come, one and all.
La - bor not for joys that per - ish, Come to Je - sus while you may.
Turn to Him who now is wait - ing, Seek Him while He may be found.

CHORUS.

"Ho, ev - ery one that thirst - eth," With-out mon - ey, come and buy;
O come and buy;

Liv - ing bread and liv - ing wa - ter, Eat and drink and nev - er die.

Copyright, 1895, by James McGranahan.

From "GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2," by permission of the publishers.

CHRIST'S COMING.

An Address at a Prophetic Conference in London.

BY A SCOTCH PROFESSOR.

I THINK there can be little question, amongst any of us (whatever be our opinions) that the hope set before the child of God in this blessed Book of Revelation, is the personal coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; that the Spirit of God would have all eyes looking out for him, all desires unto him.

I believe the Lord's coming to be personal and pre-millennial. There can be no doubt that the Spirit of God in the New Testament sets this before us;—to "look for his Son from heaven;" that "this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And the great Apostle of the Gentiles describes the Christian as looking for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body.

He is the blessed hope of the Church. In the New Testament it seems to me that the Apostles themselves expected the return of the Lord in their day. So true is this that we find men nowadays striking at the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and endeavoring to gather an argument from the fact that although the disciples expected the Lord to come in their day, he did not appear, and that therefore the Scriptures could not be inspired.

Now, I gather a different argument from this, on the ground that it was the will of the Lord that his disciples should live in the constant expectation of his coming, so that whether he came in the morning, in the evening, or at cock-crow, they might be ready to open unto him. It is remarkable that the Apostles always speak of the Lord's coming in the first person. They do not say they, but they say we. "Behold I shew you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed." It has struck me that they had the Lord's own warrant directly for this constant expectation of his personal coming.

So far as I know anything of the coming of the Lord Jesus, it is to me a matter of intense joy. It is delightful that he will come who died for us. We shall embrace those hands, and we shall kiss those feet, and we shall be with him and see him! I cannot brethren, for a moment allow that we should confound the coming of death to the believer with the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to the believer. Some say that when we are told to watch for the Lord in the morning, at evening, at midnight, or at cock-crow, it may mean the Lord's coming at death, and that for the Christian to die is the same as for the Lord to come.

But there is a vast, splendid, and glorious contrast between the two events. When death comes, death conquers me; when Christ comes, I conquer death. When death comes, this mortal puts on mortality; when Christ comes, this mortal puts on immortality. When death comes, the corruptible puts on corruption (Bury my dead out of my sight); when the Lord Jesus Christ comes, the corruptible shall put on incorruption, and we shall be changed.

THE LORD'S COMING.

A popular little work by Mrs. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear every week in this journal. It contains fifteen chapters on the events predicted in the Bible to occur between the present time and the close of the Millennium. Third Edition—Revised and Enlarged. 104 pages. Price fifteen cents. Published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91-101 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN JOURNEY.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing July 28. Matt. 7 : 13, 14; John 14 : 1-6.

MAN'S spiritual life is very like a journey. Bunyan's matchless allegory appeals to every man's own experience. We know that we are never standing still. We are moving in one direction or the other. Doubts as the direction he is taking and uncertainties about his destination, often come to the man who is striving to climb upward, who finds the way difficult, and who often falls back. He is like a man rowing against the tide, who seems to be carried back farther than he has propelled his bark forward. But the intention in him, the earnest desire, the repeated effort to attain, count for much, and may help to dispel his doubts. Every man has this possibility before him. He may travel from the natural to the spiritual, or he may turn his back on the spiritual and go into the lower depths of the natural. His nature touches two worlds. On the one side it is akin to the brutes, and on the other it is related to the divine. No one who has intelligently watched his own impulses can have any [illegible] of the fact. The pleasure he derives from any act of kindness, any self-denial for the sake of others, shows him that he has a spiritual nature in him. On the other hand, the present gratification that comes from the pleasures of the table and from any kind of indulgence of the body, shows him his connection with the animal. The question asked of him individually is to which kingdom he will belong. He may [illegible] after the flesh, or after the spirit—but walk he must. If he choose the road to the lower type, the path is easy. He secures his good as he goes along, and it would be absurd to deny that he has enjoyment. But the end of the road is disgusting, is despicable and revolting in a hideous degree. They who live after the flesh [illegible]. They deliberately renounce the privileges of their human nature and become brutes. But if the man choose the path upward? There is no condemnation there, but there is toil and struggle and the price of progress is sleepless vigilance. Then he rows against the stream. He is tried in many ways. Sometimes poverty meets him and tempts him to sin, wronging his soul to supply the needs of the body. Sometimes it is prosperity that tests him, putting in his hands the means of animal gratification, luring him into indolence and luxury. Bereavement, physical suffering, ridicule of friends—every kind of hindrance comes in his way to test his mettle and prove whether he is of the kind that deserves life. He falls and faints with the struggle, but if he belongs to "the fittest who survive," he will die rather than turn back. Even those who would encourage him are discouraged and he who has tried here to help him, can now do so no more. But the only real help that can come is in Christ. To the earnest struggler, Christ holds out his helping hand and utters words of encouragement. Eternal life is assured to every man who will deny himself, take up his cross and follow Christ. He has trodden the same path; he has gone on before; he has gone to prepare a place for those who follow; and he is beckoning them and encouraging them always. There, where he is, is the place prepared for the storm-beaten, buffeted traveler—there at the end of the upward path in the mansions of the Father's house.

PRESIDENT JOHN H. CHAPMAN.

✠

THE BALTIMORE CONVENTION.

The third of the great conventions of young people assembles this week. The hosts of young Baptists from every section of the country will, by the time this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in the hands of its readers, be on the way to Baltimore, Md., to hold their fifth annual convention. We give on this page a picture of the tent pitched at the entrance to Druid Hill Park, which is to form the chief auditorium and a portrait of Mr. John H. Chapman, the indefatigable and energetic President of the Union. This assembly will surely be the largest the Union has yet held, for it has grown prodigiously since the Convention of a year ago. Mr. Chapman's Western tour and the thorough organization of the Union have resulted in very large additions to the number of societies and to the membership. Much has also probably been gained by the system of study adopted by the American Union. This, instead of following the system of the International Sunday School lessons as does the Christian Endeavor Society, has a line of its own in the Christian Culture Courses, which aims at a definite and comprehensive educational result. The benefits are obvious and the young people have followed the courses with enthusiasm. This Convention will undoubtedly show very marked progress in the system and prove the wisdom of its adoption.

The programme of the sessions so far as it could be arranged before the gathering of the Convention, covers the entire field of the year's work. Thursday morning session is to be devoted to addresses of welcome and responses and the reading of the General Secretary's report. Open parliaments and two addresses are to occupy the afternoon, and the presentation of prize banners and a discussion of Baptist educational methods will be the business of the evening. Friday opens with six sunrise prayer-meetings in as many churches at 6.30. Three hours later the sessions are resumed; officers will be elected and other important business transacted. In the afternoon, twelve separate meetings will be held simultaneously in different churches to consider different phases of the Union's work, prayer-meetings, missions, temperance literature, etc. Each meeting has its own special topic, and thus members will be able to select the one which their committee-affiliation invests with the most interest to them. This is a very ingenious mode of saving time, and as it is not copyright may be worth the attention of other organizations. Friday evening is the great missionary celebration and several eminent speakers are to address the Convention. Saturday's work opens with the six sunrise prayer-meetings. The chief feature of the day will be the rallies of the sections. There are four of these drawn on geographical lines, and each is distinguished by a color. On Sunday, the Convention sermon is to be preached by Rev. P. S. Henson, of Chicago, and in the evening there will be a solemn consecration service and the President's closing address.

Among the speakers who have promised to take part in the Convention are: Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn; Rev. O. C. S. Wallace, of Toronto; Dr. Roland Grant, of Portland, Ore.; Rev. Frederick L. Anderson, of Rochester, N. Y.; Dr. Johnston Mvers, Prof. Ira M. Price and Dr. P. S. Henson, of Chicago; Rev. Russell Conwell, of Philadelphia; Dr. S. A. Northrop, of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Prof. J. M. Stifler, of Crozer Seminary, and Dr. H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore.

THE BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION AT BALTIMORE, MD.—THE GREAT TENT.

✠

Rev. Charles A. Sadleir, formerly secretary of the Winnipeg Young Men's Christian Association, is going as a missionary to the Araunanian Indians in South Chili.

✠

The Wesleyan Conference of Sydney, N.S.W., has passed a resolution giving official sanction to the Y. P. S. C. E. A constitution has been adopted which, while allowing the Weslevan societies to affiliate with the New South Wales Endeavor Union, provides for their working in harmony with Weslevan rules and usages.

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

VII.—MR. JOSEPH LEWIS.

WHEN a young Christian desires to work for Christ, his thoughts naturally turn to the ministry or to the evangelistic field, and if he is prevented by circumstances from entering either, he is apt to think that he is debarred from Christian usefulness. The life of the Christian worker whose portrait we publish this week, is a practical refutation of that. Mr. Lewis has been able, while engaged in business and while attending to many interests to do effective service for Christ and to win souls for him. For more than twenty years he has followed a line of his own, which was suggested to him by an unexpected blessing, and other blessings have followed in its train. In one of the many accidents which have befallen men Lewis in greater number than the majority of men have experienced, his leg was badly fractured, and he lay for several weeks in a critical condition. Among the friends who called to condole with him was a comparative stranger, a well-to-do business man, who was particularly kind and sympathetic. When Mr. Lewis was recovering, he said that this gentleman had been stricken with serious illness. Remembering his kindness in calling upon him, Mr. Lewis wrote to him to express his sympathy, as he was unable to visit him personally. He was too earnest a Christian to neglect the opportunity of testifying to the value of religion that he wrote so kindly and sincerely that the reader's heart was touched. The result of that letter gave Mr. Lewis a clue to his life-labor. He had in his youth been afflicted with deafness which excluded him from active service, but here was a field in which his deafness was no obstacle. From that time forward, Mr. Lewis has kept his pen busy. The Lord had showed him a way in which he could work for him. Letters beyond power to estimate have been sent out not only to friends and business acquaintances but to strangers. Mr. Lewis thankfully acknowledges the goodness of God in giving the direct appeals to the conviction of sinners. He believes that this line of work may be used more extensively than it is, and he recommends it earnestly to those Christians who are anxious to work for Christ, but do not know how.

MR. JOSEPH LEWIS OF MILWAUKEE.

Mr. Lewis is an Englishman by birth. He is now in his seventy-second year. He was born at Stroud in Gloucestershire in 1823, and came to this country in 1849, settled in Milwaukee, Wis., where he still resides.

The Family and Home Circle

Mont-Lawn's Happy Fourth.

How our Children Celebrated the Nation Birthday—Even Rain did not Dampen their Ardor—The Pickaninny Band at Our Children's Home.

THE Fourth of July—that day of days to which our little guests at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn have been eagerly looking forward for many weeks, has come and gone, and it has left in their hearts by a ten days' holiday at the Children's Home.

One of the interesting features of the Home life is the gratitude of the children and their parents for their sojourn at Mont-Lawn. Many are the letters that come from those who have enjoyed the ten days' visit there. Some will bear repetition, as illustrating the feelings of the children who came to Mont-Lawn:

DEAR MISS :—You may think I have forgotten you, but I haven't. I am always thinking of you night and day. Oh, I miss you very much. I will not forget the nice times we had together. I often wish I could go up again this summer. . . If I can do nothing better I will be sure to remember you and write to you. . . Mamma says she wants to thank you very much. I came home at 12 o'clock and found them all well. They were glad to hear I had a nice time. I hope you are all well. . . I close with best regards to you." "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble."

This from a unusually bright lad:

MY DEAR FRIEND :—I will write a few lines to you, hoping you are well and are still having a good time. When I come home I cried, for I could not help it. Anything I have I would give if I could spend the Fourth with you and the other teachers and children, for I know you are going to have a good time. I don't think I shall be able to spend another better ten days this summer. JAMES ——.

One of the smaller girls writes:

DEAR MISS :—I got home all right and my mother was glad to see me, and when my father saw me he asked me if I enjoyed myself, and my mother said I got stouter in the face, and my father bought water melons and a great big piece, and now I close my letter and send my best love to all the teachers.

From your loving friend ——.

During the week, a number of our readers have signified their hearty approval of the work of the Home among the children of the slums by sending in their contributions for its support, as follows:

Previously ackn'd	$137.25
A lady friend, Cape May	5 00
Mrs [illegible] F Mansfield	[illegible]
P W Barrow	2 60
Mrs S. J. Tibbals	5 00
[illegible] Gearhart	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Mr and Mrs R McKeighan	2 00
Wm S Hart	[illegible]
A Newark Girl	3 00
Mrs A J Goddard	1 00
Joseph F Wild	[illegible]
T K Fassett, Mar	[illegible]
Mrs J Stone	[illegible]
Miss [illegible] Holliday	[illegible]
I H N, Clarkeale, Miss	25
Miss [illegible]	1 [illegible]
Fl[illegible]	15
Mrs Alice A Johnston	1 00
Mrs J T Hoge	3 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	$490.20

All contributions will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A Hint to the Young Folks.

It is important that children should be taught the value of thoroughness, order, and application. Many young people, through lack of early training, grow up with a fixed habit of doing their work incompletely and leaving loose ends everywhere. "That boy would do tip-top if he had a string long enough," said one neighbor. "I don't see what use he would make of a string," said number two. "Well, if he could tie up all the loose ends that he leaves dangling, tie himself down to his work, tie his pocket-book together, and then tie his tongue so it wouldn't wag so busily, he would be as useful a fellow as we have got in town. But it would take considerable string."

Here is a hint which young people should not fail to profit by. Thoroughness and order are valuable qualities all through life.

THE "PICKANINNY BAND."

DID you ever see a band composed of mere children—a real, live, sure-enough brass band with drum, tuba, cornet, clarinet, trombone, cymbals and all the rest? If you never did, you should have seen the Pickaninny Orphan Band, whose members afforded no little enjoyment at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, on July 4th, as mentioned in another column. If you can imagine fourteen little colored lads of all ages from six to thirteen, each armed with a brass instrument almost as big as himself, and all playing away for dear life with all the vigor of young lungs, but in capital time and tune, then you may have an idea of the Pickaninnies. Two wee chaps act as drum-majors and their time-keeping antics are droll enough to keep an audience amused. The Pickaninnies can play marches, patriotic songs and a fine selection of gospel hymns, and if anybody doesn't believe they can give volume enough he should just listen to one piece and be convinced. The only thing that disturbed them at the Children's Home was when the ice-cream began to be served. The band was playing a march as the cream-bricks were being distributed. Gradually the waiters got nearer and the Pickaninnies became more and more nervous. The playing grew faint and the eyes of the two tiny drum-majors rolled wildly in the direction of the big ice-cream freezer. At last the fourteen magnificent bricks of cream were laid with cakes and spoons in front of the still playing pickaninnies. The band wavered; the tuba blurted, the trombone expired in puffs, the cymbals shook and the smallest drum-major furtively wiped his lips with his sleeve and forgot to twirl his baton. It was well that the critical moment came when the march was nearly over, otherwise it would never have been ended.

THE "PICKANINNY ORPHAN BAND," OF CHARLESTON, S. C., AT MONT-LAWN.

The leader and instructor of this little band is F. A. Wallace, a young man of twenty-four, and himself a capital musician and player. He has taught the boys for eight months, and they can all play well from the music in sheets. Rev. Dr. Jenkins, the founder and superintendent of the Colored Orphan Home, Charleston, S. C., is doing a worthy work among the neglected colored children of that city. He has 536 boys and girls enrolled in his institution and is assisted by nine teachers. The Home, No. 20 Franklin Street, Charleston, can accommodate 1,000. Attached to it are 100 acres of land presented to the Home by Mr. Joseph Wild, of Bay Ridge, N. Y. Dr. Jenkins' aim is to develop self-support as far as possible by the introduction of various industries among the boys and girls under his care.

Laughing Babies

are loved by everybody. Those raised on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk are conspicuously free from sickness. Infant Health is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address for a copy to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

Herr, Superintendent, consisting of choruses, a greeting to Dr. Klopsch, and several fantastic and bewildering marches by the Pickaninny Orphan Band. Fifty quarts of ice-cream and one hundred and twenty-five luscious pies rested the children awhile, after which, in the intervals of successive showers of rain, a really fine exhibition of fireworks followed. A number of visitors witnessed the display and greatly enjoyed the enthusiasm of the children. On Saturday evening the balance of the fireworks was set off on the Lawn in the presence of a large number of visiting friends of the Home.

The new tent is a source of joy and pride to the children. Large enough to enclose an audience of over 500, it affords ample space for all purpose of general dining-hall and recreation room and affords a cool and pleasant shelter from the sun, shaded as it is by trees on the spacious lawn. It was urged the that a "fly" or cover should be provided for the tent, to assure protection in all weathers, but as the accommodations in the other buildings of the Home are abundant for all purposes in stormy weather, Dr. Klopsch thoughtfully decided that the fifty dollars would be better expended in giving sixteen poor little street waifs a chance to refresh their wasted bodies and brighten [illegible] exception to the rule, [illegible] the [illegible] measured to pre-arranged fair [illegible] plans. It was therefore decided to provide [illegible] indoor [illegible] the actual [illegible] the [illegible] sunshine-time. [illegible] morning [illegible] serenade [illegible] by [illegible] Pickaninny [illegible] Brass [illegible] troupe [illegible] dozen little [illegible] boys [illegible] Dr. [illegible] Colored [illegible] Orphan [illegible] at [illegible] ston, S. [illegible] with Mr. [illegible] allace as leader and instructor. [illegible] a stirring blast of the signal [illegible] to hundred and fifty tenement boys [illegible] fell in line and marched, singing, [illegible] rge dining tent recently erected. [illegible] bountiful breakfast was spread. [illegible] to the chapel where patriotic, pop[illegible] religious songs were rendered by [illegible] en for an hour, with keen zest [illegible] ment. The forenoon was spent in [illegible] of setting off firecrackers and tor[illegible] At four o'clock dinner was served, [illegible] extra dessert of watermelon.

[illegible] came the regular programme of [illegible] under the able direction of Miss

ALICE MAPLETON'S ORDEAL

A STORY OF NOBLE FORTITUDE UNDER TRIAL.

Written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by E. CARSWELL.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

A Change of Scene.

IT was a busy life that Alice and her mother were now leading and they clung to the tenement-house in which it had commenced. Alice's plea for just one more week before quitting it had been made more than once and the others had smilingly agreed. Will and Fred were busy, too, and Mrs. Mapleton seconded her daughter. The little circle of humble friends in and around the house had widened naturally. One man had a sister who had been left a widow with little children, and he wished some way of starting her in a little store could be arranged. A woman had a daughter who was working in a box-factory, and after going to a dancing-class in the evening for a couple of weeks, she had not come home and had been away several nights. Her mother was sure she had gone wrong, but was also sure she had a good heart, and if some one with tact talked to her she could be reclaimed. Then a truck-driver had been run over, and his wife wanted some one to go to the hospital to see him. Then a man who had signed the pledge had fallen and must be looked up and restored. In each case Miss Alice was just the lady to be enlisted for service and they were only specimens of many cases in which her aid was sought. Then there were the mothers' meetings at the Hall in the afternoon, the children's meetings in the evening and the grown girls' and young men's meetings at night. Mrs. Mapleton took her share of the duties, and Will laughingly said he believed that soon he and Fred would be so much neglected, that they would get no attention at all but by getting some disease or being hurt by some accident so as to arouse pity. This thing Will insisted could not go on. Instead of his mother and sister withdrawing from the work, they were getting in deeper.

"We will surely begin house-hunting next week," said Alice, when her last request for "just one more week" had been granted. "It seems dreadful to spend on ourselves all the time it will take, when there are so many people who have such urgent need of our time and effort. But it must be done, I suppose. I wish it was over. When we have found the house to suit us, there will be more time to be taken up in furnishing it. Once I should have enjoyed all that, but that was before I knew how much trouble there was in the world that may be relieved."

"That is one trouble that may be avoided in one way," said Will. "I know of a house that might suit. It is already furnished, and I am inclined to believe that mamma would like it. The furniture might not be fashionable enough for you, Alice; but it is substantial, and mamma does not care so much about fashion if the things are good, as they are in this case. It may be bought just as it stands, house and furniture together. That would save trouble."

"I [illegible] people's taste in such matters. Of course it would be nice to be saved the worry of selection and all that, but perhaps the furniture is hideous."

"No, it was selected by very good people, and I think mamma would like it. As [illegible] and Fred will not be likely to stay in it [illegible] as long as she lives, so we must consult her taste. What do you say, mamma, to [illegible]?"

Mrs. Mapleton said she would be glad to go and see the house at any time, but she scarcely thought it was necessary. If Will liked it and thought it would suit, she was sure she would like it. Will seemed pleased with this mark of confidence, and did not press her to go, as Alice thought he should have done. A few days afterwards he quietly said, in a casual way, as if he had been speaking of the purchase of a chair or a table, that the house and furniture were their's and he was having the place cleaned up ready for them to go to. This brought on him a torrent of questions. Where was the house? What was it like? How many rooms were there? Was there a garden? To all queries he had but one answer, "Come and see it."

Curiosity could not be restrained after that announcement. A carriage was sent for and all four entered, Will handing to the driver a slip of paper with the address on it. Fred and Will took great pains to interest Mrs. Mapleton and Alice in conversation during the drive, and so far succeeded that neither of them noticed the direction in which they were going or the locality in which they stopped; they were hurried out of the carriage and up the steps of a brown-stone mansion; the door was opened and a familiar voice said, "Welcome, ladies, to your own nice home again." It was Mrs. Callaghan who spoke. Mrs. Mapleton looked around in amazement. She found herself in her old home, and just as she had left it three years before.

"Am I dreaming or is it real?" she asked.

"It's just waking up that ye are, mum; it's daylight again, and may ye never have to pass another such a night again as the one ye've just come through," said Mrs. Callaghan.

"Welcome home," said Will, as he stooped and kissed his mother who had sunk into a chair completely overcome by her emotions.

"Is it truly ours again, our dear old home?" cried Alice.

She looked around at the beaming faces of Fred and Will and Mrs. Callaghan, and saw her own joy reflected there. "This is the best thing you could have done, Will," she said. "This fills our cup of happiness to the brim. I would rather have this dear old home of my childhood than the most splendid palace in the city."

They entered the parlor, and Mrs. Mapleton said: "Before I ask any explanations, let me return thanks to him who has done so much for us," and kneeling down, she poured out such a prayer of thanksgiving as could not have come from the same heart nor been uttered by the same lips a year ago.

"Now, dear Will, please explain all the mystery—how you recovered the dear old home, and why it is almost exactly as when we left it?"

"Well, mother dear, Fred and I found that Mr. Jackson had been living in the place himself, and had kept it as near as possible in the same condition as when you left it."

"He had some superstitious idea about any change bringing him ill-luck, or else he wanted the place to be homelike if he succeeded in a scheme he had. Anyway, he made no change. He had raised money on it, and the man who held the mortgage foreclosed w[illegible]n our friend got behind the bars. There was some question whether [illegible] and both me and Jackson welcomed my offer to settle the [illegible] house off their hands. Jackson felt under obligations to me for not pressing the charges against him and he helped in the matter; so we have the house at a pretty low price."

"Where is Mr. Jackson gone?" Alice asked. "I wish he were not around here. I think I should faint if I were to see him. His persecution nearly killed me."

"You are not likely to see him again," said Fred. "He leaves for Texas this evening. He has managed to get a share in a ranch out there and means to settle down and lead a straight life. He has made a good beginning this morning by getting married."

"Married!" exclaimed Mrs. Mapleton and Alice simultaneously. "To whom?"

"Someone you don't know. He had proposed to a sister of Louie's — Miss Alfreda Wilson—but he was anxious to back out, and I believe Mr. Wilson was resolutely opposed to the match. The bride was once Mrs. Wilson's maid. Jackson has known her a long time."

"It is poor Nettie," said Alice. "I am so glad. She was faithful to him all through, and he had wronged her cruelly. I hope he will treat her well."

Will had arranged with Mrs. Callaghan to stay the night at the house as the engaging of servants was a task he did not feel confident to undertake. She was quite willing and while she was in the kitchen quarters there was a consultation about her which resulted next day in the following talk:

Mrs. Callaghan had come into the room to clear the table, and Mrs. Mapleton asked her to sit down. "I feel a delicacy about what I want to say," she began, "but I think you will not be offended."

"It aint the loikes o' me, mum, that would be getting offended at what you might say, when I'd know that it was for my own good, that ye'd be saying it."

"Well, you expect your sister from Ireland soon, do you not?" asked Mrs. Mapleton.

"I do, mum. My youngest sister and her husband and two children, and it's glad I'll be to see them, but phat I'll do wid 'em till they get settled is what's bothering me."

"That is just what Alice and I have been thinking about, and we want you to keep the young gentlemen's room just as it is, and our two rooms will give you a parlor and another bed-room, and you must accept from Alice and myself the furniture and things in the rooms, and my son has also settled with Mr. Jacobs the rent for a year, so you will not be put to any extra expense by having more room."

"Shure, ye don't mean it, mum, in real earnest? Shure, it must be me that's dreaming. Haven't I been thinking every hour that I have been working here, 'Oh, if I dared ask the ladies to leave the pretty room as it is for a week or two, how nice I could entertain my sister and her husband.' He's a school master, mum, and I was a bit afeard of having him come. Och! but won't I be the proud woman now!

And there was great rejoicing in the home of the Callaghans that night.

CHAPTER XXXV.

A Double Wedding.

Will and Fred were now established in business at Mr. Mapleton's old stand, under the name of Mapleton & Morgan, wholesale merchants and importers. The old customers came back, and, with the many new ones, they soon had a very large and thriving business.

Great preparations were now going on in the Wilson and Mapleton mansions for the double wedding soon to take place.

After much discussion, it was decided to have the ceremony in Mary Street Church. Alice and Fred were anxious to have it there; Louie and Mrs. Mapleton agreed with them; Will said he did not care where, so long as it was soon and well done; Mrs. Wilson wished a more fashionable church. Alfreda said if they were determined to go down into the slums to be married, they might go, but it would be without her, which remark made some of the others more satisfied with their choice.

Never did the Mary Street Church look more beautiful than on the day of the wedding. The W. C. T. U. of the Church, the Sons of Temperance, and Band of Hope had all taken an interest in the decoration, so that it was a bower of flowers. They hung in festoons from the old fashioned gallery, they were twined round each pillar, and from the altar rail to the pulpit was a mass of palms and choice plants which looked like a solid bank of flowers. Seldom was such a mixed audience [illegible] a society wedding in the city. Ri[illegible] and poor, rough and refined, fashionably ed ladies and poorly dressed worki men, gentlemen in broadcloth and w men in corduroy, women with shaw their heads and babes in their arm newsboys and bare-footed bootblack there. There was no stately sexton [illegible] door to say who should enter an should not, but the young gentleme wearing a rosette of red, white, an who acted as ushers, were courteou for all were welcome.

The Band of Hope was lined up [illegible] column from the sidewalk to the do church, so the bridal party passed t the open ranks; each child held a which they threw in front of the they approached. The front steps a tice of the church were crowded wit ing people. There was a flutter o kerchiefs, and from a heavy truck rated with evergreens and flags, shouted with a loud voice. "No three cheers for the young ladies a tlemen—real good 'uns—hip, hip, h And the crowd did cheer. This Huggins, and his truck was load children from the tenement house.

This was all a surprise to the party, for not a whisper had reach ears of such a demonstration, but t still more astonished when they ent church a regular Chautauqua sal given them, and the hundreds o handkerchiefs waving made it look snow storm, although some of the were not white, but red, blue, and and those who were not provided necesssary article of any color, us hats. Alice and Mrs. Mapleton most affected to tears at this un demonstration of good will.

After the ceremony, Mr. Joy hel hand to detain the congregation. said, "I ask your permission and e that of our young friends, to say It may not be good taste, but I ca glect this opportunity of pointing This rather unusual demonstration arranged by any committee: it premeditated: it is heart-throbs of gratitude, not of one heart, but th the whole neighborhood beating toward the young people whom just united. Why? because th been kind to the poor, sympathi the afflicted, tried to shield the protect the innocent, and rescue t in fact to keep the whole comma "To love God and their neighbo you all learn a lesson from what y seen to-day, and work more dilli the vineyard of the Lord, then you shall be the love and gratitude of and a blessing from him who, was on earth, went about doing g

As the party left the church, Fr the young man who had char Band of Hope, to take his char school-room, where Mrs. Callag waiting to treat the children to str and cream, and as the carriage Mr. Huggin's truck, Will stopped t to him. A piece of green pa slipped into his hand, and Huggi and drove to the Hall to treat his

"Fred," said Alice as they we homeward, "I would rather have of these people than the flattery pliments of the rich and fashional

"So would I, a thousand ti answered.

Just as they were seated in thei Mr. Jacobs came to the door.

"I couldn't let you vent away say, Got bless you!"

"Thank you, Mr. Jacobs," s "And I know he will bless y good you have done."

"And vill you please keep dis to remember de old Jew, and de o and he handed her a package, magnificent bracelet sparkling w and on the inside was engrave rules, and the right always wins

THE END.

LOOK OUT FOR THE OPENING CHAPTERS OF A

NEW SERIAL STORY of Intense Interest to Old and Young,

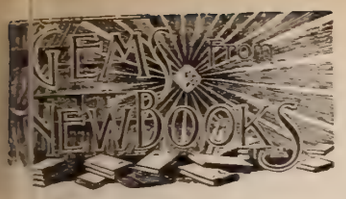
BY A POPULAR WRITER.



ESQUIMAUX LIFE.*

NO one is so wise as he who cannot speak from personal observation and experience, and I said to myself: "Wherefore is all this waste? What is the use of stocking the Arctic regions with reindeer to keep the miserable natives alive, when it would be much cheaper to bring them all away? There are but about five hundred of them all told, who could be known in half a dozen emigrant ships and shipped to a land fit for human beings to live in. It could be done in a single summer. It would be a holiday business. How much better this than to have to bother our heads every year with some scheme to keep the Esquimaux from starving!"

When I had exploded all this wisdom upon Sheldon Jackson, he took me down with the gentlest way. He did not tell me that my pity was thrown away. Far from it, he threw some brighter colors into the blackness of Esquimaux life, so that that picture was not one of unmixed gloom. As to transporting them to a more temperate climate, I learned that the idea was not original with me, but had occurred to many observers, all of whom had seemed to overlook the fact that it takes two to make a bargain. "Suppose," he said, "that you had your ships all ready, but that when the time came for the natives to embark they would not go! Strange as it may seem to you, they think they have the most beautiful country in the world. With all its coldness and desolation, they love it as we Swiss love their mountains. Now and then one or two Esquimaux are brought to the United States, but how downcast and miserable they look! Our climate is intolerable to them. They pant in the heat like hares, and long to get back to their own temperate' zone! One who came some years since was stricken with consumption, and set out to return, and every morning his first question was, 'Have you been on ice?' If he could only get a glimpse of an iceberg, he could die in peace. People who have such a home feeling are entitled to respect, and we shall not quarrel with them if they prefer their freedom in the cold of ice and snow to our fine cities, with all the blessings—and the curses—of civilization."

I am not so bold as to say that in the diet the Esquimaux, venison will ever take the place of their favorite blubber. Nor is that matter by any means to be despised. Observe, gentlemen explorers of the Arctic circle, do not turn up your noses at the food of the Esquimaux. If you set out for the North Pole, before you get there you will find that this blubber, which sticks in your throat, is not only all you can get, but the only food by which you can exist. The huge mass of blubber and train oil that the Esquimaux takes into his capacious stomach is so much phosphorus that generates intense heat; it is a fire in his bones, that with the reindeer garments that incase him, shields him to bear the intensest cold of the polar regions.

With such protection against the rigid climate, it is not the physical conditions, hards they are, that press most upon the life of the Esquimaux, but the fact that they are under the spell of superstitions that prompt them to the most extreme inhumanity and cruelty. They are believers in witchcraft, and ascribe any sickness or pain to an evil spirit, that must be exorcised, even if it be by murder. Hence, no person is one taken ill, than he or she, be it the poor old father or mother, when most in need of tender care, is dragged out of the igloo into some out-house where he or she will soon perish by cold. Sometimes the parents are put to death by their children. Not that the latter are by disposition cruel, or wanting in natural affection. On the contrary, their government is patriarchal, and educates them, so far as they can have any education, in respect for parents. But life is so hard, that when the vigor of youth and manhood is gone, the aged may well feel that existence is a burden, and wish it to be put to an end. Indeed, it is not uncommon in Arctic Alaska for the old folks to beg to be relieved of their misery.

* From Our Western Archipelago, by Henry M. Field; with illustrations, pp. 250, cloth binding; price $2.00. One of the most delightful books that has yet appeared describing the lakes, rivers, mountains, sea and natural wonders of the northernmost parts of our continent. Charles Scribners Sons, New York, publishers.

Such are the pictures of Esquimaux life! The wants of such a people are manifold. They need the commonest necessities; even so little a thing as lucifer matches would furnish the means of light in their dark, underground habitations. But they need something more than these little conveniences of civilization to give light and life to an existence that is so dark and dreary.

In the Arctic circle for a part of the year they see not the light of the sun. But his absence is partly compensated by the increased brilliancy given to the constellations of the Northern Hemisphere, which is all aglow with celestial fires. Dr. Kane used to say, that the most overpowering spectacle in nature is that of the Arctic night. And yet that midnight splendor shines down on one of the most ignorant and degraded populations of the globe; so little can nature alone do for the elevation of man. What those people need is not dazzling displays, but "the benefits of knowledge and the blessings of religion," which would be a sort of spiritual aurora, lighting up, not only the heavens above, but their humble homes on earth. These three little "lamps"—faith, love, and hope—would do more to brighten their poor lives than all the stars in the Arctic sky.

PLEASURES OF MOUNTAIN CLIMBING†

ONE word about the dangers of mountain climbing. They are in reality few—always provided ordinary caution is taken. The percentage of causalties is very small, and the great majority of these can be directly traced to the incompetence or carelessness of the guide or the obstinacy of the climber. Of accidents pure and simple, that no human ingenuity can foresee or prevent, there are comparatively none. Compared, indeed, with football, or even cricket, it is a far less dangerous pastime, while infinitely more elevating and instructive. The most thoughtless and unimpressive nature cannot help being influenced by the grand and sombre majesty of the mountains, by the wondrous stillness of these lonely heights, by the unparalleled beauty of a sunrise on the high Alps as each glistering peak is in turn lit up by the fire of the rising sun; by the glorious panorama of tumbled ice and snow, of frowning rocks, of awful precipices, of pine forests, green alps, blue lakes, chalets, and villages that lie beneath him as he gazes from the summit of the giant he has just conquered. Or who can be insensible to that deep sense of awe that creeps on the soul on leaving the hut at midnight when the stars seem watching over the waste, while on some lofty peak the pale silver of the moon, now hidden, is reflected on the dazzling whiteness of the snow, and nothing breaks the stillness of the night save the occasional crack of the glacier as it moves resistlessly onward, or the cry of the marmot, or the roar of an avalanche?

But writing of such things seem idle; it conveys nothing to those who have never experienced the inexhaustible pleasures of mountaineering. To read merely of them is like unto trying to

> Clov the hungry edge of appetite
> By bare imagination of a feast.

Let cynics scoff, let the disciples of dilettantism declare that views in the Alps are best from the "middle-height," but heed them not. Climb one peak to judge for yourself, and the Alpine Club will probably be the richer for one aspirant the more for the honor of its membership.

† From How to Visit Switzerland, a new guide-book to the chief scenes of interest, with the programme of the Grindelwald Conference of 1895. Edited by Rev. Henry S. Lunn, of England: pp. 270; cloth; illustrated. Horace Marshall & Son, Fleet Street, London, publishers.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Papers and Addresses of Martin B. Anderson, LL.D., edited by Wm. Morey, Ph.D. 2 vols.; cloth binding, pp. 572; price $2.50 in a box. American Baptist Publication Society, Phila., publishers.

A Minister of the World, by Caroline Atwater Mason. A delightful story of the social and spiritual life of a quaint village. 154 pp.; cloth covers; illustrated; price 75c. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, publishers.

How Christ came to Church: The Pastor's Dream. A spiritual autobiography, by A. J. Gordon, D.D., with The Life-Story and the Dream as Interpreting the Man; by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D. A book that will be read with special interest by all who are acquainted with the life-work and writings of the late minister; it also presents the portrait on the covers; price 75 cents. American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, publishers.

Esdraelon's Lovely Plain.

Bishop Galloway Describes the Prophetic Battlefield of the World.

IN a recent letter from Syria, Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, D.D., tells of an instructive visit to the Plain of Esdraelon. He writes: "The Plain never seemed so beautiful with the patches of green and gold glistening under the sun. Before us rose the great Carmel range, on the topmost peak of which we could see a small Latin church built to mark the place of sacrifice. To that point we proposed to climb, and there eat our noonday meal. Leaving the main road some miles from Nazareth, we turned to the left, crossed the fields, forded the river Kishon, and climbed the mountain. That ascent of Carmel was an experience never to be forgotten. Up the steep, rugged, rocky path, we wended our slow, toilsome way, and at length reached the majestic but dreary summit. At every turn of the winding road, when my eye swept the lovely Plain of Esdraelon, I could see in a vision the great day of trial when all Samaria crowded that mountain to witness the contest between Elijah and the priests of Baal. The king was there and the people by thousands. On the flat surface above, where we spread our lunch, the altar was probably erected, and there the fire descended. Those very rocks where we sat had echoed the prophet's prayer, and felt the heat of the fire that fell from heaven.

"Each of our party seemed, by a common impulse, to get a little apart to himself that he might solemnly and silently meditate upon the marvelous scenes associated with the mount that flamed with fire. A strange awe possessed the soul, and I imagined that our lunch was eaten with a peculiar reverence, while every tone of voice harmonized with a praying spirit and chastened speech. Away to the west, the blue waters of the Mediterranean mirrored the smiling heavens, and near where we sat the man was appointed to stand and watch for the first sign of answer to Elijah's prayer for rain. And when the cloud no larger than a man's hand arose from the sea upon which we were then looking, he gave notice to flee from the coming storm. Before the king's chariot the strong-limbed prophet ran to distant Jezreel which was plainly visible from the summit of the mountain. It is quite impossible to describe the feeling that stirred the soul, and the visions that peopled the brain, as we lingered and meditated on the spot of the prophet's grandest victory. In the solemn stillness we seemed almost to catch the distant echoes of Samaria's thousands, when they saw the flames descend and consume the sacrifice, shouting, 'The Lord he is God! The Lord he is God!'"

Know Hood's Cured

Because It Made Pure Blood

"I was all run down and could not sleep at night on account of the continuous and severe pains through my body. I had also stomach troubles and catarrh. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a short time I commenced to improve, and after using three bottles in all, my complaint entirely left me. I now have an appetite, sleep well and am free from all stomach trouble. I know Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured me, and I cheerfully recommend its use by all women who are run down and need a building up medicine." MISS ALICE WRAY, West Bridgewater, Pa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eye to-day.

Hood's Pills easy to buy, easy to take, easy in effect. 25c.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.
From New York. A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA Through Tickets, Single and Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c. Georgia and Florida. Write for our 84-Page Prospectus, mailed free.
C. H. MALLORY & CO., Agts., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

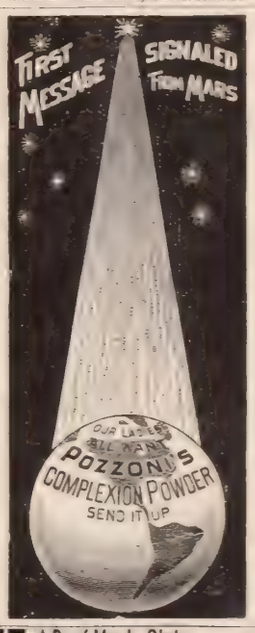
The Modern Maiden

knows that it's better in cooking to use

COTTOLENE

instead of lard, because her mother, her cooking school teacher and her own common sense agree that pure cotton-seed oil and beef suet can't trouble anyone's digestion. Get the genuine. Sold everywhere in one, three and five pound tins with trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.



FREE. A Deaf Man's Slate

25 years I was almost totally deaf; could not understand a word; had to carry a slate so that people could "talk" to me. In one week after commencing Aerial Medication, I surprised my friends by discarding the slate, I steadily improved, and now can hear the slightest noise and can understand conversation perfectly.
Edward E. Williams, Lead, S. Dk.

Medicines for 3 Months' Treatment Free.
To introduce this method and prove beyond doubt that it will cure Deafness, I will for a short time send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!
A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full-sized packages sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,
F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Marine Disk Picture Puzzle, Stamp Album, Pocket Lantern, Watch Guard, Sewing Machine Drill, Nickel Silver Box, Sewing Kit, and numerous catalogue of 1000 Bargains like this, for postage.
INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

Ancient Scriptures in Clay.

The Baked Tablets of Babylonia and Assyria and their Relation to the Bible.

IN a remarkably interesting contribution to "The Kingdom," Prof. A. H. Sayce, of Oxford, Eng., tells how some of the books of our Bible were written and preserved. He says:

The clay tablets of Babylonia and Assyria were deposited in the libraries, which were established in the temples of those countries. The papyri of Egypt were preserved in much the same fashion. Some of the libraries were very old, and were continually being added to as time went on. The American Expedition to Babylon has recently been excavating a library at Niffer, which was formed 3,000 B.C., while there are books or tablets in it which come down to the age of the Persian Empire. The oldest Babylonian library of which we know was created by Sargon, who reigned as far back as 3,800 B.C. The standard Babylonian work on astronomy and astrology had been originally compiled for this king, and edition after edition of it was made down to the last days of the Babylonian monarchy. Every library was provided with a large staff of scribes, who were constantly at work copying, or, as we should say, re-editing the older literature. The copies were made with scrupulous care; we are told when there was a fracture in the original, rendering the characters illegible, and also whether the fracture was recent or not; when again the scribe was uncertain about the characters which he was to copy, he either gave all the characters he thought it might represent, or frankly confessed that he could not read it.

In Palestine also there were libraries and scribes like those of Babylonia and Assyria. For the pre-Israelitish period we have the testimony of the Tel el-Amarna tablets, and such Old Testament hints as the name of the city Karjath-Sepher, or "Booktown," called Beth-Sopher, "the Scribe's house," in an Egyptian papyrus. For the age of the Jewish kingdom there is an incidental allusion in the book of Proverbs. There we are told (25: 1), that the chapters which follow contain the "proverbs of Solomon which the men of Hezekiah, King of Judah, copied out." It is evident that the example of Babylon was followed at Jerusalem, and that there too there was a library with a body of scribes employed in re-editing the older literature of the country. In this way the ancient writings of Israel were preserved and handed down. And it is not probable that they were edited with less care than the clay books of Assyria and Babylonia.

The prophetical books are full of references and quotations which indicate an acquaintance with the works of earlier authors. Thus the prophecy against Moab in the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of Isaiah is quoted from an older prophet, and adapted by Isaiah to the circumstances of his own time, as we learn from the correct translation of the concluding verses. This should be: "This is the word that the Lord spoke concerning Moab long ago. But now the Lord hath spoken" again by his servant Isaiah, who declares that the glory of Moab should perish within three years. Another passage in the book of Isaiah (2: 2-4) is found also in his younger contemporary, Micah 4: 1-3. This passage must have been quoted from elsewhere by Isaiah, as it begins with the conjunction "and," and is incomplete at the end. Its source, however, could not have been the prophecies of Micah, as this is forbidden by chronology, and it follows therefore that it must have been quoted by both from a common original.

The books of Kings and Chronicles, again, allude to various works which have now been lost. Among them were the annals of the kingdoms of Judah and Samaria, compiled year by year, as well as historical books like those of the prophets Gad and Nathan, who recorded the events of their own time. The date of compilation of the books of Kings is remarkable. The books end abruptly with the reign of Evil-Merodach, who succeeded his father, Nebuchadnezzar, as king of Babylon. His reign lasted only two years when it was cut short by murder. As his death is not mentioned, the book of Kings must have been finished before it took place, that is to say, in B. C., 561. The Jews at that time were exiles in Babylonia, and the city and temple of Jerusalem had been destroyed. Nevertheless it is evident that the exiles still had access to their old literature.

The Assyrian monuments have explained how this could have been the case. The kings of Assyria and Babylonia made war against men, not against books. The most precious spoil which could be carried off to Assyria from a captured Babylonian city was some old text which the library of Nineveh did not possess. Nebuchadnezzar, as his inscriptions show, was himself a patron of literature, and it is therefore more than probable that when he took Jerusalem he would have carefully removed the library he found there to one of the numerous libraries of his own country. The Babylonians took a good deal of interest in the nations round about them, and some of the tablets they have bequeathed to us contain the names of foreign deities, as well as lists of foreign words with their Babylonian equivalents. As for the literary works of the northern kingdom of Israel, the "men of Hezekiah," who copied out the proverbs of Solomon, would have been glad to secure as many of them as possible. The writings of the northern prophets, Amos and Hosea, must have been preserved in this way

After the return from the exile there was no longer any difficulties in the transmission of the sacred books. The literary age of Greece had already begun, and the Western world was beginning to learn from the Eastern how to read and write, to establish libraries and preserve books. The Jewish community had become a sort of theocracy under the government of the high priest, and its members were interested in handing down intact the Scriptures which they had received. Before long the Hebrew books were translated into Greek for the benefit of the Greeek-speaking Jews of Egypt, and the Old Testament was thus transmitted through two separate channels, the Hebrew text of Palestine and the Greek text of the Septuagint. Eventually in the sixth century of our era the Massorete commenced their work of counting every letter of the sacred volume, and by means of the vowel points and accents, of stereotyping its traditional pronunciation. Meanwhile the Canon of the New Testament had been formed, and the books of which it was composed added to those of the Hebrew Bible.

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.

They never fail. Read this testimonial

MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 18 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R.I.

J. F. SMITH & CO., 365 Greenwich St., N.Y.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

WALL PAPER.

Samples free from largest Wall Paper concern in U.S.

KAYSER & ALLMAN 922 924 Market St. 418 Arch St. Philada.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald

For Heavy, Sluggish Feeling Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It promotes digestion, relieves mental and physical exhaustion, and is a tonic in nervous affections.

New Cure for Kidneys and Bladder.

We publish elsewhere a new cure for kidney and bladder diseases, and rheumatism that has proven [illegible]. Many of these cases had been given up by the doctors as incurable. Those who are afflicted should send to the Warner Safe Cure Co., Rochester, N. Y., for their pamphlet, which they will send free by mail prepaid. It tells you the thing.

O'NEILL'S

Special Summer Offer in Mexican Sisal

HAMMOCKS,

59 Cents Each.

EVERY HOME SHOULD HAVE ONE FOR SOLID COMFORT.

Each Hammock has full-size Braided Edge, 14 ft. in length.

MAIL ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

All Purchases delivered by Express free of charge at any point within 100 miles of New York City.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., NEW YORK.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

In the Preparation of Artificial Food for Infants.

Value of this Water in Diseases Incident to Teething.

Hunter McGuire, M. D., LL. D., President and Professor of Clinical Surgery, University College of Medicine, Richmond, Va., says:

"For some time BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in the preparation of artificial food for infants I have been using. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and it is impossible to get a wet nurse. One serious objection to cow's milk, with many others, to cow's milk, is its acidity. Human milk is always alkaline, cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many infants, and lime water is often added to this milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of lime water is hurtful to digestion, and last summer, when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal derangement, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use No. 2 BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in preparing the food, with immediate and continued good results. The water was added until the milk lost its acidity and was neutral or alkaline."

Dr. John H. Tucker, Henderson, N. C., President of the State Medical Society of North Carolina, referring to Spring No. 1:

"I have observed marked beneficial results from BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 1 in the disorders of Teething Infants. I have sent many patients of this class to the Springs for the use of this water and, without exception, they have returned to me cured or greatly benefited."

This water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

Springs Open for Guests from June 15th to October 1st.

Thomas F. Goode, Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

$200 GIVEN TO STUDENTS,

Teachers and others, for Summer work.

R. H. WOODWARD COMPANY, Baltimore, Md., are making a most liberal offer of $200 to any one who will sell within the next three months 200 copies of "Talks to Children About Jesus." This is a most popular book. Agents often sell from 10 to 15 copies a day. It is sold at a low price, and is beautifully illustrated. Freight is paid and credit given. Complete canvassing outfit with full information sent for 45 cents.

AN ESTEY ORGAN GIVEN,

Retail price $200, to any one who will sell 100 copies of this book within three months. This is a splendid opportunity for a Church or Society to secure one of these organs.

A $100.00 BICYCLE GIVEN.

to any one who will sell 50 copies in 2 months

A GOLD WATCH GIVEN

Retail price $50.00, to any one who will sell in one month 60 copies. This premium is in addition to the regular commission. They offer also several liberal terms on other books and Bibles. Write them at once.

SAGENDORPH'S PATENT SECTIONAL STEEL CEILINGS and SIDE WALL FINISH.

Catalogue, prices, and estimates, on application.

THE PENN IRON ROOFING & CORNICE CO., 22d and Hamilton Sts., Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia, Pa.

HIGHEST PRIZES.

By W. A. OGDEN. The LATEST and BEST collection of NEW SONGS for SABBATH SCHOOLS. $30 per 100 by mail, 35c. each. Sample copy sent on receipt of price.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., 76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents.

THE HUMAN HAIR.

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.A.S. D. G. LONG & CO., 1033 Arch St., Phila. "Every one should read this little book."

WANTED AGENTS to sell Double Sash Lock. Free sample stamp. Best sellers ever invented. Beats world. $5 a day. We mean it. Write quick. BROHARD & CO., Box 168, Philadelphia, Pa.

IMPERISHABLE THINGS.

THE pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulse of a wordless prayer,
The dream of love and truth;
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry,
The striving after better hopes—
These things shall never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
The brother in his need,
The kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy, softly breathed,
When Justice threatens nigh;
The sorrowing of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must find some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waken love,
Be firm, and just and true;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angels' voices say to thee,
"These things shall never die."

Their Cry is for the Gospel.

South America's Neglected Millions and Their Spiritual Needs.

IMPOSSIBLY there are few thoughtful people in the United States who have even an approximately truthful idea of the vast lack of Christian missionary facilities and workers in South America. Till now, with the exception of a few localities, it has been a neglected continent. It has a population of thirty-three millions, and is nearly two the size of our own Union. It was settled and occupied by emigrants from Europe, but unlike the United States and Canada, its emigrants were mostly Spanish, Portuguese, and French Roman Catholic. Almost all the civilized people are found in a broad band which surrounds the continent. Its climate is hot and moist, tempered by the trade winds, tropical rains, and the evaporation from its large river basins and vegetable matter. Its principal cities are on the highest table-lands. It has the three greatest rivers in the world. The mighty river, Rio de la Plata, with its tributaries, is navigable for 2700 miles; the mighty Amazon, navigable for 2600 miles; the Orinoco, navigable for 1000 miles. There are twenty young governments occupying this land, viz: Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Paraguay, Peru, Chili, Brazil, Uraguay, Venezuela, Ecuador, United States of Colombia, Guiana. All these except Guiana are independent republics, and are not constantly going through revolutions owing to the intrigues of the priests. The fortunes of war resulted in the Dutch possessing Surinam, the French took Cayenne, and the English Berbice, Demerara and Essequibo, which is the middle section, and is known as British Guiana. In January, 1892, a band of Christian workers from Barbadoes opened a mission in Georgetown, Demerara, and in January, 1893 in New Amsterdam, Berbice. The work has been principally among the English-speaking people. British Guiana had a population in 1881 of 252,186; of these there were born in the country 7656 aborigines (Indians), wandering in the almost limitless forests; 14,768 born of emigrants from India, 841 of parents from China; 5047 of parents from Madeira and Azores; 5077 from Africa, and 21,133 from other places. The religions of those from India are Mohammedan and Parsee. Some of them speak the Marathi language, and nearly all the East Indians, Chinese, and South American Indians are heathen.

"I saw while in Demerara," writes a missionary, "a Parsee priest with the worshippers gathered around him listening to his talk. The people are easy of access, working in large gangs on the plantations. We could accommodate a dozen English-speaking missionaries in British Guiana, where they could be fitting themselves by acquiring work and study for India or China. We desire to open stations in the country at once. In Essequibo and Berbice there are several schools among the aboriginal Indians. In Dutch Guiana, Brother Bromet, a converted Jew, has a mission which has accepted the Gospel in its fullness. In Cayenne, which is a French penal settlement, the Catholic religion prevails." So much now for Guiana. Already the "Macedonian cry" has come from Venezuela. This vast territory which is drained by the great river Orinoco is in great destitution. We only know of one missionary, John Mitchell, identified with Mr. Muller, of Bristol, England, who has lately gone to Caracas. Venezuela is more than nine times as large as England and Wales; it has a population of 2,234,385; Bolivar is on the river Orinoco, and has several American and English people doing business there. A mission, under the Christian workers of Barbadoes, will shortly be established there.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found in Congo River, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

Tired people should consider the dangers which threaten them because of their weaknesses. Hood's Sarsaparilla vitalizes the blood which feeds the nerves and gives renewed strength.

Good Causes Helped.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Bethesda Home for Friendless Women.

Previously ack'd	$386 43
Mr and Mrs W W Fairbanks	2 50
K S, Lafayette, N Y	2 00
Friend, Springfield	5 00
A J Henriques	1 00
Mrs F W and D A Perry	5 00
Eber Shearman	20 00
Total	$421.93

Sister Charlotte's Day-Star Home.

Previously ack'd	10 75
X Y Z, Brier Hill, N Y	2 00
Total	$12.75

For Mrs. Bella Cook's Work.

Previously ack'd	$18 25
Eber Shearman	20 00
Total	$38.25

For Dr. Faust's Hebrew-Christian Mission.

Previously ack'd	$2 00
Eber Shearman	10 00
Total	$12.00

Mr. Terry's Y. M. C. A. Work among Lumbermen.

Rees C Hines	1 00
Mrs B H T, Washington, D C	5 00
W R Stradtman	1 00
A A Anderson	5 00
A H, Balto, Md	1 00
Friends, Fells, Mass	2 00
Anna W Ludlow	5 00
In His Name, Warren, Pa	1 00
Henry G Meyer	1 00
A friend, —,	25
J A C, Summit, N J	50
C B Whipple	1 00
Total	$23.75

For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Previously ack'd	$144 75
B T Reed	10 00
C F H, Milwaukee, Wis	2 00
R M Moore	5 00
For the Lord, Essex, Mass	5 00
E A Fultman	1 00
Sarah E Davis	1 00
Edward Isaac Wade	1 00
A H O Jamieson	2 00
L W Bates	3 00
"Violet," Vt	2 00
L F Humiston	50
Sam'l Thatcher	1 00
Emma F Stites	2 00
G K and K D, Holland, Mich	2 00
Total	$182.25

Five Points House of Industry.

Previously ack'd	$5 00
—, Ramsay, Mich	5 00
Miss E J Lee	4 00
—, Anamosa, Ia	1 00
—, South Britain, Ct	5 00
Total	$20.00

Martha's Rest.

—, Ramsay, Mich	$5 00

For Mrs. Jamal's Training School, Jerusalem.

Previously ack'd	$378 00
A H R, Johnsville	1 00
Mrs J W Stray	2 00
Anne T Drake	2 00
J A, Hampshire Co.	1 00
Mrs Alex Ruffner	5 00
Mr and Mrs C R Moulton	2 00
Eber Shearman	20 00
P H Hill	5 00
Total	$416.00

C. B. Curtis, Industrial Missionary Association.

Emma F Stites	2 00

Dr. Geo. Dowkontt.

Emma F Stites	2 00

Additional Contributions For The Western Relief Fund.

Miss R E Twining	$1 00
Anonymous	1 00
Raised in Timmonsville, S C	15 50
Albert S Cox	13 00
Steppes Baptist Ch, Newtown, Ut	75
A friend of the needy, Slatington, Pa	50
Total	$31.75

For Any Good Cause.

Previously ack'd	$44 60
Jake Nall	2 00
Subr, Wichita	1 00
Geo C Kindlespire	1 50
T F E, Verdon, Neb	2 00
H S G, So Park, N J	3 00
—, Bethel, Me	1 00
Total	$55.10

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Delicate Lace

and Lingerie can be washed with perfect safety if you use

COCO

TRADE MARK.

the perfect soap. It is just as cheap as common soap and just about ten times as good. Ask your dealer for it. Made only by

THE N. K. FAIRBANK CO.,
Chicago. New York. St. Louis.

Consumption Cured.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE:
"As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies, and very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,
(Rev'd) C. H. Spurgeon.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

FOR

Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis,

Acts like a charm in ordinary Coughs, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough. Send 25 cents for Book on Consumption, containing accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, or the Book will be sent free with trial bottle for $1.00. Larger sizes, $1.75, $3.75, $7.

GEO. T. CONGREVE,
367 Canal St., New York, and London, England.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cleaning. NO Cracking. NO Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this adv. and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one-quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INCOMES—BIG PREMIUMS, &c.
C. H. The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

FREE As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, etc.
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

A Healthy, Clear Skin

Is not only a great comfort, but is a recognized point of beauty. We have thousands of letters saying it can be

Secured, Retained, By

using Comfort Powder. When used often, pimples and other inflammations disappear. Tan, Sunburn and Roughness from exposure at once relieved by

Comfort Powder

The Comfort Powder Co., Hartford, Ct. 25c. and 50c. a box.

All Druggists Sell It.

The KOMBI CAMERA - $3.50

Carry in pocket. Takes 25 perfect pictures in one loading—re-loading costs 20c. Ask your dealer for it, or send for free booklet "All About the Kombi."
ALFRED C. KEMPER,
Branches London, Berlin. 132-134 Lake Street, Chicago

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use-Traveling, etc.: Invaluable and Indispensable: Soft, Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for Circulars; agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO.,
56 Broadway, New York.

$5 00 EVERY DAY! Do you want to represent a large manufacturing company? We will employ a lady or gentleman in every locality at once. No experience required. This is not an advertising scheme but a genuine offer by a responsible concern. No money wanted, simply your name and address. Write to-day and learn how easily you can make $5 a day.
LEONARD MFG. CO. 20 ADAMS STREET GA CHICAGO, ILLS.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Handmade Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty.
KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Otsego, N. Y.

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP
For the Skin, Scalp and Complexion, the result of 20 years experience treating the skin. A book on dermatology with every cake. Druggists sell it. Or John H. Woodbury, Dermatologist, 127 W. 42d St., N. Y. City. Send 10c. for sample soap and 150 page book.

WANTED—To find a case of Rheumatism, acute or chronic, that BLUE LABEL SPECIFIC will not relieve immediately and speedily cure. Address Blue Label Specific Co., Room 74, World Bldg, New York

"East, West, Home is Best," if kept clean with SAPOLIO

Pears'

Pears' soap is pure; no alkali in it.

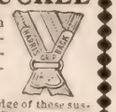
There are a thousand soap-virtues; it has them all

A Strong Back

Most suspenders—like most men—get weak in the back as they grow old. Not so with the Harris Wire Buckle Suspenders. The Grip Back outwears the web. The

HARRIS WIRE BUCKLE

is stronger, smoother (no rough edges) and more quickly and easily adjusted than any other suspender buckle made. 25 cents—at your furnisher's or by mail.



Harris Patents To help you to a knowledge of these suspenders and other Harris Patents, we will send for 10 cts. a handsome silk watch fob with gold plated buckle, together with a book that must interest every man who loves comfort.

Wire Buckle Suspender Co. Williamsport, Pa.

SLEEP & REST For Skin Tortured BABIES And Tired MOTHERS

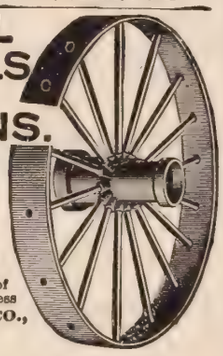
In One Application of

Cuticura

The only speedy, permanent, and economical cure for torturing, disfiguring eczema, and every species of itching and burning skin and scalp diseases.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

METAL WHEELS for your WAGONS.



Any size you want, 20 to 56 in. high. Tires 1 to 8 in. wide—hubs to fit any axle. Saves Cost many times in a season to have set of low wheels to fit your wagon for hauling grain, fodder, manure, hogs, &c. No resetting of tires. Cat'lg free. Address EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

Strongest of all pure cream of tartar baking powders

See the latest U. S. Govt. Report.

Walter Baker & Co. Limited,

The Largest Manufacturers of PURE, HIGH GRADE COCOAS and CHOCOLATES On this Continent, have received HIGHEST AWARDS from the great Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Caution: In view of the many imitations of the Labels and wrappers on our goods, consumers should make sure that our place of manufacture, namely, Dorchester, Mass. is printed on each package.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

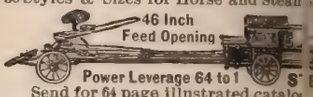
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD. DORCHESTER, MASS.

WIDE AWAKE FACTS ABOUT SLEEP

is the title of a little booklet published by ... Bros. Mfg. Co., 4 Clay St., Utica, N. Y. ... of illustrations, and interesting reading, on ... ject of rest and sleep, and will be mailed ... Some spring beds rest all, others only a p... the body. Sleep that refreshes the bod... and whole nervous system comes with th... the "IDEAL." Ask your furniture dealer ... Ideal.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam ...



Power Leverage 64 to 1 ... EL.

Send for 64 page illustrated catalog...

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Qu... Ill.

Get a Glass! Quick!!

There's lots of snap and vim in this HIRES' ROOT-BEER. There's lots of pleasure and good health in it, too. A delicious drink, a temperance drink, a home-made drink, a drink that delights the old and young. Be sure and get the genuine

HIRES' Rootbeer

A 25 cent package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

The Chas. E. Hires Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

YOU WOULD BUY A SE...

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there mu... be some catch on account of the small sum asked f... them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose ... them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THO... SANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

ONLY 99c FORMERLY SOLD FO... $...

FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These Spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD and were left on their hands. In order to dispose of them Quickly, we make this unheard of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different b... ing of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, ... dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of ... making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair ... $9.00: we now offer the balance of the stock at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant ... lined case, properly packed, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange ... dividual checks not accepted, Postal Note or currency. Money cheerfully refended if good ... not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT, A 5,152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ...

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY ... EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE.

A PIANO AND ORGAN BOOK FREE.

Our new Catalogue is a grand portfolio of all the latest and best styles of Organs and Pianos. It illustrates, describes and gives manufacturers' prices on Organs from $25 up, and Pianos from $169 up. It shows how to buy at wholesale direct from the manufacturers, and save over 50 per cent.

THE CORNISH ORGANS AND PIANOS, Guaranteed for 25 years, have been played and praised for nearly 30 years; to-day they are the most popular instruments made. Secure our SPECIAL TERMS of Credit, framed to suit the times. Remember, this grand book is sent FREE. Write for it at once.

CORNISH & CO., Washington, N. J.

MENTION THIS PAPER. (Established nearly 30 years.)

All Skin Disorders

... simple Pimples to obstinate Eczema and Tet... can be quickly and permanently cured by the ... application of

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

It makes the skin soft, smooth and healthy, producing a clear and brilliant complexion.

50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.

JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., Philadelphia

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

The Family Wash Blue. ALWAYS RELIABLE. For Sale by Grocers.

D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 S. 3d St., Phila., Pa.

GET Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate

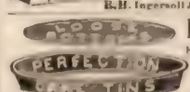
Pure, wholesome, convenient—made in a jiffy—NO BOILING.

CARD PRINTER FREE

Sets any name in one minute, prints 600 cards an hour. You can make money with it. A fonted pretty type also Indelible Ink, Type Holder, Pads and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker, worth $1.00. Sample mailed FREE for 10c. stamps for postage on outfit and large catalogue of free bargains.

E. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City

Delicate Cake



Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30 cts. Circulars Free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6 St., Bath N.Y.

A CHAUTAUQUA ECLINING CHAIR FREE

WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00: THE LARKIN SOAP MF'G CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS

and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 200 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A" Grade, $45. Write to-day.

"A" Gra... Write to...

1895 High Grade Bicycles

Shipped anywhere C.O.D. Saving you dealers profit.

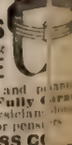
$100 Oakwood for $62.50
$85 'Arlington' " $45.00
$65 " " $37.50
$20 " " $10.90

Latest models, wood or steel rims, pneumatic tires, weight 15 to 30 lbs. all styles and prices. Large illustrated catalogue free.

Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B 18, Chicago

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS

so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that retains, relieves & CURES RUPTURE



No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully guaranteed. 100's of testimonials and physicians' endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.

Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO. 27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18 — NUMBER 30.

EV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, JULY 24, 1895.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

COPYRIGHT 1895 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

JAPAN'S MINISTRY OF MERCY.

Ir Red Cross Work in the Late War with China, a Glorious Recognition of Christian Principles—Our Missionaries Everywhere Encouraged.

IN these days, when the armaments of the great nations of the world are probably more formidable than at any previous period in history, one of the most hopeful signs, indicative of the spread of the Christian principles of humanity and mercy, is found in the almost phenomenal extension of the Red Cross movement. Begun thirty years ago in a humble way, it has n gradually accorded recogni-n by every civilized coun-

. and even in ni-barbarian lands.
e sentiment of ompassion which pelled ri Du-nt—after nessing horrors the sannary bat-of Sol-rino in 9—to at-pt to en-l the gov-ments of world in mpact of ercy, und a dy rense, and Confer-e of Na-ns at Gea four rs later, w up the Treaty of e Red ross," ich was ickly ned by teen lead-nations.
at num-has since n increasto forty, d now, in ery clime der the n, the ounded d dying the field battle, or victims flood, rthquake, mine, or stilence, assured prompt cor and manc atment.
herever e sacred bblem of e Red ross is splayed, it arantees safety and comfort; and under aegis is neutral ground. Its gentle offices are extended alike to friend and foe, white or black, Caucasian or Oriental. Its skilful workers, wholly fearless for themselves and with hearts overflowing with compassion for the suffering, have hovered, like God's own messengers of healing and mercy, over the battlefields of Europe, Asia and America, relieving the bodies and comforting the souls of unnumbered thousands. In our own land, the Red Cross, under the leadership of its noble organizer and President, Miss Clara Barton, has already performed a work which has endeared it to all Americans and won for it the warmest love of every Christian heart that thrills at the call of human suffering.

Foremost among Eastern nations to give its adhesion to the Red Cross, Japan signed the Geneva Treaty in 1886. In that year a delegation of citizens of Tokio waited upon Miss Barton, and, after consultation, decided to adopt the form of organization of the American Committee. In 1889, at a reunion of the Japanese Red Cross ("Seki Jushi") the Mikado, with all the princes of the Imperial house, the Ministers and nobles, were present. The Emperor was chosen as President of the organization. On the breaking out of the war with China, Count Oyama, the Japanese Minister of State, issued a notification to the Mikado's armies urging that the war was not against individuals, and that succor and rescue should be extended even to the enemy's forces, when the latter were disabled by wounds or disease. The Japanese troops were instructed to co-operate at every opportunity, with the Red Cross in treating all the injured on the field with equal kindness and helpfulness.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE RED CROSS HOSPITAL BUILDINGS AT TOKIO.

This humane policy, which would have been creditable even to a professedly Christian nation, was followed by Japan throughout the war. Her Red Cross hospitals were the best arranged and best equipped in all Asia. Never before had Chinese prisoners been so well treated at the hands of an enemy. Native Japanese Red Cross doctors, surgeons, and nurses healed their wounds and cared for them, and they found their captivity an ideal condition by contrast with the hardships of service in the Chinese army. As though seized with a desire to show the utmost magnanimity toward its fallen foe, the entire Japanese nation strove to outdo itself in kindness. Merchant vessels were placed at the disposal of the Red Cross, and filled with physicians and nurses for service at the various ports. The Empress was at the head of the work for women, laboring with her own hands. Red Cross nurses were in all the military hospitals, and the representatives of the organization were at all the principal points of military activity with food for the soldiers, who too often sorely needed it. All Japan, but lately heathen, had learned not only to forgive but to love its enemy. The same Gospel that had placed the Bible in the hands of the Emperor and his Court, and filled the Japanese camps and battleships with missionaries,

(Continued on page 435.)

ENLIGHTENED JAPAN — CHINESE PRISONERS AT THE RED CROSS INFIRMARY.
The smaller photograph shows nurses binding wounds. The larger is a scene of outdoor treatment.

PLAIN PEOPLE.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Romans 16: 14, 15, "Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus and Julia."

MATTHEW HENRY, Albert Barnes, Adam Clark, Thomas Scott, and all the commentators pass by these verses without any especial remark. The other twenty people mentioned in the chapter were distinguished for something, and were therefore discussed by the illustrious expositors; but nothing is said about Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus and Julia. Where were they born? No one knows. Where did they die? There is no record of their decease. For what were they distinguished? Absolutely for nothing, or the trait of character would have been brought out by the apostle. If they had been very intrepid or opulent, or hirsute, or musical of cadence, or crass of style, or in anywise anomalous, that feature would have been caught by the apostolic camera. But they were good people, because Paul sent to them his high Christian regards. They were ordinary people, moving in ordinary sphere, attending to ordinary duty, and meeting ordinary responsibilities.

What the world wants is a religion for ordinary people. If there be in the United States 65,000,000 people, there are certainly not more than 1,000,000 extraordinary; and then there are 64,000,000 ordinary, and we do well to turn our backs for a little while upon the distinguished and conspicuous people of the Bible and consider in our text the seven ordinary. We spend too much of our time in twisting garlands for remarkables, and building thrones for magnates, and sculpturing warriors, and apotheosizing philanthropists. The rank and file of the Lord's soldiery need especial help.

The vast majority of people to whom this sermon comes will never lead an army, will never write a State constitution, will never electrify a Senate, will never make an important invention, will never introduce a new philosophy, will never decide the fate of a nation. You do not expect to; you do not want to. You will not be a Moses to lead a nation out of bondage. You will not be a Joshua to prolong the daylight until you can shut five kings in a cavern. You will not be a St. John to unroll an Apocalypse. You will not be a Paul to preside over an apostolic college. You will not be a Mary to mother a Christ. You will more probably be Asyncritus, or Phlegon, or Hermas, or Patrobas, or Hermes, or Philologus, or Julia.

Many of you are women at the head of households. This morning you launched the family for Sabbath observance. Your brain decided the apparel, and your judgment was final on all questions of personal attire. Every morning you plan for the day. The culinary department of your household is in your dominion. You decide all questions of diet. All the sanitary regulations of your house are under your supervision. To regulate the food, and the apparel, and the habits, and decide the thousand questions of [illegible] and general health absolutely appalling, if there be no divine alleviation.

It does not help you much to be told that Elizabeth Fry did wonderful things amid the criminals of Newgate. It does not help you much to be told that Mrs. Judson was very brave among the Bornesian cannibals. It does not help you much to be told that Florence Nightingale was very kind to the wounded in the Crimea. It would be better for me to tell you that the divine Friend of Mary and Martha is your Friend, and that he sees all the annoyances and disappointments and abrasions and exasperations of an ordinary housekeeper from morn till night, and from the first day of the year to the last day of the year, and at your call he is ready with help and reinforcement.

They who provide the food of the world decide the health of the world. One of the greatest battles of this century was lost because the commander that morning had a fit of indigestion. You have only to go on some errand amid the taverns and the hotels of the United States and Great Britain to appreciate the fact that a vast multitude of the human race are slaughtered by incompetent cookery. Though a young woman may have taken lessons in music, and may have taken lessons in painting, and lessons in astronomy, she is not well educated unless she has taken lessons in dough! They who decide the apparel of the world and the food of the world, decide the endurance of the world.

An unthinking man may consider it a matter of little importance—the cares of the household and the economies of domestic life—but I tell you the earth is strewn with the martyrs of kitchen and nursery. The health-shattered womanhood of America cries out for a God who can help ordinary women in the ordinary duties of housekeeping. The wearing, grinding, unappreciated work goes on, but the same Christ who stood on the bank of Galilee in the early morning and kindled the fire and had the fish already cleaned and broiling when the sportsmen stepped ashore chilled and hungry, will help every woman to prepare breakfast, whether by her own hand, or the hand of her hired help. The God who made indestructible eulogy of Hannah, who made a coat for Samuel, her son, and carried it to the temple every year, will help every woman in preparing the family wardrobe. The God who opens the Bible with the story of Abraham's entertainment of the three angels on the plains of Mamre will help every woman to provide hospitality, however rare and embarrassing. It is high time that some of the attention we have been giving to the remarkable women of the Bible—remarkable for their virtue or their want of it, or remarkable for their deeds—Deborah and Jezebel, and Herodias and Athaliah, and Dorcas and the Marys, excellent or abandoned—it is high time some of the attention we have been giving to these conspicuous women of the Bible be given to Julia of the text, an ordinary woman amid ordinary circumstances, attending to ordinary duties and meeting ordinary responsibilities.

Then there are all the ordinary business men. They need divine and Christian help. When we begin to talk about business life we shoot right off and talk about men who did business on a large scale, and who sold millions of dollars of goods a year; but the vast majority of business men do not sell a million dollars of goods, nor half a million, nor a quarter of a million, nor the eighth part of a million. Put all the business men of our cities, towns, villages, and neighborhoods side by side, and you will find that they sell less than fifty thousand dollars worth of goods. All these men in ordinary business life want divine help. You see how the wrinkles are printing on the countenace the story of worriment and care. You cannot tell how old a business man is by looking at him. Gray hairs at thirty. A man at forty-five with the stoop of a nonogenarian. No time to attend to improved dentistry, the grinders cease because they are few. Actually dying of old age at forty or fifty, when they ought to be at the meridian. Many of these business men have bodies like a neglected clock to which you come, and you wind it up, and it begins to buzz and roar, and then the hands start around very rapidly, and then the clock strikes five, or ten, or forty, and strikes without any sense, and then suddenly stops. So is the body of that worn-out business man. It is a neglected clock, and though by some summer recreation it may be wound up, still the machinery is all out of gear. The hands turn around with a velocity that excites the astonishment of the world. Men cannot understand the wonderful activity, and there is a roar, and a buzz, and a rattle about these disordered lives, and they strike ten when they ought to strike five, and they strike twelve when they ought to strike six, and they strike forty when they ought to strike nothing, and suddenly they stop. Post-mortem examination reveals the fact that all the springs, and pivots, and weights, and balance-wheels of health are completely deranged. The human clock has simply run down. And at the time when the steady hand ought to be pointing to the industrious hours on a clear and sunlit dial, the whole machinery of body, mind, and earthly capacity stops forever. The cemeteries have thousands of business men who died of old age at thirty, thirty-five, forty, forty-five.

Now, what is wanted is grace—divine grace for ordinary business men, men who are harnessed from morn till night and all the days of their life—harnessed in business. Not grace to lose a hundred thousand, but grace to lose ten dollars. Not grace to supervise two hundred and fifty employees in a factory, but grace to supervise the book-keeper, and two salesmen, and the small boy that sweeps out the store. Grace to invest not the eighty thousand dollars of net profit, but the twenty-five hundred of clear gain. Grace not to endure the loss of a whole shipload of spices from the Indies, but grace to endure the loss of a paper of collars from the leakage of a displaced shingle on a poor roof. Grace not to endure the tardiness of the American Congress in passing a necessary law, but grace to endure the tardiness of an errand boy stopping to play marbles when he ought to deliver the goods. Such a grace as thousands of business men have to-day—keeping them tranquil whether goods sell or do not sell, whether customers pay or do not pay, whether tariff is up or tariff is down, whether the crops are luxuriant or a dead failure—calm in all circumstances and amid all vicissitudes. That is the kind of grace we want. Millions of men want it, and they may have it for the asking. Some hero or heroine comes to town, and as the procession passes through the street, the business men come out and stand on tiptoe on their store steps and look at some one who in Arctic clime, or in ocean storm, or in day of battle, or in hospital agonies, did the brave thing, not realizing that they, the enthusiastic spectators, have gone through trials in business life that are just as great before God. There are men who have gone through freezing Arctics, and burning torrids, and awful Marengoes of experiences without moving five miles from their doorsteps. Now, what ordinary business men need is to realize that they have the friendship of that Christ who looked after the religious interests of Matthew, the custom-house clerk, and helped Lydia, of Thyatira, to sell the dry-goods, and who opene a bakery and fish-market in the wildernes of Asia Minor to feed the seven thousan who had come out on a religious picnic, an who counts the hairs of your head with a much particularity as though they were t plumes of a coronation, and who took t trouble to stoop down with his finger wri ing on the ground, although the first shu fle of feet obliterated the divine caligraph and who knows just how many locus there were in the Egyptian plague, a knew just how many ravens were necess ry to supply Elijah's pantry by the bro Cherith, and who, as floral commande leads forth all the regiments of primrose foxgloves, daffodils, hyacinths, and lili which pitch their tents of beauty and kin their camp-fires of color all around the he isphere—that that Christ and that G knows the most minute affairs of your bu iness life and however inconsiderable, u derstanding all the affairs of that wom who keeps a thread-and-needle store well as all the affairs of a Rothschild an Stewart.

Then there are all the ordinary farme We talk about agricultural life, and we i mediately shoot off to talk about Cinc natus, the patrican, who went from t plough to a high position, and after he through the dictatorship in twenty-one da went back again to the plough. What couragement is that to ordinary farme The vast majority of them—none of th will be patricians. Perhaps none of th will be Senators. If any of them have tatorships it will be over forty, or fifty, a hundred acres of the old homeste What those men want is grace to k their patience while ploughing with bal oxen, and to keep cheerful amid the drou that destroys the corn crop, and that ables them to restore the garden the after the neighbor's cattle have broken and trampled out the strawberry bed, gone through the Lima-bean patch, eaten up the sweet corn in such large qu tities that they must be kept from the w lest they swell up and die. Grace in cat ing weather that enables them, without precation, to spread out the hay the t time, although again and again and agai has been almost ready for the mow. A gr to doctor the cow with a hollow horn, the sheep with the foot-rot, and the h with the distemper, and to compel the willing acres to yield a livelihood for family, and schooling for the children, little extras to help the older boy in b ness, and something for the daught wedding outfit, and a little surplus for time when the ankles will get stiff w age, and the breath will be a little sh and the swinging of the cradle through hot harvest field will bring on the old ma vertigo. Better close up about Cincinna I know five hundred farmers just as n as he was.

What they want is to know that t have the friendship of that Christ who en drew his similes from the farmer's as when he said: "A sower went forth sow;" as when he built his best par out of the scene of a farmer's boy co back from his wanderings, and the farmhouse shook that night with rural bilee; and who compared himself to a l in the pasture field, and who said the nal God is a farmer, declaring: "My ther is the husbandman."

Those stone masons do not want to h about Christopher Wren, the architect, built St. Paul's Cathedral. It would better to tell them how to carry the ho brick up the ladder without slipping, how on a cold morning with the trow smooth off the mortar and keep cheer and how to be thankful to God for plain food taken from the pail by the r side. Carpenters standing amid the a and the bit, and the plane, and the b axe need to be told that Christ wa carpenter, with his own hand wielding and hammer. Oh, this is a tired w and it is an overworked world, and it i underfed world, and it is a wrung world, and men and women need to k th there is rest and recuperation in God an in that religion which was not so much intended for extraordinary people as for ordinary people, because there are more of them.

The healing profession has had its Abercrombies, and its Abernethys, and its Valentine Motts, and its Willard Parkers; but the ordinary physicians do the most of the world's medicining, and they need to understand that while taking diagnosis or prognosis, or writing prescription, or compounding medicament, or holding the delicate pulse of a dying child they may have the presence and the dictation of the Almighty Doctor who took the case of the man, and, after he had torn off his garments in foaming dementia, clothed him again, body and mind, and who lifted up the woman who for eighteen years had been bent almost double with the rheumatism into graceful stature, and who turned the scabs of leprosy into rubicund complexion and who rubbed the numbness out of paralysis, and who swung wide open the closed windows of hereditary or accidental blindness, until the morning light came streaming through the fleshly casements, and who knows all the diseases, and all the remedies, and all the herbs, and all the catholicons, and is monarch of pharmacy and therapeutics, and who has sent out ten thousand doctors of whom the world makes record; but to prove that they are angels of mercy, I invoke the thousands of men whose ailments have been assuaged and the thousands of women to whom in cases of pain they have been next to God in benefaction.

Come, now, let us have a religion for ordinary people in professions, in occupations, in agriculture, in the household, in merchandise, in everything. I salute across the centuries Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, Philologus, and Julia.

First of all, if you feel that you are ordinary, thank God that you are not extraordinary. I am tired, and sick, and bored almost to death with extraordinary people. They take all their time to tell us how very extraordinary they really are. You know as well as I do, my brother and sister, that the most of the useful work of the world is done by unpretentious people who toil right on—by people who do not get much applaud, and no one seems to say, "that is well done." Phenomena are of but little use. Things that are exceptional cannot be depended on. Better trust the smallest planet that swings on its orbit than ten comets shooting this way and that, imperilling the longevity of worlds attending to their own business. For steady illumination better is a lamp than a rocket. Then, if you feel that you are ordinary, remember that your position invites the less attack.

Conspicuous people — how they have to take it! How they are misrepresented, and abused, and shot at! The higher the hills of a roebuck the easier to track him down. What a delicious thing it must be to be a candidate for President of the United States! It must be so soothing to the nerves!

I came into the possession of the abusive cartoons in the time of Napoleon I., printed while he was yet alive. The retreat of the army from Moscow, that army buried in the snows of Russia, one of the most awful tragedies of the centuries, represented under the figure of a monster called General Frost slaying the French Emperor with a razor of ice. As Satyr and Beelzebub he is represented, page after page, page after page. England cursing him, Spain cursing him, Germany cursing him, Russia cursing him, Europe cursing him, North and South America cursing him. The most remarkable man of his day, and the most abused. All the men in history who now have a halo around their name, on earth wore a crown of horns. Take the few extraordinary railroad men of our time, and see what abuse comes upon them, while thousands of stockholders escape. All the world took after Thomas Scott, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, abused him until he got under the ground. Thousands of stockholders in that company. All the blame on one man! The Central Pacific Railroad—two or three men get all the blame if anything goes wrong. There are 10,000 in that company.

I mention these things to prove it is extraordinary people who get abused while the ordinary escape. The weather of life is not so severe on the plain as it is on the high peaks. The world never forgives a man who knows, or gains, or does more than it can know, or gain, or do. Parents sometimes give confectionery to their children as an inducement to take bitter medicine, and the world's sugar-plum precedes the world's aqua-fortis. The mob cried in regard to Christ, "Crucify him, crucify him!" and they had to say it twice to be understood, for they were so hoarse, and they got their hoarseness by crying a little while before at the top of their voice, "Hosanna!" The river Rhone is foul when it enters Lake Leman, but crystalline when it comes out on the other side. But there are men who have entered the bright lake of worldly prosperity crystalline and came out terribly riled. If, therefore, you feel that you are ordinary, thank God for the tranquillity of your position.

Then remember, if you have only what is called an ordinary home, that the great deliverers of the world have all come from such a home. And there may be seated, reading at your evening stand, a child who shall be potent for the ages. Just unroll the scroll of men mighty in Church and State, and you will find they nearly all came from log cabin or poor homes. Genius almost always runs out in the third or fourth generation. You cannot find in all history an instance where the fourth generation of extraordinary people amount to anything. Columbus from a weaver's hut, Demosthenes from a cutler's cellar, Bloomfield and Missionary Carey from a shoemaker's bench, Arkwright from a barber's shop, and He, whose name is high over all from a manger.

Let us all be content with such things as we have. God is just as good in what he keeps away from us as in what he gives us. Even a knot may be useful if it is at the end of a thread.

At an anniversary of a deaf and dumb asylum one of the children wrote upon the blackboard words as sublime as the Iliad, the Odyssey, and the "Divina Commedia" all compressed in one paragraph. The examiner, in the signs of the mute language, asked her, "Who made the world?" The deaf and dumb girl wrote upon the blackboard, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." The examiner asked her, "For what purpose did Christ come into the world?" The deaf and dumb girl wrote upon the blackboard, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." The examiner said to her, "Why were you born deaf and dumb, while I hear and speak?" She wrote upon the blackboard, "Even so, Father; for so it seemeth good in thy sight." Oh, that we might be baptized with a contented spirit! The spider draws poison out of a flower, the bee gets honey out of a thistle; but happiness is a heavenly ellxir, and the contented spirit extracts it not from the rhododendron of the hills, but from the lily of the valley.

The Talmage Memorial.

An Educational Building at Amoy, China, as a Memorial to the late Dr. John Van Nest Talmage.

THE benediction on the dead worker that "his works do follow him," is often observed with a literalness that savors of ingratitude. All the work that he has done is forgotten and follows him into the silence and forgetfulness of the grave. Men take up the tools that fell from his dead hands and go on with the building, and the name of him who laid the foundation and labored in the trenches, is not spoken. It is gratifying to find that this is not to be so with the grand work to which the late Dr. John Van Nest Talmage, the elder brother of the Editor of this journal, gave forty years of his life. The building, a picture of which appears on this page, is to bear his name and be a reminder to all who come after him of the consecrated service which he joyfully rendered to the cause of Christ in China. It is peculiarly appropriate as a memorial to him. Probably there is no form that would have pleased him so much had he known of it in his lifetime. It is a new school building for the Academical Department of the Amoy Mission, a branch of the work in which Dr. Talmage took a special interest. For months after his career as a missionary closed, he labored at home to promote the work of education and to add new facilities to the teacher's equipment. His dictionary, a work of prodigious labor, occupied his time almost to the last hours of his life and it was only when he had read the last proofs, that like aged Simeon, he could bring himself to say, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace." The book represented the leisure moments of twenty years, which had been given to it instead of to relaxation. He realized how much depended on Christian education and counted the time he gave to advance it well given. It is therefore fitting that the memorial to him on the field of his labors should be identified with education.

MEMORIAL AT AMOY CHINA, TO THE LATE DR. JOHN V. N. TALMAGE.

Mr. Pitcher sends from Amoy to the "Christian Intelligencer" a description of the new building, which shows it to be worthy of the mission and the noble worker whose name it bears. It stands, he says, on "the Little Eastern Mountain" of Kolongsu, and is conspicuous by its elevated position and by its graceful and substantial proportions. It is plain and massive, as was necessary in a district of high winds, and where there are typhoons occasionally. The foundations are laid in the bed-rock, and the walls range from two feet thick at the basement, to fourteen inches in the top story. The materials are brick and granite.

On the upper face of the building, in conspicuous letters, are the words, "Talmage Memorial," and underneath, in Chinese characters, the inscription, "Seeking the Fountain"—"Hall of Learning."

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

VIII.—CLARA D. ARMSTRONG.

ONE of the most useful institutions in St. Joseph, Mo., is the modest little building on the corner of Fourth and Messanie streets, which is known as the Faith Home. It is hospitable in the widest sense. Any woman finding herself homeless on the streets through the cruelty of a drunken husband, the unmercifulness of a landlord, or any other cause, can find a bed and the comforts of home in the Faith Home. Like many other useful institutions, the Faith Home of St. Joseph does not owe its origin to any millionaire or munificent philanthropist, but to the humble efforts of a Christian woman.

CLARA D. ARMSTRONG.

Mrs. Clara D. Armstrong is the founder of the Faith Home, and on her falls all the burden of its needs. She honestly confesses that she does not know how the expenses have been paid, except that when the daily need came, she has taken it to God in prayer, and in some way, from some source the money has been provided. The work has been carried on from day to day, and the day's supplies have been sufficient for the needs. When the need has increased and the home has had more hungry mouths to fill than usual, the receipts have been larger, so that Mrs. Armstrong never has any hesitation in receiving her guests, or any apprehension about her ability to provide for them. Her strong faith, which has grown with her experience, had a remarkable origin. In her girlhood, she was pronounced by physicians to be the victim of pulmonary disease, and for years it was expected that she would go to an early grave. But she lived, and when her father, Judge William B. Almond, of Platte City, Mo., died, leaving her and her mother in needy circumstances, the delicate girl, by her exertions, was able to provide a comfortable living for both. In 1876, her marriage to Mr. William H. Armstrong, a wealthy citizen of Glasgow, Mo., relieved her of the necessity of continuous toil for bread, but it brought with it a return of physical suffering, and for some years she was a confirmed invalid. From the time of her conversion, at the age of sixteen, she had been a diligent student of God's Word, and she was led in these days of suffering to consecrate herself afresh to God and to pledge her future life to his service whether in health or sickness. She was suddenly restored to health and she prepared herself to fulfil her pledge.

One of her first efforts was a work among the factory-girls of St. Joseph, which was greatly blessed. Out of this work has now developed a Young Women's Christian Association. In many other ways Mrs. Armstrong labored, both there and in Texas, where for a year or two she and her husband lived, to reach the poor and help them materially and spiritually. The first idea of a Faith Home came out of a peculiarly sad case that Mrs. Armstrong witnessed. The little house was immediately rented; a noble and generous lady not only put her furniture into it, but went to live there herself, and became a servant or minister to its occupants, and Mrs. Armstrong with this kindly helper has carried on the work to this day.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES.

S. S. Lesson for Aug. 4. Num. 17-20, 23-33. Golden Text Num. 14: 9. By Mrs. Baxter.

HAD this account in the book of Numbers been all which Holy Scripture told us of the spies, we might have concluded that it was a thing that proceeded from the Lord, however difficult we might have found it to reconcile the embassy of the spies with the life of absolute dependence upon God which was the calling of Israel in the wilderness. But the account given by Moses in Deut 1. leaves no doubt upon our minds that the sending of the spies and not with God. How could we understand that he who had undertaken to bring them into the land of promise, and who had declared to them that it was a good and a large . . . a land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3: 8), should command them to send spies before them to discover whether it was as he had said or not?

Originated with the People,

In Deut. 1. we have the clue. The children of Israel were come to Kadesh-barnea, the Southeast boundary of the land which God had promised to give them, and Moses relates: "I said unto you, Ye are come unto the hill country of the Amorites, which the Lord our God giveth unto us. Behold the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee; go up, take possession, as the Lord, the God of thy fathers, hath spoken to thee: fear not, neither be discouraged." (Deut. 1: 20, 21.) The answer of the people was the suggestion to send spies, and Moses' comment upon it is: "And the thing pleased me well." Up to this point the Lord's name is not mentioned in the matter. It was unusual for Moses to do anything until he had received clear direction from God, it was indeed exceptional that he should act under pressure from the people. When in Samuel's time the people asked for a king, the prophet knew well that such a desire on their part was not of God, and he keenly felt the dishonor cast upon the Lord, who was their King. Yet, when God came down to the weakness of his unbelieving people, Samuel received the command to anoint Saul and he obeyed, although it was under protest. The case of Moses was only parallel as far as God was concerned. He came down to the weakness and unbelief of his people and gave as his command that which had first been their suggestion. The event proved how unsatisfactory is all which originates with man. But O how patient is our God! Here was the only people which, as a people, knew him on the face of the earth; and, before they ventured to enter upon the possession of the inheritance which his fatherly love had provided for them, they must send representatives to investigate

Whether it was Worth Having

They had head-men, princes, whom God commanded them to send. But man's princes are not always God's kingly ones. Moses, whose order of proceeding usually was to get direction from God, and then to come with his command and his authority to the people, in this instance reversed the order. He listened to the people, and then, probably as a second thought, brought God into it. It is so unlike the man who "endured as seeing him who is invisible," even to send the twelve princes to the mountain to see the land, "whether it was good or bad," and the people: "whether they be strong or weak," "few or many." Nothing to: Will the Almighty God on their side who had wrought wonders in Egypt, what material is there the strength or numbers of the people? "And what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in camps or in strongholds." Surely it was unbelief which prompted such an investigation! The fall of Jericho in Joshua's time, by the mighty power of God, manifested the utter uselessness of all the investigations of the spies. If God was going to fight for them in his almightiness, they needed not to make preparation as though they had to undertake the overthrow and the dislodgment of their enemies. "And be ye of good courage," he adds, "and bring of the fruit of the land."

The spies departed and searched the land from the south border to the extreme north and came back, bearing slung between two of them one colossal bunch of grapes, as a specimen of the fruit of the land. And they gave in their report, justifying all which their God had told them of the extreme fruitfulness of the land: "Surely it floweth with milk and honey, and this is the fruit of it. Howbeit," they added, "the people that dwell in the land are strong, and the cities are fenced and very great, and moreover we saw the children of Anak there." The position was a false one. When God has clearly pointed out a path for his children, he is the Guarantee that such a path is possible, and we only get into endless difficulties, if we undertake the survey of the situation. We need no spies when "the ark of the covenant of the Lord" goes on before to search out a resting place. Our heavenly Father is too true a Father to leave his children in danger. He may lead us into apparent impossibilities, but only in order that his deliverance in those very circumstances may make us more deeply acquainted with him. Caleb understood his God, and said when the majority of the spies enlarged on the difficulties to be encountered: "Let us go up at once to possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." Caleb was a true prince; seeing God above them, and equal to all, he had circumstances and difficulties under his feet, he did not see them in relation to himself. Whether he could or could not conquer the inhabitants of the land and their fenced cities was a matter of no consideration to this man of faith. God would not deceive his people, and all things were possible to him.

As is generally the case, the people went with the majority, who contradicted Caleb and said: "We are not able to go up against the people for they are stronger than we." And while all they said was true, yet, leaving out of the question, as they did, all which God had said and promised, they brought up an which they had spied out unto the children of Israel, and led them to be disappointed with the provision which their heavenly Father had made for them. Instead of going trustfully and joyfully forward, the whole congregation "lifted up their voice and cried." (Num. 14: 1.) Everything looked dark; they bitterly reproached Moses and Aaron for bringing them out of Egypt, and they saw nothing before them but destruction and ruin for themselves and for their families. They actually went the length of consulting together whether they should not make a captain who should lead them back to Egypt!

Evil Report of the Land

Now Moses took again the place which was so familiar to him in every moment of perplexity. Instead of thinking for himself as he did about the sending of the spies, and considering whether it pleased him, he now thinks only of how to get the mind of God: he and Aaron fall down upon their faces before all the assembly of the people of Israel. And Joshua and Caleb, the two faithful spies, while Moses and Aaron dealt with God, bore their faithful testimony to the people. Without contradicting the power of their enemies, those men of God see God's side, the richness of his provision, the faithfulness of his promise and they say of the people of the land: "They are bread for us; their defence is removed from over them, and the Lord is with us: fear them not." (Num. 13: 9, R.V.)

"The Lord is at hand:" the time is short. Every child of God is bringing up to the worldly and unsaved around them some report of the land. God and his Word are judged by every witness that he has. What report are we bringing up? What opinion of God do our lives spread among those who watch us from day to day? Do they see us constantly more than conquerors over our difficulties, through him that hath loved us? Or are we by our unbelief giving others to understand that it does not answer to serve God? The spies were persecuted, and God appeared on the scene. But he spoke to none but Moses: "How long will this people despise me? And how long will they not believe in me for all the signs which I have wrought among them?" (ver. 11, 12.)

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

BEARING THE GRAPES OF ESCOL.

THE journey of the Israelites from Sinai brought them to Kadesh Barnea, now called Ain Qades, on the southern border of Palestine. Fifteen months had passed since they left Egypt. They had passed through a wretched country, the ground covered with sharp flints, and no herbage but a low scrub. In this day, and probably at that time, there was little water there, and that of a nauseous kind. Between them and the country they were going to was a low range of hills. They had but to climb these, and the Promised Land was before them. At this juncture the people seem to have lost faith in the guidance they had followed hitherto. They proposed to send representatives to examine the land and report upon it. One man from each tribe was chosen, and having received instructions from Moses, they set out. Various points about the narrative indicate that they did not go in a body, but separated into two or more parties, and that one party went much farther than the other, penetrating into Galilee. There is a culminating story from them, as if they returned singly or in groups and not all together. Caleb, who reported favorably and was eager for an immediate invasion, appears to have stood alone at first, and Joshua, arriving later, conformed his report, Reading with this theory in mind, it would seem that the other early arrivals agreed with Caleb about the fertility of the land, but disagreed as to the capacity of Israel to overcome its defenders. But later, there were some who gave an unfavorable report of the land itself, and said it was a land that ate up its inhabitants; that is, it would not support them. This was probably the party that explored Galilee. The majority reported unfavorably and the people lost heart. It is strange they should have done so. The situation was not near so desperate as their condition in Egypt had been, and God had delivered them from that. The attempt to combine reason with faith did not succeed, and it never does.

Be ye of good courage. This was the injunction of Moses. In Deuteronomy we are told the arguments he used with the people to arouse their faith and strengthen their courage. The chief one was that God, whose interventions on their behalf they remembered well, would be a support to them in the supreme conflict. In the battle of Crescy, Prince Edward bore the brunt of the French attack. He sent a messenger to his father, the king, for reinforcements. The king was on a height from which he could see the battle, and when he received his son's message, he said to the messenger: "Go tell my son that I am not so experienced a commander as not to kn when help is needed, and he knows I not so careless a father as not to sen when the need comes." He wanted son to fight on, trusting that his fat knew the situation and would come to succor if there was need for it.

The people are stronger than we. The sp who reported thus did not take into acco the power of God which was on the side Israel. Sometimes people now lose he when they are assailed by the enemies God or by temptations and, knowing th own weakness, they fear they will f They forget that when they make the str gle God will see and come to their help ing them a strength above their own. A g man in France who was sorely tried and had to fight a continual battle against te tation went to his bishop in great distr He said: "I have prayed earnestly God does not answer. He does not t the temptation away and I fear I shall f The bishop looked kindly at him and s "The King of France has two fortres Montleberry which is far inland an quite safe; and La Rochelle on the fron which is exposed and is always liable t tack. There is a General in comman each. Which of the two does the k most esteem?" The man answered, of La Rochelle, who is tried most." bishop smiled as he said, "Go thy way be content with the favor of thy Ma who has not relieved thee of thy d though thou didst ask him to do so."

We saw the children of Anak there. who are disposed to become Christ are often afraid to do so because of the ridicule of their companions. They dread this or that big boy will do or say. Bu tells us that his pilgrim met two me his way, one of whom was named Ti ous and the other Mistrust. They running, and Christian accosted them ling them they were running the w way. Mistrust answered that they seen just before them a couple of lio the way and begged Christian not to ture. But he went on. He, too, saw lions, but found that they were chain that they could not get at him. F er on he came to a valley at the en which there were blood, bones, ashes mangled bodies of men, even of pilg who had gone that way formerly, an cause thereof was seen in a cave, w two giants—Pope and Pagan—dwell whose power the men whose bone there had been put to death. But Chri would not turn back. He went on took no harm for he found "that P had been dead many a day, and as fo other, though he was still alive, he w crazy and stiff in his joints that he do little more than sit at his cave's m grinning at pilgrims and biting his because he could not get at them."

Let us go up at once and possess it. was the advice of Caleb. He did not tradict the statement of his colleagues the strength of the people in possessio probably he had seen the terrible so Anak who had so frightened them; b he had courage. When Luther was sum ed to Worms by the Emperor, his fr urged him not to go. They told him he would be burned as Huss had bee Luther never wavered. They warnec that his enemies were implacable and erful, but he declared he would go th they were a hundredfold as many as were. "God will be on my side," he d When he entered the city a valiant kn whose face was seamed and scarred wounds received in battle and whose was maimed, laid his hand kindly o reformer's shoulder, and said: "Th going to make a nobler stand than o any other has ever made in the bloodi our battles. But if thy cause is jus thou art sure of it, go forward in G name, and fear nothing. God will n sake thee." And Luther went.

This is the fruit of it. An infidel said to a Christian: "I understand, Sir, th expect to go to heaven when you die you tell me what kind of a place h is?" The Christian smiled sadly questioner. "I am afraid," he sa could not do so in a way that you understand. But I expect to go ther be happy there, because I have eaten of the fruit that grows there." The said, "Pray what may that be?" "It many kinds," said the Christian, w at the time was sick, nigh unto d "but just now the kind I enjoy is such peace as nothing else could give here the Rescue Work of "The Christian Herald" Fresh Air Fund Reaches—Young Dwellers in Dark Alleys and Foul Rookeries where Vice, Poverty, and Ignorance Herd Together—Scenes of Degradation—Need of United Christ-like Aid.

TENEMENT-HOUSE CHILDREN.

SUFFER the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not," said the gentle Saviour rebukingly to the men of Judea, and he added, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The same divine injunction that was applied to the chubby little rustics of the country villages of Palestine, toddling at their mothers' knees, applies equally to children the world over. Nowhere, probably, is such an inspiring illustration more urgently needed than in New York City, with its child-population of over half a million souls. Faithful servants of the Master, obedient to his wish, are conducting a precious work among the little ones in many parts of the great metropolis; but the field is far too vast for their energies. There are tens of thousands of children still outside the range of their influence and for whom, thus far, it cannot truthfully be claimed that anything has been accomplished toward bringing them to a knowledge of the Saviour, whose great heart and boundless love went out to the tender and the young.

A WEE MAID ON A ROTTEN MATTRESS."

Those neglected ones are the children of the slums—the tiny waifs, orphans, and outcasts who burrow in the very poorest and dirtiest sections of the city, living sometimes in cellars, or in the furthest removed floors of some crazy tenement, or sometimes in a recess under a dock, for the want of a better home.

A tour with any of our missionaries engaged in the Fresh Air work reveals many strange phases of life in the homes of the very poor. Some of these are depicted in our illustrations; but we would fill many pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to adequately describe the half of what is encountered in a single day's observation.

Our artist has caught with the truthful camera, glimpses of a few of the scenes of misery and destitution that mark the hovels of the great city. Gaunt, unkempt children whose clothing are chiefly rags and whose shoeless feet are calloused by contact with the hot pavements, and dirty ash-barrels, play around the alleys or in the streets, glad to be anywhere else than in the wretched, evil-smelling tenement holes, called rooms by courtesy. One wee Italian maiden sat on an old rotten mattress in the middle of the street, a picture of perfect contentment in the midst of filth and confusion, and no one seemed to care. In some of those places, especially in the Italian quarter, it is not uncommon to find ten or twelve persons, children and adults, and both sexes huddled together that privacy is out of the question and morals are consequently at a low ebb. Add to this, the loose companionship of the streets, and the absence of all moral training, and it is hardly to be wondered at that thousands of the neglected little lads, long before reaching manhood, drift into crime and go to the reformatory or the "pen," while the young girls gravitate to a fate even more degraded and pitiful.

What a future for the little innocents! Yet the terrible Minotaur of the slums demands his yearly tribute of children. Happy the tenement child who has honest, industrious Christian parents; but alas for those thousands who are swallowed up in the vortex, without a hand extended to rescue them from our human shambles. Boys who might become useful, Christian men, and girls who, in their impressionable natures, have the material for noble women, are left to lead the lives of tatterdemalions, in rags and dirt and ignorance, in a Christian land.

There are 50,000 other children, just like those in the interesting group in Stanton Street, which our artist has pictured so faithfully, and who lined up timidly in front of his camera. They are to be found in many localities on the East-side, in Hester, Norfolk, and Attorney streets, in the East Broadway alleys, on Mott street, Mulberry street and South Fifth avenue, "Little Italy," "Poverty Gap," "Cherry Hill," "Battle Row," and similar localities, prolific of poverty, ignorance and crime. Our slums are the worst and most densely populated in the world. And it is their child-dwellers—poor little rejected ones, like those we have described—who are reached by the Fresh Air work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home. To such as these, a ten days' sojourn amid the fields with free air and wide, blue sky, means more of heaven than they have ever imagined. In that brief time, seed may be sown in the young hearts that will blossom into rich fruit in the after years.

"IN THAT VILE AIR, THE CHILDREN WERE GAUNT, SALLOW AND STARVED-LOOKING"

Those reached by the missionaries of our Fresh Air Work, represent many nationalities, including Americans, Germans, Irish, Jews, Poles, Russians, Roumanians, and Italians. It would be hard to paint the ramshackle buildings they live in, the decrepit stairways, threatening life and limb, the coating of mud on the floors, the broken plaster, the artistically-stuffed broken windows, or perhaps a room with no windows at all. That little children can live in such places almost passes belief. Yet in the district occupied by many of the "sweat-shops" in which cheap garments are made on the East-side, there are no less than 46,000 children—Russians, Poles and Roumanians. Poor though he may be, the patriarchal life of the Jewish father protects his children more than any other, and the very lowest level of degradation is never reached in Jewish homes.

Death mows down the children of the slums remorselessly. In three typical tenement blocks, the mortality rates were 325.00, 106.38, and 86.00 per 1000. In one ward, the child death-rate was 150.52 and in another 119.02. This fearful sacrifice of human life is due to a multitude of causes: the intense heat of mid-summer, and foul rooms and sewerage the year round among the number. Ragged, dirty, crawling with vermin, many little creatures grow up more like wild beasts than human beings. One sees among them a painfully large number of wan, weazened faces and poor, shrunken limbs. Their lot is always a sad one. It usually happens that, glad to escape outdoors at all hazards, their daily playground is the street or some dingy alley or slippery yard which no ray of sunlight ever penetrates. There, in an atmosphere too often heavy with the sounds of fighting, cursing, and swearing, amid poverty and hard knocks, the boys and girls of the slums pass their childhood. Unhappy beings, born to toil and trouble; how shall they ever know of this kind Jesus who loved the little children, unless some hand is reached out to them to draw them to Himself?

Among such a multitude of children, whom to take and whom to leave it is hard to decide. Here, in a single alley in Hester Street, dark and foul-smelling, but amazingly populous, are over a hundred children, only a few of whom have been taken by the camera. And such children! Gaunt, sallow and starved-looking, their clothes little better than bundles of rags, held together no one knows how, their feet bare and dirty, face begrimed and hair matted with filth and neglect, it is difficult to believe that these wretched little mites of humanity live in a civilized, Christian land. Babies so frail-looking that it seems absurd to expect them to ever grow up; girls with faces already aged and peaked, and who know too much of the world and its miseries; and boys who give promise of a manhood one does not love to contemplate. Just such a group was taken to our Children's Home a few days ago. First they were well washed and cleaned, and their hair cut, and then all were inspected by the doctor. A few were rejected for obvious reasons, but the majority were sent to Mont-Lawn, where in a few days such a transformation was effected as seemed almost a marvel! Fresh air, freedom, good wholesome food, and kind treatment were new experiences. The young guests soon learned, as hundreds of others had learned before them, that the good God had put it into the hearts of his people to send for them, and to help them as they felt they were being helped. Their little prayers (some had never prayed before) were fervent and touching, for they felt that they were addressing the Great Friend of the children—especially of such as they themselves are. Such impressions, deepened by the hearty religious atmosphere of the Home, are never forgotten. They affect the entire life.

"THEY LINED UP IN FRONT OF HIS CAMERA."

Some of the children our workers encounter have parents who care little what becomes of their offspring as long as their own animal wants are satisfied. Others are absolute waifs and outcasts, sleeping around on stairways, in cellars, and in wagons, or where they may. A few, though hardly yet in their teens, have taken the first steps in crime, and under the tuition of some low thief, now too old or decrepit to ply his trade himself, are being taught to pick pockets for a living. And this is but a realistic picture of the experience of thousands of other children in New York City. Dwarfed and stunted in body, mind, and soul, their unrelieved lot is poverty and want, suffering, and death. They come and go like puny shadows on the dial of time. Not their's the sweet pleasure of romping in the green fields, or resting in the cool woods. They may never hear the song of birds nor breathe the sweet incense of the flowers. Here and there among them, a few fortunate ones are reached by kind, benevolent souls, who take them out of their surroundings for a time, and let them know something of the great book of nature. Their young hearts respond quickly to such kindness, even if they cannot quite understand the motives that prompted it.

But what of the uncounted thousands who have no such happiness as this? Some one has written, no doubt with truthfulness, mingled with a philanthropic enthusiasm, that "there are twenty thousand poor children in New York who do not know when it is Christmas." It is quite as accurate to say that there are at least five times that number belonging to the class we have described, who know nothing of any holiday whatsoever; to whom the summer brings misery and pain, instead of recreation and enjoyment: whose little lives are for the most part a sharp battle with chronic hunger and daily suffering.

It is this class that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Fresh Air workers seek out in the purlieus of the great city and take to our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn. Two thousand children have already been sheltered and instructed at the Home since it was opened last summer. Since the beginning of the present season, the arrivals of

Continued on page 475.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or Post-Office orders.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Post-office, the State and Street should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

DESTRUCTIVE BOOKISHNESS.

AMID this deluge of books many people are being drowned. They know not which way to turn. Every one you meet has a book or two to suggest, and the papers have whole columns of literary commendations and condemnations. The question what to read is much discussed, but not so much the question what not to read.

Better stand off from all those books which were made not because the author had anything to say, but because the publisher and the author wanted to make a commercial success. Such books are generally of large type, profuse illustration, and showy binding. They must have so many words, so many pages, so many pictures. You are aware from the appearance of the book that it was merely made to sell. We believe, however, that a book will be of little practical service to you unless the author was compelled by an inward consciousness of duty to print it. The book into which an honest and earnest author throws his whole soul is the one that will magnetize, lift, and vivify you. Avoid that book which has the appearance of literary jobbing.

We also advise that you take only small doses of love story. The majority of novels are made to set forth desperate love scrapes. It is well enough for a man to read sufficient of this literature to keep him from being awkward when he himself becomes a party to some affair of the heart. But much reading of love stories makes one soft, insipid, absent minded, and useless. The probability is that when you fall into love, you will not fall into it according to the cheap novels. Excessive reading of love stories will make you a fool before you know it.

We further advise you not to read a book merely because some one else likes it. Do not waste your time on Shakespeare, if you have no taste for poetry or the drama, merely because so many like Shakespeare, nor pass a long time with Sir William Hamilton, when metaphysics are repulsive to you, though your literary friends are enraptured with the great-headed Scotchman. When you read a book by the page, every [illegible] that book and take something else. There is no reason in you dousing your plate with [illegible] taste for the saccharine. There comes ever and anon a fashion of certain styles of reading. Be not overborne by the pressure. For a while there was prevailing a Tupperian epidemic, and we all went to writing poor blank verses. Then there came a Carlylian epidemic, and we all wrote turgid, involved, twisted, and break-neck sentences, each noun with as many verbs as Brigham Young had wives, and as little acquainted with them. Then came the Renanish epidemic, and the attempt everywhere was made to mingle romance and religion, with frequent punches at religion, and we prided ourselves in being sceptical.

Be independent in your literary tastes. Make up your mind what it is best for you to read, and read it. Master a few good books. Life is short, and books are many. Instead of having your mind a garret crowded with rubbish, make a parlor with rich furniture beautifully arranged, into which you would not be ashamed to have the whole world enter.

THE LAST OF MICHAEL.

THE coroner's jury have come in. Facts: a row on Sixth avenue. Michael wants a drink. The bartender refuses to let him have it. Michael wants a drink so much he leaps over the bar to get it. Bartender takes up a bottle, and with it breaks Michael's head. The verdict of the coroner's jury so declares it. But this is not a peculiar case. The bottle is breaking more heads to-day than is any weapon. We talk not of the hearts but of the heads. Our literary and newspaper men are so pressed of hard work, and kept up so late nights, and so exhausted of nervous energy, that many of them are taking artificial stimulus to keep up. They show it in their eyes and cheek, and some of them in the inflammation of the end of their nose. They are gradually going down. Every year are able to do less and less. After awhile they will disappear, and the doctors will apply a high-sounding Latin term to the style of their decease. But all the world will know that they were killed by the same weapon that slew Michael. Struck across the head with a bottle!

BIG GUNS.

THE Church is yet to learn that its chief work is to be done by consecrated men of ordinary calibre. Great speeches never marshalled a host. An eminent Scotch divine getting into the pulpit after a week's elaboration of a learned discourse, forgot it entirely, and was compelled to give a plain talk which, under God, swept half his audience into the kingdom. There is an absurd call in the Church to-day for what are called "big guns," and but little appreciation of well-loaded rifles. The "Swamp Angel" in the last war was a failure. It proposed to do great things, but after awhile they found it was cracked and were afraid to use it lest it should blow up. So while men of but small capacity are doing their work well, and make no fuss about it, we have a few "big guns" half cracked with conceit about themselves, and they blow up just when they are wanted for important service. The nuisance of the Church to-day is ecclesiastical "swamp angels." Dr. Chalmers' astronomical sermons "make us see stars," but we suppose there were, at the time of their delivery, uncelebrated ministers of Christ in Scotland, who were bringing more souls to the Saviour. Patrick Henry's speech did good in the Virginia legislature, and was of service in giving us, when boys, something to practice on at the country school-house, till the dinner-pails along the wall shook with the cry of "Liberty or Death;" but there were men who could hardly say a word in public who did as much service when in Independence Hall they put their name to the document that declared our national deliverance. We must all lay hold of the work. If the raging conflagration of sin is to be put out, it will not be by one fireman standing with big horn, making a great racket, but by men, women, and boys, bringing what water they can, some in hogsheads, some in pails, and some in small dippers, every one doing what he or she can, God helping all the time. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Tenement-House Children.

Continued from preceding page.

children at the Home have been as follows:

June 8	30	June 28	17
" 9	40	" 29	17
" 11	40	July 1	30
" 12	15	" 2	29
" 13	11	" 3	03
" 14	11	" 5	29
" 15	13	" 6	20
" 18	53	" 8	14
" 19	13	" 9	33
" 20	17	" 10	22
" 21	18	" 11	28
" 22	20	" 12	34
" 24	19	" 13	55
" 25	17	" 15	52
" 26	13	" 16	30
" 27	23	" 17	30

Total	832
Vacation finished	605
Leaving now at the Home	227

Of which 125 are boys, and 102 girls.

It costs $3 to give a child a ten days' outing at the Home, and this sum includes all traveling expenses both ways, good, wholesome, strengthening food in abundance, and such ordinary articles of clothing as the little one may be really in need of.

Arrangements have already been made at Mont-Lawn to receive 2500 children this summer. This will involve an expenditure of $7500, some portion of which has already been contributed by friends of the work. We invite the cordial co-operation of every reader of this journal, who is interested in the moral rescue of these poor friendless children of the slums, as well as in their physical well-being. A single contribution, however small, if given in the true spirit of Christ-like benevolence, may be blessed as the means not only of brightening some sad young life, but of producing results that will last through eternity. The rescue of even one child from misery and degradation is a priceless privilege, and worth the effort of a lifetime. We want all to help us to save the children—to lift them, even for a little while, out of the misery that surrounds their daily lives, and give them a chance to breathe pure air, and to romp among green fields far away from the smoke, noise, filth and heat of the city; to help them to escape from vicious and besotted surroundings, and the drunkenness, profanity, and repulsiveness of the slums; from the evil companionships, the low jest and the coarse sneer, and to hear, in the little chapel at Mont-Lawn, the sweet story of the Boy of Nazareth told over again, with all the love and affection for little children that comes in the telling. We wish every poor tenement child in New York could be withdrawn to this shady retreat for a ten days' outing, and with the help of as many of our friends as we sincerely hope to enlist, many hundreds more may be sent to Mont-Lawn this year than last. Every gift will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Contributions During the Week.

The following contributions have been received during the week for The Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$490.20
J. P., Brooklyn, N. Y.	3 00
Mrs. S. A. Williams	1 00
A friend of the young folks, New Boston, N. H.	2 00
E. L. M., St. Albans, Vt.	1 00
Mrs. E. H. Lane	3 00
R. W. Jones	1 00
Mrs. Margaret Newing	50
In memory of Lutie Conover	50
A friend of the friendless	3 00
Annie Martin	1 00
Subr. Morrison, Ill.	1 00
J. H. G. S., Merchantville, N. J.	3 00
In His Name	12 00
M. D. S., Balto., Md.	1 00
E. E. & I. M. S., Milford Centre, O.	1 00
Mrs. A. A. Brush	3 00
A friend, Chauncey, N. Y.	1 00
Pearl C. Higby	2 25
I. H. N.	50
W. H. D., Sunsbury	1 00
"Nobody cares"	1 00
Friend, Kalamazoo, Mich.	1 00
From one who loves children, Breakabeen, N. Y.	1 00
Mrs. A. M. Waterbury	3 00
Mrs. C. H. Jorsten	3 00
Friend, Broad Brook, Ct.	1 00
J. A. Long-street	3 00
E. C. Smith	3 00
Mrs. John C. Wright	1 00
Mrs. E. B. Little	6 00
Mrs. J. G. R., Mount Joy, Pa.	3 00
P. D., Mattsville, Ind.	30
Mr. & Mrs. J. W. Goodhold	3 00
Mrs. E. B. Strong	21 00
Harriet L. Strong	21 00
Mr. & Mrs. — Eaton Rapids, Mich.	3 00
Mrs. S. J. B.	10 00
Dr. & Mrs. E. M. Johnson	5 00
S. M. Hopkins	3 00
C. P., Baltimore Co., Md.	5 00
L. S. V.	15 00
Circle of Kings Daughters, Kennett Sq., Pa.	3 00
In His Name, Warren, Pa.	3 00
In His Name, Phila., Pa.	3 00
H. G. Meyer	5 00
— Lowell, Mass.	6 00
T. J. Addinsell	1 00
Manchester Mr. Bible School	4 25
Mrs. C. L. Evans	3 00
Mattie Rogers	3 00
I. H. N. Bath	3 00
A friend, Granville, O.	6 00
Several friends, Catskill, N. Y.	6 25
Gladys M. Pearman	1 00
Total	$693.75

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Anxious Inquirer. Is there a book in print to... fully answering Col. R. G. Ingersoll's cha... against the truth of the Bible?

Dr. Talmage has delivered a series of ... mons in refutation of Ingersoll's infidel... Write to Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, ... York City.

Mr. Jacob Klein, Galton, Ill., writes, in ... swer to Mrs. Chas. Brown, Owen's Sou... Ont., Can., that the hymn "Eternity, Et... ty," to which she refers, can be found in "C... hard's Meditations," published by J. N. K... Baltimore, Md. The hymn was written ... Wulfer, who died in 1685.

M. E. Miller, Bay Ridge, N. Y. What is the p... lation of Africa, its area, and its religious ... plexion?

Population 210,000,000 estimated; area ... 550,000 square miles; religion: heathen or ... classified 100,000,000; Copts, Abyssinians ... Oriental Christians, 5,000,000; Protesta... 1,000,000; Moslems, 85,000,000; Catholics ... 000,000. These are estimates, as it is im... sible to give more exact figures.

Miss L. F. Jones, Covington, Ky. Was not the... ent Empress of China the daughter of poo... ents?

No; the Dowager Empress was the dau... ter of a poor farmer. Her family being ne... destitute, she pleaded with her father to ... her as a slave, so that they might have br... He finally consented and she was bought ... great general, who took her to the ca... adopted and educated her. She was a ... ward presented to the Emperor, who wa... charmed that he made her his wife.

Subscriber, St. Johnsbury, Vt. Are the Armen... Roman Catholics, or are they a spiritual C... tian people, or only brought up in a certain ...

The Armenian Church agrees in some es... tials with the Greek and other Ori... churches. They hold the seven sacramen... of the Latin Church, baptize both by immer... and sprinkling, reject purgatory, yet pra... for the dead, worship saints to excess, and ... ploy confession and penance. Their creed d... ritual are a combination of those of the Ro... Church and the Greek.

R. S. W., Oakland, Ia. How many, and whe... the references to Christ's appearances aft... crucifixion? Who were present at each ap... ance?

You will find the complete list, with all ... parallel passages indicated, on page 128 o... "Harmony of the Gospels" in the append... the International Teachers' Reference Bibl...

Mary L. A., Brooklyn, N. Y., and several ... Does the prohibition of women speaking ... churches (1 Cor. 14: 34, 35) apply to Chr... Endeavor meetings when they are held ... church?

We have already answered many time... quiries about this passage, but as so ... y correspondents are writing about it, it m... well to repeat the substance of what has ... said before. The condition of society at ... inth at the time Paul wrote was such th... women had taken a prominent part in the s... vices of the new church, a scandal would ... been caused which would have been very d... rimental to its interests. The prohibition o... appears to refer to women putting ques... prompted by curiosity and not of pra... utility. Paul directs them to ask such q... stions of their husbands at home, so as n... to waste the time of the church. A woman d... ing a Christian Endeavor, or any other m... ting in a Church, need be under no apprehe... on that she is transgressing the Apostolic ... mand.

Reader. 1. What help would I be if I joined the... trons of "The Bowery Mission"? 2. W... meant by the "Revised Version"? 3. Wi... the first and second commandments, if the... is "Thou shalt not take the name of the L... God in vain," etc., as I have noticed in o... your recent Sunday School lessons?

1. The patrons of the Bowery Missio... are those who, feeling in their hearts that ... would love to assist in such a work, s... fy their co-operation and interest by help... with their prayers, and with an offering o... a year to extend the work of the Mission. 2. It is a revision of the old King James version ... a corps of very able translators, including ... most eminent theological scholars on tw... continents. 3. The first asserts the sole sup... macy of God; the second is directed again... image worship, or idolatry, and the th... against the sin of blasphemy, and inferen... ally against all profanity.

D. H. Rupp, Charleston, Ills. Write to Fl... H. Revell Co., publishers, N. Y.——Percy F. ... Valdosta, Ga. 1. Quite right. 2. When th... that they have experienced a spiritual rebir... that they are accepted of God.——Reader, ... ville, Ind. No, neither is now in existence.... E. R. Lane, Fort Barnwell, N. C. Christian s... is not accepted by orthodox Christians. M... dy's doctrines are approved by only a few, ... almost universally rejected by the Christian ... at large as unscriptural and visionary.—... Shaw, Frossal, Mich. Yes; the advice w... clear and unequivocal. To do otherwise would ... incur serious moral danger.——C. A. S., Port ... ington, Wis. We believe it would not pay to ... take such a work.——E. E. Baker, Garden C... D. Write to Century Publishing Co., New Y... the biography.——E. T. Hewitt, Turke Boyo... We have no clue to either.——E. T. L., New ... Ct. It appeared on the third Sunday in May ... K. 1. About 800, including dialects. 2. ... Eighty-three miles.——Family Lee: by Jesse ... to American Bible Society, N. Y., for full infor...

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

FANATICISM AT JEDDAH.

AN outbreak of Mohammedan fanaticism occurred recently at Jeddah, which resulted in the murder of the British Vice-consul at that port and the severe injury of the consuls of Great Britain and Russia and the consular Secretary of France. The rioters are believed to have been Bedouins. It appears that the Europeans had been out for a stroll and had stopped to rest half a mile from the city. They were sitting conversing together, when a number of Asiatics came along and surrounded them. Without any warning they fired upon the Europeans at a distance of four yards and then rushed upon them with knives. The Vice-consul was too badly wounded to move and he was stabbed to death. The others effected their escape. A riot followed, in which the Cholera Hospital was destroyed. It is believed that the outbreak was due to the new sanitary regulations adopted at Jeddah to prevent the spread of cholera. Jeddah is a port on the Red Sea about half way between Aden and Suez, sixty-five miles from Mecca, the birthplace of Mohammed. The pilgrims to Mecca usually embark there, and at this season of the year there are often a hundred thousand of them in the city. As these pilgrimages have often been the starting point of the plague, an investigation was started some time ago to ascertain what measures could be taken to prevent the outbreak of the disease and its germs being carried by the pilgrims to the districts where they lived. A convention which sat at Paris arrived at the unanimous conclusion that the disease had its origin in the filthy condition of the wells and water-tanks around Mecca and on the shores of the Red Sea. They were open to air and the tanks served as bathing places as well as for the supply of drinking water. The wells were deepened and covered over, regular bathing places were provided, and no one was allowed to bathe in the tanks from which the drinking water was supplied. The pilgrims who had been accustomed to dip their filthy skin-bottles into the wells have this year had pure water measured out to them and were not allowed to draw it themselves. As the wells are accounted holy, some dissatisfaction was expected, and this murderous outrage is doubtless due to it. The pilgrims regarded as an unwarrantable restriction of their liberty, the regulations designed to save their lives and the lives of thousands to whom they might communicate the disease. We wonder at their suicidal stupidity, but it is only of late years that we have ourselves learned the importance of such regulations. Even now, we have not generally carried the principle beyond the realm of physical conditions. There is often bitter resentment when an attempt is made to enforce regulations tending to moral cleanliness, and to restrain men from vices which lead to eternal death and disseminate widespread contamination.

As righteousness tendeth to life, so he that pursueth evil pursueth it to his own death. (Prov. 11: 19.)

An Engineer's Chagrin.

The reporter of a Los Angeles journal relates a thrilling experience of one of the most skillful engineers on the Pacific Coast. He was assigned to the Overland Express that was to leave Tucson, Arizona, at midnight. The night was dark and stormy and somehow everything seemed to go wrong. The fireman was slower than usual getting his coal on the tender: the stoker had neglected the oil valves and the engineer never made steam so slowly. The engineer realized as he drew out of the depot nearly an hour behind time, that he would have to get all the speed out of his locomotive that could be done, if he was to reach his destination on time. He was the more concerned to do this because he was told that the General Superintendent of the road was on the train. He had frequently had other officers behind him but never before the superintendent. But to his chagrin the "ill-luck" at starting continued. No sooner had he put on full steam than one of the pumps failed to work and the other seemed clogged. So far from making up time, the train was running behind. At Big Wells the engineer found the water in the boiler was so low that the pump must be fixed before he could climb the heavy grade ahead. Twenty minutes were lost in getting it in working order. The work was finished and the train was just starting when the sharp whistle of a locomotive was heard, and, looking up, the engineer saw a special tourist excursion train from Southern California approaching on the track over which he was going. The telegraph operator had neglected to warn him of the train, and if it had not been for the series of vexatious delays, there would have been an appalling collision. From that time to the end of the journey everything worked smoothly and the train reached its destination on time. The engineer says he shall never get angry at a cranky locomotive again; it makes him sick to think of what would have happened had that locomotive behaved that night as well as it usually did, and as it did after the danger was past. The time will come when the Christian will find that all his vexations and trials which are now so hard to bear were really, like the engineer's series of vexations, blessings in disguise.

We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. (Rom. 8: 28.)

A STREET IN JEDDAH. THE SCENE OF THE RECENT OUTBREAK.

Fruitless Self-Sacrifice.

An extraordinary romance has just been brought to light through a pardon issued by the Governor of Nebraska. Two brothers, named respectively Charles and Joe Davis, were implicated in a fraudulent transfer of property. At the trial, when they were convicted, it was proved that Joe, the younger brother had not understood the transaction, and was at the most guilty of indiscretion. He was therefore sentenced to pay a small fine and be imprisoned until it was paid. Charles, the elder brother, was sentenced to three years imprisonment. He was greatly distressed by the thought of what his wife and family must suffer while he was in jail. Joe was in the same cell at Omaha with him and he made the proposal that as he was unmarried, and the three years imprisonment would entail no suffering on any one but himself, that he should assume the name of Charles and bear his sentence. Charles objected, but his generous brother insisted, and when the officers came to take the prisoners to the Lincoln jail and Charles's name was called, Joe stepped out of the cell and was taken away. There was no opportunity to acquaint Charles's wife with the plan for her benefit, and she inadvertently thwarted it. She went to the jail to see her husband before his removal to Lincoln and was told that he had been sent away the day before. She was much distressed, and the officers asked her if she would like to see her husband's brother, who was still there. When she was taken to the cell, she gave a scream of delight, greeted the prisoner by his name and threw her arms around his neck. The officers perceived what had been done and proceeded to rectify the error by sending Charles to Lincoln. The Governor has ordered Joe to be released, and Charles remains to serve the sentence imposed upon him. The guilty man must pay the penalty in spite of his generous brother's effort to save him. So, many men will pay the penalty of their sins in spite of Christ's having suffered, the just for the unjust; but that is not due to any inadvertence of their own or others, but because they despise the salvation he has earned for them and do not claim it.

Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life. John 5: 40.

Rags Becoming Paper.

An article in a scientific journal describing the process of paper-making, contains an interesting account of the methods employed to cleanse the rags out of which the best paper is made. There is more difficulty in washing a pile of rags than in washing the garments in a whole condition. It is necessary to use chemicals to rid them of the dirt, and these chemicals not only affect the quality of the paper when the rags have been transformed into that material, but they affect the ink when the paper is written upon. It often happens that of two letters written with the same ink, the writing of one loses its color quicker than the other, because the paper in that case was made of rags which had been heavily soaked with acids. Thus, although dirty rags can be turned into snow-white paper, they will not make paper so good as that which is made of clean rags. As the transformation of rags into paper is often used to illustrate the change that conversion makes in a man, it is well to remember that the degree of foulness is a factor in the illustration. The grace of God saves the converted man from the guilt and punishment of his sin, but it does not make of him so good, or so useful a man as he would have been, if he had not committed it. He suffers loss. The father of the prodigal forgave him, but he said to the brother, "All that I have is thine."

Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one. Job 14: 4.

Vesuvius in Eruption.

A cablegram from Naples says that Vesuvius is again sending forth ashes and lava. On July 8, crowds of people from all parts of Italy were flocking to the scene to witness the wonderful sight of the eruption. There was an immense emission of ashes as on the preceding days, and tons of lava were pouring down the sides of the volcano. Will Carleton who visited the scene recently, describing it in his journal "Every Where," says: "This valley of the shadow of possible death is the most thickly settled district in Europe. Should there come from the slumbering mountain another such terrible fire-storm as overwhelmed Pompeii, it would mean death to thousands and perhaps tens of thousands of people. Only twenty-three years ago, nearly a score of tourists were destroyed by a sudden torrent of flood and flame that burst from the mountain. . . . The homes of half a million people are clustered at the base of the mountain, and they show no fear of the destruction that overtook Pompeii and Herculaneum." As such another eruption may never come, there is not so much to be surprised at in the phlegmatic disposition of the people, when we remember that the certain destruction that the Word of God assures us is coming on all who live in sin, so seldom causes apprehension, or leads them to seek safety from the wrath to come.

The earth also and the works therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? II. Peter 3: 10, 11.

BRIEF NOTES.

We Invite the Co-operation of Our Subscribers in the extension of our subscription list, and in order to introduce this journal into many new homes, we will, on receipt of only one dollar, send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for six months to any address in the United States or Canada, and one copy of any one of the following premiums, all charges prepaid:

International Ruby Bible, which retails at $2.
From Manger to Throne.
Gospel Hymns, from One to Six, complete.
The Pathway of Life.

This offer will not apply to renewals, being intended exclusively as an inducement for new subscribers to try THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. No renewals will be accepted on these terms, nor will any new subscribers intended to take the place of renewals, share in this offer. Please tell your friends about it, and invite them to join our ranks. All new subscriptions sent in under this proposition must positively be mailed before August 15th, when this offer will be withdrawn.

Our Stock of Emerald Bibles (with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, at $3), is entirely exhausted, and consequently we cannot supply any more of them to intending new subscribers or renewals. Of the other premiums, "The Ruby International Bible," "From Manger to Throne," "The Pathway of Life," and "Gospel Hymns from One to Six Complete," we have a sufficient quantity left to meet current demands, and will give due notice should the present supply run out.

Mrs. Amanda Smith Has Been holding large meetings in London. She expected to sail for home on July 6.

A Recent Convert at a meeting of the Salvation Army at Seattle, Wash., confessed that he was an escaped convict. He said he had sixteen years to serve, and under the influence of his new convictions he gave himself up to the officers, and went back to Leavenworth to serve his time.

Prince Dimitri Khilkov, a rich Russian nobleman, has followed Tolstoi's example and divided his estates among his peasants, reserving only seven acres to himself, which he cultivates to support his family. He teaches the peasants.

The Russian Government has finally removed the prohibition against Moody and Sankey's hymns, which has been in force since June 24, 1886. The official censor considered the hymn, "Hold the Fort, for I am Coming," capable of being used with a political meaning.

The American Institute of Christian Philosophy has decided to discontinue the publication of "Christian Thought," and the members will receive instead of it the annual volume of lectures delivered under the Charles F. Deems Memorial Lectureship at the University of the City of New York, through the fund raised in memory of its late President. The lectures of the Institute at Chautauqua this year were upon Sociology from the Standpoint of Christianity.

The Thirteenth General Bible Conference for Christian workers will be held at Northfield Aug. 3-15. The following speakers among others will take part: Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, of London; Dr. Andrew Murray, of South Africa; Major D. W. Whittle, Revs. R. A. Torrey, A. T. Pierson, and H. C. Mabie. Board may be obtained at $2.50 a day by writing Mr. A. G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass. The music will be under the charge of Mr. George C. Stebbins and Mr. Ira D. Sankey.

Bishop Potter of New York is now Working as a mission pastor in the city. Instead of taking a vacation in Europe, or some mountain or seaside resort, he has taken up his quarters for a month at the Mission, 130 Stanton street, one of the most densely populated neighborhoods of the East side. The clergyman who usually has charge of it will take a month's vacation. The Bishop will live and sleep at the mission, will conduct all the services and perform all the visiting and other duties which devolve upon the clergyman in charge.

The Report Recently Issued by the Census Bureau shows that there are five denominations which have more than 1,000,000 members each and ten others with a membership over 50,000. The leading denominations are: Catholics, 6,250,000; Methodists, 4,600,000; Baptists, 3,725,000; Presbyterians, 1,278,932; Lutherans, [illegible]; Protestant Episcopal, [illegible]. Outside of [illegible] Russians the Reformed exceed the Orthodox by 15,000. The Salvation Army has a membership of 27,742.

Transformed by Grace.

Ellen G——, Once Outcast and Criminal, now Conducting a Successful Rescue Work in Washington—The Story of Mrs. S ——'s Conversion.

MIRACLES of grace may be found on every side, if we will but look for them On a dark, stormy night in May, 1893, a woman of hard features and wretched raiment, came into a meeting of the Central Union Mission, Washington, D.C., and quietly took a seat. The services were in progress and the singing, the prayers, the brief Gospel-talk and the testimonies were proceeded with. While the rain was pouring down outdoors, there was much joy among the converts and workers as they told of the goodness of God and how he had come to them and cleansed their sins. Presently the leader asked, "How many have come in here to get saved?" Several raised their hands, but the woman of hard features and harder clothing rose to her feet and said in a harsh but earnest tone:

"Pray for me! Pray for me!"

Then falling upon her knees, she exclaimed: "Oh! Jesus, save me, save me! You know what a wretched woman I have been and I am so tired of it. Oh! save me, save me!"

Every heart was deeply moved by the agonizing petitions of this penitent woman and she was speedily surrounded by sympathetic workers who pleaded the promises of God, that, as he had promised to forgive all who confessed their sins, acccordingly he would forgive her. The other seekers were not forgotten, and as a result of the service, before its close four persons accepted Christ that night, among them our friend of the hard features and homely garments. She was sent up-stairs to the night shelter for women where she remained for several weeks, giving daily testimony by her acts and words that she had passed from death unto life.

The story of her life was a sad one. Her home was in Ireland. When quite young she loved a man who ruined her. Then she came to America, and to Washington, where she fell in with depraved men and women. She conducted during the war three houses of vice, making a great deal of money, keeping her own team and carriage, and dressing in silks and diamonds. But sin was bound to do its legitimate work and after a time the love of liquor and snuff destroyed her ability to attend to affairs, and those about her began to rob her, and soon she found herself in poverty and worse than that, a slave to the cup. Her life for nearly twenty-five years previous to her coming to the Mission had been that of drinking whisky and fighting policemen when out of jail and the balance of the time behind prison walls. When drunk she was a desperate woman and no policeman attempted to arrest her alone. She would fight, and bite, and kick, until overpowered by two or more officers, by whom she was sometimes cruelly beaten.

An awful life it was, and when, one Sunday afternoon, a band of workers from the [illegible] and told the inmates that Jesus loved them and wanted to give them a better life, she made up her mind that if she lived to get out, she was going to the Mission to get saved. The result of her coming has been told. After her conversion, she lived for a time at the Mission and then found employment outside. Most of the time she lived in communion with her Saviour, but occasionally she made somewhat crooked paths. About a year after her conversion she decided to do something definite for the women with whom she had been associated in sin for so many years, and after carefully considering the matter, she opened a Rescue Home for women in a small brick house down in "Louse Alley" (recently named "Shea's Court), a section notorious for its crime, where nearly every house was either a brothel or a drinking-place of the lowest description, and where the police made frequent raids.

She put out a sign "Ellen G—— Rescue Home," and a band of workers from the Central Union Mission held meetings there three nights each week. Soon women whose lives had been similar to that of Ellen, came and sought refuge, and in some cases were grandly converted and began to live upright, industrious Christian lives. Ellen supported her home by making gingham aprons for kitchen use. A sewing machine was presented to her and she would purchase a bolt of gingham, and with the assistance of the women who were her guests she made and sold large quantities of those aprons. Some gifts also came to her, especially when it was ascertained that she was pressed for funds.

Residing in the same neighborhood, but out upon an avenue, was a family named S——. The man and his wife while carrying on a grocery store also conducted a low groggery for many years without license, and had thereby amassed large means and were the owners of nearly all the property in their vicinity. Their tenants were of the lowest and most degraded type of society and furnished just the patronage required for their "speak-easy" business.

For years the police had been making war upon this family and their unlicensed bar, but without successfully closing it. During this warfare, Mrs. S. killed one policeman and wounded another. Mr. S. was frequently arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to short terms of imprisonment; but Mrs. S. would carry on the business during his absence.

One Sunday morning about eight months ago, while the Mission workers were holding a Gospel service at Ellen's Rescue Home, a stout, well-dressed woman entered and took a seat. When the request was made for any who desired prayer to raise their hand, this woman responded and stated to a worker that she was tired of the life she had been living and earnestly cried for peace and pardon. God came and forgave her sins and started her on a new life. It was the aforesaid Mrs. S., the law-breaker of many years, the terror of the police, the one individual whom the municipal authorities appeared powerless to control. Grace accomplished in a moment what the police force had failed to do in years of effort, and from the day of her conversion not a drop of liquor or beer could have been had from her for love or money! She began to attend the Mission meetings, and to testify how Jesus had saved her. Finally she let the Mission directors have a house belonging to her to use as a branch mission and now Gospel work is being vigorously carried on night after night in the very room where she killed the policeman. Not alone has the character of this woman been changed and her liquor saloon closed, but the entire community is undergoing a transformation that only grace can produce. Men and women who for years had been violating divine and human law respecting the home and family have been married and converted. Persistent evil-doers who would not yield to the Saviour's invitation have moved away, and a better class of people are coming in.

Truly this has been a wonderful work during the past year, and the whole city has been mightily moved by it. The night of the dedication of the branch mission near the home of the S's, a thousand persons attended, attracted by the remarkable history of this woman who, while an outcast for twenty years, or more, had been used by the Spirit of God in moving a large community and in bringing to a close a work of iniquity that the authorities had utterly failed to stop.

Surely every child of God should be encouraged to go forward in earnest and aggressive work. God will use us if we will let him. Ellen gave herself to this work and only eternity will reveal all that God has accomplished through her. Ellen is now on a visit to the home of her childhood in Ireland. She felt that she must go back and tell her aged father about Jesus and his power to save. During her absence the work goes on and many are being saved.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are [illegible] in connection may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of [illegible] of God's people.

MRS. LORRIMER'S THURSDAYS.

THE Lorrimers lived in town only half the year. The other half, the beautiful half which brought summer roses, berries, and fruits, autumn grapes and golden-rod, they spent at their place in the country, a lovely, great house, gleaming like a palace in the midst of its three hundred cultivated acres. The house stood on an eminence, and commanded a fine view of a spacious domain, rolling hills, green fields, and dimpling vales.

A little below the house, across an old-fashioned grandmother's garden, where southernwood and larkspurs, lady-slippers and prince's feathers bloomed thick and sweet, surrounded by a border of closely-clipped boxwood, there was a pleasant, roomy cottage, always the summer through kept in perfect order. White curtains tied back with yellow satin ribbons draped the windows, a gay rag carpet and some bright tufted home-made rugs covered the floors. There were books on shelves low enough for children's hands to reach them; tables stood about; rocking-chairs were plenty, and several very beautiful pictures on the walls added the last touch of refinement and elegance to the inviting parlors. In the kitchen there were cups, saucers, plates, cooking utensils, and a most convenient range, and the two bed-rooms were lacking in no comfort that a guest might covet.

Once a week, from June until November, the Lorrimers entertained guests at this "Cozy Nook." "Peace be to this house," was inscribed in carved letters above its door, and the friends who came there found it truly an abode of peace. Thursday was set apart for them. On Thursday morning carriages met them at the station, three miles away, and brought them over roads which skirted Paradise to the flowery garden and the bright parlor with the rocking chairs, and the sunshine streaming in at the windows. The hostess met and greeted them at the door, her daughters kissed and made much of their babies, and showed the mothers where to put them to sleep, and where to find brimming pitchers of milk, and great home-baked loaves of bread, and then left them to a day of perfect freedom and unrestrained enjoyment.

In the most crowded portion of Avenue A, one day in mid-summer, a young mother sat on a door-step nursing her teething baby. This is not an uncommon sight in Avenue A. Tenement neighborhoods must turn themselves inside out in summer. The only chance for the babies is on the pavement, where God's air sweeps, and God's sky looks down, though sometimes it is as if people had only a breath of one, and a glimpse of the other. Babies and mothers fringe every door-way in that thronging locality. But Mrs. MacMonigle was not so sturdy looking as some of the young matrons near her. She had not yet gained strength, though her baby was eight months old, and she looked pale, feeble, and dragged out, as nursing mothers sometimes do. This morning she was completely discouraged; down, she felt sure that she was never going to be herself again, and as for baby, it seemed to her that he was going to die. His thin, old-mannish little face, pointed at the chin, its big blue eyes gazing pitifully above the pallid, wrinkled little cheeks, his flabby flesh, and his fret-fret of a weak cry, confirmed his mother's fear. Tom MacMonigle, husband of one and father of the other, had gone to his work that day with a very heavy heart. He worked hard, did not drink, and brought home all his wages every Saturday night, pouring bills and coins loyally into Mary's lap, and, oh! how he loved the small ailing Tom, the baby, who was pining visibly before his eyes. But he had no way of sending mother and child to the country, and it was the country they were in need. The postman came along, darting in out of shops and door-ways, but M. MacMonigle did not look up. The p[illegible] man seldom brought her a letter, not oft[illegible]er than two or three times a year, when [illegible] old mother at home got somebody to w[illegible] for her to the daughter over the sea.

"Mrs. Thomas MacMonigle," said [illegible] postman. Mary looked up.

"I am Mrs. MacMonigle," she said.

"Then this is for you." And he han[illegible] her a letter, a square letter, in a cre[illegible] tinted envelope, daintily fragrant, and s[illegible]ed with violet colored wax. Such a l[illegible] might have been sent to Queen Victo[illegible]. Mary surveyed it with eyes that g[illegible] bright and a flushing cheek. She hus[illegible] the baby tenderly, and opened her le[illegible]. This is what it had to say:

"EDEN-SIDE, July 20, 9

DEAR MRS. MACMONIGLE:—You [illegible] not know me, but I know you. Your fri[illegible]. Miss Morefield, has told me all about [illegible] and your baby. I want you to come [illegible] pay me a visit, and will expect you [illegible] Thursday morning at ten o'clock. Tic[illegible] are enclosed for the trip and return, an[illegible] wish you to come prepared to stay [illegible] weeks at Cozy Nook. No doubt [illegible] Morefield has told you what a pretty p[illegible] it is. I am sure the air will help you [illegible] the boy. Mr. MacMonigle will please [illegible] one of the tickets, as I expect him to [illegible] you on his Saturday half-holiday an[illegible] stay over Sunday. If he likes it well eno[illegible] to come back again on the next Sunda[illegible] have tickets here, and will give him on[illegible] my guests belong to me from the mor[illegible] they leave home for my house.

"I have heard what a dear baby [illegible] have, and I want you very much to ac[illegible] this invitation, which I give to you 'In is Name.' Cordially yours,

KATHARINE MORRIS LORRIMER

Miss Morefield happened to come bus[illegible] in a half hour later. She found the l[illegible] asleep, and Mary tidying up her two ro[illegible], and getting ready to wash her other fr[illegible], and to put the baby's little wardrobe i[illegible]der. The invitation had given her the g[illegible]est pleasure. Mary MacMonigle had [illegible] seen the country since her marriage. [illegible]d the fame of "Cozy Nook" had reache[illegible]er long ago.

"Of course," said Miss Morefield, "[illegible] husband will go both Saturdays. A d[illegible] friends are asked for Thursday of [illegible] week, just for the day, but nobody to [illegible]y over the fortnight except two young la[illegible]s, who have their vacation from a fac[illegible]ry down-town, nice girls who belong t[illegible]ur club, and whom I am very fond of. [illegible]ir brother is to go down, or up I ought to [illegible]y, for the Sundays, so your husband will [illegible]ve a man to talk with. Now, here are [illegible]per and pen in my satchel. Just write to [illegible]s. Lorrimer and tell her you will all be [illegible]e, and I will post your answer."

Of the delights of that fortnight I [illegible]ve not room to speak. Mrs. Lorrimer foun[illegible]he MacMonigles a very pleasant and con[illegible]erate family, and she was glad to add [illegible]m to her list of friends. They were h[illegible]ed and heartened by contact with the L[illegible]rmers, and life looked less hard, and [illegible]les grew sweeter. Mrs. MacMonigle kept [illegible]se better when she came home.

Good meat, fresh vegetables, exc[illegible] coffee and tea, and milk in abundance [illegible]re provided for Cozy Nook by the L[illegible]s, but she allowed her guests to do their [illegible]wn cooking and housekeeping, much to [illegible]eir satisfaction.

When richer and poorer children [illegible]he same Divine Father oftener exchange [illegible]ch courtesies, and enter into relations so l[illegible]ng and kind, we shall hear less about c[illegible]ain forms of trouble, which now and the[illegible]ert the body politic. For we are all me[illegible]ers one of another, and we ought to bea[illegible]one another's burdens, and so fulfil the la[illegible]of Christ. MARGARET E. SANGST[illegible]

JAPAN'S RELIGIOUS FUTURE.

WRITING from Japan, Rev. Ed. S. Nicholas reviews the results of the late war and sketches the religious outlook of that country. He says:

"I believe the future of Christianity in Japan is assured. But, judging the temper of the island kingdom from what she has done in the past, it would seem the church will be largely built up from elements already on her soil. She has exhibited a capacity truly wonderful for assimilating the best Occidental thought and civilization. It can hardly be possible that ultimately she will discard Christianity. Thirty years ago her territory was thought to be the most hopeless of mission fields; but since the great policy of exclusion has broken down her mission history has been exceptional. The class of converts is remarkable. Dr. George Knox says: 'The first converts were from the higher middle classes, —young men, patriots, scholars, to lead their countrymen. The Christians have maintained a high position in the Imperial Diet,—even in the Imperial ministry; in the university, as judges, editors, authors, orators—in all the higher walks of life. Already the Japanese take the lead in the schools, in the churches, in ecclesiastical bodies as pastors and evangelists. Already the church is well nigh wholly Japanese, and it resents the direction and guidance of the foreigner. Nevertheless, there is friction in the great educational and evangelistic centres. Some of our best Japanese friends and kindest critics tell us that a readjustment of mission forces is necessary. They do not want us to go. They gratefully recognize the work we have done in former years, but feel they are 'no longer children.' Leadership in educational, evangelistic, and translation work has been gained by them. Moreover, the nation now stands as the intellectual and political equal of any of the nations of the West.

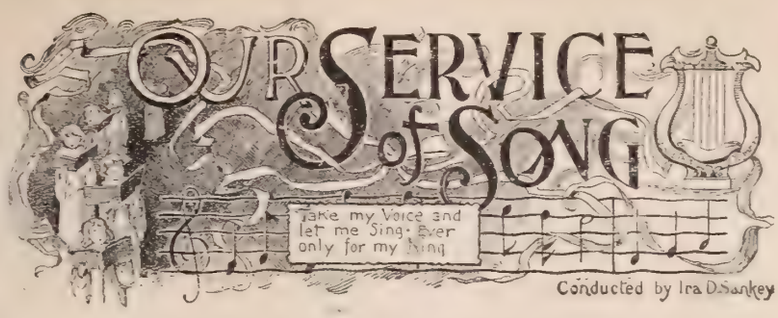
"So it seems natural that there should be some readjustment of mission forces. What readjustment can be made that will admit this changed relation and at the same time, will be just to the missionaries who have spent their best strength in the for Japan? This is the problem of mission forces in Japan. The need of Christian missions is not ended. Assistance should be given for some time to come; but the character of the work must hereafter be of a high order. It will demand the highest thought of the ablest, strongest men. The tendency to fall into agnosticism will be greatly augmented by this war. Victory will add self-confidence and self-consciousness of superiority. This tendency must be met by the strongest, deepest philosophy of Christ. Shintoism and Buddhism, native religions, must be met by their own weapons. The appeal for Christ must be made to the rising intellect and awakened sensibilities of the new Japan."

AN AFRICAN COLLEGE.

An interesting work has been carried on for twenty-one years at Wellington, South Africa. Its object is to give thorough missionary training to ladies intending to devote themselves to missionary work in the interior. It originated in the desire of a number of Christian people in South Africa to erect some kind of memorial to their ancestors who were French Huguenots. More than two hundred years ago, alarmed by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, knowing that their lives were not safe, families fled from France to Holland, and thence, at the suggestion of the Dutch East India Company, migrated to South Africa, where they founded a colony to worship God according to their conscience. They prospered, and their descendants, though now generally speaking English or Dutch, rather than French, still adhere to the Protestant faith and have the same kind of reverence for the Huguenot founders of the colony that we have for the Pilgrim Fathers.

The project of raising some memorial to these worthies was long discussed and after a time advice as to the form it should take was asked of the famous preacher and author, Rev. Andrew Murray, of Wellington. He happened to have been reading the marvellous life of Mary Lyon and was deeply interested in the Holyoke work. He suggested that such an institution as the Massachusetts Holyoke would be the best memorial that could be erected. His advice was accepted; the building was erected and called Huguenot Seminary. To ensure an identity in principle and method application for directors was sent to Holyoke. There were two volunteers in the persons of Miss Abbie P. Ferguson and Miss Anna E. Bliss. The Seminary was dedicated and has been entirely successful. As the work grew, three branches were established in South Africa, and a fourth is in contemplation. The mother Seminary is to become a regular college with new buildings. During the twenty-one years of its existence it has sent out five hundred teachers and forty missionaries and large classes are now training there. A most significant and suggestive fact is that these ladies, being born in Africa, are acclimatized and there are fewer deaths at the mission stations where they reside, than at any other white people's stations. It has become well known that at the dangerous points where the deadly fever plays havoc with the missionaries' lives, the white ladies from Huguenot Seminary seldom fall victims.

We are glad to learn that the college is finding no difficulty in raising the $100,000 which it proposes to spend in new buildings and endowments. The Government has given one-fourth the amount, Sir Cecil Rhodes, the Governor, has given $2500, and several other large gifts have been received from private friends. Mr. Charles Hopkins, of 120 Broadway, New York, who is the financial representative of the college in this country, reports a very strong sympathy manifested by the American public. One lady has undertaken to give $400 a year to the funds and a gentleman in Massachusetts has promised $5000. The continued prosperity of the institution seems assured and this is all the more gratifying because it has in it the promise of checking the appalling loss of life which is so distressing a feature of missionary work in Africa.



GLORY BREAKS BEYOND.

"JOY COMETH IN THE MORNING."—Psa. 30:5.

M. FRASER. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

1. We wait for light, for bright - ness, We shall not wait in vain;
2. We wait the glo - rious dawn - ing, The new, the bright - er day;
3. We wait His word of prom - ise, A word that can - not fail;

For glo - ry breaks be - yond the gloom, Clear, shin - ing af - ter rain.
We wait un - til the shad - ows have For ev - er fled a - way.
And hope is like an an - chor cast, All firm with - in the vail.

CHORUS.

Glo - - ry, glo - - ry breaks be - yond the gloom, Thro'
Glo - ry, glo - ry, glo - ry, glo - ry

Christ, our Sav - iour, we shall tri - umph o - ver death and the tomb.

Copyright, 1895 by James McGranahan.

From "GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2," by permission of the publishers.

THE MISSING ONES.

Reasons for Expecting that Christ's Waiting People will be Removed Before His Coming in Judgment.

BY PROF. JOHN BAYFORD, F.S.A.

BEFORE the Lord proceeds to execute judgment, at the second coming of Christ, he will gather his waiting people unto himself. The types of Noah and of Lot, which are specially referred to by the Lord Jesus as illustrative of the second coming, convey the most explicit intimation of this truth. "The Lord commanded Noah to come into the ark, and on the self-same day he entered, and Shem, and Ham, and Japhet," etc. "And the Lord shut him in"—and then the flood came.

And so also before the destruction of the cities of the plain, the angel said unto Lot, "Arise, take thy wife and thy two daughters which are here, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city. And as he lingered, they laid hold upon their hands, and brought them forth." Lot prayed that he might be allowed to remain in safety at Zoar, which was granted to him; and the angel added, "Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do anything till thou be come thither."

In the account given in Ezekiel 9, of the angels with their slaughter weapons who were commissioned to destroy, the man clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side, was commanded first to mark the chosen ones, that they might be spared from the vengeance. When the Lord smote all the first-born of Egypt, he passed over the door, which had the blood of the lamb upon the lintel and the side-posts, and would not suffer the destroyer to smite them: and it was specially commanded them on that night that none of them should go out at the door of his house until the morning.

Hence it might be deduced that in a manner as pointed out by these types will the Church be brought into safety before the vengeance is poured out upon the ungodly. But the Church is not left to collect this important and consolatory truth from types. Isaiah 21, represents the Lord speaking thus to his people in that day: "Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast: for behold, the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity."

Psalm 57: 1. speaks to the same effect in clear reference to the Church: and the Lord Jesus, when he was about to go away, told his disciples that "he would come again, and receive them to himself, and that then their hearts should rejoice." Paul says, "He shall appear a second time without sin unto salvation," and in that day he shall give "a crown of righteousness to all them that love his appearing."

The apostle Paul, speaking of the second advent in 1. Thess. 4, thus explains the events of that day: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This Scripture is explained further by 1.Cor. 15: 51. "We shall not all sleep,"—not every individual member of the Church of Christ shall sleep the sleep of death, "but we shall all be changed," each one without exception. For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (who are alive and remain) shall be changed. And then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory;" for then (as in Rev. 21: 4), "there shall be no more death."

(To be continued.)

A CLEAN HEART.

An Address Delivered to the Boys and Girls at "The Christian Herald" Children's Home, at Nyack, N. Y., by Dr. Louis Klopsch, Sunday, July 21st.

I NEED not tell you that the Bible, this blessed Book of God, is true when it says, "The heart of man is deceitful above all things." We all know from sad experience, however young we may be, that there is something in our hearts, before God changes them, that inclines us to wickedness. We are disobedient, unkind, stubborn, selfish and untruthful, even when we do not want to be, and then something within us that we call conscience, tells us how wrong it is and causes us to feel sorry and be ashamed, and to wish we had not acted so. We resolve, and right earnestly and honestly, too, that we will never, never do it again, and yet before we know it, we are as bad as ever and perhaps even worse. Then we get somewhat discouraged, and begin to wonder whether there is any use in trying to be good, and if after all we can help being bad. And indeed, it is very discouraging to attempt a thing again and again with good and brave intentions and yet not succeed, but we must not give up as long as we have a fighting chance. Perhaps, if we try some other plan, we may do better.

Some time ago, one of the large ocean steamers ran ashore near Sandy Hook. It got stuck in the sand. The owners telegraphed to New York for a lot of very powerful tugs to pull her off and get her afloat. Well, they puffed and pulled and pulled and puffed until the heavy hawsers began to snap, but she would not budge, and it looked very much as though the big ship would have to stick there until the heavy waves dashing against her finally would break her to pieces. The crew and the owners were very much discouraged, when an old sea captain, who had a good deal of experience, told them not to lose heart, for when the tide rose in the morning it would lift the big ship right out of her trouble and float her with ease. And sure enough the tide did rise and it did raise the ship, and away she sailed triumphantly with flying colors.

"THE TUGS PUFFED AND PULLED."

Your troubles, boys and girls, are nothing new. You are just as earnest and just as anxious as the owners of the ship were, and again, like them you are wasting a great deal of energy to do that which God only can do for you, and which he is very willing to do, if you will only ask him. "Not by might and not by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Sin and its Slaves.

But before I tell you how he can and will do it, let me first tell you that it is sin in your heart which makes you wicked and causes you to be bad. Sin is disobedience to God. We disobey God once or twice, and because he is kind and long-suffering and does not punish us right then and there, we permit sin to grow in our hearts until it gets so strong that it masters us, and we become its slaves. Here are a few stories that will illustrate how terrible sin is and how eager we should be to get rid of it before it ruins us.

Passing along the streets of Saratoga last summer, I noticed on a lawn a liberal sprinkling of very pretty blue flowers. I called the attention of a gentlemen with [illegible] and he, looking at it said, "That lawn will [illegible]." I was surprised, and asked him why he thought so. "Well," said he, "those blue flowers are weeds. A friend of mine who has a very beautiful, smooth, velvety lawn, thinking that a little circle of them would lend variety to it, and thus make it more pleasant to the eye, planted some in the middle of it. That was three years ago. To-day that lawn is so full of these weeds that you cannot see the grass through them. They grow faster than he can weed them out, and now he will have to order the lawn torn up and carted off and put new sod in its place, or he will never have any grass."

A Wicked Son's Experience.

Mr. Moody tells a story just like this, except that instead of happening to a lawn it happened to a boy with bright hopes and noble ambition, blasting all and ruining his life here and his hopes of a blissful hereafter, and all because he permitted the death-

"THAT LAWN WILL NEVER BE ANY GOOD."

dealing, all-destroying weed, sin, to grow up on the lawn of his heart. He was very young. He was an only child. His father and mother thought everything of him and did all they could for him. But he fell into bad ways. He took up with evil characters, and finally got to running with thieves. He didn't let his parents know about it. By and by the gang he was with broke into a house, and he with them. He was caught in the act, taken to court, tried, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary for ten years. He worked on and on in the convict's cell, till at last his term was out, and at once he started for home. And when he came back to the town he walked down the street where his father and mother used to live. He went to the house and rapped. A stranger came to the door and stared him in the face. "No, there's no such person lives here, and where your parents are I don't know," was the only welcome he received. Then he turned through the gate and went down the street, asking even the children that he met about his folks, where they were living, and if they were well. But everybody looked blank. Ten years had rolled by, and though that seemed perhaps a short time, how many changes had taken place! There, where he was born and brought up, he was now a stranger. At last he found a couple of townsmen who remembered his father and mother, but they told him the old house had been deserted long years ago, that he had been gone but a few months before his father was taken ill, and very soon after died broken-hearted, and that his mother had gone out of her mind. He went to the mad-house where his mother was, and went up to her and said, "Mother, mother, don't you know me? I am your son." But she raved and slapped him on the face and shrieked, "You are not my son," and then raved again and tore her hair. He left the asylum more dead than alive, so completely broken-hearted that he died in a few months. Yes, the fruit was long growing, but at the last it ripened to the harvest with the speed of a whirlwind.

"Respectable" Sinners.

Of course, we are not all so openly bad as this boy was. We sometimes manage to keep very respectable, and tell stories which we think are not found out, and do things which we know to be wrong, but as nobody sees us doing them, we do not feel quite so badly, and imagine that we are not nearly so wicked as others. But, Oh, what a dreadful mistake! Even though father and mother, brother and sister or friend do not see what little hypocrites we are, there is One from whom we cannot [illegible] the thoughts of our hearts. "Thou, God, seest me," says the Bible, and it is just as true now as the day it was first written.

There was once a man who kept a shop in a country town, and who missed something or other nearly every day, but found it impossible to catch the thief. He found the shutters all fastened and the doors locked in the morning, and the store generally looked just as he had left it at night, but this thing or that thing, which the storekeeper was sure had been there on the previous evening, happened to be missing. After many ineffectual attempts to trace the thief, the owner of the store one evening, after he had put up the shutters as usual, took some flour and carefully whitened the whole floor with it. Then he turned out the gas, and after locking the front door, he went home. At night the burglar appeared. He opened the front door with a duplicate key, and went into the store. He shut the door behind him. He did not light the gas, because he knew just where everything stood in the store, and after selecting that which he wished to take, he pushed back the latch of the rear door, slipped out, snapping the lock after him, and was gone. In the morning when the store-keeper arrived, as soon as he opened the front door he saw the imprint of a man's boot on the snowy whiteness of the floor. He noticed that the man had left by the rear door. He followed up the footprints, climbing the fence which the burglar had climbed, and pursuing him, by the trail which the flour that had adhered to the burglar's boots left on the ground, into his house, and up into the very room, and confronted the thief, who happened to be a young man never before even suspected of dishonesty, with the evidence of his guilt, forcing him to confession, and bringing him to trial and prison. Thus, though not immediately discovered, sooner or later our misdoings will see the light of the sun, and Oh, how mean we will feel when all is known, and we have to confess the wrong we did to our parents or friends whom we dearly love, and whose good opinion we are now so anxious to retain, that we do all we can to hide and cover up our wickedness.

Sin Cannot Be Hid.

Again the good Book says, "Be sure your sins will find you out," and try as we may to conceal our sins, our conscience will some time or other betray us and so give another proof that the Bible is true.

A minister was standing one morning in the grave-yard while the grave-digger was preparing for the reception of a body that was to be buried there that afternoon. As he dug down and down and threw the ground up at the side, his shovel brought up with the clods of earth a skull, and the clergyman, taking the ghastly skeleton into his hand, noticed that a nail had been driven into it, and that now the nail was rusty. Saying nothing to the grave-digger of his discovery, he asked him to whom that skull had once belonged. The grave-digger replied that the man who once owned that skull was a Mr. Wilson who had died very suddenly about ten years ago. It was thought at the time that he had died in an epileptic fit, and his wife afterwards caused considerable gossip by marrying in less than two months after his death. The clergyman withdrew the nail from the skull and, putting it in his vest pocket, he asked the grave-digger where the re-married widow now lived. Having learned that her name was now Mrs. Mortimer and that she and her husband lived up the street a little distance, he bade the man good morning and started off in the direction of the house. Reaching this, he saw Mrs. Mortimer, and in conversation asked her whether it had ever been settled of what disease her former husband had died, and finally producing the nail from his vest pocket he said to her, looking her squarely in the eye, "Ma[illegible], do you recognize this nail?" Her face [illegible]dened, her limbs trembled, and almost ing into the clergyman's arms, she the there confessed her crime. She was bro to trial, convicted, sentenced, and fi hung. Though ten years had elapsed ce the commission of the crime, the off ler was at last brought to justice. S sooner or later "your sin will find you

"HE SAW THE IMPRINT OF A MAN'S BOOT."

"YOU ARE NOT MY SON."

Where Help May Be Found.

Sin is an awful thing, a terrible t and we cannot get rid of it too soon. Oh, how can we do it? We have tr often, and thought we had succe only to find at last that it was still and just as active as ever. Well, l boys and girls, and I will tell you h can be done. Just as the man whose was spoiled had to tear it up an and put in new sod, so we must g of our wicked and sinful heart, and new and clean one if we wish to be girls and boys and grow up to be men and women, serving God here so faithfully and so well, that when w through with this life we may live wit forever in that beautiful home he has to prepare for those who are washe forgiven.

There is only one who can give u new heart, and that is our Father in en. If we go to him in earnest, he prayer, and tell him that we are really sorry for all our sins, that we long forgiven, and that if he will give u new heart we will evermore live fo and serve him the rest of our lives shall surely hear within us a quiet vo though a whisper from heaven, sayin new heart will I give you and a new will I put within you."

As the strong tugs with their hawsers and all their puffing and p could not liberate the great ocean st that had run aground, but had to le to the tide to come in and raise and fl so all our efforts, however earnest o repeated, must be in vain, unless we ge to help us and to give us what we more than anything else, this clean and this new spirit. And then when w in our hearts that God has answere prayer, we must begin to live for hi avoid everything that is wrong. We keep away from evil and temptation would from the open jaws of an un lion, and live this new life in obed love, unselfishness and truthfulness every day we must ask the help o Holy Spirit so to live that when at las calls us home we may go to that bea city above and be forever with him.

CHINA IN SURLY MOOD.

A missionary who formerly labor China gives this explanation of the tility now shown toward the mission.

A Shanghai telegram says that th tacks on Europeans in China are th come of a conspiracy on the part of a ber of mandarins who have been dis ed by their conduct during the w divert the odium of their defeat by the anese from their own shoulders to th the foreigners. Telegrams from thes tricts are apparently being delayed t work of destruction aimed at is comp But as the British Minister at Pe holding the Chinese officials respo for some of the outrages, and a gunboat has gone up the Yang-tse there will probably be some care exe as to how far the outrages are ca Poor China, it is so large, so ill conn so ill governed, that it hardly knows has happened to it, much less what ing done with it. Its awakening is a both sorrowful and hopeful.

Last African Housewives.

Some of the Domestic Tasks of the Dark-skinned Mothers and Daughters.

SINCE the introduction of white settlers in the great section of Southeast Africa, known as Zambesia, much interesting information has been obtained about a large part of the "Dark Continent" [illegible] to almost unknown. It was discovered too, with some surprise, that there were many tribes which far from being absolutely savage, had a sort of patriarchal government and a rude civilization of their own. They dwelt in neat villages of clay and thatched huts, kept domestic animals, cooked their food in rude earthen pots, and understood many of the points of a simple code, suited to their conditions and surroundings. During her travels among the native tribes of East Africa, Mrs. French Sheldon made many interesting discoveries, showing the natives to be proficient in various supplementary industries, and even working in iron and silver, chain-making, pottery, and the weaving of a coarse but durable cloth from vegetable fibres. The dress of both sexes, however, was simple, being confined chiefly to necklaces and a loose skirt covering the loins.

The illustration on this page, forwarded by Rev. Mr. Richards (the pioneer American missionary in the Zambesia country), shows two women of the Limpopo district [illegible] engaged in grinding corn for domestic use. The process is simple, but laborious, the grain being crushed between two stones, and the gourds filled with the bruised corn, ready for cooking in the form of flat cakes. A peculiarity of the natives of that section is a singular style of dressing the hair, which, by the use of gums, is made to stand erect, as stiff as wire. One may imagine the discomfort of such a coiffure, to say nothing of other inconveniences. Clean-skinned and intelligent-looking, these natives are good specimens of the more industrious tribes, who, rather than indulge in perpetual warfare, like the Masai or Somali, prefer to live at peace with their neighbors and to follow agricultural pursuits in their own villages, where cultivated patches of grains, bananas, and grain, added to the wild products of the woods, afford abundant subsistence. Most of the houses are circular, without either chimney or window, and look more like gigantic hay-ricks or bee-hives than dwellings for human beings; yet they are comparatively clean, and doubtless comfortable. A village usually consists of a score or more of the huts, with "kraal," or enclosure for cattle, in the centre, and possibly a "meeting-place," or clerical structure of thatch, raised upon poles and open at the sides, in which the village patriarchs can gather and discuss matters relating to tribal government, or sit in judgment upon offenders.

Music, singing, dancing, eating and work constitute the routine of an African native village. As is generally the case in primitive communities, the larger share of the work falls upon the woman. She cultivates the fields, cooks the food, and even builds the houses, while her lord and master hunts, fishes, or "palavers" with other men of their visits neighboring villages.

Worship is spasmodic and is conducted under the direction of the priest or "witch-doctor," who is also physician and soothsayer in general to the little community. Gradually the ancient heathen beliefs are giving way before the blessed Gospel of Jesus, and the light is now shining in many an African village that till now had lain in darkness. With the opening of the Zambesia country and Matebeleland to commerce, a clear path has been made for the missionary, and many stations are already planted in those sections of Africa while others are projected. More workers are needed, however, for the harvest is plenteous, but as yet the laborers are few in proportion to the work to be done before the tribes of East Africa are brought into the Gospel fold.

Nazareth Housewives.

Bishop Galloway, who has been traveling in the East, thus writes his impressions of the women of Nazareth:

The inhabitants are largely Christians, with not a Jew in the place, and are almost fair enough to be mistaken for Europeans. The women, who appear everywhere unveiled, are much handsomer than those seen elsewhere in Palestine. In the late afternoon of each day, scores and hundreds of them may be seen at the Virgin's Fountain in the northern end of the village, filling their large water-jars, and merrily chatting over the latest social event. Many of them are gaudily dressed, and nearly all evidenced great rivalry of skill in balancing and carrying these immense and well-filled water-jars. Among women as men, every section, if not every community, has its special rivalry. Here it seems to be feminine expertness and grace in carrying water-jars. And rather remarkable are some of their feats. We saw them place a pad of wet cloth on the head, lift upon it the long, heavy jar containing three or four gallons of water, fix it at an angle of fifteen degrees, and walk off with a merry twinkle in the eyes, as if to say, "Fair daughter of Nazareth, beat this if you can." And if young and handsome, she hopes to catch the admiring gaze of some "lord of the hills."

A Lesson in Politeness.

There are few qualities more attractive in children than politeness. It is told of a family who lived in a mountainous district, that the members were so polite that their mountaineer neighbors called them "the civil family." Their children were taught decorum and behavior at a Sunday School for adults and children which was founded and supported by a lady in the neighborhood.

By this lady and her daughters they were taught out of the Word of God, and in this way they learned manners. The father became very ill and wished to see the lady, so he sent one of his boys to bring her. The lad walked before to show the way through the muddy lanes. At one place where the water had come over the path, the boy dropped his stout shoes in it. "Little boy," called out the lady, "You have dropped your shoes in the water." "They are for you, ma'am, to step on," was the reply. Here was a little rural Sir Walter Raleigh, who showed an example of beautiful, instinctive politeness.

Mothers as Moral Guides.

Besides the physical training of children, writes Mrs. M. E. Goodman, the mother has also the care of their moral training. Almost before she dreams of it, the little eating and breathing machine which she has fondled much like an animated doll, begins to manifest a will of its own, and the mother is puzzled to know when to begin to train her baby to obey the right.

She who permits her little one to slap her angrily because he is not pleased, may depend upon it if she does not show him the error then and win obedience, she will not be able to do so in years to come. As the child grows a little older, lay down as the first principle of your discipline, that you must be obeyed, and it will save you and the child much pain later on, and result in lifelong good for the little one. If we had the habit of obedience thoroughly secured at home we should have less trouble with the discipline of schools, and less violation of the laws of God and man. To so educate the conscience of the child that he knows what is right and loves to do it, is the one great attainment or moral training. In this way only can he be taught to speak the truth, not to covet or steal, to be tender and merciful and loving. "Do what is right" should be the ultimate appeal.

AFRICAN HOUSEWIVES GRINDING AT THE MILL.

A Famous Woman on the Bible.

Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, one of the best known of American authors and a devout Christian, recently wrote this declaration of her faith: "I believe in God my Father and Preserver. I believe in Jesus Christ my Redeemer. I believe in the Holy Ghost my Enlightener and Consoler. I believe in the forgiveness of sins, in the resurrection of the body and in the life everlasting. I believe in the Holy Bible, from its first letter to its last, as the Word of God to me.

"At my side lies a Bible over 300 years old, filled with annotations and confirmations of my ancestors, who not only read it, but thought it worth their while to fight for the right to do so. I would do the same to-day if an occasion demanded it. I want no 'revised' Bible. I want no 'Woman's' Bible. The Bible of the martyrs and confessors of our faith is sufficient. It has never deceived and never failed me. It has been sufficient for life; I doubt not it will be sufficient for the hour and article of death."

BABY'S FEET.

BABY sits with wondering eyes,
As her little feet she spies.
Pretty feet, how fair are they!
Will they ever go astray?

Nimble feet, they soon will be,
Dancing, tripping merrily.
Childhood runneth everywhere,
Knowing neither grief nor care.

Womanhood she soon will reach;
Life its lessons hard will teach.
And her feet will weary be,
In this vale of mystery.

Motherhood will dawn on her:
She, in turn a worshipper,
With a mother's heart will say,
Will they ever go astray?

Will the little feet I see—
Cherub feet they are to me—
Tread the ways of sin and care?
Thorny paths are everywhere.

Baby dear, you are to me
Just a perfect mystery!
Happiest days I ever knew
Are the days I spend with you.

E. L. BANGS in Home and Country.

ROYAL FAVORITE DISHES.

SOMEBODY has recently been investigating, no doubt with much trouble, the epicurean tastes of Old-World royalty, past and present. We are told that Queen Victoria drinks white sherry from a very beautiful gold cup, with her soup; that Prince Albert loved boiled beef, and pickled cucumbers, and "barons of beef," and that the cook's name is called out as each dish is brought on the royal table at Windsor (an ancient custom, established for the purpose of bestowing praise or blame, as occasion might require.) As a contrast to Victoria, Queen Margaret of Italy is specially fond of olives and cakes fried in oil. It frequently happens that at her royal table, none but Italian dishes are served, spaghetti, garlic, onions, and oil forming the chief components of the meal. Both King and Queen are passionately fond of "fritte"—a peculiar compound, which none but Italians understand, and which includes chicken-livers, calves-brains, and cocks-combs. Russian and Austrian royalty resemble each other in their love of coffee. The Austrian Emperor delights in spætzle (which resembles macaroni), while the Empress is fond of sweets of all kinds. Their table is served with hot and cold meats, fruits, and the juices of raw beefsteaks. The Grand Duchess of Baden is a famous maker of lentil soup and loves sweetmeats. King Oscar of Sweden likes to have the national dish—raw salmon, preserved in earth—on his table at almost every meal, and a soup composed of boiled barley and whipped cream. Once a week the remainder of the meat served at the Swedish royal table is made into hash which is fried in oil and served on silver platters, the borders garnished with fried eggs.

With all their dainties, their expensive dishes, and costly dinner ware, it is doubtful whether any of these royalties has one whit more, if indeed as much, enjoyment of meals as the industrious American artisan or farmer, whose body has not been enfeebled by social dissipation or indulgence, and whose table contains a sufficiency of simple, yet wholesome food. Wars, contentions, and policies trouble him not, and not in an entire generation may his religion or his home be threatened. He can truthfully say that his home is, to him at least, a dearer place than the palace of a king (Prov. 15: 16, 17), and he knows that if he cannot share the expensive pleasures of the rich, he is compensated by being free from the cares that make life a burden to many in high station.

The Second Summer.

many mothers [illegible]. [illegible] in a child's life [illegible] generally. It [illegible] baby [illegible] well [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] Food. Eagle Brand Condensed Milk [illegible] [illegible] regard it.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

THE VILLAGE "POPE" DENOUNCES THE STUNDISTS.

CHAPTER I.

A Village in the Ukraine.

SLAVO, when you enter it, is like almost every South Russian village, a huddled crowd of squat and dirty huts, either of mud or plastered planks, the whitewash peeling off, the roofs green and decaying. The roads are dull, broad, and unbroken, filled with malodorous refuse, in which the children, the pigs, and the dogs wallow.

There are old men and "babui" sitting at the doors, the men mostly in red shirts, loose trousers, and high boots of coarse construction; the women in brightly colored head-kerchiefs and short petticoats. Everywhere there is a tumble-down appearance, as though nobody had any encouragement to erect again anthing that had happened to fall. No one seems to be either richer or poorer than another. If by any chance a peasant happens to make a little money, it is by hard parsimony, and not by enterprise; he hoards, but never invests. He is inert, lazy, full of dreams, and far too poetical to understand the joys and activities of business. In the early spring he bestows some little attention on his fields, and during harvest he works like a galley-slave; but all the while he is thinking of his holidays and of dancing, and of the grand opportunities of getting drunk which a bounteous harvest will give him.

If you happen to pass a Sunday in Slavo you will see the religion of the people. The villagers saunter up to the church with the lax joints of the reposing toiler and crowd around the doors, and murmur together the small talk of the village, crossing themselves devoutly and repeatedly as the bell above warns them when some particularly impressive portion of the service is being said.

The more devout are inside with the women. Here all is pathetic and full of significance. Women with eyes red from weeping are clustered round the altar of the Virgin, and either holding lighted guttering tapers in their hands or sticking them in the little receptacles before the saint's pale face. They are praying, generally begging for the life of the sickened health of some one very dear to them, and feeling that Mary knows what is the cost of bitter tears shed over a bier.

By counting the tapers you can tell almost exactly the number of poor souls lying in the village in extremity or in pain. And when the priest in his brocade robes [illegible], and in the deepest of bass voices, they all troop out, and a few beggars round the church door receive great lumps of rye bread, for no true Russian ever turns empty away a "guest of God," as he beautifully calls the poor outcasts who tramp so forlornly from village to village.

Slavo lies some sixty miles from the city of Kief, lower down the mighty river which has played so prominent a role in the history of Russia. A white ribbon of road across the steppe from Kief leads to the village which tops the high bank on the opposite side of the stream, here flowing among poplars and stunted alders and great expanses of reeds. The road ceases at a long low belt of sand opposite the village, covered by the stream in the floods of spring, and a rude ferry takes the traveler across the river where he is landed among sedge and scrub just below the village. The gently sloping bank, of which Slavo crowns the top, is cut down by picturesque little gullies filled with brushwood. In the centre of the long straggling village stands the church, a low cruciform building crudely white-washed, with high sunlit bell-tower, and green star-spangled cupola which glitters afar off under the sun.

You ascend to the village and look down on the Dnieper, wide, calm, and strong, sweeping along in majestic curves and reaches, and away across it to the illimitable steppe and the hazy horizon. In early April it is all green and peaceful, the air is exquisitely clear, there is a strange sense of expanse in the wide plain and the blue sky vaulted over it. But if it be toward the end of summer that one enters Slavo, you look upon a totally changed scene. The air is hot and dry; the parched earth gapes under the sun; the steppe which in April is broidered with flowers, is now bare or clothed only with withered weed, and the whole land has a tawny torrid look. You feel at once the character of the mighty wilderness that stretches from here all the way with scarcely a break right to the Wall of China and the snowy barriers of the Thian Shan.

It would be giving only an imperfect idea of Slavo if we stopped here. On that side of the village remotest from the river there are scattered about some thirty or forty houses whose appearance denotes that the dwellers in them are men and women of an altogether different stamp to the rest of the villagers. They are in perfect repair, with walls freshly white-washed, and roofs freshly thatched. In place of the midden before the door there are brightly-painted railings, and at the houses where one had hitherto seen only a filthy yard and untidy and ruinous outhouses, are neat little vegetable gardens and trim haggards. Instead of the loose red shirt, the unkempt beard, and dirt-grimed faces of the ordinary villagers, the owners of these cottages are dressed in the neat costume of western peasants; they are for the most part clean-shaven, and they are scrupulously tidy and clean.

The villagers in the red shirts look upon these people as little better than heathens, and although they feel that their influence is slowly permeating the village, it remains quite incomprehensible how they can exist without getting drunk occasionally, without smoking, without attending church, without icons, as the holy pictures are called, without attaching any importance to the prazdniki, or numerous festivals of the church.

"Our fathers," the villagers would say, "lived as we are living, dressed as we dress, ploughed as we plough, got drunk, danced, prayed as we do; why should we change all this, and eschew our pleasures, and dress like Germans, and sing hymns, and read books?"

"Ah," the village pope would say, talking things over with some selected members of his flock, "Ah, these Stundists will ruin the country. Why should we think ourselves wiser than our fathers? Where will all this stir lead to? These wretched heretics have sundered themselves from our holy church; they scorn our icons and our crosses which we have adored from childhood, which the Tsar himself adores; they follow the customs of the Germans, who are heretics. I entered Kulmenko's cottage yesterday, and when I would have bowed and crossed myself before the icon, I saw before me a picture of the heretic Luther."

Every one shook his head sorrowfully, and they all went off to Haim Rosenberg's kabak to assuage their grief with vodka.

Beneath these prejudiced words of the village priest we get a glimpse of the truth.

Ten years before this an old laborer who had lived all his life in Slavo, had returned to his home after a year spent in a German colony in the south. He had left his village a beggar, and had wandered far away to the shores of the Euxine, doing odd jobs of work to keep body and soul together. He had been the village reprobate and drunkard; he had clothed himself for years in the same filthy rags; his wife and children had led the life of dogs. Everyone felt relieved when it was discovered that he had left Slavo. No one knew whither he had gone, and everyone was surprised when one summer evening he returned. He had been away among the Germans, he said simply, and they had given him work, and had taught his stiff fingers to write a little, and had given him a Book, a beautiful Book, which he had learned to read, and he had seen from the Book what a great sinner he had been, and how good God was. He could stay away no longer, but had come back to his home, and, God helping him, he would lead a new life, and look forward to a happy remainder of days This old man was Ivan Kulmenko.

Like all true disciples the world over he began at once to tell to others the message that had brought such comfort to his own soul, that had wrought such a change in his life. The village drunkard had become the village model. The peasants flocked to his cottage, now transformed to a neat and cheerful abode, and gazed with admiration at the shining walls and the neat thatch and the springing flowers and vegetables, at the smiling wife and healthy boy, the crude prints of Luther and at his books, and clean clothes, and white shirts. Some shook their heads and predicted that misfortune must surely fall on the head of this old innovator; others, the younger men, were stirred to emulation, and took away many a useful hint.

But it was on Sundays that old Kulmenko had most visitors. It got abroad that as many as liked could come to his cottage on Sunday evenings, and be welcome. His wife made tea and baked famous "pirogi," and when these were dispatched the old man would stand before all the people, and show them how the Germans worshipped God. He had brought home with him some rough Russian translations of German hymns, and in his memory he had stored away fragments of the hymns German colonists sang. Kulmenko used to piece the tunes and words together, and render the result to his hearers. But no one saw anything ludicrous in the scene; they were impressed and awed by words the like of which they had never before listened to; and before long they sang the rudely improvised hymns better than Kulmenko himself. But it was not so much the hymns as the New Testament that impressed them. At one sitting old Ivan would read a whole Gospel, and they would all look sad when he read that Jesus wept, and would break into floods of tears when he recited the awful and pathetic story of the Cross and Passion. A few Testaments that Kulmenko had brought home with him found their way among the people, and were eagerly read. Hardly a year had passed before a little band of disciples were gathered around the old man. They hung on his words; they prayed sang and read their Gospels; they escl the village drink-shop, and ignore ridicule of the Hebrew who kept it, the orthodox villagers who could on in the great change that had been wr some sort of madness which must end in catastrophe.

But the Stundists continued to mee after year, and slowly and surely added to their influence and nur When their position had been firmly lished, not only in Slavo, but in m neighboring village as well, old Kuli died, but he had appointed Mikha son, as his successor. When our opens it was Mikhail who led the ists of Slavo,

Such was the village of the Ukra the early spring of the year 1877.

CHAPTER II.

A Court Lady.

If Slavo and the southern steppe pleasant in the spring sunshine, if was there putting on her vernal gar of green in those early days of Ap huge northern capital still remained s ed in its deep winter covering of sno great rivers and canals which every intersect the city were still frozen. Th straight Nevsky Prospect, the Regen of St. Petersburg, looked its best, roadway was in magnificent condit sleighing, and everyone who knows sian city knows that when the sleig out the city is at its gayest.

It was getting late in the afterno lofty spires of the admiralty, and polas of a hundred churches glo the red rays of the sinking sun; so long granite colonnades of the Ca of Our Lady of Kazan, and tho of windows as well flamed back the of the West. Pedestrians in a thic stream, and wrapped in furs, sa along the northern side of the nobl where the principal shops are, an the Court quay by the Neva in fron huge red Winter Palace. It was a throng. No sign of want or poverty ed itself. The want and the pover hidden away in the thousands of lo rooms in the back streets.

Not far from the Admiralty end famous thoroughfare of the Nevsky a huge, palacelike structure faced with florid designs in stucco. Yo at a glance that a rich man had and that he had employed an artis tastes were vulgar and ostentatiou plaster garlands of tropical fruits a ers around the windows, and the and naked cupids supporting the incongruous among the frosts and f Petersburg. A long line of sleighs wa up before the palace, and every n then sleighs would dash up to the with jingle of silver bells, and disch furred officers or civilians. One c their ribbons and orders, their med gold lace, as with more than femine display they twitched the furs to to let the pedestrians get a glimpse quality. Counts and princes, gene state-councillors, and actual pri cillors, important chinovinki and departments came dashing up, so ladies accompanying them, but alone, for the ladies had arrived ear meek crowd around the gateway in line by policemen who stood a lute as the greater notabilities pa

The occasion of all the bustle wa the Countess Olga Navrotska's r receptions. These were among t famous of the social celebrations in ersburg, and invitations to atten were in far greater request than co to attend Court balls. At the lat was the probability of meeting and women, people who, although enough in their own particular p and who may have rendered in service to the Empire, were neve people without distinction in society fathers and mothers were nobod whose French smacked of the public but at Countess Olga's, while one the distinguished honor of meeting personages — grand dukes, and serenities—one need never feel that vantage would be taken of your pre palm off on you some person of bubl tation who had only his abilities or services to recommend him. Th leading members of the most e Russian aristocracy who were no the Countess's magnificent rooms.

(To be Continued.)

Japan's Ministry of Mercy.

Continued from first page.

inspired the island nation to a course that has won for it the admiration of all Christendom and the esteem even of its antagonistic enemies.

Though the courtesy of the Japanese consul in New York and also of Mr. Kato, a native Christian missionary to Tokio, now visiting the United States, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is enabled to present in the current issue several excellent photographic illustrations, descriptive of the work of the Red Cross in Japan. Its first active service of importance was during the insurrection of 1877, which lasted eight months. It was then known as the "Hakuaisha" (Society of Benevolence), and had already been affiliated to the greater organization. When "The Red Cross Society of Japan" was finally formed, the Emperor and Empress granted it an annual subsidy of 100,000 yen (a yen is 99½ cents), and large personal and gifts for the erection of hospitals. Princess Arisugawa, a royal lady, Princess Komatsu, with several other princesses and a large number of ladies of distinguished family, meanwhile formed a band of nurses. After that point was reached the development was rapid, and at the present time the total membership of Japan is probably not less than 100,000 souls. Almost every prominent person is connected with it. Altogether the society has received in gifts from the people between 200,000 and 300,000 yen, the purpose of increasing its efficiency. Splendid work in Corea and China, and even in Manchuria, was recently detailed in these columns. Writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Miss Clara Barton, President of the American Red Cross, pays this generous tribute to the new Eastern power which has taken so advanced a position in practical illustration of once of the essential principles of Christianity:

"... the most conspicuous Red Cross nations in ... Japan is easily in the world with the ... Red Cross. Its Emperor and Empress ... not only at the head of the national society, directing all its hospital and ... and astonishing the world in its efficiency.

... it yet be claimed that Japan is a Christian country. Many years may yet ... before the Saviour of men comes to be ... and acknowledged throughout the length and breadth of the island empire. ... its ancient gods and false tradition ... overthrown. But Japan is ... into the light, and the consecrated ... the godly men and women who ... the heat of the early missionary ... are now beginning to produce ... encourage all Christendom. The ... truth in Japan reveals wonderful ... and discloses still greater opportunities for the Master's devoted workers ... that progressive people who ... stined to yet to become a shining ... for Christ and a "Light in the ..."

MURDER AVERTED.

... "Missionary Signal," M. S. Newton ... living "Incidents in a Busy Life," ... preaching in the neighborhood of ... Illinois, and says: "Among the ... who professed faith in that place was ... lady whose father was a Roman Catholic. He swore vengeance, and threatened to kill me. We heard that he intended coming to the place of meeting on Sabbath morning. That poor girl sat near a window, peering anxiously through it, and looking for the approach of her angry father. I shall never forget that service. Those who knew the man believed that he would carry out his threat. The service closed, but the man did not appear. But now the sequel. The man had loaded his double-barrelled shot-gun, and started for the place of execution. He had from five to seven miles to come, and, mistaking the location of the schoolhouse, he wandered from the road, and reached the residence of one of the brethren, to whom he revealed his purpose. This brother engaged the man in conversation, and diverted his attention until he knew the services were over. Then the angry man started for home, swearing that he would yet carry out his threat into execution—but he never did so. I have always seen the hand of my dear heavenly Father in this remarkable deliverance; and the great truth of the Father's tenderness, love, and protection toward his own, has again been verified and emphasized."

CROWS CONVICT A DRUNDARD.

Rev. John Batchelor, a missionary at Sapporo, Japan, writes this interesting account of the strange reclamation of an Ainu drunkard: "You will have heard, no doubt, that the Ainus are very great drunkards. This is only too true. I know very few indeed who will not get intoxicated whenever they can. A few of them have, I am happy to tell you, become total abstainers. But I want to tell you especially of one man who was made a teetotaler by crows! He lives at Apashui. He was such a drunkard that no one would give him any work to do and he left his wife and children to live the best way they could. One day this man got so intoxicated that he could not find his way to his hut, but lay down and fell fast asleep on the sea shore. While in this state, the crows came and pecked at his cheeks and forehead and also tried to peck his eyes out. When he awoke he found his face, hands and head covered with wounds and bruises and blood. This frightened him so much that he became a total abstainer. He is now in much better health and gets plenty of work to do, and his wife and children have more food and better clothing. No doubt the crows thought he was dead when they attacked him and expected to have a good feast by picking his bones."

PREACHING TO A MILLIONAIRE.

Christian men sometimes refrain from personal appeals through fear of giving offence, when as a matter of fact the person whom they are afraid of offending, would be grateful for the interest such appeals would imply. Mr. Matthew Burnett says: "Some time ago, when traveling between Hobart, the capital of Tasmania, and Otago in New Zealand, I shared my cabin with one of the wealthiest men in Victoria. This gentleman was extremely kind to me: and as he was not at all well, I had it in my power to repay these kindnesses by little attentions to him. We became such friends that when we reached our destination he invited me to be his guest at the principal hotel there. Before we parted—for I had to continue my journey—I felt impelled to speak to him about his precious soul. He had told me, in the course of our conversations on board ship, that if his life were spared, he hoped, in the course of time, to be worth five millions sterling. I asked, 'If you attain to the realization of your ambition, and become a five-fold millionaire, yet miss your way to heaven, what will it avail you?' He stood for a moment speechless, his lips quivered, and he said, 'Mr. Burnett, you are the first man who has ever spoken to me so pointedly on the greatest of all subjects—my soul's salvation! I thank you very much indeed: I shall never forget meeting with you, and the loving, sympathetic way in which you have spoken to me about matters of such importance.' He was evidently affected, and I have since received from him substantial proofs of his grateful appreciation of my concern for his highest interests."

The Tobacco Habit

May be overcome by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla because it is a powerful alterative and nerve tonic. Read what Dr. S. S. Carpenter of Virgil City, Mo., says: "I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla for years in my practice when I needed a powerful alterative. I concluded to try it on myself and see if it would not counteract the poison, nicotine, that my system had absorbed from the long continued use of tobacco. I found that it relieved the feverish thirst for tobacco and it also cured the nervous and dyspeptic troubles. If a tobacco slave would be free he can be, and to all such I would say: Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, to cleanse the blood and eradicate the poison from the system.' I think we have no better alterative and blood purifier." DR. S. S. CARPENTER.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eye today.

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mild, effective. All druggists. 25c.

The woman pinned down to one or two uses of Pearline will have to be talked to. Why is she throwing away all the gain and help that she can get from it in other ways? If you have proved to yourself that Pearline washes clothes, for instance, in the easiest, quickest, safest way, you ought to be ready to believe that Pearline is the best for washing and cleaning everything. That's the truth, anyway. Try it and see. Into every drop of water that's to be used for cleansing anything, put some Pearline. 476

Millions NOW USE Pearline

Some soap is too soft for economy, other soap too hard for convenience.

COCO

TRADE MARK.

the perfect bathsoap is always just right in substance—in quality. It enhances the pleasure and healthfulness of the bath about tenfold.

The N. K. Fairbank Company,

Chicago.
New York.
St. Louis.

Hay Fever Cured in One Week.

"Westfield, Mass., Jan. 30, 1895.

Your Hyomei cured me of hay fever in one week's time. I consider it a duty to tell others who suffer. A. HAMLIN."

Booth's Hyomei

The Australian Dry-Air

Treatment of Hay Fever, Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc., is a new and effective one for all diseases of the respiratory organs. More ill-health is caused by imperfect respiration than by imperfect digestion. By making Hyomei the respiratory organs are kept healthy, the blood is purified, and tone and vigor is given to the whole system. Hyomei is death to the germs that attack the air passages, and is the result of the latest scientific research. Tens of thousands use it and physicians prescribe it.

"A Blessing to Humanity."

"Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1895.

Hyomei is a blessing to humanity, and I add my name to the Pass-It-On Society.

REV. J. M. FARRAR, D.D."

Price Only $1.00.

A pocket inhaler outfit: complete is sent, charges prepaid, on receipt of $1.00. Money returned if not satisfactory. Send for descriptive pamphlet.

R. T. BOOTH, 18 East 20th Street, New York.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. Cleaning. NO Cracking. Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.

They never fail. Read this testimonial

MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 15 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R.I.

J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N.Y.

CARD PRINTER FREE

Sell my cards or circulars for me in your town. You can make money with it. A postal will get you one. Also Inks, Type Holder, Pads and Tweezers. Best Type Marker ever made. $1.00. Sample make! FREE for 2c. stamps for postage on particulars, large catalogue of Office Supplies.

B. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by druggists at 50 cts. Address,

F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

To the Young Face

POZZONI'S COMPLEXION POWDER gives fresher charms; to the old, renewed youth. Try it for Corpulency and Umbilical Rupture. Immediate relief and solid comfort. Write for particulars and prices.

ABDOMINAL BELTS

I. B. SEELEY & CO.,
25 S. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

During Disfiguring SKIN DISEASES Instantly RELIEVED by CUTICURA the GREAT SKIN CURE

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

STUDY LAW AT HOME

THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW

Fits you for a LEGAL CAREER. Also COURSE IN BUSINESS LAW

Over 2000 students tell the story of success. Full particulars free

Sprague Correspondence School of Law, No. 44 Telephone Building, DETROIT, MICH.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated catalogue of Custom Hand-made Oak Leather Harness, sent direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty. KING & CO., No. 12 Church St., Owego, N.Y.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS

Free Catalogue. Geo. R. Fuller, Box 2207 Rochester, N. Y.

You will realize that "They live well who live cleanly," If you use SAPOLIO

The Great Convention.

TWO weeks ago an outline was published in this journal of the proceedings of the great International Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society which opened at Boston, Mass., on July 10. The convention proved to be all that was then expected of it. By noon of July 12 the Accommodation Committee had registered 49,562 delegates from every part of the country; from Great Britain, Australia, India, Persia, Japan and many other countries. In all its history Boston has never seen so large a convention. It is a significant sign of the times that nearly fifty thousand persons should be drawn together in one place by a common love of Christ and desire to work efficiently in his service. It indicates, not only the power of religion in the world, but an increase in the Christian love which can rise superior to denominational differences. The significance of the assembly is all the greater when we remember that this fifty thousand was merely a representation. The General Secretary's report showed that the aggregate membership of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the world is now 2,473,740. The number of societies is 41,229.

One of the most important acts of the convention was the formation of a world union. This was a suggestion of the President of the New South Wales Union, Rev. W. J. L. Closs. It was broached at the great meeting in Mechanics' Hall on Friday afternoon at which nearly three thousand delegates were present. Dr. Clark described the suggestion of Mr. Closs and said that the idea of a world's union has already been presented to leaders in the Christion Endeavor work in different countries, and had already been acted upon in some, and there was a general feeling in favor of a federation of the world's Christian Endeavorers.

Mr. Closs then read a rough draft for a constitution which provided that the World's Christian Endeavor Union should be composed of individuals, not societies or unions; that a $1 fee should make one a life member: there should be no more dues or fees, and that there should be no salaried office. Triennial conventions or meetings should be held. It was unanimously voted to form a World's Christian Endeavor Union, and a committee of five was appointed with Mr. Closs as Chairman with power to draw up a constitution. Mr. Closs then proposed that the meeting elect Dr. Clark President, and this was done unanimously. Dr. Clark accepted the office for one year, and suggested that the first general meeting be held in Washington next year with the United Society Convention, and this suggestion was adopted.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on July 14, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends. P. H. [illegible] ——"Mother," Moorestown, Pa., for a son, that he may have strength to ——"sister in Jesus," Buffalo, N. Y., for a brother in sore need of help, that God would ——J. A. M., Prospect Ferry, Maine, ——"Reader," Wis., for the conversion of a man and his brother-in-law, the latter of whom once made a profession of faith in Christ.——I. B. C., Maxim Mills, Ky., for a dear boy who has left his home, that he may be converted and restored to his parents.——Old Subscriber, Middlebush, N. J., that God would touch the heart of a man who does not realize his need of a Saviour.

For Restoration to Health. "Reader," Hudson, Mass. For a dear friend for whom a request for prayers was sent recently, that the improvement which has taken place may continue, and he be completely restored.——"Old Subscriber," Middlebush, N. J. For a Christian girl who has been ill now five months.——"Believer in Prayer," Myrtle, Miss., for a dear sister's recovery from a painful disease.——Old Subscriber, Carthage, N. Y., that God would mercifully give health and strength.——L. M. M., Dayton, Kans., for restoration of health in mind and body and for strength to resist temptation.——"Believer in Prayer," New York, who has been a great sufferer from rheumatism, that God would bless the means now being used to recovery.

For Special Blessing. P. C. H., Constableville, N. Y., that God would give strength to do right to one who strives hard, but often fails.——"Sister in Christ," Brooklyn, N. Y. That a friend who has gone away, and has not kept his promises to write, may be kept from all danger and sin and may be led to Christ, and that anxiety on his account may be relieved.——"One in sore Trouble," that deliverance may come from the financial distress which was caused by the fraudulent dealing of a trusted friend.——I. M., Plattsburgh, N. Y., who has suffered acutely through separation from a beloved one, which has continued now two years, that in some way the obstacles to reunion may be removed.——A. E. N., Nashville, Tenn., that funds urgently needed for the payment of just obligations may be supplied in time to avert calamity.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY, New York.
BROOKLYN, New York.
COLLIER, St. Louis.
CORNELL, Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh.
JEWETT, New York.
KENTUCKY, Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, Cleveland.
MISSOURI, St. Louis.
RED SEAL, St. Louis.
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN, Chicago.
SOUTHERN, St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER, New York.
UNION

Whatever

the price, Pure White Lead is the best a cheapest paint, because of its great spre ing power and durability. Properly appli it never chips or scales, thus forming best possible base for subsequent repai ing. The price of Pure White Lead is n lower than ever before in this country (list genuine brands).

Tint the White Lead to any shade of color desired with t tional Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead tinting colors, prepared esp for this purpose. Send for pamphlet giving information and col It is free.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New Y

You desire to be Stylish

We will tell you how

Interline the Puffed Sleeves and Skirts of your Spring and Summer Costumes with

FIBRE CHAMOIS Comes in three weights and your desire will be realized.

Puffed Sleeves and Skirts will not lose their shape if lined with Fibre Chamois—unaffected by dampness—endorsed by all leading modistes.

Lining Counter — Leading Dry Goods Stores.

SMALL CHURCH ORGANS

The School--The Small Church
The Lodge Room--The Chapel
The Sunday School Room-----
The Conservatory of Music---
The Studio of the Organist----
The Music Room of the Home

Should be supplied with the LYON & HEALY Church Organ. One and two manuals, with pedals. Tones characteristic of organ pipes and of adequate power and variety. Stable in pitch. Unaffected by changes in Temperature. Easy of regulation. Reasonable in Cost. 7 sizes. Send for specifications and prices. State size of room.

LYON & HEALY, 33 E. Adams St., Chicago

The Leading Conservatory of America
CARL FAELTEN, Director.
Founded in 1853 by E. Tourjee.
NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. BOSTON MASS
FRANKLIN SQ.
Send for Prospectus giving full information.
FRANK W. HALE, General Manager.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.
OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

HIGHEST PRAISE for W. A. OGDEN'S The LATEST and BEST collection of NEW SONGS for SABBATH SCHOOLS. Send 25 cts. for sample copy sent on receipt of price.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Mailed free. Fancy Boxes, Pocket Purses, Letter Wallets, Shell Boxes, Tidy Cases, Work Boxes, Jewel Cases, Glove Boxes, Collar and Cuff Boxes, Cigar Cases, Manicure Sets, Shaving Cases, Dressing Cases, Toilet Cases, Traveling Cases, Photograph Albums, Autograph Albums, Scrap Albums, Games, Puzzles, Dominoes, Checkers, Chess, Backgammon, Dice Boxes, Cribbage Boards, Playing Cards, Fine Stationery, Pocket Books, Pocket Knives, Scissors, Pens, Pencils, Rubber Goods, Fine Leather Goods, Fine Celluloid Goods, Fine Ivory Goods, Fine Bone Goods, Fine Wood Goods, Fine Metal Goods, Fine Paper Goods, Fine Cloth Goods, Fine Silk Goods, Fine Satin Goods, Fine Velvet Goods, Fine Plush Goods, Fine Fur Goods, Fine Feather Goods, Fine Lace Goods, Fine Embroidery Goods, Fine Jewelry Goods, Fine Gold Goods, Fine Silver Goods, Fine Diamond Goods, Fine Pearl Goods, Fine Ruby Goods, Fine Sapphire Goods, Fine Emerald Goods, Fine Opal Goods, Fine Turquoise Goods, Fine Amethyst Goods, Fine Garnet Goods, Fine Topaz Goods, Fine Aquamarine Goods, Fine Tourmaline Goods, Fine Zircon Goods, Fine Spinel Goods, Fine Chrysoberyl Goods, Fine Alexandrite Goods, Fine Cymophane Goods, Fine Hiddenite Goods, Fine Kunzite Goods, Fine Rhodolite Goods, Fine Almandine Goods, Fine Pyrope Goods, Fine Spessartite Goods, Fine Grossularite Goods, Fine Andradite Goods, Fine Uvarovite Goods, Fine Demantoid Goods, Fine Melanite Goods, Fine Schorlomite Goods, Fine Rutile Goods, Fine Brookite Goods, Fine Anatase Goods, Fine Cassiterite Goods, Fine Wolframite Goods, Fine Scheelite Goods, Fine Powellite Goods, Fine Wulfenite Goods, Fine Crocoite Goods, Fine Vanadinite Goods, Fine Descloizite Goods, Fine Mimetite Goods, Fine Pyromorphite Goods, Fine Apatite Goods, Fine Phosphorite Goods, Fine Wavellite Goods, Fine Turquoise Goods, Fine Variscite Goods, Fine Lazulite Goods, Fine Scorzalite Goods, Fine Triphylite Goods, Fine Lithiophilite Goods, Fine Zwieselite Goods, Fine Heterosite Goods, Fine Purpurite Goods, Fine Alluaudite Goods, Fine Graftonite Goods, Fine Beraunite Goods, Fine Dufrenite Goods, Fine Strengite Goods, Fine Barrandite Goods, Fine Childrenite Goods, Fine Eosphorite Goods, Fine Triplite Goods, Fine Zwieselite Goods, Fine Heterosite Goods, Fine Purpurite Goods, Fine Alluaudite Goods, Fine Graftonite Goods, Fine Beraunite Goods, Fine Dufrenite Goods, Fine Strengite Goods, Fine Barrandite Goods, Fine Childrenite Goods, Fine Eosphorite Goods, Fine Triplite Goods. Send 10 cts. for postage. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, China Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is a pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Guarantee Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalogue.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illustrated Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We advise on to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the supp

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

Do you want a Tonic?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

"I have used it as a tonic and stimulant with success. I always keep it on the house for me to use."

New Kidney and Bladder Cure.

[illegible] advise our readers to try it, as it is offered free

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this adv. and 10c. in Stamps and we will mail you one quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. Good Inducements. Etc. Premiums, &c.

The Great American Tea Co. Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

ONLY 10% ABOVE ACTUAL COST.

OXFORD MDSE. CO. 840 Wabash Av. Chicago, Ill.

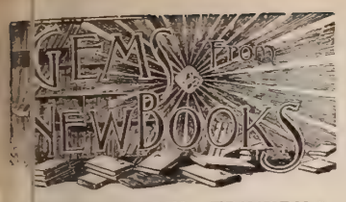
Your Dinner

can be cooked all at once on one burner of any kind if you use the

Peerless Steam Cooker

Prevents steam and odors from mixing when cooker used. Catalogue Free. Agents Wanted. PEERLESS COOKER CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE LARKIN SOAP CO. BUFFALO, N. Y.



A GREAT GOSPEL TRIUMPH.*

WHAT are the results of three-quarters of a century of Christian work in Madagascar? Has it become in any full sense of the term a Christian land? The London Missionary Society began its work at Tamatave in the year 1818, and two years later the first missionary of the society arrived in Antananarivo. From the statistics of the year 1894 we find that it has thirty-eight missionaries in Madagascar. These have under their care 1328 congregations (about 800 of which are in Imerina, with an aggregate of 280,000 adherents, 53,000 of whom are church members. There are nearly 1000 day schools, containing 44,000 children. There are 1061 native pastors, very few of whom, however, are college-trained men, and 5879 preachers. The churches raise and use for local purposes about £7000 per annum.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel sent missionaries to Tamatave in 1864 and in 1872 began to work in the capital. In 1874 it sent out Bishop Kestell-Cornish, who still remains at the head of the Anglican mission, and has a large stone cathedral in the centre of the capital. The European agents of the society now number eight or ten, and the total number of congregations under their care is twenty-seven, with a total of about 10,000 adherents, 1000 of whom are communicants. There are probably 2000 or 3000 scholars in the schools under the care of this society.

The Norwegian Missionary Society sent out its missionaries, Messrs. Engh and Rise, in the year 1866. Since that date its work has been greatly extended and developed, until now it has a larger number of missionaries than any other Protestant society. The last report gives the number of Norwegian missionaries as forty-four, with whom are associated sixty native ordained ministers, having charge of 50,000 or 60,000 adherents, 28,000 of whom are communicants. The number of children in the Norwegian schools is about 30,000.

The Society of Friends sent out to Madagascar in 1867 Mr. Joseph S. Sewell and Mr. and Mrs. Street. In the early years the work of the Friends was mainly educational, but it has gradually become more extensive, and now embraces all the ordinary departments of missionary work. The present number of missionaries belonging to the Friends' Foreign Mission Association working in Madagascar is about fifteen. Under their care they have 149 congregations, with 25,000 adherents, and 25 communicants. The Friends admitted exercise a powerful influence, and do much to mould public opinion on all questions affecting the moral and spiritual well-being of the people.

Summarising, we may say that there are about 107 foreign Protestant missionaries on this island, having under their care 2004 congregations, with a total of 375,000 adherents, more than 96,000 of whom are communicants; and the Protestant schools contain 120,000 children.

To these we must add the statistics of the Roman Catholic mission. This comprises about 100,000 adherents, who are under the care of 113 foreign missionary agents. The children in the Roman Catholic schools are said to number 15,000.

All this reach a total of more than 400,000 Christians; and if we reckon the population of the island at 4,000,000, this will give one-tenth as the proportion of the Christian to the heathen population. It can never be too plainly or two frequently impressed upon the attention of the friends of missions that nine-tenths of the people of Madagascar remain heathen, and that of the remaining one-tenth who have accepted our religion, many are Christians only in name.

*For Madagascar of To-day, a sketch of the history, by Rev. W. E. Cousins, missionary, L. M. S. 250 pp., illustrated; price $1. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, and Toronto, publishers.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Colleges in America; by John Marshall Barker, Ph. D., a comprehensive little work, full of useful and valuable information. pp. 265; cloth binding, Cleveland Printing Co., Cleveland, O., publishers.

Pantaepha; an outline study of the Books of the Bible. An attractive object lesson, designed specially for the young; in a box. W. Wheaton Smith, Detroit, Mich., publisher.

Scepticisms Assailed. By Britton H. Taylor of the New York Bar. A lawyer's exposure of the foes of religion. Pp. 400; price $2.50. Published by the Wood Publishing Co., 45 Rose street, New York.

A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on Deuteronomy. By Rev. S. R. Driver, D.D., a volume of a New International Series of works on the Bible by the most eminent scholars on both sides the Atlantic. Pp. 433; price $3. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Ships by Day. A novel, by Rev. Edwin A. Wyman, D.D., Ph.D. Pp. 451; Price $1.50. Published by James H. Earle, 178 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

WHAT HE COULD NOT DO.

If the Saviour of the world had not risen from the dead, how could we have been sure that he was more than a man? We should have known that he was a good man, a great man, and a loving, tender-hearted man, but we would not have been sure that he had power to give endless life. Stamford tells us that on one occasion, the Emperor Theodosius wishing to celebrate some joyful event, threw open the prison doors and released the prisoners. "What more can I do?" he exclaimed. "Would to God I could open the tombs and give life to the dead!"

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Headache.....
Destroys.....
Health.....

Resulting in poor memory, irritability, nervousness and intellectual exhaustion. It induces other forms of disease, such as epilepsy, heart disease, apoplexy, insanity, etc.

Mrs. Chas. A. Myers, 201 Hanna St., Fort Wayne, Ind., writes Oct. 7, 1894. "I suffered terribly with severe headaches, dizziness, backache and nervousness, gradually growing worse until my life was despaired of. I have taken 5 bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and am a well woman."

On sale by all druggists. Dr. Miles' Book on Heart and Nervous Disorders, FREE, by mail. Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

.....Dr. Miles'
.....Nervine
Restores Health

Seven Gables FOR GIRLS of all ages. Looks to their physical as well as higher mental culture. Boating, stately trees, handsomely appointed building, Gymnasium. A thoroughly modern school. Native French and German Teachers; 20th year. Certificate admits to Smith. Direct trains from New York. Address for Catalogue Mrs. Sarah S. Westcott, Principal, Bridgeton, N. J.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES. From New York. A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Through Tickets, Single and Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c., Georgia and Florida. Write for our 64-Page Prospectus, mailed free. C. H. MALLORY & Co., Agts., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KINSLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald.

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O. Begins 71st year Sept. 2. Board, tuition. Furnished room, & book, $2.80 to 3 a week; 8 courses; no saloons. Cheap, safe. Largest attendance yet. Catalog free. W. A. WILLIAMS, D.D., Pres.

Do You Have Asthma?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant found on the Congo river, West Africa, is a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Imperial Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have been in this new discovery, that they are sending free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card. Write to them

The merits of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifying and building-up medicine is extolled by thousands who have been benefited by it. Is it not the medicine for you? Try it now.

As Woman is the Burden Bearer

the world over—she should economize her time and strength.

GOLD DUST Washing Powder

helps her do just this and yet do all her work as it should be done. It lets the sunshine of leisure enter the household and drives away the gloom of drudgery. All grocers sell GOLD DUST in large pkgs. Price 25c.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

A CATALOGUE

FREE

Pianos or Organs.

$169.00 $25.00

And Upwards. :: Warranted 25 Years.

Shipped on 30 days' trial. Sold on instalments. Easy terms.

Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741, Washington, N. J.

Spencerian Steel Pens.

For THIRTY-FIVE YEARS have maintained their superiority for

Quality of Metal, Workmanship, Uniformity, Durability.

Sample card, 12 PENS, different numbers, for all styles of writing, sent on receipt of 4 CENTS in postage stamps.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
450 Broome St., New York.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention; different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO., Offices: {223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky. 1122 Broadway, New York.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that retains in all places, relieves & CURES RUPTURE

No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. 1000's of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.

Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO., 27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

$5 00 EVERY DAY! Do you want to represent a large manufacturing company: We will employ a lady or gentleman in every locality at once No experience required. This is not an advertising scheme but a genuine offer by a responsible concern No money wanted, simply your name and address. Write today and learn how easily you can make $5 a day LEONARD MFG. CO. 20 ADAMS STREET GA CHICAGO, ILLS.

Buy Comfort Powder. What for?

For Chafing, Nettle rash, Smarting feet, Itching, Sunburn, Fetid sweat, Eczema, Insect bites, and all Inflammation.

Comfort Powder is a quick cure. It is the summer medicine box.

THE COMFORT POWDER CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

Send four cents in stamps for sample.

U. S. Census for one year, 1880, reports
35,607 Deaths from Cancer.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,

An institution for the thoroughly effective and perfectly scientific treatment of Cancer, Tumors, and all malignant growths, without the use of the knife.

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity for treatment.

Book giving a description of our Sanatorium and treatment, with terms and references, free. Address DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use-Traveling, etc.: Invaluable and Indispensable; Soft, Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for Circulars; agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO., 56 Broadway, New York.

CRIPPLES, Ladies and girls, if you want air or exercise, buy a FAIRY hand or foot power. TRICYCLE CHEAP FOR ALL.

FAIRY MFG. CO., 1 Pine St., Elyria, O.

FREE
As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, etc. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

Dingy carpets can be cleansed and brightened on the floor. Sweep thoroughly, spread a stiff lather of Ivory Soap over a small surface at a time, scrub with a clean scrubbing brush and wipe off with a damp sponge.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

GALLONS FOR 25¢

Not of the preparations of coloring matter and essential oils so often sold under the name of rootbeer, but of the purest, most delicious, health-giving beverage possible to produce. One gallon of Hires' is worth ten of the counterfeit kind. Suppose an imitation extract costs five cents less than the genuine Hires; the same amount of sugar and trouble is required; you save one cent a gallon, and—get an unhealthful imitation in the end. Ask for HIRES and get it.

HIRES' Rootbeer

THE CHAS. E. HIRES CO., Philadelphia.

It is Important that your Church has an Inviting Interior. You cannot fill a gloomy auditorium.

CONTINUOUS STEEL CEILING and SIDE WALL PATTERNS

—ELEGANT and ARTISTIC.

Specially adapted to ornamentation. Fine acoustic qualities. Lasting and fire-proof. Tin and Steel Roofings, Eaves Troughs, Conductor Pipes, Etc.

Ceiling catalogue No. 170. Roofing catalogue No. D 169

WHEELING CORRUGATING CO.,
Office and Works, Wheeling, W. Va.
Office and Warehouse, No 471 Laflin St., Chicago
Office and Warehouse, No 81 Fulton St., New York Office and Warehouse, cor. 12th & Poplar Sts., St. Louis.

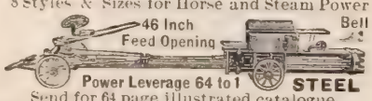
"Eli" Baling Presses

8 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power



Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

ONLY 99c FORMERLY SOLD FOR $9

FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These Spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD. In order to sell them Quickly, we make this unheard of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after exact coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and reading "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the handsomest collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00; we now offer the entire set of six at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant plush lined case, properly packed, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange. Individual checks not accepted. Postal Notes or currency. Money cheerfully refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5,152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

The best that money can buy.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

A Great Bargain.

$3.75 FOR $1.5

So many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have requested us to make another specia the magnificent

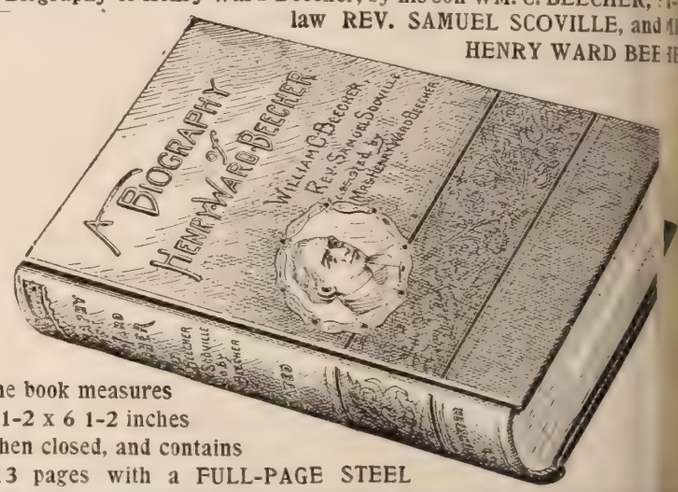
Biography o Henry Ward Beecher, that we have included to offer the balan stock of this interesting Life of the Great (only a few hundred copies), at

—HALF-PRICE.—

A Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, by his son WM. C. BEECHER; law REV. SAMUEL SCOVILLE, and HENRY WARD BEE



The book measures
9 1-2 x 6 1-2 inches
when closed, and contains
713 pages with a FULL-PAGE STEEL
PORTRAIT of HENRY WARD BEECHER and the following Illustrat is:

1. Anvil and Oak Stump
2. Toote Coat-of-Arms.
3. Church in which Lyman Beecher preached, in East Hampton, L. I.
4. Beecher Residence at Litchfield
5. Room in which Mr. Beecher was born
6. Elms and Well which mark the Site of the "Beecher House" in Litchfield
7. Facsimile of the first Letter of Mr. Beecher.
8. Ingersoll House.
9. Stairs in Catharine Beecher's House in Hartford.
10. Mr. Beecher at the time of his Marriage
11. Mrs. Beecher at the time of her Marriage.
12. Church at Indianapolis
13. Mr. Beecher's House at Indianapolis.
14. Mr. Beecher and his Father at time o Brooklyn.
15. Punky's Freedom-Ring.
16. Mr. Beecher in 1850.
17. Mr. Beecher at the close of the War.
18. Mr Beecher and his Sister, Mrs. H. E
19. Cottage at Peekskill.
20. Old Apple-Tree.
21. Mr. Beecher on his Farm.
22. House at Peekskill.
23. Hall in New House at Peekskill.
24. Mr. and Mrs. Beecher at the time of England in 1886.
25. Lying in State in Plymouth Church.

Is beautifully printed on fine book paper, in large, clear type an in Seal Leather.

So many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have taken ad of the special price offered on these books that the various styles binding are all sold out except SEAL LEATHER. This is a beautifull book, with marbleized edges and has sold heretofore for $3.75.

Special Offer.

Send us $1.75, to with 25 cts. for expressa and we will send the Book at once, PREPAID.

EVERY ONE PURCHASING THE BOOK IS DELIGHTED WITH

Mrs. J. Wrigley, Elmira, N. Y.: Mr. Beecher's Biography came duly at hand. I am very much pleased with it, and think it is really worth the full price.

Mrs. S. J. Davis, Rochester, N. Y.: Received the book of Henry Ward Beecher, was very much pleased with it. It came nicely, and I am very much obliged.

Mrs. Henry Strangham, Cram Elbow, N. S.: Please accept our sincere thanks for the with which you forwarded the Biograp Ward Beecher in response to our order ceived in good condition, and we are m with it.

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest Expres office

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS

and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 200 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A Grade, Etc. Write to-day. "A Grade, Etc. Write to-day.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH NUMBER 31.

T. V. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York. NEW YORK, JULY 31, 1895. PRICE, 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN!

It scends from Tenement Alleys and Appeals to Human Sympathy Everywhere—Our Fresh Air Fund as a Moral Helper—Another Visit with a Missionary Worker—Two Hundred More Little Unfortunates Sent to Our Children's Home.

A FLOOD of sympathetic letters has poured in upon us during the past week, from many of our readers who have at heart the cause of the suffering and neglected tenement children of New York. Many of the writers, not content with a mere expression of interest in the work now being conducted in the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, have decided to give personally represented in it, and with this object in view, have forwarded their contributions. Each contributor of three dollars and upward has now the pleasure of knowing that the gift has been the means of taking some child out from among its wretched surroundings and giving it ten days of pure, healthful enjoyment, far from heated sidewalks, stifling rooms and disease-laden atmosphere, and where, instead of the evil companionship of the streets, it will come under influences that will teach the young heart to turn toward its Maker, as the flowers open to the sun.

But the work among the neglected children of the tenements has only begun. Behind the nine hundred little guests, whose lives have been made brighter and better by a stay at our Children's Home this season, are thousands of others equally in need of a helping hand. Poor, pale, underfed and altogether miserable wee mites of humanity, the summer's deadly heat, in conjunction with unwholesome surroundings, is already working havoc among them and the child death-roll, these torrid weeks, is appalling. Every week in summer, hundreds of these children of misfortune die, most of them miserably, in the slums where they were born. Many — very many—never knew what it was to have a full meal; still more never went outside the great city—many never even beyond the boundaries of the dingy alley wherein they first saw the light.

It is to help save these little lives, to strengthen the frail bodies and give the young hearts a taste of the sunshine of human kindness, that our Fresh Air Fund was established. We most earnestly wish to have all our readers represented in this great work of benevolence among the children of the poor.

Our illustrations on this page are from actual photographs taken from life. Accompanied by Miss Delaney, a city missionary, Mr. W. L. Hudson, of our artist staff, visited the homes he has pictured among the very poorest sections of the East-side, and there witnessed scenes of destitution beyond the power of any pencil fully to portray. Yet many hundreds of similar cases of destitution and suffering are to be found in the same section. In one tenement-house on Water street which was visited, there are five floors, and four families on a floor. Each family pays from $5 to $6 a month rent for a room, in which they do their cooking, living in it and a little, dark bed-room adjoining. On the top floor in one apartment was a mother with a baby in her arms about two weeks old. The child was scarcely covered with clothes. The husband was out looking for work; there were six or seven small children around the room. Two or three neighbors were there at the time. This wretched home had nothing but bare floors. There was a "boiler" full of wash-clothes on the stove, and the temperature in the room was simply terrible. As the day was rainy, the children could not play on the streets; therefore they were all huddled in this room together, the very picture of misery! To this home, the Fresh Air Fund came with its invitation like a message from heaven.

NEARLY NAKED AND SHOELESS.

Going down to the floor below, the visitors found a woman in another bare room. When the missionary asked if she had any children, she replied: "Yes, I have children. They are out in the streets." And she called them in. She added gloomily: "I have no shoes or clothes to wear; neither have the children." A neighbor came in and kindly said she would lend her shoes if she would take the children to the Bible House to be sent to our Children's Home, and the missionary said she would see that they got shoes and clothes. Smiles had taken the place of gloom in this poor, bare home, before the visitors left.

In the corner of one room was an old woman sitting on the floor, amid all the dirt. She was blind and was peeling potatoes. She would go over them twice. She had been sick, and mistaking the artist for a physician, asked him to stop and prescribe for her. A little girl was lying sick on a couch. She had eaten nothing for two or three days; the family had nothing for their meals but coffee and rye bread. There were grandmother, mother,

(Continued on page 491.)

THE SUFFERING CHILDREN OF THE POOR—OUR FRESH AIR FUND MISSIONARY VISITS AN EAST-SIDE TENEMENT.

(From a Photograph taken specially for "The Christian Herald.")

THE ALL-SEEING.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalm 94 : 9,

"He that formed the eye, shall he not see?"

THE imperial organ of the human system is the eye. All up and down the Bible God honors it, extols it, illustrates it, or arraigns it. Five hundred and thirty-four times it is mentioned in the Bible. Omnipresence—"the eyes of the Lord are in every place." Divine care—"as the apple of the eye." The clouds—"the eyelids of the morning." Irreverence—"the eye that mocketh at its father." Pride—"Oh, how lofty are their eyes!" Inattention—"the fool's eye in the ends of the earth." Divine inspection—"wheels full of eyes." Suddenness—"in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Olivetic sermon—"the light of the body is the eye." This morning's text—"He that formed the eye, shall he not see?" The surgeons, the doctors, the anatomists and the physiologists understand much of the glories of the two great lights of the human face; but the vast multitudes go on from cradle to grave without any appreciation of the two great masterpieces of the Lord God Almighty. If God had lacked anything of infinite wisdom, he would have failed in creating the human eye. We wander through the earth trying to see wonderful sights, but the most wonderful sight that we ever see is not so wonderful as the instruments through which we see it. It has been a strange thing to me for forty years that some scientist, with enough eloquence and magnetism, did not go through the country with illustrated lectures on canvas thirty feet square, to startle, and thrill, and overwhelm Christendom with the marvels of the human eye. We want the eye taken from all its technicalities, and some one who shall lay aside all talk about the pterygomaxillary fissures, and the sclerotica, and the chiasma of the optic nerve, and in common parlance, which you and I and everybody can understand, present the subject. We have learned men who have been telling us what our origin is and what we were. Oh! if some one should come forth from the dissecting-table and from the class-room of the university and take the platform, and, asking the help of the Creator, demonstrate the wonders of what we are!

If I refer to the physiological facts suggested by the former part of my text, it is only to bring out in a plainer way the theological lessons of the latter part of my text, "He that formed the eye, shall he not see?" I suppose my text referred to the human eye, since it excels all others in structure and in adaptation. The eyes of fish, and reptiles, and moles, and bats, are very simple things, because they have not much to do. There are insects with a hundred eyes, but the hundred eyes have less faculty than the human eyes. The black beetle swimming the summer pond has two eyes under water and two eyes above the water, but the four insectile are not equal to the two human. Man, placed at the head of all living creatures, must have [illegible] the fish in the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky have only an undeveloped organ of sight, an [illegible] by the eye, which, if through some crevice of the mountain they should get into the sunlight, might be developed into positive eyesight. In the first chapter of Genesis we find that God, without any consultation, created the light, created the trees, created the fish, created the fowl, but when he was about to make man he called a convention of Divinity, as though to imply that all the powers of Godhead were to be enlisted in the achievement. "Let us make man." Put a whole ton of emphasis on that word "us." "Let us make man." And if God called a convention of Divinity to create man, I think the two great questions in that conference were how to create a soul and how to make an appropriate window for that emperor to look out of.

See how God honored the eye before he created it. He cried, until chaos was irradiated with the utterance, "Let there be light!" In other words, before he introduced man into this temple of the world he illuminated it, prepared it for the eyesight. And so, after the last human eye has been destroyed in the final demolition of the world, stars are to fall, and the sun is to cease its shining, and the moon is to turn into blood. In other words, after the human eyes are no more to be profited by their shining, the chandeliers of heaven are to be turned out. God, to educate and to bless and to help the human eye, set in the mantel of heaven two lamps—a gold lamp and a silver lamp—the one for the day and the other for the night. To show how God honors the eye, look at the two halls built tor the residence of the eyes, seven bones making the wall for each eye, the seven bones curiously wrought together. Kingly palace of ivory is considered rich, but the halls for the residence of the human eye are richer by so much as human bone is more sacred than elephantine tusk. See how God honored the eyes when he made a roof for them, so that the sweat of toil should not smart them; and the rain dashing against the forehead should not drip into them; the eyebrows not bending over the eye, but reaching to the right and to the left, so that the rain and the sweat should be compelled to drop upon the cheek, instead of falling into this divinely protected human eyesight. See how God honored the eye in the fact presented by anatomists and physiologists that there are eight hundred contrivances in every eye. For window-shutters, the eyelids opening and closing thirty thousand times a day. The eyelashes so constructed that they have their selection as to what shall be admitted, saying to the dust, "Stay out," and saying to the light, "Come in." For inside curtains the iris, or pupil of the eye, according as the light is greater or less, contracting or dilating. The eye of the owl is blind in the daytime, the eyes of some creatures are blind at night, but the human eye so marvelously constructed can see both by day and by night. Many of the other creatures of God can move the eye only from side to side, but the human eye so marvelously constructed has one muscle to lift the eye, and another muscle to lower the eye, and another muscle to roll it to the right, and another muscle to roll it to the left, and another muscle passing through a pulley to turn it round and round—an elaborate gearing of six muscles as perfect as God could make them. There also is the retina, gathering the rays of light and passing the visual impression along the optic nerve, about the thickness of the lampwick—passing the visual impression on to the sensorium, and on into the soul. What a delicate lens, what an exquisite screen, what soft cushions, what wonderful chemistry of the human eye! The eye washed by a slow stream of moisture whether we sleep or wake, rolling imperceptibly over the pebble of the eye and emptying into a bone of the nostril. A contrivance so wonderful that it can see the sun, ninety-five million miles away, and the point of a pin. Telescope and microscope in the same contrivance. The astronomer swings and moves this way and that, and adjusts and readjusts the telescope until he gets it to the right focus; the microscopist moves this way and that, and adjusts and readjusts the magnifying glass until it is prepared to do its work; but the human eye, without a touch, beholds the star and the smallest insect. The traveler among the Alps, with one glance taking in Mont Blanc and the face of his watch to see whether he has time to climb it.

Oh! this wonderful camera obscura which you and I carry about with us, so to-day we can take in our friends, so from the top of Mount Washington we can take in New England, so at night we can sweep into our vision the constellations from horizon to horizon. So delicate, so semi-infinite, and yet the light coming ninety-five millions of miles at the rate of two hundred thousand miles a second is obliged to halt at the gate of the eye, waiting for admission until the portcullis be lifted. Something hurled ninety-five millions of miles and striking an instrument which has not the agitation of even winking under the power of the stroke. There, also, is the merciful arrangement of the tear gland, by which the eye is washed, and from which rolls the tide which brings the relief that comes in tears when some bereavement or great loss strikes us. The tear not an augmentation of sorrow, but the breaking up of the Arctic of frozen grief in the warm gulf stream of consolation. Incapacity to weep is madness or death. Thank God for the tear glands, and that the crystal gates are so easily opened. Oh! the wonderful hydraulic apparatus of the human eye. Divinely constructed vision! Two lighthouses at the harbor of the immortal soul, under the shining of which the world sails in and drops anchor. What an anthem of praise to God is the human eye! The tongue is speechless and a clumsy instrument of expression as compared with it. Have you not seen it flash with indignation or kindle with enthusiasm, or expand with devotion, or melt with sympathy, or stare with fright, or leer with villainy, or droop with sadness, or pale with envy, or fire with revenge, or twinkle with mirth, or beam with love? It is tragedy and comedy and pastoral and lyric in turn. Have you not seen its uplifted brow of surprise, or its frown of wrath, or its contraction of pain? If the eye say one thing and the lips say another thing, you believe the eye rather than the lips. The eyes of Archibald Alexander and Charles G. Finney were the mightiest part of their sermon. George Whitefield enthralled great assemblages with his eyes, though they were crippled with strabismus. Many a military chieftain has with a look hurled a regiment to victory or to death. Martin Luther turned his great eye on an assassin who came to take his life, and the villain fled. Under the glance of the human eye, the tiger, with five times a man's strength, snarls back into the African jungle. But those best appreciate the value of the eye who have lost it. The Emperor Adrian by accident put out the eye of his servant, and he said to his servant: "What shall I pay you in, money or in lands? Anything you ask me; I am so sorry I put your eye out." But the servant refused to put any financial estimate on the value of the eye, and when the Emperor urged and urged again the matter, he said: "Oh, Emperor, I want nothing but my lost eye." Alas for those for whom a thick and impenetrable vail is drawn across the face of the heavens and the face of one's own kindred. That is a pathetic scene when a blind man lights a torch at night and was found passing along the highway, and some one said, "Why do you carry that torch when you can't see?" "Ah!" said he, "I can't see, but I carry this torch that others may see me and pity my helplessness and not run me down." Samson, the giant, with his eyes put out by the Philistines, is more helpless than the smallest dwarf with vision undamaged. All the sympathies of Christ were stirred when he saw Bartimeus with darkened retina. And the only salve he ever made that we read of was a mixture of dust and saliva and prayer, with which he cured the eyes of a man blind from his nativity. The value of the eye is shown as much by its catastrophe as by its healthful action. Ask the man who for twenty years has not seen the sunrise. Ask the man who for half a century has not seen the face of a friend. Ask in the hospital the victim of ophthalmia. Ask the man whose eyesight perished in a powder blast. Ask the Bartimeus who never met a Christ, or the man born blind what is to die blind. Ask him. This morning in my imperfect way, I have only hinted at the splendors, the glories, the wonders of the divine revelations, the apocalypses of the human eye, and I stagger back from the awful portals of the physiological miracle which must have taxed the ingenuity of God, to cry out in your ears the words of my text, "He that formed the eye, shall he not see?" Shall Herschel not know as much as his telescope? Shall Fraunhofer not know as much as his spectroscope? Shall Swammerdan not know as much as his microscope? Shall Dr. Hooke not know as much as his micrometer? Shall the thing formed know more than its master? He that formed the eye, shall he not see?

The recoil of this question is tremendous. We stand at the centre of a vast circumference of observation. No privacy. Eyes, eyes of cherubim, eyes of seraphim, eyes of archangel, eyes of God. We may be able to see the inhabitants of other worlds, but perhaps they may be able to see us. We have not optical instruments strong enough to descry them; perhaps they have optical instruments strong enough to descry us. The mole cannot see the eagle mid-sky, but the eagle mid-sky can see the mole in the grass. We are able to see mountains and caverns of another world; but perhaps the inhabitants of other worlds can see the towers of our cities, the flash of our seas, the marching of our processions, the white robes of our weddings, the black scarfs of our obsequies.

It passes out from the guess into the positive when we are told in the Bible that the inhabitants of other worlds do come as convoy to this. Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation? But human inspection, and angelic inspection, and stellar inspection, and lunar inspection, and solar inspection are tame compared with the thought of divine inspection. "You converted me twenty years ago," said a sick man to my father. "How so?" said my father. "Twenty years ago," said the other, "in the old school-house prayer-meeting at Bound Brook you said in your prayer, 'Thou, God, seest me,' and I had no peace under the eye of God until I became a Christian." Hear it. "The eyes of the Lord are in every place." "His eyelids try the children of men." "His eyes were as a flame of fire." "I will guide thee with mine eye." Oh, the eye of God, so full of purity, so full of power, so full of love, so full of indignation, so full of compassion, so full of mercy! How it peers through the darkness! How it outshines the day! How it glares upon the offender! How it burns on the penitent soul! Talk about the human eye as being indescribably wonderful—how much more wonderful the great, searching, overwhelming eye of God! All eternity past and all eternity to come on that retina.

he eyes with which we look into each o'er's face to-day suggest it. It stands w'tten twice on your face and twice on me, unless through casualty one or both h e been obliterated. "He that formed the e, shall he not see?" Oh, the eye of God! I ees our sorrows to assuage them, sees our p plexities to disentangle them, sees our w ts to sympathize with them. If we fight h back, the eye of an antagonist. If we a his grace, the eye of an everlasting fr d. You often find in a book or manu- s pt a star calling your attention to a foot- n , or explanation. That star the printer c s an asterisk. But all the stars of the n t are asterisks calling your attention to G , an all-observing God. Our every n e a divine handwriting. Our every mus- cl pulley divinely swung. Our every bone s ptured with divine suggestion. Our e y eye a reflection of the divine eye. G above us, and God beneath us, and G before us, and God behind us, and G within us. What a stupendous thing l ve! What a stupendous thing to die! N such thing as hidden transgression. A d natic advocate in olden times, at night i court room, persuaded of the innocence o his client charged with murder, and of t guilt of the witness who was trying to s ar the poor man's life away—that advo- c took up two bright lamps and thrust th m close up to the face of the witness, and c d: "May it please the court and gentlemen o the jury, behold the murderer!" and the m , practically under that awful glare, c fessed that he was the criminal instead o the man arraigned at the bar. Oh, m finds our most hidden sin is under a b hter light than that; it is under the b ning eye of God. He is not a blind g t stumbling through the heavens. He i s not a blind monarch feeling for the step o his chariot. Are you wronged? He sees it Are you poor? He sees it. Have you d mestic perturbation of which the world k ws nothing? He sees it. "Oh," you s , "my affairs are so insignificant I can't r lize that God sees me and sees my af- f s." Can you see the point of a pin? C n you see the eye of a needle? Can you s a mote in the sunbeam? And has God g en you that power of minute observation a does he not possess it himself? "He t t formed the eye, shall he not see?"

But you say, "God is in one world and I a in another world; He seems so far off f m me, I don't really think he sees what i going on in my life." Can you see the s ninety-five million miles away, and do y not think God has as prolonged visi- i ? But you say, "There are phases of r life, and there are colors—shades of c lor—in my annoyances and my vexations b t I don't think God can understand." D es not God gather up all the colors, and a the shades of color in the rainbow? And c you suppose there is any phase or any s de in your life he has not gathered up in h own heart? Besides that, I want to tell y u it will soon all be over, this struggle. A at eye of yours so exquisitely fashioned a strung, and hinged and roofed, will be- f long be closed in the last slumber. L ving hands will smooth down the silken f ages. So he giveth his beloved sheep. egend of St. Frotobert is that his mother s blind and he was so sorely pitiful for misfortune that one day in sympathy he s ed her eyes, and by miracle she saw ev- y thing. But it is not a legend when I tell y u that all the blind eyes of the Christian a d under the kiss of the resurrection m rn shall gloriously open. Oh! what a y that will be for those who went grop- g through this world under perpetual ob- u ration, or were dependent on the hand a friend, or with an uncertain staff felt t eir way; and for the aged of dim sight t out whom it may be said that "they w nich look out of the windows are darken- " when eternal daybreak comes in. What a beautiful epitaph that was for a tomb- s one in a European cemetery: "Here re s ses in God, Katrina, a saint, eighty-five y ars of age and blind. The light was re- s ored to her May 10th, 1840."

The Cry of the Children!

(Continued from first page.

father, and three children living in those two wretched rooms. Being asked where they all slept, the old woman said that she and the mother of the children slept in the bedroom, the children slept on the rags which were on the floor in the corner; the sick child slept on the couch, and the father on an old, dirty mattress on the fire-escape. He is employed on the docks, gets up at one o'clock at night, and works until nine o'clock, and then goes home and sleeps awhile. He says he gets an average of three hours' sleep a day. They were washing, there, too. The children looked weak and emaciated, and their thin, sharp faces had in them no trace of the joyous animation of childhood. Here also, the prospect of a visit to Mont-Lawn was hailed with real joy.

Another room was entered, and was found foul beyond description. The floor was covered with rags, the table was filled with old dishes and cans, the stove was covered with kettles, holding water and soups, and rags were piled in the corners of the room. Even the window-panes were broken. In this room were a mother and a three-weeks'-old baby, a little, sad, hollow-cheeked thing, two little girls, about six and nine years old, and a boy about eleven. They had no shoes on, had dirty faces and matted hair, and clothes mostly in tatters. The poor mother had the care of all the children and had no time to clean them. She said, "I am ashamed to receive you in this place, but this baby is sick, and I have her in my arms all the time." She promised she would have the place cleaner before the visitors came again. What would not a ten days' outing do for such little ones as these?

IN "SINGLE ALLEY," CHERRY STREET.

There was only one family in that house that had no children. The woman said, "Thank God I have none, for they are a curse to us here!" An awful admission, and one full of significance.

The floor below was next visited and a door opened to the knock. This was evidently a rag-picker's home. A man was lying on a board which lay across two chairs. He had three children; they were downstairs, he said, and his wife was out working. They all slept on the rags except the father, who slept on a bench, and the mother slept in the bedroom which was full of rags and truck picked up on the streets. Three more candidates for the Children's Home—all in need of fresh air, good food and better influences, if ever children, needed them.

In Hamilton Street, passing through a house, the visitors came to an inside court, which formed an entrance to several houses. Down a few steps below the level of the ground are living rooms rented out to families. They are just like cellars. It is necessary to keep the gas or lamps lighted all the time in these places as they are so very dark. In one lives a widow with five children, whom she supports by taking in washing. One little boy was eating dinner, which consisted of coffee and a crust of bread. A little baby was sitting down in the dark by the table. It was a sickly-looking child about six months old. All the children were barefooted. Two neighbors who were in were also shoeless.

This widow said she had not been out of the city for a long time; she did not expect to go out; she did not expect the children to go; "it is too much trouble to get them ready." They had nothing to wear and they were "just as well off to stay there as to go away." One of the children followed the visitor out to the street and pleaded with the missionary to send him to the country.

As the two visitors left the neighborhood, about twenty children followed them for a considerable distance begging the missionary pathetically to take them to the country. One little boy came up and said, "Can't you please send me, please mum?" Another quickly added, "An' I want to go, too." "I only wish I could send you all," was the kindly answer of the missionary, whose heart went out to the poor, neglected little ones, so forlorn and unhappily-looking by contrast with the 240 children who romped about the great lawn at our Children's Home last week, and marched proudly and happily in regular ranks into the little chapel, where Dr. Klopsch speaks to them every Sunday afternoon. From this section of the East-side, seventeen children were sent to Mont-Lawn within the next few days.

Every day brings experiences similar to that related above. In almost every instance, the story that is told is an inexpressibly sad one, when we consider the prospects of the young children. "Children!" echoed one poor woman who was visited; "Ay, thank God! I have; but they are all gone, and won't have to suffer here, as I see those around me suffering." And just at present, in the heat of mid summer, with the ambulance bells steadily clanging in the tenement districts, and the cheap undertakers busy among the poor, it certainly would seem that the "children of misfortune" have more of suffering than the rest of the world knows of.

To those readers who have never visited New York, the realistic glimpses of tenement life afforded by the photographic illustrations, will convey some idea of the surroundings of the children of the slums. "Single Alley" in Cherry Street, is the breeding-place of juvenile gangs of boys who are neglected almost from infancy. The group in the photograph is one that is characteristic of the neighborhood. "An East-side court in midsummer" is one of those foul-smelling, super-heated places where the little ones almost bake in the sun. Such are a few of the multitudinous phases of childlife among the tenements of the metropolis.

AN EAST-SIDE COURT IN MID-SUMMER

Among the letters received during the week were many containing most encouraging words for the work. Nearly all the writers, in sending their mite by way of contribution, speak of the great need of such a work among the neglected children as that now conducted at Mont-Lawn bringing them under pure, moral influences and into an atmosphere that benefits them throughout their entire lives. In sending $3, S. M. H., Vineland, N. J., writes:

Would it were three times three; but it may be the means of gladdening one little heart. God bless you and your work is my earnest prayer. How I should love to look in upon your little ones.

Mrs. H. E. S., Woodbury, N. J., writes: (with $42):

From E. B. S., $21, for seven little waifs to be made happy at Mont-Lawn, and $21 from myself for seven more. May the donations be large enough to give every poor child a taste of country life.

PLAYING IN A HORSE TROUGH.

Miss Annie M—, Wylam, Ala., ($1) writes:

I have been made to feel happy while reading of the children at Mont-Lawn, and add my little mite to help, trusting that God may bless this noble work.

"I'm pleased to give one little city waif ten days of rural life," writes another friend, with her gift of $3 for that purpose.

A little boy at Sharon, O., (Lill) sends 10c., and a sweet Christian girl at Clarksdale, Miss., sends 25c., to "help send some child to the Home for a ten days' outing."

Mr. W. S. H—, New York City, writes:

Our dear mother, at four score and four, went home last November. No part of your paper interested her as much as the accounts of the Children's Home, and in memory of that interest I enclose $5 to provide one child a ten days' stay at Mont-Lawn.

Miss S. J. T—, Poughkeepsie, sends $5 to provide an outing for some little girl named "Florence" or "Jennie." "Probably not one-fourth of the needy and neglected ones are reached in the great metropolis," writes P. M. B., Ringtown, Pa., ($2). "I hope the work will go on until all the very poor children are reached. I hope many will come to your aid, so that you can still enlarge the work."

E. H. L., Pittston, Pa., ($3) writes:

I have a little niece who comes to see me often, and when I look into her sweet, smiling, uplifted face, and I see the roses of health on her cheeks, I cannot but thank God for such a treasure, and it was the country air that did it. My heart goes out toward the work you are doing for the little ones of your city.

Mrs. E. B. Little, Morris, N. Y., writes:

I thank the Father of all mercies that he has led you to do it, and pray that many of them may be led to Christ. I think it is, it must be, a soul-saving work you are doing. Enclosed please find six dollars to send two more little ones into the country.

The following sums have been received during the week for the work of the Children's Home.

Previously Acknowledged	$693.75
Mrs J H Norton	25
J Runyon	3 00
Eva E Taft	3 00
Mrs S E Emory	3 00
One of the C. H.'S constant readers, E., Wis	1 00
Louisa J Burlin	75
H Kindermann	5 00
Annie Bradfield	5 00
A young believer Milford, Pa	1 00
Mrs Timpson	5 00
Miss M Tucker	3 00
Geo Sisson	3 00
C W Charles	3 00
Mrs E P	5 00
In His Name, Dubuque, Ia	5 00
A Subscr, Brady Island, Neb	3 00
One of the King's Daughters, Pittsfield, Mass	3 00
Mrs Eunice Cooley	5 00
Proceeds of a fair, Ocean Grove, N J	3 36
A little girl 11 years old, Gravelpoint, Mo	50
Friend in Pa	6 00
H Mary Rose	1 00
Maria E Vinton	3 00
Mrs E B Parsons	1 00
"All of us," Easton, Pa	3 00
Alice D Holmdel, N J	6 00
G & M Paul	2 00
A W Miller	2 00
"Sunbeam Circle," Derby, Conn	3 00
A J —, Lancaster, N H	1 00
Edna and little Dorothy, City Island, N Y	1 00
M Haase	6 00
R J Quall	5 00
Pilgrim Church S S, Canaan, Ct	16 70
Mrs A Bail	3 00
Friend, Binghamton, N Y	3 00
Reader, Palatka, Fla	1 00
Lizzie and Neil Munro	1 00
Mrs Lucy Daly	1 00
—, Blowing Rock, N C	1 00
A well-wisher, Bird Island, Minn	3 00
S J Allen	6 00
Wm Karsteller	2 00
L H M, New York City	2 00
Mrs Facnie Lenma	1 00
Willing Helper, No Rector	1 00
Sam'l Thatcher	1 00
A friend of the children, Lynn, N S	3 00
W Strohmerer	1 00
A friend, Columbia, La	2 00
W K Desh	1 00
Emma U H	1 00
Eliza Belcher	1 00
E M Perrin	5 00
Emma E Allen	5 75
In His Name	1 00
M S, Bloomingdale, Ga	1 00
Adelaide W, Lorain, O	3 00
Total	$888.86

All contributions in aid of the Children's Home will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE BRAZEN SERPENT.

S. S. Lesson for Aug. 11. Num. 11: 4-9. Golden Text John 3: 14. By Mrs. Baxter.

THE judgment of God upon the generation of his people who had believed the evil report of the spies, instead of believing him, had been executed. Forty years long they had wandered, and their carcases were wasted in the wilderness (Num. 14: 33), and "all the generation that had done evil in the sight of the Lord was consumed." But so depraved is our fallen, human nature, that we become accustomed to judgment if we are not living in constant communion with God, and it ceases to have the terror for us that it had at first. The same people who, with the taste of the God-sent manna in their mouths, were so doubtful about God's promises of a land flowing with milk and honey, that they must need send spies to find out whether the Word of their God was to be trusted, were not as a people altered or improved by the terrible judgment of a life-long wandering, the issue of which was to be only a death in the wilderness. The same people twenty years later sinned in the matter of Korah.

It is a bad sign when a child of God takes either mercy or judgment as a matter of course. If we are too much accustomed to our mercies to recognize and to give thanks for them, they have ceased to be a blessing to us. Nothing can be a blessing which does not bring us closer to our God. Our trials are a blessing no longer when we take them as a matter of course, just as a fatalist would, without recognizing God in them. A true man of faith never leaves God out of his reckoning. Whatever happens, his first thought is: "What does God mean by this? Once again the people of Israel were put to the test by thirst: perhaps those who had known and experienced God's intervention at Marah and at Rephidim may have died in the wilderness. But their children, who would certainly have known of God's works from their fathers, took up the old strain of unbelief, strove with Moses, and said, "Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord. And why have ye brought the assembly of the Lord into the wilderness that we should die there, we and our cattle? And wherefore have ye made us come up out of Egypt, to bring us into this evil place? It is no place of seed or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink."

Aaron had died, and subsequently God had given the people victory over Arad, the Canaanitish king. Now their way for some distance backwards to compass the land of Edom, and, doubting the wisdom of him who had undertaken to be their Guide, "the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way." Unbelief and impatience are twin sins, we are not impatient when we are fully convinced that God is making no mistake, and that all things are working together for our good. He whose mind is stayed on God knows what perfect peace means, even in impossible circumstances, when he cannot see one step before him. If it is even the valley of the shadow of death he fears no evil, God is with him as a good, a tried Shepherd, and his rod and his staff comfort him.

"And the people spake against God and Moses. Herein their command was disobedient. Words, although in their hearts there was rebellion against God. Now they have reached the summit of their murmuring, and complain of their great and many blessings: "Wherefore have ye brought us out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? For there is neither bread, neither is there any water, and our soul loatheth this light bread." (Num. 21: 5.) This latter was a direct attack upon the Lord himself—an insult to their heavenly Father. It was true that he had promised their fathers a land flowing with milk and honey, but their unbelief and grievous sins had shown that they were unfit to be trusted with such an inheritance. And now their children, whom God had watched over, nourished, and preserved, in so wondrous a way, cast in his teeth the very blessings which he was miraculously showering upon them, and they say: "Our soul loatheth this light bread." Are we any better than they if we murmur at the lot God has given us in this wilderness world? If we complain that we do not have a richer portion in this life, where is the difference between this unfaithful people and ourselves, except it be that our light is infinitely greater than theirs, and so is our responsibility? The Lord sent fiery serpents among them. They had taken the way of that old serpent, the devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world, and had doubted and criticised God. Now they must have closer acquaintance with the serpents until their poisoned fangs had wrought death and destruction to a frightful degree among them. "They bit the people and much of the people of Israel died." Unbelief and murmuring bring forth death. All the powers of our physical and mental being break down under the strain of a continual and ineffectual struggle against what God permits. Self-pity always blames God for what we suffer; it implies we could have done better for ourselves than he can do for us. It undermines the health of the brain and nerves, it often causes neuralgia and nerve pain as well as other physical evils which proceed from overstrain; and it is yet far more harmful to the spirit. All is possible to him who keeps step with God and who walks with him.

Death was doing its deadly work in the camp of Israel, and at last the people begin to thing of their God, they come to Moses and say: "We have sinned because we have spoken against the Lord and against thee; pray unto the Lord that he take away the serpents from us." (verse 1, R. V.) Perhaps the people were never brought lower than at this time. The more broken a sinner is the lower he is brought down, the more he sees things in their true light. The confession was a full one, no attempt at excuse or at extenuation; and the request which yet the people could not make for themselves, was definite and unqualified; they knew enough of their God to be sure it would be answered. But God's plans of working, and the instruments he uses, are ever-varying as he has new and different lessons to teach his children. He said to Moses, "Make thee a fiery serpent, and put it on a pole, and it shall come to pass that everyone that is bitten, when he seeth it shall live."

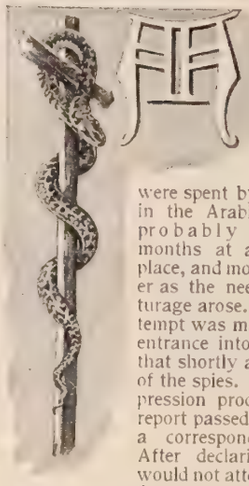
Oh how little the children of Israel understood the sign so fully explained by the Lord Jesus (John 3: 14), and fulfilled in his death for sinners! But one thing they did understand, they must look away from the serpents and the serpents' bites which were working death, right up to God's serpent if they would live. They had quarrelled with God's way for them and God's provision, and he had shown them what the earth they clung to brought forth to them, when they were unshielded by him. Now there was no resource left to them but to look up to look to the serpent of brass: a look away was death. And the event proved that God did not deceive his people: "it came to pass if a serpent had bitten any man, when he looked to the serpent of brass he lived."

Self is death, Christ is life. All which is of self leads to misery, sorrow, trouble, unrest, sin; all which is of Christ brings peace, forgetfulness, at the same moment; looking to ourselves is looking away from Jesus, and looking to him is looking away from ourselves. Just as to look at the serpent's bite was to look away from the serpent of brass, and vice versa. We can only run the race set before us looking unto, taking in, and understanding Jesus, the Author and Perfector of our faith. As we learn Christ, we trust his dealings with us, and no longer loathe "the light bread" which he provides, or are impatient with the way by which he leads us.

The serpent's bite is no uncommon thing. Not only every sin, but all the heart-burnings, jealousies, envies and bitterness, which goad so many, even of God's children, come from the bite of the serpent. To look at our troubles does not lessen them; to look at ourselves and our resources, to meet and to endure them is no better. They do not come by chance; and howsoever the venom originated a mighty hand permitted, and can overule it.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.



MANY years elapsed between the events of last week's lesson and the incident to be considered this week. They were spent by the Israelites in the Arabian peninsula, probably camping for months at a time at one place, and moving to another as the need of new pasturage arose. Only one attempt was made to force an entrance into Canaan, and that shortly after the return of the spies. When the depression produced by their report passed off, there was a corresponding reaction. After declaring that they would not attempt to invade the country, and threatening to stone Joshua and Caleb for urging them to do so; after predicting that they should perish of starvation in the desert, and discussing a proposal to elect a leader and return to servitude in Egypt where they were at least sure of food, they suddenly plucked up courage and resolved to attack the enemy. It was a hasty, ill-advised project; Moses opposed it and would have nothing to do with it. As they were warned, it ended disastrously. A strong force of Amalekites and Canaanites charged on the invaders and drove them ignominiously back. That generation did no more fighting. The remainder of their lives was spent in desert wanderings. At the end of about thirty-seven years, of all those who were over twenty years of age at the Exodus, only three were left alive—Moses, Joshua and Caleb. A new generation had grown up, and had doubtless been drilled with a view to the task they were to undertake. At last, the long-looked-for order to march was given. The direct route lay through the country inhabited by the Edomites, descendants of Esau. Moses asked permission to march through it, but was refused. It was decided, therefore, to go around the country, marching eastward along the southern border of Edom and then northward along its eastern border as far as the land of Moab, opposite the Dead Sea. Anything more dreary than the country they traversed cannot easily be imagined. For nearly a hundred miles the route lay across a level plain blackened with pebbles of basalt and flints with occasional patches of clear sand and here and there a few streaks of yellowish grass. The traveler at this day is not surprised to read the statement that "the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way." Constant vigilance would be necessary against the enemy who might attack such a caravan with crushing effect in such a country. Snakes of many kinds, including the deadly cobra, still infest the district and there is a worm, which is found in the standing water, that is almost as dangerous. Its bite produces fierce inflammation. Sir Risdon Bennett says that in 1877 of 4000 Turkish soldiers in Arabia 2500 fell victims to this worm. Either the worm or the snakes worked fearful ravages on the Israelitish caravan. True to his principle of seeing the hand of God in everything, the inspired historian says that God sent the serpents. He also, on appeal being made to him, provided the remedy which is the subject of the lesson.

And they journeyed. An eminent divine draws an ingenious parallel between the experience of the Israelites and the Christian life. The life of sin he compares to the servitude in Egypt; conversion, to the Exodus, and the trials and worries and temptations of the Christian's course in the world to the wandering in the desert. He points out that the converted person, like the Israelite, expects happiness and joy to come immediately after deliverance, but usually there is a course of discipline, more or less painful, to come first. The difference is that the men did not reach the promised land, while the Christian's inheritance is secure.

The Lord sent fiery serpents. A lady seeing some marks on the shoulders of a beautiful boy, and learning that they were the results of a severe beating administered by his father, expostulated with him, and shortly afterward, he was at her house. "He is much too pretty a child," she said, "to be treated so severely." The father looked at her sadly. "Madam," he said, "if you could see my heart you would see that I suffered more than the child did by the beating I gave him. He is not only handsome, but he has great promise. He will, if he lives, do much good or harm, and it depends on how I treat him which it shall be. I want him to grow up a good man, and I beat him for telling a lie." The Israelites were to do a great work for God, and they were taught by sharp lesson.

They bit the people. A gentleman in India, in reaching a book from the shelves of his library felt a sharp puncture on the hand. He thought it might be done by a pin or a nail, and was not worried about it. But in a short time the hand began to swell and then the arm, and before night he was dead. Search was made in the library and a snake was found among the books on one of the shelves. The cause of death was understood then. The serpent had bitten him. There are many spiritual and moral deaths caused by serpents among the books. Some books are so hateful that they are more fatal than the bite of a serpent.

We have sinned. A story is told by a famous writer of meeting a man far out on the Western prairie who declared himself an Episcopalian. On being questioned, he admitted that he had not been baptized or confirmed, or had been in a church more than twice or thrice in his life. "Then why do you call yourself an Episcopalian?" he was asked. The man said that he was residing some days in New York many years before, and one Sunday morning he strolled into a church. He listened to the service and heard the words: "We have done the things we ought not to have done, and we have left undone the things we ought to have done, and there is no spiritual health in us." The hearer's heart was touched. He said, "these people are like me; that is just my case." As he came out, he inquired what the people were who attended that church, and was told that they were Episcopalians. From that time on he declared himself an Episcopalian. His visitor said if the propriety of the confession was a qualification for membership in the church, that church would be the holiest on earth.

Every one that is bitten. Spurgeon used to say that it was the idea of "a life for a look" that saved his soul. He was trying to do fifty things to secure salvation. He wanted so much to be saved from sin and from perdition. He went one snowy day into a Primitive Methodist Church, not being able on account of the weather to go to the church he usually attended, and there heard a plain, simple sermon from a man whose name he did not know, and whom he never saw again. That man said that whosoever looked to Christ would be saved. A life for a look. Spurgeon did look, and ever after that peace came to him and new life.

When he beheld the serpent of brass he lived. Jesus himself used this incident as an illustration of his work. (See John 3: 14.) It was distinctly "a faith cure." The stricken Israelite might naturally have said, "I do not see how looking at the brass serpent can cure me." Yet that was the way he was cured. So people say now, "I do not see how believing on Christ can make me pure;" yet we know that it is the way to purity of life. Those who look to him with such a look as the bitten Israelite turned on the brazen serpent, get eternal life.

SILHOUETTES FROM LIFE

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BY

Margaret E. Sangster.

SAVED.

A SCOWLING woman slammed the door in Elizabeth's face, the first time she tried to visit the McDale family. "Keep out of my premises," the virago shouted, "or I'll make it worse for you!"

Elizabeth retreated, baffled for the time, but not frightened. Her heart was filled with a great compassion. The glimpse into the McDale home, in the brief instant the door had been ajar for parley, had shown her misery and destitution. A bare room, broken chairs, dirt, squalor, and drink, this summed up the McDales. Father and mother, both inebriates, boys going to ruin, the one little girl already familiar with vice and growing up to be its victim.

Elizabeth had heard that the McDales were considered almost hopeless, and this was why she undertook them. Her husband said that nothing appealed to Elizabeth like out-and-out badness.

She waited a week, and then she called again. This time she was more fortunate. The conservatory was in bloom with roses and carnations, and a window on one side of it was a perfect glory of scarlet geraniums. Elizabeth selected a fine plant, packed it with her, wrapped carefully in paper and tissue paper, and, seeing the little girl (Jessie was her name), playing in front of the McDale's house, she said:

"Dear, I brought you this flower. You have a beautiful sunny window-sill, and it will look very nice there. Give it plenty of water, and it will keep on giving you flowers."

Then she went away.

It happened that Margaret McDale, Jessie's mother, was the daughter of an old-time gardener, and, low though her life had fallen, she still dearly loved flowers. Elizabeth waited another week, and then one morning she rapped again at the door,—this time with a pot of white heather in her hands. If she had known that the heather meant all Margaret's childhood.

Mrs. McDale opened the door wide, and said, hospitably: "Walk in!" The heather had a charm; it finished what the geranium had begun. Elizabeth had effected an entrance, and, once in the house, nobody could resist Elizabeth.

She called often after that, but seldom brought a gift with her. One day she found Mrs. McDale awkwardly trying to mend a pair of "her man's" trousers. Clumsily the hard hands fumbled with the shears and the needle: a look of despair was on the dark-browed face.

"I was a factory-girl when I married Jim," she said, "I never learned how to sew."

"Let me help you, Mrs. McDale," said Elizabeth.

The work was not very attractive, but it was Elizabeth's opportunity. She showed her friend how to set the patch in the knee, and how to press the edges, so that it hardly showed. And then she offered to help her with other mending, and came two or three times a week with her needles and thread and thimble, and she and Mrs. McDale sewed and chatted like comrades, and between them they made Jessie a beautiful new frock.

It was rather a come-down to Elizabeth, soon after this, to call one afternoon, and find that the curse of the McDales was in full activity again. The woman, who had been plucking up courage, and growing neat and clean, had fallen under the dominion of her old temptation. Sodden and stupid she lay on her bed, sleeping the sleep of the drunken, that somehow seems so much more shocking and so much more utterly depraved and degraded, than that of the drunken man.

"Your poor mother is sick," said Elizabeth, while Jessie's scornful and elfish laughter was checked, as she saw the tears in the lady's eyes. And Elizabeth took off her hat and hung it on a nail, rolled up her sleeves, tucked up her skirts, swept and scrubbed and cleaned the house, and cooked a meal for the children, while the poor mother slept like the dead, as only the dead-drunk sleep.

Bye-and-bye, Mrs. McDale stirred uneasily, struggled to rise, fell back on her pillow. Presently, with a basin of water and a soft sponge, Elizabeth was at her side, washing her face, and smoothing away her tumbled hair, then, bringing her a cup of steaming hot-coffee, and a bit of golden-brown toast, she insisted on her eating and drinking.

"I am so sorry you have been ill and suffering," she said, "If it happens again, that you have a bad attack like this, send for me at any hour night or day, and I will come!"

The McDales were like most of us, susceptible to kind words and gentle treatment. Being believed in was something altogether new, in their experience, and, little by little, they yielded to the tender and friendly kindness which refused to hold them aloof. Elizabeth invited them all to dinner, and set the table with her prettiest China and her finest linen. She even took the boys and Jessie to see a panorama; they sat with her in the front row, and held up their heads with pride. Elizabeth's husband found places for two of the big boys, and an apprenticeship to a trade for a third.

Next, the McDale house began to look better. All the chairs were glued, the floor was clean, the stove shone like a looking-glass, the geranium and the white heather had a bright window in which to display their bloom. Is not cleanliness neighbor to godliness?

One day, the foreman in the moulding shop, where James McDale was employed, remarked to his principal, the great iron merchant, "There isn't a better hand in the works than Jim McDale when he's sober, and he's been sober now, for six months. Anyway, he's making good money, and his family are doing well, and they seem to have turned over a new leaf."

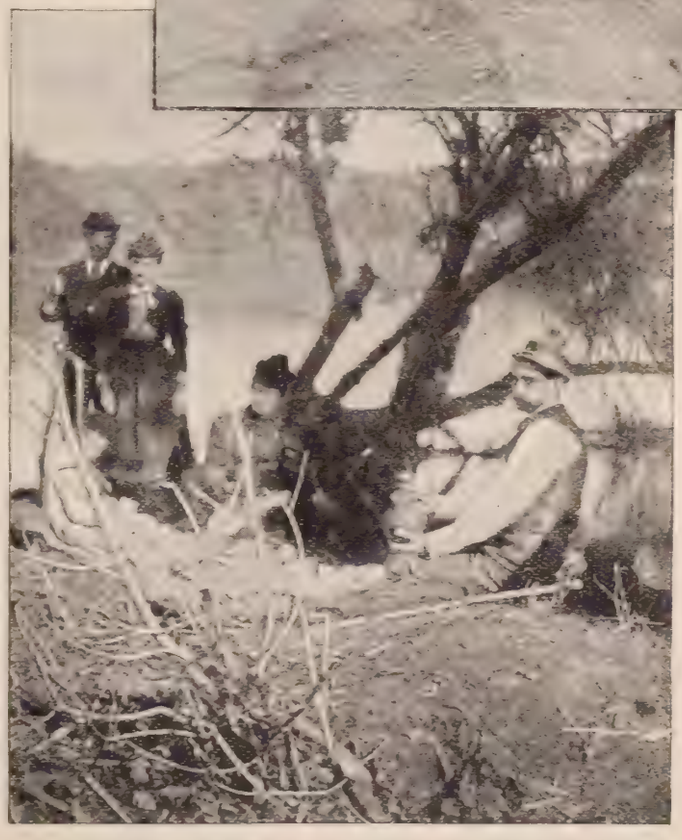
The merchant knew Elizabeth and her husband. He had met them, the evening before this talk of the foreman, at a splendid reception. There the lady was all in sheen and glimmer of snowy satin. The man remembered what a vision of beauty and serenity she had been, the most queenly woman in the brilliant assembly, and he knew, too, that the motto of her life was complete consecration. "God bless Saint Elizabeth!" he said reverently.

And the foreman who had seen and heard something of Elizabeth's quiet and blessed work, said, as reverently, "Amen."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

A NATIVE GROUP.



TOURISTS RESTING ON THE BANKS OF THE JORDAN.

Palestine's Changes.

FACILITIES for visiting the Holy Land are rapidly multiplying and every year witnesses a large increase in the number of European and American travelers to Palestine. There have been many notable changes in the line of progress in Syria in the last half dozen years. Its railways are being pushed forward to completion and colonies of new arrivals, who intend to be permanent settlers, are beginning to dot the face of the map of ancient Israel. Within a very recent date a number of new colonies have been planted in Palestine, their members consisting of Hebrews, mainly from Europe. They have a representative publication in Jerusalem, called "Mich Foh Merez Israel," which gives accounts of the progress of the colonies. In a recent issue it said: "The number of Jewish laborers in the colony of Sichron Jacob, ten miles from Haifa, is seventy-one. Most of these laborers migrated to Palestine eight years ago. The monthly aid received by each person from the administration of Baron Edmund de Rothschild is twelve francs per head. Good news comes from Upper Galilee, where the silk industry progresses and affords steady work to fifty people, besides giving work to many families in Zefath, for learning how to weave is acquired in a short time. In order to get water-power to the manufacturers two brooks are going to be connected. The government has allowed the American Shevj Zion (Returners to Zion) Society to colonize its members in the Holy Land."

Our illustrations on on this page are no doubt familiar ones to those who have visited Palestine. The curious group of inquisitive natives is one that may be encountered at almost any of the Syrian towns and villages,—a knot of villagers assembled to gratify their curiosity and inquisitiveness by gazing at the strangers. Swarthy faces in the queerest of head-dresses, and garments that are a cross between army blankets and gunny sacks. Men, women, and children have the same irrepressible yearning to know something about the West and its people. The native dress gives the group a somwhat picturesque appearance; but the reality, bright and vivid with color, is far more picturesque than can well be described here. In his famous book, "From Manger to Throne," Rev. Dr. Talmage has eloquently described the life and manners of the modern Syrian people and these photographic portraitures will be recognized by all who have read what he has written on the subject. Such groups may be met around Bethlehem, Jericho and Nazareth, or on almost any highway between Damascus and Gaza, Joppa and Jerusalem.

The valley of the Jordan is a focus of observation from many eminences in Palestine, and the sacred river itself is a centre of attraction for travelers generally. Guides and dragomen usually contrive that the route of the pilgrim-visitor shall take him along its banks near some historic spot, rendered dear by Biblical memories. In one of the illustrations a group is resting in a shady grove by the Jordan. Hardly a single foot of its banks have been left unexplored. It shallow beaches or overhanging sides; its smooth, glassy flow where the river widens, or the turbulent torrent that goes surging through the narrow gorges and ravines in its course to the Dead Sea, have been visited by countless thousands of the devout from all parts of the world. Yet to-day the Jordan is as great an attraction for believers as it ever has been in the past, and it will doubtless continue to be so while time endures. It is to the Christian a type of the great river of death that flows between him and the shores of the heavenly kingdom.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by early renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper of each paper sent you will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

THE IRREGULARLY ORDAINED.

IF this world is to be saved to the Lord, the chief part of the work—we are deliberate in what we say—will not be done by the regularly-ordained ministry. Their work is vastly important, and laymen cannot do it any more than ministers of Christ can do the work of laymen. We must have West Point for the drilling of soldiers and the preparation of officers for the field.

Suppose a foreign enemy should attack us, and we must have soldiers in two or three weeks, would we depend upon West Point for all our strength? No! The drum would be sounded and the flags hoisted and the people would come forward, and very quickly an army would be sent to the field. Now, our theological seminaries are religious West Points, where men are drilled for a specific work that no other kind of men can do. But let recruiting stations be opened. Let men who feel that they have Christ in their hearts go out and tell the story, whether presbyteries and conferences and associations and consociations favor such a manœuvre or not, and leave the result with God.

There never was anything yet accomplished for God and the Church unless all the batteries of the "world, the flesh, and the devil," were opened against it. If the work of God is to be revived, there will be carping and criticism, there will be venomous and violent opposition. But what is all opposition, when men stand up in the love and strength of Christ to do their duty? What are all the powers of hell arrayed against the truth as in Christ Jesus, —the plain, simple truth of the Gospel of the Son of God? One shall put ten thousand to flight.

But are there no real objections to an awakening created by such evangelism? Some have said, "Let the work of evangelizing our cities be done by the regularly-ordained ministry." Why, the work has not been done in that way, and never will be done in that way. There are multitudes [illegible] God, who never have been there, and never will be there unless a supernatural influence brings them. You talk about men living far away from church; there are people in our Christian cities who live five thousand miles away from church. In other words, between them and the house of God there is an illimitable desert that they cannot get over. If the people will [illegible] the Gospel, then let men carry the Gospel to them.

Let it be extended by the voice of evangelists, by the voice of Sabbath School teachers, and by the voice of men and women who have had no ordination, but the laying on of hands of the Lord God Almighty.

BEVERAGE FOR HORSES.

THE papers tell us of a sportsman who gave brandy to his horse in order to get it up to proper speed for the race. The stimulus was said to have worked well. Can it be that alcohol, having ruined the human race, is about to invade the brute creation, and that horses, in order to improve their speed, and oxen, in order to augment their draught, and hunting-dogs, in order to endure fatigue, are to have intoxicating stimulant? O spare the brutes! Do not let us have drunken horses, and oxen with delirium tremens, and dogs staggering to their kennel. We do not doubt that temporary strength might be given to beasts of burden by these artificial means, but the stock would depreciate. Neither man nor beast can endure alcoholic captivity.

"No danger," you say, "that animals will become habituated to this evil." Be not mistaken. Let it once be generally found out, as it will be, that strong drink will give unnatural strength to our dumb animals, and farmers and sportsmen will be employing such aid; horses and cattle will learn to like it as well as the human race, to whom intoxicating liquors are at first repulsive, but many of whom have learned to want it; and horses will neigh for it as for water, and the dog will bark in excitement at the sight of a demijohn.

Heaven spare the brutes from this threatened invasion!

A GOSPEL OF FOG.

A CORRESPONDENT writes of a so-called religious service in London. He says that the preacher read well-selected passages from a Buddhist parable, some sentences from Zoroaster, and extracts from the Hebrew Psalms. This was followed by a monologue (instead of a prayer), delivered with open eyes. The sermon was on "William Blake and Mysticism." The correspondent came away feeling proud of our American representative in London.

Our contemporary duly records all this with gravity, and yet to us the story is irresistibly ludicrous. If the preacher had in his audience that day any troubled souls, how they must have been comforted by Zoroaster and the Buddhist parable. We are glad that the preacher kept his eyes open when he was going through his monologue, because then he could see how the thing was taking. We wonder how high he lifted himself up by the straps of his own boots. But if all else failed, we think his sermon on "Mysticism" must have cleared things up. A few more such high-toned religious services and we shall have the millennium. That preacher and Zoroaster beat the London fogs.

EDITORIAL ROOMS.

AS a class we like newspaper men. There is a genial touch in their elbows and a hearty shake in their hands. Some of them fall from grace and get caught under the cylinders of the printing-press and ground to powder: but those whom we happen to know have elevated taste, and means of glorifying it; good appetites and enough to appease them; capacity to sleep well at nights, and a soft pillow to help them.

We enjoy the editorial room chiefly because of its opportunities. If the pen be made of the right metal, and the ink compounded of the right chemicals, the sphere of usefulness seems unbounded. The consecrated printing-press is to be the mightiest agency for saving the world. Editors as certainly need hands of ordination on their heads as clergymen. Our liturgies need another paragraph inserted large enough to pray for all newspaperdom. We need a broom strong enough to sweep out [illegible] the pilfering editorial and the harmful advertisements, the unchaste pictorials, the ecclesiastical disputations, the learned flunkevism, and courage to introduce all that is inspiring and elevated.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

B. Wright, Ridgely, Tenn. 1. Is the leprosy of modern China identical with the leprosy of the Bible? 2. Has the leprosy of the Bible ever been cured?

1. Practically so. There are variations of the disease in different climates, but the general characteristics are the same. 2. Never, save miraculously, so far as known.

J. S. Rutter, Schuylkill Falls, Pa., writes:

In this week's issue, I notice a question by H. F. Morris, referring to "getting old gracefully." He closes by asking what can cure the aching heart that longs for attainments that can never be reached. A little more faith and a complete surrender of self-will settle the vexed question. He who finds in Christ his all in all will be satisfied in youth and serene in old age.

Earnest Inquirer, Blowing Rock, N. C. Are we bound to forgive a man who has publicly wronged us before he makes a public confession of his sin, and makes all the reparation in his power?

It is the man's duty to make such public acknowledgment and reparation, but his performance of it is a matter resting between himself and God. The duty of forgiveness is not contingent upon that. "If he come to thee and say, I repent, forgive him." (See Luke 17: 4.)

C. N., Morning Sun, Ia. 1. Is there a Thibet Mission? If so, by whom was it opened? 2. Who was the young lady that went to Siberia as a missionary to the Lepers?

1. Missions are not permitted in Thibet, although at different times, brave and partially successful missionary work has been performed there. The Moravian brethren occupy several border stations in Little Thibet, and are awaiting an opportunity to enter the country. The Independent Mission, founded by Miss Annie Taylor, is similarly situated, and its missionaries are preparing the ground by sending portions of Scripture, translated into Thibetan, with the co-operation of merchants and caravans. 2. Her name was Miss Kate Marsden.

Inquirer, Kansas City, Mo. Does the misconduct of a wife prior to her marriage justify her husband in proceeding against her for a divorce when he discovers it, even though she may have been virtuous since her marriage?

There are many circumstances which we would need to know before answering the question categorically. We can conceive of cases of the kind in which the husband would be perfectly justified in securing a divorce. In others we would rather urge him to forgive the concealment, and help the wife to lead a good life. She has done her husband a grievous wrong in marrying him without disclosing her shameful past; but it is the spirit of Christianity to show mercy and to forgive. Probably his magnanimity would be a means of good to her and would lead to her salvation, while severity would involve her ruin.

L. D., Jersey City, N. J. Are Congregational ministers amenable to any governing body? If one preaches heretical doctrine, is there no assembly or conference before which he can be tried?

No, the theory of Congregationalism is the complete independence of the individual church. There are Associations, in which churches and ministers unite for fellowship and friendly conference, but they have no legislative or judicial power. They might, by a vote exclude a minister from membership, and such a vote would affect his standing and might cause other churches to hesitate about inviting him to preach, or to become their pastor, but the Association could not prevent his preaching or suspend him from the ministry. Each church is a little republic recognizing no right in any one outside its own membership to control it or its pastor.

Querist S. K. 1. What was the day of Pentecost, and where in the Scriptures is it found? 2. Do you think it wrong for a teacher to take pay for the holidays (legal holidays) that are given? Is it right for her to make them up at the end of the term?

1. Pentecost, variously known as the Feast of Weeks, of First-fruits, and of the Harvest, was the second of the three great annual festivals of the Jewish Church. At Pentecost all males were required to appear before the Lord. See Ex. 23: 15; Lev. 23: 15; Num. 28: 26-31; Deut. 16: 9-12. It fell on the sixth day of Sivan, and lasted one day. See also Acts, 2d chapter. 2. A teacher (we assume you mean a teacher in the schools) has as good a right to her holidays as any other worker. It is not the custom among employers to deduct wages on account of legal holidays, and it would be quite an unusual thing for an employee to be asked to perform extra labor to make up time lost in legal holidays.

E. J. C., Southington, Conn. 1. Is it possible for a person who on his deathbed believes he will be saved, to be deceiving himself? 2. Why was the fig-tree cursed when the season of fruit had not come? 3. If a true Christian in great pain has a desire for self-destruction, is it proof that his mind is unsound?

1. A man may deceive himself on his deathbed as easily as at another time. He is less likely then to attempt to deceive others. The mind is sometimes weaker than in health. Many Christians who would assuredly be saved have fallen into despair at last. The converse is also true. Some who expect to be saved have no just ground for their hope. 2. The tree was probably one of those mentioned in many which blossomed out of season and never bore good fruit. The fruit of a fig-tree appears always before the leaves. When, therefore, our Lord saw leaves on the tree at that unusual season, he would naturally expect to find figs. The cursing of the tree was merely an object lesson to impress on the disciples the evil of pretence. It was a type of the Jewish nation which had no real godliness while professing much. 3. Such a desire in a true Christian would indicate that the mind was temporarily unbalanced, and the man not responsible for his actions.

W. H. Moore, Austin, Tex. 1. Where is Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar's father's name, found in the Bible? 2. Also, where can you find, to be sure your sin will find you out?"

It is not found in the Bible, but in the "Canon of Ptolemy," a valuable astronomical, geographical and chronological work, which contains the succession of Babylonian monarchs from 747 B. C. to 331 B. C. Ptolemy's statements concerning Nabopolassar, who inaugurated a new era in Babylonian history, are confirmed by Abydenus and Berosus, sources of whose writings have also been preserved. 2. See Numbers 32: 23.

Christian, New Haven, Conn. A young man who has spent much time in vocal training wishes to join some evangelist to assist as soloist for pecuniary gain, but to be using his talent for Jesus. Can you, through your columns, give information as to whether such work is [illegible] and how to become acquainted with any who might desire such services?

In the case of a majority of the successful evangelistic singers, it has not been necessary for them to exert themselves to secure such a connection. They sang so well and so acceptably in their own churches and Sunday schools, that evangelists began to send for them. We are assured by the most prominent of evangelistic singers that there is plenty of work for all who are even fairly good singers, and that talent of that description is in demand.

K. Clapp, Logan, Kan., writes, apropos of the letter of "Dumb Christian."

At thirteen I was baptized and joined the Church and tried to have faith that Christ saved me, but no change of heart such as others had experienced. I never received any light as to what was wrong with me until seven years afterward. It had always been impossible for me to talk of religion to my brothers, sisters and associates.

A dear old Christian lady explained to me where the trouble lay, and I determined in my heart, God helping me, I would talk, and submit my will to Him. As I began to take up the cross light began to stream in, and it grew brighter and brighter, until one evening it was like a great burst. The Book says, "faith without works is dead," and all those years I had only a dead faith. So many try to have faith when something must be cleared up in the heart before faith can save. "He that is ashamed of me and my words, of him will I be ashamed before my father and his angels."

M. E. J., Nevada, Iowa, writes:

In OUR MAIL-BAG of June 19, I noticed the letter under the head of "Dumb Christian." I think I ought to give my own experience. I was always an exceedingly timid nature, but from the time my conversion God helped me to take part in meeting. He did not let the people come up before me, but just my duty. But it was almost impossible for me to talk with anyone concerning my own personal experience. I supposed this was timidity. I was taken sick and was an invalid for some years. In the sick room I was much exercised concerning my spiritual condition. I decided that I was a Christian, but was still unwilling to talk. Then was led to see that if I was not a Christian, and was unwilling to say so, then my condition was alarming. I then decided that I must speak of it, looking to God for help. I did. Having spoken to one, I then could have told everybody, and then God made it known to me when I humbled myself that it was pride of heart that had hindered me from talking, and that Satan put it there. Sometimes persons came to my sick room whom I felt it my duty to talk with concerning their own salvation. While interesting them salvation, it was very difficult for me to pass with them, and I allowed some important opportunities to pass. I heard this text read: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," John 8: 16. I felt to make it my prayer for some time that the Son would make me free, that this I could talk freely on the subject of religion.

Jennie Wilson, Clarnida, Ia. We do not know of any series of articles on the subject.——[illegible] Taunton, Mass. No more are needed.——Subscriber. Yes; stamps will be received.——Old Reader, Weissert, Neb. Write to Cook & Sons, Tourist Agents, Broadway, New York, for all information regarding cost of trip to Palestine. All the questions you ask you will find answered in Talmage's book, From Manger to Throne, which is given as a premium to subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at $2.——Mrs. Henry Brock, Newburyport, Mass. No, he never did.——Subscriber. God knoweth the heart. The church will not receive into its members any of the practices of which you write.——Inquiring Subscriber. Concerning the dates you mention we should certainly draw a line at the second and the last three or four.——[illegible] Tiddle, Cal. No, his infidelity was shaken, but he was an unbeliever.——James Bonar, Kewanee, Ill. St. John's age is uncertain, but he is supposed by Irenæus and Eusebius, to have been between 90 and 95 of the Dionysian era, and by Epiphanius and others to have died between 100 and 120, and to have agreed that he reached a great age. 2. He changed.——Inquirer, Graduate State Normal School, Ill. We know of no other.——Mrs. C. T. Parkhurst, Howardsville, Va. It is not mentioned in the Bible.——Mrs. D. A. Hall, Milan Corners, Wis. Write to Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers, New York.——H. C. Leppert, Champaign, Ill. Thank you. Success has been in India and Africa. Statistics do not show what you want.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE MURDERED STATESMAN.

ALL Europe has been shocked by the assassination of M. Stambuloff, the ex Premier of Bulgaria. On July 15, he was attacked on a street of Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, by four men who shot and killed him. He was carried to his home, where he died July 18. His career has been an extraordinary one. He was first heard of outside the Bulgarian principality, in 1876, when he was one of the leaders of the liberal party. He was then thirty-three years of age. He had fought as a volunteer in the Russian army for the independence of his country and had been concerned in several of the plots for wresting it from Turkey. When the Berlin Conference, in 1878, formally decreed Bulgaria's independence, it was understood that the young state would be under the influence and tutelage of Russia. But Stambuloff aimed to make it a strong state, independent alike of Russia and Turkey. That Russia would oppose such an attempt was not to be expected. Alexander, the first Prince, was driven from his throne, and when Ferdinand of Coburg, the grandson of Louis Philippe, was invited, chiefly through Stambuloff's influence, to occupy his place, Russia sullenly refused to recognize him. Ferdinand has reigned for eight years without the sanction of Russia, but it was Stambuloff who really ruled the nation. He strove to make it an orderly, law-abiding country, and he speedily discovered that he had undertaken a stupendous task. Under Turkish rule the land had become infested with brigands and thieves who operated under the guise of patriotism. Stambuloff set to work to rid the country of them and proceeded like a despot, with small respect for legal forms. When he had a disturber of the public peace in his hands he showed no mercy, and if he found that the man was receiving Russian pay, Stambuloff was the more resolute in putting him to death. Russia at length realized that so long as Stambuloff was in power, Bulgaria would never become a vassal province. He was prepared to conciliate her and was anxious to secure her good will, but would not purchase it at the cost of his country's independence. Prince Ferdinand had no principles of the kind. He is not a Bulgarian, and so is not troubled about patriotism. He wanted Russian recognition, and there was little doubt that Stambuloff was sacrificed to obtain it. The statesman was deposed of his office about a year ago, and charges of maladministration were formulated against him. But there was always the possibility of his return to power, and that possibility could be removed only by his death. There was no need to move actively against him. During his administration he made many personal enemies who would be glad to kill him if there was any assurance that they would not be punished. Apparently the time came when they thought it was safe to do the murder and Stambuloff was slain. His death was the penalty he paid for his greatness and patriotism. But it was also a penalty of his own despotic acts. His enemies have applied to him his own methods. More than once he had caused life to be taken without legal justification, when he thought the interests of his country would be served by capital punishment. Now his own life is taken with the same disregard of law. The apostle's words have come true in another case than the one in which he used them: "As many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law." Rom. 2 : 12

An Involuntary Voyage.

A little craft arrived at New York on July 12, after a perilous voyage. On board were only a man and his wife and their two children, one of whom is seven years old, and the other an infant. They came from Bermuda. The man is a fisherman. Illnesses have been hard with him for some months past and he determined to remove to St. David's, another island of the Bermuda group, where he understood there were fewer fishermen and more fish. He put his few belongings on board his little fishing-boat and steered for St. David's. The boat is of the ordinary type, only twenty-five feet long, and has no cabin. He ought to have reached his destination early the following morning, but when the sun rose there was no land in sight. He had very slight knowledge of navigation, and could not imagine where he was. There was no way of finding out, so he concluded to keep on the same course, in the hope of falling in with some ship. It was not until July 5, that he came within speaking distance of any vessel. He had then been three weeks out of sight of land, the little stock of water and provisions he had on board was exhausted, and he had passed through a gale in which it took all his seamanship to keep his tiny craft from going to the bottom. His wife and children had borne up bravely, but they were suffering from exposure and deficiency of food. He was a hundred miles south of the Delaware capes when he was seen from a steamer. The captain told him his position, gave him food and water, and told him what course to steer to reach New York. One week later he entered port safely, having made a voyage of seven hundred miles, and been a month afloat, instead of the short voyage, occupying a few hours, that he intended to make when he set out. How often must he have regretted during the perils of that voyage that he had trusted to his own efforts to find his destination, and did not take compass or chart with him! There are many who start on the more dangerous voyage of life similarly ill-equipped, though guidance is freely offered to all who seek it.

THE LATE M. STAMBULOFF, EX-PREMIER OF BULGARIA.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths. (Prov. 3 : 5, 6).

A Canine Hero.

A pathetic incident in connection with a burglary in New York, has just come to light. A gold-beater, whose offices are in Park Row, found on coming to work a few days ago, that burglars had been at work on his safes. The combination plates had been wrenched off and holes drilled for the insertion of blasting powder. Something appeared to have frightened the criminals, for they had decamped so hastily that they did not wait to gather up their tools. The gold-beater found drills and wrenches and other implements scattered on the floor, just as the burglars had dropped them when they were disturbed. In front of one of the safes was the dead body of the gold-beater's dog. It showed marks of a terrible struggle. The dog had evidently fought fiercely and had turned at bay at the last in front of one of the safes, and had died defending it. The contents of the safe were worth a large sum, as besides money there was a quantity of gold for use in the business, stored there. The owner will have the dog's skin stuffed and placed over the safe he defended. He can truthfully inscribe under it as an epitaph, that the dog was faithful to his trust until death. This would be a better world if the same epitaph could be as truthfully inscribed on the tombstone of every man. It is not often in these days that men are called on to die for Christ; but sometimes there come crises in which fidelity to Christian principle involves the loss of fortune, worldly possessions and social obloquy. But these are as nothing compared with the reward God promises to those who keep their integrity.

Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life. (Rev. 2 : 10.)

Mistaken Identification.

A woman's trick has involved several persons in misery, according to the Wisconsin correspondent of the "New York Times." It appears that at Iron City, Wis., there was a family consisting of a man and his wife and three children, one of whom was an infant. They did not lead a very happy life, owing to the temper of the wife, which was capricious and violent. Last September there was an outbreak that was worse than usual, and the woman announced that she would go away and stay with some friends at Hinckley, Minn. She left, taking her baby with her. Soon afterward, the forest fires broke out, devastating Hinckley, and her husband saw among the names of the dead those of the people with whom she said she would make her home. He went to Hinckley, located the ruins of the house, and found near them the body of a woman and child, which were burned beyond recognition. He believed them to be the bodies of his wife and child and had them decently interred. He removed with his two children to Canada, and early this year married a young lady who had been kind to the children and who made him an affectionate wife. They were living happily, when to their consternation, the man's first wife appeared. She had not been at Hinckley, but at the home of her mother at St. Paul and had stayed there, not communicating with her husband, expecting that he would be distressed and brought to a condition of subjection by her absence. The second marriage, of course, is not valid, and the young wife and her family are in deep distress. The husband also is heartbroken over the misery he has inadvertently caused them. The woman herself who caused the trouble, doubtless also deplores the consequences of her escapade, but there is no way of undoing the wrong. That is the saddest feature of all evil, that wrong-doers cause suffering to others beside themselves, and often it is irretrievable.

None of us liveth to himself. (Rom. 14 : 7).

A Tramping Heir.

A lawyer from Chicago has just succeeded in discovering an heir to a fortune. He found him in a California poor-house. More than forty years ago, he had some acquaintance with the man, but has not seen him since until now. Ten years ago, the lawyer heard that inquiries were being made for his old friend under the stereotyped formula, that if he would come forward, he would hear of something to his advantage. He tried to find the man, but could not. Recently he saw a notice that an estate in England was about to be divided among the heirs, of whom his friend was one, and a warning that if he did not present himself before a certain date, he would be excluded from participation. The lawyer then made another and more energetic effort to find him and has succeeded. He traced him to California, and finally found him in a poor house in Los Angeles County. For twenty years past, the old man has been in dire poverty, and for more than ten years has been living the life of a tramp. He came to this country from England fifty years ago. He was a young man then, and made a good income, but he lost his savings in speculation, and afterwards he lost heart and energy. The share of the estate that now falls to him is valued at $75,000. He might have received it ten years ago, if he had known that he was entitled to it. Now that he does know, there will be no delay in his claiming it. He will not act as too many people do who hear from the pulpit of the heavenly inheritance that has been purchased for them, but who never make any effort to gain possession of it.

The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. (Heb. 4 : 2).

BRIEF NOTES.

The New York State Camp at Peekskill is again this year having the services of the Y. M. C. A. A service of song is held every evening shortly before tatoo, in addition to the other services, and it is well attended.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has just issued its annual report. Its receipts for the year were $1,[illegible] which is [illegible] of the preceding year by $4[illegible]. The number of volumes issued during the year was 3,837,222, of which 2,185,656 were in foreign lands.

A Recent Scientific Traveler in Palestine publishes as the result of his observations, that the Sea of Galilee which is 800 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, is fast becoming like the Dead Sea, with dense water and salt formations on its banks. The traveler believes that the bottom of the sea is sinking and that greater changes in it are impending.

Dr. Arthur Brooks, Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, and a brother of the late Bishop Phillips Brooks, died at sea while on his voyage home. He went to Europe to recuperate, but became worse, and hastened his return in the hope that he might not die until he was among his own people. He was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

Mr. John Burnett, of Emporium, Pa., writes us that a wonderful work of grace is in progress in that town. It began with services held by Mr. T. H. Osborn in the M. E. Church of which Dr. Deavor is pastor. Three hundred persons joined the church on probation during the progress of the services, and on July 7 another addition of seventy-nine was made to the membership.

The American Bible Society's Seventy-ninth annual report shows that a million and a half volumes were circulated during the year. The work in China and Japan has been far larger than in any previous year, the opportunity for distribution furnished by the armies in the field having been greater. The home field has not been neglected. Over 34,000 families have been supplied with the Bible.

Dr. Joseph J. Lampe, of New York, who became conspicuous in the presentation of Dr. Briggs, has been elected to the chair of Biblical Theology in the Omaha Theological Seminary. Dr. Lampe has not yet signified his acceptance of the office, but it is hoped that he will do so, as his talents and attainments are of that order which will be appreciated in a Western Seminary, and his orthodoxy will inspire confidence in the Assembly.

The Baptist Conference for Bible Study has now fully organized by the election of Rev. T. M. Eliass President and Rev. T. D. Hervas, Secretary. It has been decided to hold a public conference next November in the Central Baptist Church, Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. [illegible] may be obtained by writing to Geo. B. Forrester, Esq., 382 Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. [illegible] of enrollment and subscriptions for expenses of the Conference.

Mrs. A. S. Elseffer, Secretary of the New York Flower Mission, writes us that arrangements have been made for the reception of gifts of fruit, flowers, and jellies at 104 East Twentieth street on Mondays and Thursdays during the summer. The mission has a number of [illegible] on its list to whom it distributes the gifts sent to it. They are very welcome, and the mission would be glad to extend its work if more gifts came. Newspapers are not needed. The express companies will carry parcels free if they do not exceed twenty pounds weight.

An Effort which has Proved Very Helpful to poor people has been made by St. Bartholomew's Church in New York. It has established at 211 East Forty-second street a free employment bureau. It is conducted with the utmost care, and persons seeking employment [illegible] frank as to their past record. This fact gives employers confidence in its operations, and persons recommended by it are accepted readily. It has found places for 250 persons a month on an average since it was opened, and its work has been a real help to needy persons seeking employment.

Dr. E. W. Gilman, of the American Bible Society, has received the disquieting news that six native colporteurs have been arrested in China on suspicion of being Japanese spies. They had been sent on a book-selling tour through Northern Kianysu and Nganhui. The American consul succeeded in getting them released, but the general feeling against [illegible] in Szechuen province where the missions have been completely wrecked. Repeated and urgent appeals for help are coming from missionaries in imminent [illegible]

Little Lian of Amoy.

The Story of a Young Chinese Convert, as Related by Miss K. M. Talmage.

THE following pathetic incident of mission life in China comes from Miss K. M. Talmage, who is laboring for Christ at Amoy, where her late father preached and taught for forty five years:

One of the most pitiful cases I have seen of late was that of a little girl whose name was Lian, or Lily, as we should call her in America. I have seen a good deal of her for a year past, and her sad lot interested me deeply. She was given away when a very little child, so she does not know anything about her parents. She was adopted into the family to be a slave, and was made to work, probably being neither well fed nor kindly treated. When quite small, she developed hip disease. She was taken to a hospital for treatment, but not cured. Then she was sold into another family, and four dollars were paid for earnest money. There she was made to do a good deal of washing, and had to stand much in the wet, which brought on a return of her disease. The woman who paid the four dollars, finding she was going to be ill, returned her to her former owners.

Some two or more years ago I was spoken to about little Lian for the first time. A woman told me that a heathen family had a little girl whom they would like to give to me. I asked the age of the child, and was told that she was twelve. At once I knew that there must be something wrong with the child to make the family willing to give her away without receiving money for her. I found her to be a little cripple, not able to do much, and so her owners wished to be rid of her. When I went to her home I found her sitting on a low bench before a low table, making the paper that is most used in idol worship, painting on the gilt with a brush.

The woman whom she called mother said: "Ko-niu, you can have Lian, and she can worship God." I felt very sorry for the child, to see how her life was made miserable, not only by physical pain, but by being told how much she was in the way, and how useless she was. I told the woman how very wrong it was to treat a suffering child that way; that the child was hers, and she should love and care for her. She said a great deal about being poor and being unable to support her, and said over and over again that she wished to give her to me. For the sake of the child I at last promised to have her taken to the hospital, and to see that she was provided for while there, but said that when the hospital closed in the summer, she must let her come home. The mother was not very well pleased with the last part of the contract, but as she saw I was firm, she gave a very unwilling consent. She meant to break the contract after the child was off her hands.

So little Lian was taken to the hospital where I had been matron, when I came from home. She was there a long time and has suffered so much. Sometimes she was so much better that we were in hopes she might get well enough to go to school, but she grew worse again. One day, after she had been lying on her bed for some weeks with fever and pain, I said to her, "Are you not very tired? Your body must be very sore and ache a good deal lying on that hard bed." She looked up and smiled and said, "How did you know that?" She had not complained to me at all. One day I saw her alone and she looked very ill, so I said, "If Jesus wishes to take you home to heaven, instead of making you well, will you be happy to go?" She said, "Yes, I am very happy to go," and seemed to be very peaceful. Lian learned a good many hymns and a great deal about Jesus. She was always in the room when we spoke to the patients on dispensing days so, though often too tired to listen, still she could not help but learn something, hearing of Jesus week after week.

The woman hired to take care of her was not very faithful to her trust, so after the summer vacation, the mother was hired to look after her. At first she came only for the money and was not very kind to the child. But being in the hospital and hearing the Gospel message week after week, she, too, seemed much interested, and the good seed began to take root in her heart. She seemed to grow kinder and more loving to the child. Often when I was speaking to the women she would say, "Every word is true!" and tell the women that it was through the love of God that Lian was cared for, or that there was a hospital where they could come to be healed.

She said that when she spoke of making idolatrous paper again, Lian told her that it would not be right at all, so she was not doing it any more. She attended church quite regularly while at the hospital, and since Lian's death I hear she has been very regular in her attendance.

About five or six weeks ago on returning from a trip of three weeks to visit some station, I found Lian looking very ill. The disease had gone to her lungs. I went to see her on one Sunday and had a meeting with all the in-patients.

We read about the glories of heaven from Revelation. The women all seemed much interested. And it was not many days before our little Lian went to join the number who stand before the throne clothed in white robes, having washed them white in the blood of the Lamb.

A GIRL SERVANT IN CHINA.

A TRIUMPH OF MISSIONS.

It is doubtful whether in the whole history of Foreign Missionary work a record can be found to parallel in rapidity and prosperity the record just made public of the Malaysian Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Malay Peninsula has long been regarded as a most unpromising field for Christianity. It is a long straggling strip of land, extending like a long finger from Siam, and almost touching the equator. Its people and its customs combined to discourage missionary effort, and one and another has turned away from it in despair. But the seed has been planted and the story of the planting is worth studying.

The Malaysian Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been in existence only ten years. When Bishop Thoburn brought Rev. W. F. Oldham to Singapore from the Bengal Conference in February, 1885, he brought no salary with him. Self-support and trust in God were the watchwords of the Mission from the first, and this perhaps is the secret of its success. After holding a series of meetings and organizing a church of about ten members from those who were thus gathered in, the bishop sailed again for India, and left Singapore's first Methodist preacher without any visible means of subsistence. Dr. Oldham at once began to support himself by teaching, and he shortly opened a school, which has had a wonderful development, and is said to be now the largest mission school in the far east, the average daily attendance being over 500.

For the first few years the whole life of the Mission centred around this school. The scholars were mainly from the well-to-do class of "Straits-born" Chinese, and it was through the liberality of the parents and other patrons of the school that the first school-house was built, in which the missionaries and boarding-school boys and one or two teachers all lived under one roof. At the beginning of 1888, three years after the arrival of Dr Oldham, the school was paying the salaries of two additional married missionaries, who had just arrived on the field. These new workers taught in the school all day, and studied the native languages as best they could in their spare time.

The spiritual work among the English-speaking population of Singapore had in the meanwhile been granted such success that there was a fully-organized church prepared to support its own pastor, and a minister was sent out in the following year for this congregation, which to the present time continues to support a pastor.

During the first four years little or no direct evangelistic work was done among the natives, but in 1890 thirty-one adult Chinaman were recorded as members of the church. The total membership of the Malaysia Mission is now 413, of which number about 100 are Europeans and Eurasians, about eighty are Tamils, thirty-one are Malays and Malay-speaking Chinese, and nearly all of the remaining 200 are of the laboring class of Chinamen.

The staff of the Mission now consists of three lady missionaries, (deaconesses), ten wives of missionaries, and fifteen male missionaries who are members of Conference; and out of these twenty-eight workers at least sixteen are already sufficiently acquainted with one or more of the native languages to preach and do other direct evangelistic work among the natives. There are now five native preachers regularly employed, and two or three natives are studying for the ministry. Two new mission stations have been opened during the five years, namely: Penang, where three married missionaries are now at work, and Ipoh, in the native state of Perak, where one married missionary is stationed; two other stations in the vicinity of Penang will be opened during the year if possible. No less than sixteen day schools are now reported, and the number of scholars has increased from 510 to 1668. The number of Sunday Schools has increased with even greater rapidity, fifteen new schools having been added to the one existing five years and the number of Sunday School scholars has increased from 100 to 556.

Another institution called the Deaconess Home is a wonderful centre of Christian influence; twenty-nine native girls have been boarded at the Home during the year. The boys' orphanage is a similar institution for the young people of the opposite sex. It was commenced two years ago, and twenty-three boys are now accommodated. The Soldiers' Home has also been in existence for two years. It is doing a most successful work, and, being supported by local contributions, is in no way chargeable to the Mission funds. As we read the record we say in wonder, "What hath God wrought?"

THE WORLD'S GREATEST CITY.

London's present population is in excess of 4,211,743, which are the figures of the last census. Forty-four per cent. are engaged in personal labor of some sort. Of these workers of both sexes in round numbers, 190,000 are described as professional, 301,000 as domestic, 340,000 as commercial, and 1,000 as industrial, the total occupied classes numbering nearly 2,000,000. Of the industrials, builders and carpenters account for 115,000, mechanics and laborers for 116,000 and "dress" for more than 200,000, about seventy per cent. of whom are women.

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

IX.—MISS L. M. LAWSON.

AMORE undesirable p of property than the Barracks at Atlanta, could not have found in the city, years ago. It wa building erected du the Civil War for temporary accommodation of the soldi. Repairs of all kinds were needed to kee standing, and paint and whitewash ev where to make it habitable by decent ple. But there were two advantages a the property that commended it to Mis M. Lawson, who ultimately became purchaser of it. The house was cheap it was large and roomy. Furniture supplies were given by Miss Laws friends, and in March, 1890, the house came, "The Leonard Street Orph Home." The beneficiaries were little ored orphan girls. In a city like Atl a hotel of that kind would not be likel have any lack of guests. Poor as house was, and small as were the mea comfort within it, the place was a haven of rest and a home of delight t poor orphans for whom it was prov Miss Lawson soon had all the children der her care that could be accommodat

MISS L. M. LAWSON.

For five years this Home has been a hive of industry. The little girls have the school advantages of Spelman Se ary, one of the best girls' schools in South, and they have learned in the h sewing, knitting, cooking and ge housework. More important than all the main object Miss Lawson had in in establishing the Home, they hav ceived Christian training. Miss La was anxious that they should not on be intelligent, but truthful, virtuous and p Her effort was to bring them up as parents might be expected to train thei spring and she has a firm belief that they become Christian girls, truly con ed to God, there is no real ground for fidenee in their future. Religious teac has, therefore, been as prominent as in trial training in her programme and it has been remarkably blest of God.

Few ladies could have brought to a task qualities and experience so well to qualify one for its performance. Lawson is a grand-daughter of the fa Loring Williams, who was Brainerd' sociate in his mission work among th dians. In her youthful days she wa of the earnest band of ladies who la among the miners of Utah under the pices of the New West Education So During her labors there, the hardshi the life among the snows and storms mountains impaired her health forcin at last to seek refuge in a Southern c for the rebuilding of her constitution. went to Chattanooga, Tenn., whe some time she had charge of a hom colored children. There she learned sore was the need of a home for c orphans, and it lay on her heart t could bear it no longer. Her small sa seemed to her an offering to be conse to Christ through the little ones, and s home was established. It costs from to a hundred dollars a month to fee clothe the children, and hitherto the who know the value of the Home, supplied the funds for its support.

A SLUM-CHILD'S PRAYER.

THE evening sky was cloudless; between the tall chimneys on the roof a big star was looking down into the court on the group of boys and girls at one end who shouting the latest street and on the little girl at the other end, was sitting on a doorstep, her elbows knees, resting her white face on her The child was looking back at the etween the chimney pots and praying, ering softly to herself—ease, God A'mighty, childerin all to go away in the coun- Amen."

zie! Lizzie!" A call ed the child. She got up an quickly upstairs.

es, mother—acomin'."

'hat are yer adoin' there downstep?"

Lzie looked up into her er's bloated face with a ened look in her black 'were apravin'."

'hat? A prayin' are yer? ut 'ur?"

ster said we was to ask send some one to take ay in the country."

Jones gave a loud "W'ats childerin a-com- ?" she said. Then, turn- o Lizzie, "Leave off yer ' an' cut across to the sa- is fast as yer legs 'll carry r a pint."

Lzie took the can and trot- ff downstairs. The big as still looking down in- e court. "Please, God, forget," she whispered, e pushed back the swing- oor of the shop. When arted off home again, she she would have to stay rs when she got back, and now she could not pray in oom when mother was ng, as she was to-night, e lifted her thin face to the ar above. "Please, God ghty, me nor John nor ba- or none of us has ever he fields, an' we wants to wers, so please don't for-ish! She tripped over the tone; every drop of the was spilt. "Mother 'll me!" wailed the child, got up and crept home. Jones was waiting. her, I couldn't help it. I over the kerb stone.'

er varmint:" cried the wo- "I'll kill yer. Take that, at." And she kicked and the child till she was less.

h, mother," pleaded the "I couldn't help it. I was in'."

hen I'll teach yer to pray spill yer mother's beer. be off to bed an' don't yer ugly face agin ter-

Lzie crept into bed and turned her tear-stained face to the all. She was smarting all ove with the blows and kicks her other had given her.

od," she muttered rever- ent, between her sobs, "please God don't forget about the coury, please, please," she whispered softly, with a faith wo erful and child-like, and with the pe- tio on her lips she fell asleep.

MONSTROUS FOSSIL FISH.

One of the recent discoveries made by sci ists in the ocean's bed are sufficient to nce those critics who affect to despise the lief that in ancient times there were gig tic fishes as well as land animals. Pro Charles F. Holder writes on this sub- jec "There once was a time when every- thi seemed to attain gigantic size. There we sea serpents as long and longer than the hales of to-day. Sharks one hundred fee ong; crab-like creatures as long as ma as the wonderful pterygotus, and, mo remarkable than all, the shells that to-day are, as a rule, small and delicate, and used in the main as ornaments and curiosities, that in some instances attained gigantic proportions. A diver, in walking along at the sea bottom, would have seen suddenly looming up before him in the distance an object like a gigantic telescope, yet poised in the midwater. At one end projected long arms that waved to and fro, or resembled the pliable spokes of a wheel without a tire. This strange creature was possibly twenty feet in length, and according to Dr. Newbury, the eminent geologist, must have weighed several tons. It was the giant of all shells, the orthoceras titan—truly a titantic monster.

"Some years ago some workmen in the Middle states came upon a number of these shells buried in an ancient beach. The discoverers thought they were cart-wheels, and a local paper facetiously announced the discovery of a fossil chariot wheel, spokes and all. The great shell was as high as some of the boys who stood by, being four feet and a half in height, and resembling a rude wheel. In an attempt to discover the nature of the find it was cut in two, with a stone saw, thus exposing the partitions, which were filled with earth. One of these stone shells weighed several hundred pounds, and, when alive, must have been a singular object, as inverted, in all probability, it moved along the bottom, dragged by its many-armed occupant."

HOMEWARD BOUND.

"A CITY WHICH HATH FOUNDATIONS."—Heb. 11. 10.

L. E. JONES, arr. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

1. Homeward bound, homeward bound by the blest nar - row way, That leads to the
2. Homeward bound, homeward bound to the home of the soul, Where wild storm - y
3. Homeward bound, homeward bound to that coun - try so fair, Where wea - ry ones land that is bright-er than day; Though the shadows are fall-ing, and eve - ning is nigh, bil - lows of earth nev - er roll; Where the Lord of all glo - ry is ev er the Light, nev - er know sor - row and care; Where the burdens and cross-es of earth are laid down,
Yet the rays from the cross point the way to the sky, To the cit - y of gold
Where the ran-som'd shall walk in their gar-ments of white, With the friends on that shore
And the vic - tors re-ceive from their Sav - iour a crown, Where the glo - ri - fied sing with its glo - ry un - told; Homeward bound, homeward bound, Home - ward bound.
we shall part nev - er - more; Homeward bound, homeward bound, Home - ward bound.
at the feet of their King; Homeward bound, homeward bound, Home - ward bound.
Homeward bound, homeward bound.

Copyright, 1895, by James McGranahan.

From "GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2." by permission of the publishers.

THE MISSING ONES.

Reasons for Expecting that Christ's Waiting People will be Removed Before His Coming in Judgment.

BY PROF. JOHN BAYFORD, F.S.A.

Continued from page 481.

IT was doubtless in reference to the truth of the resurrection and the rapture that the Lord Jesus made use of those remarkable words at the grave of Lazarus, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die"—in other words if paraphrased, "the believer, though his life be departed, and he sleep the sleep of death, shall be made alive, notwithstanding, according to my word; for I will raise him up at the last day: and he who believeth in me, and remaineth alive at my coming, shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and shall not pass through death. His vile body shall be changed at once, that it may be fashioned like unto my glorious body, according to the working whereby I am able to subdue all things unto myself."

The Scriptures by no means intimate that all then on earth, who shall ultimately be saved, shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, upon the manifestation of his second advent. A special reward is spoken of, in that day, to be given to "all them that love his appearing," (II. Tim. 4: 8)—"To them that look for him." (Heb. 11: 28)—"To them that may be accounted worthy to escape the things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." (Luke 21: 36)—"To those servants whom their Lord when he cometh shall find watching." (Luke 12: 37).

What can be inferred from these and many similar passages, but that some servants will not be found watching? that some of the Lord's people will be found sowing to the flesh; and that some, thinking that the Lord "delayeth his coming," when he doth indeed come, will be found in the very act of smiting their fellow servants, and eating and drinking with the drunken? (See Matt. 24: 48.)

It is no explanation of these Scriptures to assert, as some have done, that the persons here spoken of cannot be of the Lord's people; they are called his servants in express terms—there are spoken of as being of his household; and further, in reply to Peter's question in Luke 12: 41, our Lord answers that these things are said expressly to his followers, his disciples; adding, as in v. 45 and 46, that the Lord of that evil servant, who thus transgresses, will come upon that servant when he is not aware, and will cut him off (see margin), and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. This servant is not an unbeliever, yet he hath his portion appointed unto him, even with them.

The word of the Lord, notwithstanding, abideth forever, and it is written, "he that believeth shall be saved;" and it is again written, in reference to that day, "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Acts 2: 21). May it not, therefore, be inferred, upon a comparison of these Scriptures, that they who are not found watching and walking worthy, will not be allowed to attain the blessed privilege of being caught up to meet the Lord in the air, but will be left in their mortal bodies on the earth, to take their portion with the world for a season, and going through the tribulation of Antichrist, until it shall please the Lord to deliver them?

A FAR-SIGHTED RELIGION.

Preached in Hanson Place M. E. Church, Brooklyn, by Dr. Louis Albert Banks.

Text: "He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off." II. Pet. 1: 9.

THE interest of our study naturally centres in what is contained in "these things"—for they are the lenses through which we are to obtain far-off views of life and destiny. We have them stated for us with great simplicity in the verses which precede our text. It is interesting to note the suggestion that it is the diligent soul that will be able to use these spiritual glasses. Sleepy eyes never see anything. The victors of life are those who consecrate themselves to earnestness and diligence. The greatest successes are first won in the inner man. The most important battles are first fought on the battle-field of the soul.

> There is a solemn battle-field
> In every human breast,
> Where two opposing forces meet,
> And where they seldom rest.
> That field is veiled from mortal sight—
> 'Tis only seen by One
> Who knows alone where victory lies
> When each day's fight is done.

The first great lens of the Christian soul is faith—a faith like that which Abraham had, who, though he dwelt in a desert, lived in constant view of "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." As Thomas King once eloquently declared, such a faith gilds the horizon of our being with a heavenly glory.

The statement of our text is daily verified in the case of those who, in the absence of this faith, experience a pitiable blankness and barrenness of soul. In the absence of faith, the body weighs us down; we are helpless prisoners in it. We forget our native realm and come easily to believe that the grave is the goal of life. Every argument that can be brought for immortality is of little avail. Even the resurrection of Christ is a wonderful story, merely, to a thorough sensualist whose aspirations have never reached beyond pleasure and the present; whose meditations, sent forth like doves from the floating ark of life, have never brought back a green and budding promise of that solid land.

To feel a conviction of immortality, we must live for it. Let any one firmly believe that the soul is permanent, and live from that belief, and soon existence will seem permanent, too,—the world becomes the veil of a brighter glory that lies behind it: the condemnation of unbelief is lifted off, since the mind conscious of its own rooted being does not wait for immortality, "but is passed from death unto life."

Such a faith renews the youth of the one who obtains his visions of life through it. "They tell me I am growing old," said the great Scotch preacher, Dr. Guthrie, "because my hair is silvered, and there are crow's feet upon my forehead, and my step is not so firm and elastic as of yore; but they are mistaken; that is not I. The brow is wrinkled, but the brow is not I. This is the house in which I live; but I am young—younger now than I ever was be-

Virtue is the next lens which Peter mentions in his conditions of a far-sighted soul. We are to understand by this word virtue, moral goodness, a conforming of our lives to the requirements of the moral law. The man whose habit it is to live like that will acquire what may be called a moral sense, which gives not only a clear vision of what is right and wrong, but enables the virtuous soul to peer through the fog and sophistry of worldly standards, and know intuitively that which is right. It is a very common thing for young peoous sweets of sin to imagine that they are very sharp and shrewd, but we may be sure that it is only the truly virtuous soul that is clear-headed. A world-wide traveler relates that he was sitting one day at table at a restaurant in Paris, when he was unintentionally the hearer of a conversation in a language it was supposed by the speakers he did not understand. A young fellow from London was telling his French tutor of the "very remarkable" conquest he had made upon the boulevards. The "simple youth," as Solomon calls him, was so charmed with his success in so unexpected a quarter, that he poured into the ear of his friend such a romance as might, he believed, constitute the plot of a modern novel. What was his evident surprise to hear from the Parisian, as he pushed back his plate in unconcealed weariness, "My young friend, I have heard all of that more than a thousand times. And one could see by the change that came over the countenance of the "young man devoid of understanding," that he had learned that instead of being a charmer, he was simply a dupe. And any one hearing me to-night who imagines that somehow he can cheat God, and sow to the wind and not reap the whirlwind, may be assured that when he is called upon to pay the cost of his sin, as he undoubtedly will be, he will find the bitterest ingredient in the penalty to be the patent proof that, instead of being a world-conqueror he is only one more fool added to the long row.

Among the Japanese the god of thunder is represented by the most frightful features that can be devised for the countenance of any being at all resembling man. And to this creature the name Ema is given. It is a proverb in the Sunrise Kingdom that "when the sinner comes to settle, he will see Ema's face." It is only the straightforward, genuine soul that can confront all emergencies and fear nothing. How pitiable is all affectation compared to real genuineness of character!

Henry Clay used to relate a story which to his mind illustrated the surpassing tact and natural good manners of American women: During a presidential campaign, after he had addressed a mass-meeting in a Kentucky town, one of the neighboring farmers invited him to a dinner at an early date to meet some of the leading Whigs of the country. When the day arrived, Mr. Clay rode up to the farm-house and was surprised to see no stir of preparation, for the hospitable Kentuckians usually found no banquet too rich for their beloved leader. The farmer's wife, in a home-spun gown and white apron, was feeding the chickens. She turned, startled, then approached him smiling.

"It is Mr. Clay! Come in. My husband will be here in a moment."

She led him directly into her clean, cheerful kitchen, and blew the horn to summon her husband and sons, giving them a warning look as they entered.

"I knew," Mr. Clay said, "there was a blunder somewhere. But there was no hint of it in my hostess' manner, as she soon after composedly placed the single dish of food on the table, and invited us to be seated. The dish was pig's jowl and cabbage, and was exceedingly well cooked. I never enjoyed a meal more, or listened to better talk. When the dinner was over, and I was preparing to mount my horse, the farmer's wife came out.

"'You will dine with us to-morrow, and meet the politicians as you promised, Mr. Clay?' she said. 'We are so honored and grateful by you coming to us alone to-day.'"

The next day a large company of men sat down to a royal dinner. "But," said Henry Clay, "I enjoyed the jowl and cabbage most. It had the flavor of the finest hospitality."

That was a social triumph of the true lady. She had self-composure because she had self-respect and was sure of her ground. Real virtue and goodness is like that. It is in the blood and fibre of the very being. There is a certain self-respect of righteousness, a calmness and a composure, a clear-eyedness of virtue that can never be possessed except by the soul conscious of its genuineness in God's sight.

The Apostle points out here two other lenses—knowledge and temperance—that ought to be born in every one of us by the every-day experience and observation of our lives. As another well says, we ought to be glad, as the years fly and the white hairs and the wrinkles come, that we can win the precious gift of experience from life's treasury, and correct by it our false standards and narrow prejudices. The experiences of life which we are passing through are only of value to us because of the knowledge we are able to obtain and make our own as we pass along the journey. If we are really growing with the years, we shall know it by the deepening of the channel of experience, the rich treasures of knowledge we have gathered, and the temperance and moderation which we have gained in life's school. One may be as old as Methuselah, but if he has gained no knowledge as he has gone along the way, he is yet blind and cannot see afar off. As Dr. Barrows so beautifully says: "It matters not how rudely the winds of fate may shake the time tree, sweeping down the fairest leaves and buds, if we find something within us unshaken, and have made our profit out of every loss as well as every gain. The main thing, in fact the only thing—is to deepen the channel of experience year by year, as we march on, pitching our tent, building our campfire, and leaving behind us graves and broken hopes, and shattered fortunes, tears, sighs, memories sad and sweet—all that part of us that perishes as we die daily, yet live eternally to God."

Patience is another lens through which we are to behold the beautiful visions that are afar off. There is no nobler grace than patience. How many of us come to sorrow through our impatience! Mrs. Browning tells in a poem the story of a little flower that prayed that it might come out before the other flowers, and be in advance of the spring, and said: "How all nature will hail me, how the birds will sing at my advent, how the sun will shine upon me, how the air will stoop and kiss my petals!" And the prayer was granted, and it came before its time, and the snow looked scornfully on it, and said, "Who are you that is like a bit of the snow?" and there were no birds to sing, and the sun hid itself, and the rain was cold and bitter, and the impatient little flower that begged to be born before its time, died before its time. Patience is serene and beautiful, whether in the palace or the hovel. Bishop Horne says of patience: "Behold her appearance and attire! Her countenance is calm and serene as the face of heaven, unspotted by the shadow of a cloud; and no wrinkle of grief or anger is seen in her forehead. Her eyes are as the eyes of doves for meekness, and on her eyebrows sit cheerfulness and joy. Her mouth is lovely in silence; her complexion and color, that of innocence and security; she is clothed in the robes of the martyrs, and in her hands she holds a sceptre in the form of a cross. She is not in the whirlwind and stormy tempest of passion, but her throne is the humble and contrite heart, and her kingdom is the kingdom of peace."

The next lens in this Christian observatory is godliness. And this is true whether we take the word to mean that we shall endeavor to become like God, or whether we shall come to meditate upon him and see him in all things, great or small, in the world about us. Many a fog-cloud is cleared away when we can see God in everything, when we can sing with the poet:

> "I say it over and over, and yet again to-day;
> It rests my heart as surely as it did yesterday:
> 'It is the Lord's appointment!'
> Whatever my work may be,
> I am sure in my heart of hearts,
> He has offered it for me.
>
> "I must say it over and over, and again to-day,
> For my work is somewhat different from yesterday:
> 'It is the Lord's appointment!'
> It quiets my restless will
> Like a wise and tender mother,
> And my heart and will are still.
>
> "I will say it over and over, this and every day, > Whatsoever the Master orders, come what may:
> 'It is the Lord's appointment!'
> For only His love can see
> What is wisest best and right,
> What is truly good for me."

If we rightly appreciate our own relation to God it is easy to look through the next lens, which is brotherly kindness. If you want to find a glass that will show you into the secret depths of the human heart, this is the one to use. Bishop Weaver tells the story of a young lawyer who ... ited a hospital, and sat down by a cot ... talked kindly to a poor, miserable wr... The man drew the bed-clothes over his ... and wept as if his heart would break. W... he could speak he said, "You are the ... man that has spoken a kind word to ... and I can't stand it." Men may t... and talk as they please, but observ... and experience will teach any man of ... mon sense, that the nearest, most ... path to the human heart is brotherly ... ness. John Boyle O'Reilly sings:

> "'What is the real good?'
> I asked in a musing mood.
>
> 'Order,' said the court;
> Knowledge, said the school;
> Truth, said the wise man;
> Pleasure, said the fool;
> Beauty, said the page;
> Freedom, said the dreamer;
> Home, said the sage;
> Fame, said the soldier;
> Equity, the seer;—
> Spake my heart full sadly:
> 'The answer is not here.'
>
> "Then within my bosom
> Softly this I heard:
> 'Each heart holds the secret:
> Kindness is the word.'"

How much we lose in spiritual visi... illuminating the hearts of those we ... through failing to express at a time ... it is needed, the brotherly kindness th... often feel! Bishop Henry C. Potter ... that several years ago a number of ... guished men gathered in Calvary Ch... New York City, to bear their testi... to the life and influence of Dr. E... Washburn. One after another—P... Brooks and others like him—rose in ... places in the crowded church study ... what they owed to the genius, the ... spirit, the unswerving loyalty to dut... splendid courage, the rare scholarshi... philosophic insight, the prophetic utte... of Edward Washburn. At last the ... mony was done. At the door all th... there had stood a slender woman, wh... been during his life nearest to him of ... they had been speaking. "I never ... forget her face," says Bishop Potter ... passion of it and the pathos of it, n... power, tender but reproachful, with ... she spoke, when at length we were ... 'Oh, if you all loved Edward so, ... didn't you tell him of it while he live ..."

One who has mastered the sp... brotherly kindness has already ... through the lens of love—love to ... and love to man. Paul says: "W... him because he first loved us." It ... knowledge of God's love that wins ... Without that precious knowledge w... sing, tremblingly:

> "Oh, how I fear thee, living God,
> With deepest, tenderest fear,
> And worship thee with humble hope,
> And penitential tears!"

But when we see God's loving he... are able to sing with joy:—

> "Yet do I love thee, too, O Lord!
> Almighty as thou art,
> For thou hast stooped to ask of me
> The love of my poor heart."

If we accustom ourselves to the ... these glorious glasses that belong ... observatory of the soul, our hearts ... beat in sympathy with Dr. A. J. G... who has so recently ceased to sing o... that he might join the singers on hig...

> "I shall see the King in His beauty
> In the land that is far away,
> When the shadows at length have l...
> And the darkness has turned to ...
>
> "To behold the Chief of ten thousa...
> Ah! My soul, this were joy enoug...
> 'Twill suffice for the bliss of heaven
> That the Lamb is the light thereof.

FAREWELL TO A CHRISTIAN SU...ER.

Sometime during Philip Phillips' l... illnes, and when it was clear that the S... Pilgrim was going home very soon ... Dr. Talmage sent him from the We... characteristic and cheering note of g... and farewell:

LINCOLN, NEB., June ...

MY FRIEND OF MANY YEARS, PHILIP PH... hear you are going home. I congratul... When you get home kiss for me the scarred ... him who was slain to redeem us. When ... any of my kindred tell them that I expect ... them through grace that saves the chief of ... Cheer up! Cheer up! It will not be a ... between your weary pillow and the City of ... As you go in among the ransomed to resu... work of Christian song reserve for me a ... by the door. Multitudes who were bles... your singing all around the world, will ... shining gate to welcome you. Good-by! ... good-by!

T. DEWITT TA...

Feudal Homes of Japan.

What are Highly Picturesque and Contrast Strangely with European Castles.

JAPANESE is a real lover of nature. If cultured and rich, he does not expend energies and fortune, as too many wealthy occidentals do, in adding dwelling to dwelling and estate to estate, and count- [illegible] em as his chief possessions. A gen- [illegible] of the island empire would be far [illegible] kely to acquire a pretty country seat, [illegible] abomy house and grounds [illegible] where in the vicinity of [illegible] and there, amid his [illegible] rds and green- [illegible] and lily-car- [illegible] ponds, enter- [illegible] s friends with [illegible] pitality which [illegible] beyond that of [illegible] other Oriental [illegible] Trees, flower- [illegible] rubs, and an [illegible] ite variety of [illegible] ng plants are [illegible] his chief [illegible] ures, and he [illegible] rather become [illegible] vner of some [illegible] ld very beauti- [illegible] wer than add [illegible] wealth in [illegible] and stone.

[illegible] it must not be [illegible] posed that the [illegible] ese are insen- [illegible] to the beauties [illegible] ahitecture. In- [illegible] many of the [illegible] structures of [illegible] ter class com- [illegible] ell in grace- [illegible] s of design and [illegible] y of execution, [illegible] not in sheer [illegible], with those [illegible] estern coun- [illegible] although the [illegible] st in style [illegible] always is [illegible] defined. Na- [illegible] Castle (which is shown in the illus- [illegible] may be said to belong prop- [illegible] the era of feudalism, which closed [illegible]. Each feudal chief based his claim [illegible] minence on two grounds: martial [illegible] ss and industrial progress. These [illegible] dwelt in fine buildings suited to their [illegible] social and political position; they [illegible] he patrons of architecture and the [illegible] enerally, as well as the direct pro- [illegible] and supporters of a line of indus- [illegible] r which the country had become fa- [illegible].

[illegible] largely due to the fostering influ- [illegible] exercised over native talent that [illegible] orative industries, and especially its [illegible] c art, have made Japan famous [illegible] hout the world. Some of the deco- [illegible] work, interior and exterior, to be [illegible] in many of the old daimyo resi- [illegible], is a marvel of richness, grotesque- [illegible] nd painstaking labor.

[illegible] ough the daimyos, as a class, no [illegible] exist, the post of art and industrial [illegible] is not left unfilled. Every Japanese [illegible] man is a connoisseur, and delights in [illegible] enting his home with the rarest pro- [illegible] ns of his countrymen's genius in deli- [illegible] ases, plaques, censers, etc., while his [illegible] usually takes equal pleasure in her col- [illegible] th of native gold and silver enamels, [illegible] and embroideries. Her social and [illegible] tic position is higher than that of other Oriental women, and she has a large share in the interests and pursuits of her husband outside the home. At home — whether in castle or humbler abode—she is addressed as "the honorable lady of the house," and is accorded every consideration. Her great consuming question, at the present moment, is dress—whether it is not wiser to adopt the costume of the women of the West and lay aside forever the simple and beautiful garments that have been worn from time immemorial by the wives and mothers of her own land.

Nagoya Castle, the fortress of the important city of Nagoya, is really a relic of old Japan. It is nearly three hundred years old. Occupied by a garrison, its fortress, gates and moats have remained unchanged for many generations. There is a great parade-ground beyond the deep inner moat, and military barracks and offices, with neat little sentries in white duck coats and trousers, who guard the heavy, iron-bound gateways. The citadel has a donjon tower rising five stories in height, and surmounted by two golden dolphins, that were made by Japanese artificers over two centuries ago, and are valued at $80,000 each. Our photograph shows the central "keep" of the citadel, the base of which covers nearly half an acre, while the top whereon the dolphins form a striking finial, is reduced almost to the narrow proportions of a pyramid's apex. Nagoya pottery and porcelain are famous everywhere. There are many features of interest in the city that make it well worth a visit, although it lies somewhat out of the line of ordinary travel.

THE CASTLE OF NAGOYA, JAPAN.

⁂

How to Enjoy Good Sleep.

Many people contort their faces during sleep into bad shapes, and thus form lines and wrinkles that remain during the waking hours. Going to bed in a depressed state of mind causes the corners of the mouth to be drawn down, and gives a sad expression. In going to sleep, think of pleasant things, of your many blessings, the goodness of God, of the joys of life, the blessings of home, friends, parents or children. Under no circumstances let the sun go down on your wrath, or on any other evil thought. If you have enemies, forgive them—even love them. Love is the great beautifier of the face.

⁂

A Grandmother's Tribute.

These lines were written by Mrs. M. E. H., of Toledo, O., a septuagenarian reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on the occasion of the graduation of her grandson, the day being also his birthday:

Another milestone now you pass,
Another as you leave your class,
A time to pause, a time to plan,
As on life's weal, or woe, you scan;
A garden fresh, with skill prepare,
Good soil keep in, old roots dig out,
And fertilize without a doubt.
That with strong will, and God's help, too,
A fairer crop will come to view;
The fungus scale and weeds not right,
Just buried now, and out of sight.
Must be kept down with vigorous care,
And for improvement now prepare,
Till seeds of truth, dropped long ago,
Shall in their place have time to grow.
Love, kindness, charity take the lead,
To help mankind in every need;
When this you do, give Christ your heart,
And there secure the better part.

⁂

A South Sea Island Bridal.

Writing from a mission station on one of the South Sea Islands, Rev. Oscar Michelson, a missionary, gives this description of a native convert's wedding: "The day of the wedding was fixed, and Mrs. Michelson, determined to have her favorite servant nicely dressed, decided to make a "princesse robe" for her. She picked out the prettiest piece of pink print we had in the house and set to work. About one o'clock it was finished, trimmed with lace, and fixed up with roses and a scented handkerchief, and she had a wreath of jessamine and other flowers on her head. Indeed, she was the first native woman I have ever seen who has reminded me of a bride. Such a passage as Rev. 21: 2 has no meaning for them—'a bride adorned for her husband.' Knowing there was some feeling at the village, I was afraid there would be a small meeting. I was delighted, therefore, when I saw a congregation of 220. After the ceremony the whole party came up and had curry and rice. They then went down to the village, where a liberal dinner of roast pork and yam had been prepared by Tinaqua. We sent down tea and bread for all."

⁂

A Hint to Bird-Lovers.

The lives of countless numbers of beautiful native birds would be spared if our country people could be induced to see their own interest in protecting their best friends, the "winged wardens" of their farms and gardens. In England, and especially in Germany, Norway and Sweden, and also in Japan, birds are found everywhere, and are regarded by the people as valuable gifts of nature to man. Shrubs, trees and vines are often planted for the sole purpose of providing nesting-places for certain species. The laws for the protection of birds are stringently enforced by the proper officers. In our own country we should follow this example.

⁂

THE HUMBLE HERO.

To be a hero must you do some deed
With which your name shall ring the world around?
With blade uplifted must you dare to lead
Where armies reel on slopes with lightning crowned?

Or must you set for polar seas your sails,
And chart the arctic's silent realms of snow?
Or drag your barge through virgin streams in pales
Of undiscovered lands? I tell you no!

Who is earth's greatest hero? He that bears
Deep buried in his kingly heart his lot
Of suffering; and, if need be, he that dares
Lay down his life for right, and falters not!

⁂

CHILDREN AND THE BIBLE.

MANY parents find it difficult to interest their little ones in the Bible as fully as they would wish. It will be found a good plan to make a practice of asking the children, after church, something of the Scripture that has been read, the sermon and the hymns which have been sung. A general conversation with the little folks, upon the subject, not critical nor flippant, forms the best occasion for instituting these inquiries, which need not be, indeed would much better not be, direct. It is an unpleasant thought that we ever listen, or that our children can listen, to the sacred words of the Book which we prize most on earth, without comprehending their meaning, or even remembering what they were. There must be something wrong if this state of things is allowed to continue.

It will be found greatly to stimulate the interest of the whole family in the morning Scripture reading, (suggests the "Bible Reader,") if brief comments and explanations are judiciously made from time to time by the older members of the family. It goes without saying that reading in turn by all is more likely to maintain interest than the reading of the whole lesson by any one, while the time consumed in the two methods will not, if the children have been properly trained, differ materially. Everybody enjoys most those exercises in which he has some part himself, unless he is hopelessly lazy or diffident, or has paid for his entertainment. In any case, care should be taken to see that no member of our families habitually listens to the reading of anything, especially the Bible, without paying strict attention to it.

⁂

A Father's Inquiry.

A reader in Chicago sends us this note:

Below I copy an autograph verse, written by my father some years ago, but which I have just discovered. It has an earnest appeal which I thought might be interesting to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It was signed, "Your Anxious Father":

No autographs in heaven!
Yet sinners' names are there!
To Christ the power is given
To write them, bold and fair.
But hark! The Roll is calling
For names, that one-by-one,
From two earth-realms are falling:
Of which are you? Which one?

Starved to Death in the midst of plenty. Unfortunate, yet we hear of it. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is undoubtedly the safest and best infant food. Infant Health is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

SERGEI AND THE STUNDIST'S SON.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

A Court Lady.

NO roof in the Russian capital covered that night a more distinguished company than the brilliant throng at the reception of the Countess Olga Navrotska. Anticipated before they occurred, talked of after they were past, these monthly receptions were events of almost national importance.

It was now twilight, and the great marble staircase and the suite of reception rooms were brilliantly lighted. Everything that wealth could purchase was here in lavish profusion. If the gorgeous "salons" were decorated with a splendor more barbaric than one finds in London or Paris, if more prominence was given to rich gildings, and crystal, and silken hangings than would suit the severer taste of the West, it must be remembered that in these matters, as in many another, Russia is the most westerly of Eastern countries, rather than the most easterly of Western.

But the great defect that one could not help noticing in these brilliant rooms was the utter want of homeliness. They were rooms for parades, with no sign of the taste of the owner, bare of nick-nacks and the little mementoes of travel, and friendship, and love. Away in a remote corner of the huge house there were two or three little rooms, dainty and homelike enough where the Countess lived. These grand "salons" were where she acted. On those she lavished taste and love, and the keenest sense of beauty. Art work and photographs, "bric-a-brac," to each article of which a story was attached, souvenirs of friends, books—all in the happy confusion, the orderly disorder that she loved. There she was mistress, and was at home. Perhaps she was no less at home on parade, as she called it, but she left the management of that half of her life to her majordomo and the upholsterers, affecting little interest in it, and feeling absolutely none.

Her life hitherto had been a varied one. Brought up in the strictest seclusion during her girlhood, in a school rigorously reserved for the daughters of nobles, she left it to become the wife of one of the wealthiest landowners in the Empire, Count Lyov Navrotsky. The Count was no longer young, and had formed objectionable tastes in his youth which he adhered to during his married life. Paris and Monte Carlo were his havens of rest when he grew tired of St. Petersburg and its monotonous distractions, and thither he took his girl-wife, [illegible] she had never even dreamt of, but the vacuity and vanity of which she was not slow to discover. No such feeling as love ever entered the hearts of either of them.

He was proud of his brilliant young wife, and of her dark, radiant beauty. He felt gratified when he looked at his magnificent rubies twined in her black hair. He was pleased that she could speak so many languages, that her music ravished the hearts of all hearers, and that she dressed to the envy of Frenchwomen. He liked to remember one starlit night when she sang a Russian ballad, accompanying herself on the piano, and as the sounds floated out into the hotel gardens how the crowd of wealthy pleasure-seekers flocked round the open casement in honest admiration of "la belle comtesse" and her perfect art. She had met hundreds of men who were only names to her, and who had repelled her by their openly-avowed admiration. She entertained a high ideal as to what a perfect gentleman should be, and her husband nearly reached it sometimes. He was gentle, generous, forgiving, a "bon vivant" it is true, but so were all men, she thought. He was perfectly dressed, and perfect in manners. He had been, moreover, a distinguished soldier, and Countess Olga, brought up in the society of soldiers' daughters, believed that no nobler profession than a soldier's could possibly exist. She kept his medals bright with her own hands, and when he went to Court, or otherwise had occasion to wear them, she fastened them on his breast with her own fair fingers, always touching with her lips the silver St. George's Cross which the Emperor himself had bestowed on the Count for signal bravery on the field of battle. But of the strong, deep stream of love there was no vestige, and the strangest part of this was that neither the Countess nor her husband knew of its absence, or felt the want of it.

They were married for two years when a chill caught by the Count in the uncertain climate of the Riviera brought on a series of disorders from which he never recovered. He returned to St. Petersburg, and for over a year he was nursed by his wife with an exemplary patience and skill beyond praise. He always did his best to alleviate the stress upon her, and, although at times suffering intolerable pain, he seldom uttered a petulant word or gave way to the carping querulousness of the sick. Indeed, in those last days, there was a light in his eyes, and an added tenderness in his voice which the young widow afterward often recalled with tears in her own eyes; and in her heart she believed that the worn out old soldier, the battered old roue, at last, and when it was too late, loved her with all his soul.

The Countess Olga was far too distinguished a person, and far too much in request both at Court and in her own circle of society, to be allowed to remain long in retirement; but when she appeared again it was noticed that although her beauty remained unimpaired, had indeed matured and developed, there was no longer any of that freshness and spring of girlhood which had charmed so many. Her capacity for happiness was in no sense diminished, but an added seriousness rather indicated that her visions of what true happiness was had become loftier and more refined, and that, alas! these visions were subjected to eternal disappointment. If the qualities of kindness, sympathy, tenderness, and goodness were there in richer measure than ever, they could not altogether conceal, indeed, they rather tended to place in bolder relief, the flaws that had also developed—want of purpose and self-government, greed for the praise of her fellows, inordinate, if pardonable, desire to be among those who are renowned. It was in this last characteristic that she drew apart from her surroundings, from men and women who had no ambition, no daring, no capacity for suffering, who had a holy horror either of rising above or sinking below the dead level of uniformity both of deed and thought that marked their narrow and selfish clique.

She stood in her drawing-room this April afternoon, among the throng of titled and dignified-looking nonentities, cool, self-possessed, restrained, appraising most of those around her at their true value, tolerant of their shortcomings it is true, but never failing to discern them.

There is a small and elderly gentleman in black buzzing beside her with a rose-colored order around his neck, and from time to time she listens, half amused, to his brisk, bird-like chirpings. The man's heart is utterly callous, without a particle of sensitiveness; he is obstinate as a mule, and hard and harsh. But he is making court to her by trying to enlist her sympathies for some great humanitarian scheme for feeding the poor of St. Petersburg with one solid meal of porridge a day. He has no feeling for the poor, he knows his scheme will come to nothing, but he is anxious for his hostess's approval, and collapses altogether when she says that she has far too much respect for the poor to make them dependent on the rich, or to expect much from their generosity.

So the little man flutters away, and, to an ancient lady at the other end of the room, expresses his grave doubts that Countess Olga is tainted with many pernicious novelties. But a fat, good-natured colonel of the Guards had overheard the Countess's remark, and asked her in simple terms what she would do if the people could find no work and were starving?

"Ah!" she replied, "I fear I would do nothing. I never have done anything. People have been starving since long before I was born. My own villagers are in want in a hundred ways, and what have I done? What can I do?"

"But we know to the contrary," said the smiling colonel. "We know your village is a model village, and that you gave away thousands to the poor."

"If I give my steward a thousand roubles, and ask him to distribute them among the deserving poor, for you will observe that it is only the deserving poor we help, the poor who give their humble duty and poor flattery in exchange for our alms—is this helping them in any true and just way? Do you know, Colonel, I would rather nurse a poor, working woman's baby for five minutes, and feel the pleasure of that act, than hand her five roubles? The money would corrupt her, harden her, make her greedy and calculating; if I take her child for a few minutes she feels that I'm a woman like herself, and she cries and is soft, and full of hope and courage."

The Countess broke into laughter at the perplexed face before her.

"Yes, yes, Colonel," she said, "I know you are thinking me very revolutionary and all that. I would not really dream of nursing the dirty little things; but I'm laughing at the idea of seeing you start on a career of reform on my lines. Think it over, and when you next go home, try your hand on the babies."

She walked over to where a tall man in a general's uniform stood. He was General Alekhin, her father's cousin, and for forty years his companion in arms. He had sharp features and watery eyes, and lines about his mouth and eyes that care and dissipation had deeply graven. She put her hand in his arm, and together they crossed the salon to an outer room where the guests were already departing. Privy councillors and great officers of state, and dames of high degree gradually filed past their hostess with a few lightly spoken words of farewell, and out into the brilliant starlit evening where the hubbub and stir of departure had collected the same inane crowd of sightseers that had witnessed the arrivals. The General was the last to leave, and when he was gone, Countess Olga Navrotska retired to her own room, flung off her rubies and her magnificent attire, and sat long in deep thought that ended in nothing more effectual than tears.

CHAPTER III.

Two Dragons and their Uncle.

General Alekhin was a man who had spent his sixty odd years of life in doing nothing. Born to a fine estate, with undoubted powers, and plunged in early life into the vortices of fashion and affairs he had had unrivalled opportunities of making a name for himself, and of benefiting in great degree either the circle in which he habitually moved or the numerous people depending on him. But he preferred to remain a fine gentleman, a man about town, a flutterer about the court. He had held light and ornamental positions, living always full in the eyes of the public that had entailed enormous expenditure on him. Before he had reached his prime he was plunged in the gravest financial difficulties.

From that time began his rapid fall. The taste of the bitterness of life was not [illegible] to his moral nature, and he began to oscillate between wild outbreaks of frenzied pleasure-seeking and dark periods of [illegible] sive introspection.

He knew he was a failure, the most [illegible] rible of all knowledge, and all that he [illegible] sensible of now was the hardly varying record of his own sin and folly. Thumbing over this most dismal of all records he had few illusions left about himself, and at the end of his days, the sight of [illegible] ures in which he could not or dared not take part moved him at times to a species of madness.

He would frequently fly to the consolation of religion, and more than once put on a penitential hair shirt in the very [illegible] morning and went to a holy monk [illegible] tablished reputation for sanctity, to confess his sins and seek pardon. There were periods when the terror of an avenging deity was so present with him that he would lock himself into his room for days, and [illegible] superstitious notion was low enough [illegible] absurd enough to practise to avert the [illegible] an angry God. He had not married early life, holding women in contempt and hating the restraints which marriage should impose.

But even in middle life he might have got over these objections. Like so many of his set he might have settled down to the dull decorum of the life of his married friends, and varied it with the usual [illegible] intrigues, had there not been the terrible memory of a terrible sin of years ago that haunted him, and which always quenched his gaiety even its wildest outbursts.

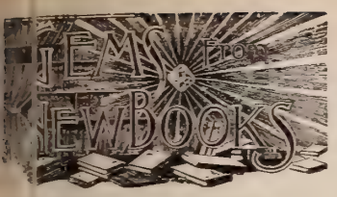
No one knew about that past but [illegible] and his confessor, but this did not help him to bear the burden of it with greater ease, and often in the panic of his fits of [illegible] ance he felt tempted to tell the world what he had done, and then to skulk away from the world forever, and hide his head [illegible] silent monastery where his friend the only would minister to his soul's comfort [illegible] short remainder of his days.

In all the turmoil and trouble of his [illegible] in all his alternations of forced gaiety and profound gloom, he had kept a tender place of affection for his two nephews, the [illegible] of a long-deceased brother. If he had only an ordinary liking for Sergei the younger, he lavished on his brother Vladimir [illegible] warmth of love which his seared and withered heart contained. He was living in the old house of his father's at Lavor when the two boys were brought [illegible] by their dying mother. He had [illegible] to be saddled with these encumbrances, for he could not but feel that he was poor mentor to youth, and that he would [illegible] next to impossible to fill the duties of a conscientious guardian. But he promised to take care of them, to educate and [illegible] them on the world.

With Sergei his task was easy enough. From the first the boy was strong, reliant, independent, and although [illegible] youthful escapades were numerous, serious enough, they were never vicious mean. The German tutor on whom devolved most of the responsibilities of [illegible] dianship took to him at once and [illegible] him much of his disinclination to [illegible] because of his frank genial ways [illegible] entire freedom from everything that was false. The great handsome fair-haired [illegible] was adored by the villagers. He [illegible] every one's cottage and strip of land, [illegible] many horses and dogs each peasant possessed; and on his idle days, and [illegible] were frequent, he wrestled, swam [illegible] and hunted rats with the village boys, [illegible] taining a deep insight into the life [illegible] place, and loving with all his simple [illegible] everything that was pure, and natural, [illegible] true among those humble friends.

Young Mikhail Kulmenko, the [illegible] ist's son, was his chief companion, [illegible] serious-minded and refined youth, [illegible] there were times when these two would separate themselves from the rest of their companions, and in long walks over the breezy steppe, or down among the trees fringing the river, would hold converse on things that lifted their young hearts [illegible] above earth.

(To be continued.)



THE OREGON MASSACRE.*

THE leader of the Whitman massacre was the half-breed, Joe Lewis, whose greatest accomplishment was lying. He seems to have brought the conspiracy up to the killing point by his falsehoods. He was a half Canadian, and came to Oregon in company with a band of priests, and strangely enough dropped down upon Dr. Whitman, and by him was clothed and fed for many months. The Doctor learned his real character, and how he was trying to breed distrust among the Indians. Dr. Whitman got him the position of teamster in a wagon train for the Willamette, and expressed a hope that he was leaving him. But Joe deserted his post and returned to Waillatpui, and as events showed was guided by some unseen power in carrying out of the plans of the murderers.

The Rev. H. H. Spalding, in a letter to the papers of Mrs. Whitman, dated April 18, 1848, gives a clear, concise account of the great tragedy. He says: "They were cruelly butchered by their own, up to the last moment, beloved Indians, for whom their own Christian hearts had prayed for years, and their unwearied hands had ministered to their every want in sickness and distress, and had bestowed numbered blessings; who claimed to be, and were considered, in a high state of civilization and Christianity. They were, by these, urged on to the dreadful deed by the influences, which we have felt coming on us like a devastating flood for the last three or four years.

The massacre took place on the fatal 29th of November, 1847, commencing at about one. Fourteen persons were murdered first and last; nine the first day. Five escaped from the Station, three in a most wonderful manner, one of whom was the traveling writer, with whom, I know, will unite in praising God for deliverance to one.

Forty women and children fell captives into the hands of the murderers, among whom was our own beloved daughter, Eliza, ten years old. Three of the captive children were killed, left without parental care, two being your dear Narcissa's adopted children. The young women were dragged from the house by night and beastly treated. Three of them were forced to become wives of the murderers of their parents, who boasted of the deed, to taunt their victims. Monday morning the Doctor asked the burial of an Indian; returned to the house and was reading; several Indians, as usual, were in the house; one sat behind him to attract his attention by asking for medicine; another came behind him with a tomahawk concealed under his blanket and with two blows in the back of the head brought him to the floor senseless, but not lifeless; soon after, Tetalus, a candidate for admission in our church who was receiving unnumbered days every day from Brother and Sister Whitman, came in and took particular pains to cut and beat his face and cut his throat but he still lingered till near night. As soon as the firing commenced at the fireplaces, Mrs. Hayes ran in and assisted Sister Whitman in taking the Doctor from the kitchen to the sitting-room and seated him upon the settee. This was before his face was cut. His dear wife bent over him and mingled her flowing tears with his precious blood. It was all she could do. They were her last tears. To the question she said, he would reply 'no' in this case, probably not sensible.

John Sager, who was sitting by the door when he received the first blow, with a pistol, but his arm was seized, the pistol fell among Indians, and his head was split to pieces. He lingered till near night. Rogers, attacked at the water, escaped with a broken arm and wound in the head, and rushing into the house, shut the door. The Indians seemed to have left the house now to assist in murdering others. Mr. Kimball, with a broken arm, rushed in; both secreted themselves upstairs.

"Sister Whitman in anguish, now bending over her dying husband and now over the sick, now comforting the flying, screaming children, was passing by the window, when she received the first shot in the right breast, and fell to the floor. She immediately rose and kneeled by the settee on which lay her bleeding husband, and in humble prayer commended her soul to God, and prayed for her dear children who were about to be made a second time orphans and to fall into the hands of her direct murderers. I am certain she prayed for her murderers, too.

"Every corner of the room was crowded with Indians having their guns ready to fire. The children had been brought down and huddled together to be shot. Eliza was one. Here they had stood for a long time surrounded by guns pointed at their breasts. She often heard the cry, 'Shall we shoot?' and her blood became cold, she says, and she fell upon the floor. But now the order was given, 'Do not shoot the children,' as the settee passed by the children, over the bleeding, dying body of John.

"Fatal moment! The settee was advanced about its length from the door, when the guns were discharged from without and within, the powder actually burning the faces of the children. Brother Rogers raised his hand and cried out, and fell upon his face, pierced with many balls. But he fell not alone. An equal number of the deadly weapons were leveled at the settee and the discharge had been deadly. She groaned, and lingered for some time in great agony."

*From Foreman Jennie, a capital Christian Endeavor story, by Prof. Ames R. Wells. Illustrated; pp. 268; price $1.25. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston, publishers.

Dr. Marcus Whitman Saved Oregon, by Rev. Myron Eells, M.D., LL.D., with introduction by Rev. Eric W. Gunsaulus, D.D., LL.D.; illustrated. One of the most interesting books of missionary experience in the Northwest that has yet appeared. Cloth covers; gilt top; price $1.75. Star Publishing Co., Chicago, publishers.

A HELPFUL TALK.*

"I WANT many things, more money, and greater skill, and knowledge, and influence; but this is only laudable ambition, Mr. Strong," said Jack.

"As far as it is, it is all right, and will strengthen you. But I am greatly mistaken if this desire for what you have not does not often make you discontented and unhappy, envious of men and rebellious against God, and so incapable of doing your best work for God and men. Now, try to conquer this great weakness. Try to trust always in God, and to accept with absolute joy and satisfaction the measure of success God grants to your earnest efforts; try to keep this up even for a week, and you will find that you cannot do it without Christ."

"Excuse me, Mr. Strong, but you have used a phrase that I often hear on the lips of ministers, and it always seemed to me a bit of mysticism." (Jack was proud of that word, "mysticism." It compressed into small space a world of sarcastic argument.) "Just what do you mean when you speak of doing things 'with Christ' and 'without Christ?'"

"Mr. Edways, do you see Christ standing there?"

The tone was so vivid, the gesture so earnest, the look so genuine and expectant, that Jack was startled, and followed the outstretched hand as if some vision were before him.

Then Jack, ashamed of this bit of weakness, answered boldly, "Mr. Strong, I am not a girl, to be scared, or a spiritualist, to be credulous."

"Did he not promise when he rose, to return and be with men forever? Do you not admit omnipresence to be a necessary attribute of deity?"

Jack assented.

"Ah, you believe with the head alone. If Christ is omnipresent, he is here. Right by your side. He will pass out that door with you. He will stand by your bedside to-night. He will be your first greeting to-morrow morning. He will go to your work with you after breakfast, and to the restaurant when you lunch. Too literal? Why, if omnipresence is not taken literally, how can it be taken? Now, you are living as if this Presence were not with you, and I am living ever conscious of him, seeing him as clearly as with physical vision, talking with him, getting answers from him every time I question him, and helped by him at every turn. Do you see the difference between doing things with Christ and without him?"

"I see your meaning; but, Mr. Strong, your words seem as unreal as dreams."

"Alas, comrade, I cannot make this blessed experience real to you. No one can but yourself. Arguing never led a man to Christ. You have many noble qualities. You are strong, and honest, and industrious, and intelligent. I know more of your life than you think. But I want you to stop thinking about what you have, and begin to long for what you have not—this Presence. It is as sad to miss heaven by not taking the step up as by taking the step down. Study the Life. Try to be like Christ. Lift him up before you in your eager thoughts, and see if he does not fulfil his promise, and draw you to himself."

Jack carried away from that frank talk just the feeling Paul Strong had hoped to inspire—the beginning of a distrust in his own powers, his own ability to see truth, the beginning of a longing that truth—he who is Truth—might be shown to him. And this longing received its satisfaction in a fearful experience.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Whisperings of the Spirit, by Amanda P. Michener and My Heart Life, by Annie F. Michener. Two collections of poems bound in one volume. Pp. 360; published by J. B. Lippencott Co., Philadelphia.

Ninth Biennial Report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture for 1893 and 1894. Edwin H. Snow, Topeka, State Printer.

Little Lady Valentine, by Mrs. George A. Paul; a dainty little story for young folks. Pp. 66, illuminated covers, price 50c. Thomas Whittaker, New York, publisher.

Dishonesty and Caste, by Ethel Davis: an interesting volume of the economic class. Pp. 118, cloth covers, price 60c. Home Science Publishing Co., Boston, publishers.

Veterans

Of the war often need the toning, strengthening effects to be found in Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read this:

"My husband has suffered for years with catarrh, rheumatism, and chronic diarrhœa contracted in the war. In the fall he had the grip and came near death's door. He could not eat or sleep and was much emaciated. One bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla did him so much good that he kept on taking it. He now has a good appetite and has gained in flesh. I think it saved my husband's life. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter. I know Hood's Sarsaparilla will do what is claimed for it." AMANDA CASTETTER, Mt. Jackson, Ind

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eye to-day,

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, headaches. 25c.

Consumption Cured.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE:
"As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies, and very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,
(Rev'd) C. H. Spurgeon.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

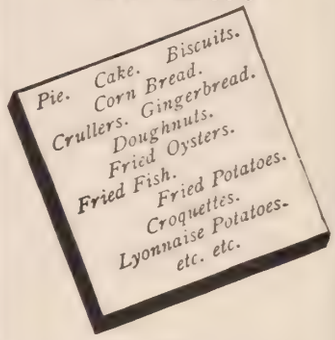
FOR

Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis,

Acts like a charm in ordinary Coughs, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough. Send 25 cents for Book on Consumption, containing accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases. Any one of which may be like yours, or the Book will be sent free with trial bottle for $1.00. Larger sizes, $1.75, $3.75, $7.

GEO. T. CONGREVE,
367 Canal St., New York,
and London, England.

Good Things To Eat



must be put aside by many, because of the misery of dyspepsia, which follows in the majority of cases the eating of food in the preparation of which lard is used. The above dishes, when prepared with will not offend the most sensitive stomach. It is a clean, sweet preparation doing the work of lard without its ill effects. The genuine Cottolene is put up in one, three and five pound tins with trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

Cottolene

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

YOU HAVE SEEN

POZZONI'S POWDER

advertised for many years, but have you ever tried it?—If not,—you do not know what an IDEAL COMPLEXION POWDER IS.

POZZONI'S

besides being an acknowledged beautifier, has many refreshing uses. It prevents chafing, sun-burn, wind-tan, lessens perspiration, etc.; in fact it is a most delicate and desirable protection to the face during hot weather.

It is sold everywhere.

We guarantee

Heiskell's Ointment

to quickly and permanently cure Eczema, Scald-Head, Barber's Itch or Tetter without the aid of internal medicine.
50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO.,
531 Commerce St., PHILADELPHIA.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!
A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,
F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

The Family Wash Blue. ALWAYS RELIABLE.
For Sale by Grocers.
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 N. 2d St., Phila., Pa.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Mammoth Puzzle, Fairy Bottle, Pocket Camera, Latest Wire Puzzle, Secret Photos, Total Value 60c. Sent Free with immense catalogue of 1,000 Bargains for 10c., for postage.
INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on July 21, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

On Behalf of Relatives and Friends: "One who Believes."—Boston, Mass., for the conversion of a wayward husband.——"A Follower," for the conversion of her husband and son.——A Sister in Christ, New Hampton, for a father who is drifting into infidelity, and in danger of losing his mental balance; and for a mother in need of grace to bear patiently and lighten her heavy share.——"Believer in Prayer," for the conversion of a brother-in-law who is very worldly.——Reader, Racine, Wis., for a grandson who is out of Christ.——"Believer," Illinois, for the conversion of and nephews.——"Believer in Prayer," Pittsburg, Pa., for the conversion of husband, son, daughter, and son-in-law, all of whom are indifferent to the claims of Christ.——C. I. P., Howardville, N. Y., for husband and daughter, both of whom have wandered away from the Saviour.——"A Mother," Brattleboro, Vt., for a dear son who is away from home and is neglecting church.——Wife and Sister, New York, for husband and two brothers, all drinking men.——Anxious Wife, Ark., for the conversion of self and husband.——E. N., Indianapolis, Ind., for the conversion of husband, son, and mother-in-law.——Subscriber, for the salvation of a brother who has fallen under the power of drink; also for a mother seventy-five years old and unsaved; also for an afflicted daughter.——L. G. B., Lynn, Mass., for a girl in the Sunday School, that she may see the awful nature of her spiritual life as God sees it, and may turn to Jesus for salvation.——"In Jesus' Name," Mount Vista, Cal., for the conversion of a young man of good moral life who does not realize his need of salvation.——"Anon," for a gentleman and his wife who are in some need of converting grace.

For Restoration of Health. "Constant Reader," Wis., that a sister who is sick in body and mind may be healed.——J. G. D., Philadelphia, on whose exertions an aged mother and two children depend for support, that God would in mercy remove the affliction now crushing her and give her back her strength to labor for her loved ones.——K. L. W., Penn., for the recovery of an only sister from nervous prostration.——F., West Rutland, Vt., for the restoration of health.——Sufferer, Whitley, Ont., who is suffering from neuralgia, that God would mercifully give relief from agony.——L. J., W., Boston, Mass., that a Christian woman partially paralyzed and under great spiritual depression, may recover her health and gain new faith and joy.——W. C., Elliott's Corners, Ont., Can., for recovery from sickness that her little children may not be left motherless before they are able to earn their living.——A. R. B., Bristol, Con., who has been raised from a bed of sickness in answer to prayer, that strength may be given for daily labor.

For Special Blessings. Afflicted Christian, Palisades, for grace to overcome a besetting sin and opportunity to serve God in the ministry.——"Follower," for strength to stand firm under present trying circumstances.——"Faith," Brighton, N. Y., for financial help in conduct of business.——"Constant Reader," Racine, Wis., for a Christian son in need of help that he may be enabled to pay his just debts.——W. T., Tiptonville, Tenn., for God's blessing on a series of revival meetings to be held this week in the county, that God would bring many souls into his kingdom.——K. L. W., M—— City, Pa., that an only child, now estranged, may be restored to the family and be reconciled also that an operation about to be performed may be successful.——"Subscriber," that God would supply the wants of a very needy family and that a great sufferer may have the means to secure the aid of a competent physician.——C. L. M., Fort Plain, N. Y., that funds may be supplied sufficient to enable him to complete his education.——Minister of the Gospel, Utica, N.Y., that his wife whose faith is shaken through severe physical pain may be enabled to regain her assurance of salvation; also that God would support him, his provision for his old age having been swept away by the failure of a financial institution.——"Widow in Sorrow," that she may be enabled to pay debts incurred through sickness and that the way may be opened to support her family and to live in some place where they can have the consolation and help of religious services.

AN IDOL'S BATH.

A missionary in India relates the following interesting incident: "Shortly after our arrival at Trichinopoly, we drove to the great Trichinopoly rock. This is a strange, rounded cliff, either of granite or of red sandstone, rising 600 feet in the centre of the town. Near the top of the rock a great Hindoo temple is built of blocks of granite, decorated here and there with domes and gay coloring. A broad flight of steps, nearly 500 in number, led to the summit, and at every landing there are shrines with hideous and contemptible idols in them. Into the temple itself no English person is allowed to go. As we got to the entrance to the great steps, we heard the noise of heathen music coming down the street, and found that the daily morning ceremony of fetching water from the sacred river to bathe the idols was being performed. Two Brahmin priests came first, bearing great vessels crowned with green, and then the temple elephant, decorated with bells. A few people followed; the procession almost brushed past us in the narrow entry. The priests hastened up with the water, the elephant flapped his great ears and curled his trunk, and stood patiently aside. Oh, the wondrous patience of our holy God! If these iniquitous temples mean so much to us, what must they mean to Him? Yet His patience with the heathen is as nothing compared to his patience with us; we are put 'in trust with the Gospel,' and yet we scarcely stir ourselves to exercise our trust. God forgive us!"

THE ETERNAL HOME.

ALONE! To land alone upon that shore!
With none in sight that we have seen before,
Things of a different hue,
And the sounds all new,
And fragrance so sweet the soul may faint.
Alone! Oh, that first hour of being a saint!

Alone! To land upon that shore
On which no wavelets lisp, no billows roar.
Perhaps no shape of ground,
Perhaps no sight or sound.
No forms of earth our fancies to arrange—
But to begin alone that mighty change!

Alone! The God we love is on that shore,
Love not enough, yet whom we love far more
And whom we've loved all through,
And with a love more true
Than other loves—yet now shall love him more:
True love of him begins upon that shore!

So not alone we land upon that shore:
'Twill be as as though we had been there before.
We shall meet more we know
Than we can meet below,
And find our rest like some retiring dove,
And be at home at once with our Eternal Love.

—F. W. FABER.

Columbia Bicycle

advertising has for months been conspicuous by its absence. 1895 Columbias at $100—finest, easiest-running bicycles ever produced at any price—have been doing their own advertising.

For the first time this year we can assure reasonably prompt delivery of regularly equipped Columbias and Hartfords.

You See Them Everywhere

Pope Manufacturing Co.

General Offices and Factories, Hartford, Conn.

BRANCH STORES: Boston, New York, Chicago, Providence, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Washington, San Francisco.

HIGHEST PRAISE

By W. A. OGDEN. The LATEST and BEST collection of NEW SONGS for SABBATH SCHOOLS. $30 per 100; by mail, 35c. each. Sample copy sent on receipt of 25c.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy

By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S., London.

D. G. LONG & CO., 613 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Every one should read this little book." Athenæum

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O.

Began 71st year Sept. 2. Board, tuition, Furnished room, 4 weeks, $8.50 to $3 a week. 8 courses; no saloons. Cheap, safe. Largest attendance yet. Catalog free. W. A. WILLIAMS, D. D., Pres.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.

From New York. A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Through Tickets, Single and Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c., Georgia and Florida. Write for our 64-Page Prospectus, mailed free.

C. H. MALLORY & CO., Agts., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, China Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is a pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Guarantee Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalogue.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illustrated Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We advise you to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the supply.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

Walter Baker & Co. Limited,

The Largest Manufacturers of

PURE, HIGH GRADE COCOAS and CHOCOLATES

On this Continent, have received

HIGHEST AWARDS

from the great

Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Caution: In view of the many imitations of the labels and wrappers on our goods, consumers should make sure that our place of manufacture, namely, Dorchester, Mass. is printed on each package.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD. DORCHESTER, MASS.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It's much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. Cleaning. NO Cracking. Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,

70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use, Traveling, etc.; Invaluable and Indispensable; Soft Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for Circulars; agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO.,

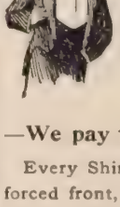
56 Broadway, New York.

The "Great Wonder" Shirts

—FOR MEN AND BOYS—



unlaundered, made of fine quality linen and muslin in our own carefully supervised workrooms, every way excellent. These Shirts—at the surprisingly low price of

63 Cents

—We pay the postage—

Every Shirt is full size, has a reinforced front, patent back facing to fit accurately, excellently made, and is sure to give satisfaction. In fact, I know of no Shirt in the market at near the price, that can compare with it.

If not satisfactory, money will be promptly refunded.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER.

Dry Goods, PHIL.

CAUTION.

Spoons and forks not our make frequently sold as "Rogers." Our trade mark is 1847 Rogers Bros. We guarantees original genuine goods, and plate that wears, on nickel-silver. Look out for imitations.

MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Conn.

Good News for Asthmatics.

We are very glad to be able to publish, for the Congo river, West Africa, is now in touch of sufferers from Asthma. As we before announced that new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases, free of cost, to sufferers.

That tired, languid feeling indicates a lack of vitality in the "current of life." Hood's Sarsaparilla is the one true blood purifier, vitalizing and enriching the blood.

A COLLEGE EXPEDITION.

From the Madura Mission in India comes an interesting description of a preaching expedition of the students of the Pasumalai Theological Training College. Rev. J. P. Jones set out as soon as the harvest was over and the people would have leisure to attend services, on a journey through the country, taking with him his students, who were quite willing to close their books and take an open-air excursion. "We took fourteents," he says, "and there were twenty-three of us. We set up the tents seven times, and made a stay of several days each time. The distance from one camp to the other was generally about eight miles. Each company's ground was in the centre of a group of villages. We divided into five parties, and every day at 6 A.M. the parties started in different directions as previously agreed upon, each party being assigned to one village. Before midday I would return. The afternoon was spent in Bible-reading and prayer, and in the evening we had a magic-lantern service for all who would come to the camp. Each of the five parties gave invitations at the villages visited in the morning. The people crowded to them from neighboring villages, giving us large and very attentive audiences, the truth being pressed home to them through eye and ear. These services we have had every night. You can easily imagine that in this way our days were full of hard work. Indeed, I doubt whether I ever saw a more tired party than we were at the end of this itineracy. We thus have moved, and covered thoroughly, an area of some 200 square miles, visiting 252 separate villages, some of them several times, holding 648 meetings, and addressing about 30,000 souls."

MISSION WORK IN GABOON.

Writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from the Protestant Mission, Liberville, Gaboon, Congo Francaise, Rev. Robt. H. Nassau (the story of whose life-work in Africa appeared in these columns some time ago) says: "It will please you if I refer to an incident—which you printed in your issue of Dec. 27th, 1893,—about a native catechumen and her catechism. It was perfectly true, unvarnished tale. Its sequel, that a year later, she came here with her husband—whose house is near this mission-house. She diligently attended not only the Sabbath services, weekly prayer-meetings and weekly inquiry class, but also a Bible-woman's weekly school. I baptized her last year, with a good confession. What a light there is over her face now! Our artist in that picture happened to get pretty exactly her dress, and wasn't very far from her face. She looks younger now and wears more dress. This very day I found her sitting in the church (I do not keep the door locked; it is open for entrance). She was reading in the New Testament the uniform School lesson for next Sabbath, John: 35-49. She seems to be a very happy woman. My work in this old (fifty-two years since this station was planted), and somewhat difficult station is just now encouraging, by some hopeful ingathering of fewer educated wanderers, and an increased attention at church services by young men and women—really gentlemen and ladies—former pupils of this school. I told my church members lately in a prayer-meeting that, while I did not cease to pray for them and for the adjacent heathen, I was more especially praying for the wanderers and for the children in the congregation."

PROFLIGATE RECLAIMED.

In the course of a letter to the "Missionary Herald," Mr. Fowle, the American Board's Missionary at Cæsarea mentions an interesting case of conversion at that place. It was that of a young man of perhaps twenty-three years of age, who himself confesses that there is no form of wickedness in which he has not become proficient. He had become a burden to his friends and a terror to all, but in some way, we did not learn how, about three years ago, he heard or read in Ezekiel that if a man turn from his evil ways he shall live. The wickedness itself had brought its own disgust, and he turned unto the Lord for pardon. The change in life and character, according to his own testimony and that of others, was simply marvelous, and he is now doing all he can to atone for the evil of the past. When asked what he would do if the church thought best not to receive him just now, he replied pleasantly and promptly: 'I'll wait until they do. In the meantime I'll throw my one stone.' This was a reference to the answer given not long before to an inquiry about the prophecy of the valleys being filled. (Luke 3: 5.) The missionary had said that a valley might be filled if every man threw in but one stone. The man simply meant that whether he was received or not, he would do what he could for Christ's canse.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

Mrs. David Simpson, Pa.
A family being led by Jesus.
R. W. Jones, Iowa.
Miss Lydia B. Holmes.
Melissa Haswell.
——, Eden, Ont., Can.
Mrs. E. S. Adams, Kans.
One of the C. H.'s constant readers, E., Wis.
Geo. W. Sharp.
Friend in Pa.
Mrs. Annis Storm.
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.
C. A. G., Hazleton, Pa.
Mrs. A. A. Fordham.
Miss M. Cole.
A Mother, Lowell, Mass.
W. K. Desh.
"Nobody cares," East Shelburne, Mass.
Mrs. M. E. Hartzell.
John T. Clegg.
James Bonar.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"JESUS ONLY."

(Matt. 17: 8.)

"JESUS only" is my need;
"Jesus only" is my creed;
"Jesus only" is my life;
"Jesus only" saves from strife.

"Jesus only" brings me joy,
Blissfulness without alloy;
"Jesus only" is my trust,
Loving to the uttermost.

"Jesus only" would I preach;
"Jesus only" would I teach;
"Jesus only" saves from hell;
Trust Him and thou doest well.

"Jesus only" from above,
Fills my soul with peace and love;
"Jesus only" is the way
To heaven's joys and endless days.

Rochelle, Ill. —CHAS. W. McCROSSAN.

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS. Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.
They never fail. Read this testimonial
MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 18 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R.I.
J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N.Y.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Handmade Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty.
KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego, N.Y.

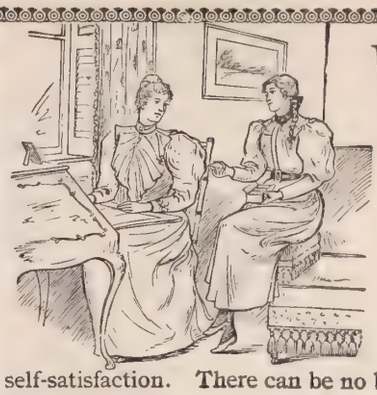
WALL PAPER.
Samples free from largest Wall Paper concern in U.S.
KAYSER & ALLMAN 832-834 Market St. 418 Arch St. Philada.

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP
For the Skin, Scalp and Complexion, the result of 20 years experience treating the skin. A book on dermatology with every cake. Druggists sell it.
John H. Woodbury, Dermatologist, 127 W. 42d St., N. Y. City. Send 10c. for sample soap and 150 page book.

Busy Women should use— WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

Are you Nervous?
Try Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
Dr. C. GROPPNER, Holyoke, Mass., says: "I am prescribing it in nervous diseases, with the best result. It makes a delicious drink."

Few are—Kidney & Bladder Diseases.
If you are a sufferer from kidney or bladder disease, pain in back, or rheumatism, you should send for the new botanic discovery Alkavis, which will be sent you free by mail postpaid, by the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and you should try it, as it is offered you free.



Write a Letter.

If your dealer sends you any other soap for Copco, send it back and write him a letter. He has an eye to business—you should have an eye to self-satisfaction. There can be no better soap than in quality, in purity or efficiency. It's the best soap the best soapmakers know how to make. The price is but 5 cents. Don't decide that it's too cheap to be good—try it! You've often paid double the price for poorer soap.

COPCO
TRADE MARK.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, New York, St. Louis.

A Healthy, Clear Skin
Is not only a great comfort, but is a recognized point of beauty. We have thousands of letters saying it can be Secured, Retained, By
using Comfort Powder. When used often, pimples and other inflammations disappear. Tan, Sunburn and Roughness from exposure at once relieved by
Comfort Powder
The Comfort Powder Co., Hartford, Ct. 25c. and 50c. a box.
All Druggists Sell It.

THE GREAT CHURCH LIGHT REFLECTORS FOR OIL, GAS OR ELECTRIC LIGHT
I. P. FRINK, 551 PEARL ST. N.Y.

SAGENDORPH'S PATENT SECTIONAL
STEEL CEILINGS and SIDE WALL FINISH. Splendidly Adapted for Churches.
Catalogue, prices, and estimates, on application.
THE PENN IRON ROOFING & COR. CO., (Ltd.)
22d and Hamilton Sts., Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia, Pa.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Decorative, Durable and Best
For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.
H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
Ladies Send this adv. and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one-quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INCOMES—BIG PREMIUMS, &c.
C. H. The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

CARD PRINTER FREE
Sets any name in one minute; prints 500 cards an hour. YOU can make money with it. A font of pretty type, also Indelible Ink, Type Holder, Pads and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker, worth $1.00. Sample mailed FREE for 10c. stamps for postage on outfit and large catalogue of 1000 Bargains.
E. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

THE PEERLESS STEAM COOKER
Cooks a Whole Meal Over One Burner, on gasoline, oil, gas or common cook stove. The steam whistle blows when Cooker needs more water. No steam in the house! No offensive odors! Burning, scorching or overcooking impossible. Vegetables that always lose much of their flavor and become watery, soggy and indigestible by boiling, are made dry, light and healthful. Meats and poultry, no matter how tough, are made tender and palatable. Will Pay for Itself in One Season for Canning Fruit. The Housekeeper's Friend; the Agent's Bonanza. Agents Wanted, either sex. Exclusive territory.
Address PEERLESS COOKER CO., Buffalo, N.Y.

1895 High Grade Bicycles
Shipped anywhere C.O.D. Saving you dealers profit.
$100 Oakwood for $62 50
$85 'Arlington' " $45.00
$65 " " $37.50
$20 " " $10.99
Latest models, wood or steel rims; pneumatic tires; weight 17½ to 30 lbs; all styles and prices. Large illustrated catalogue free.
Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B 18, Chicago

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that replaces, relieves & CURES RUPTURE
No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. 1000's of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.
Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO., 27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

"Eli" Baling Presses
38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power
46 Inch Feed Opening. Bell. Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL
Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.
COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

BUY DIRECT AND SAVE DEALER'S AND AGENT'S PROFITS.
$12 buy our Oxford Boss Bicycle, suitable for either sex, made of best material, strong, substantial, accurately adjusted and fully warranted. Write to-day for our large complete catalogue of bicycles, parts, repairs, etc., free. THE OXFORD MERCHANDISE CO., 338 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

$5 00 EVERY DAY! Do you want to represent a large manufacturing company? We will employ a lady or gentlemen in every locality at once. No experience required. This is not an advertising scheme but a genuine offer by a responsible concern. No money wanted, simply your name and address. Write today and learn how easily you can make $5 a day.
LEONARD MFG. CO. 20 ADAMS STREET CHICAGO, ILLS.

Delicate Cake
Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30cts. Circulars free.
Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 0 St., Bath N.Y.

It was before the day of SAPOLIO They used to say "Woman's Work is never Done."

Pears'

It does nothing but cleanse.

It keeps the skin soft.

No alkali in it; nothing but soap.

A Strong Back

Most suspenders—like most men—get weak in the back as they grow old. Not so with the Harris Wire Buckle Suspenders. The Grip Back outwears the web. The

HARRIS WIRE BUCKLE

is stronger, smoother (no rough edges) and more quickly and easily adjusted than any other suspender buckle made. 25 cents—at your furnisher's or by mail.

To help you to a knowledge of these superior buckles and their Harris Patents we will send for 10 cents a handsome silk watch fob with gold plated buckles together with a book that tells interesting facts about the Harris comfort.

Harris Patents

Wire Buckle Suspender Co. Williamsport, Pa.

A WORD IN YOUR EAR

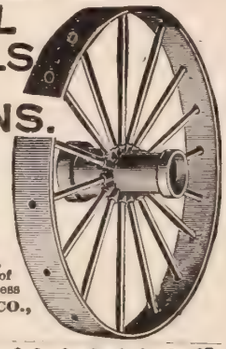
THE SECRET OF BEAUTY of the complexion, hands, arms, and hair is found in the perfect action of the Pores, produced by

Cuticura SOAP

The most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

METAL WHEELS for your WAGONS.



Any size you want, 20 to 56 in. high. Tires 1 to 8 in. wide—hubs to fit any axle. Saves Cost many times in a season to have set of low wheels to fit your wagon for hauling grain, fodder, manure, hogs, &c. No resetting of tires. Cat'g free. Address EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

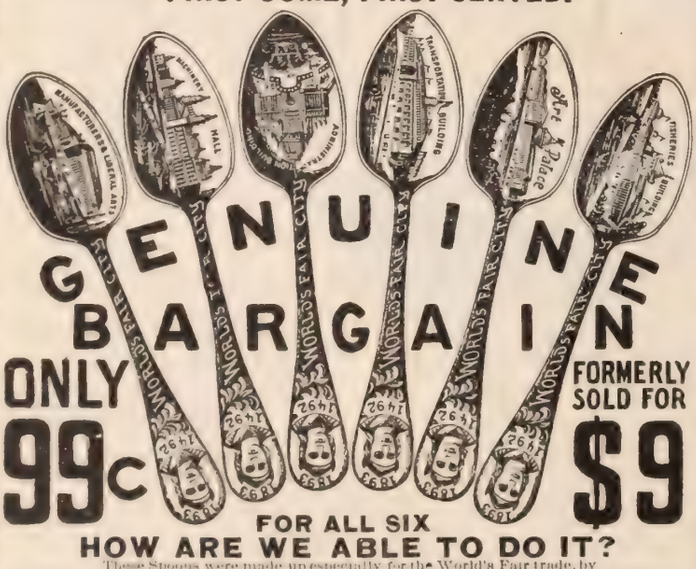
YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'



FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These Spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD, and were left on their hands. In order to dispose of them Quickly, we make this unheard of offer: SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, massive one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00; we now offer the balance of the stock at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant plush lined case, properly packed, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange. Individual checks not accepted. Postal Note or currency. Money cheerfully refended if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5, 152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE

FREE
As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant, fashionable, warranted 6 jewel watch, and recognized American movement for 10c. and postage etc.

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

WATCHES. Best line lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 25 Union Square, New York. Mention The Christian Herald

GUNS.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

WANTED AGENTS to sell Sash Locks & Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free by mail for 25c. stamp. Best sellers ever invented. Beats weights. $12 a day. Write quick. BROHARD & CO., Box 106, Philadelphia.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

is uniform and reliable.

A Great Bargain.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

$3.75 FOR $1.75.

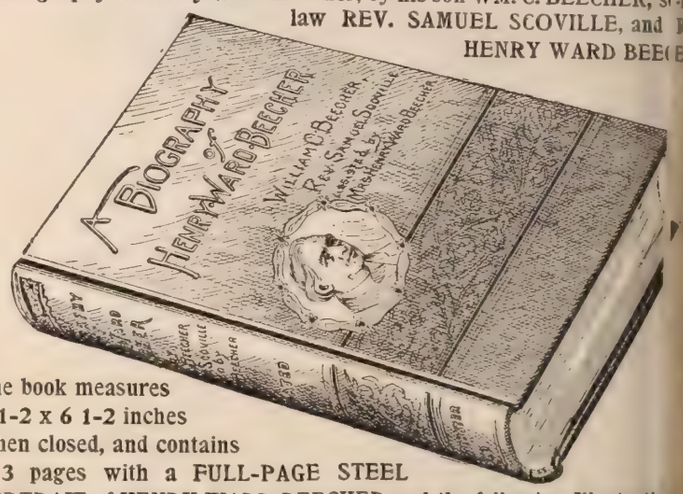
So many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN H[ERALD] have requested us to make another special re[duction] on the magnificent

Biography of Henry Ward Beecher,

that we have concluded to offer the balance [of our] stock of this interesting Life of the Great [Preacher] (only a few hundred copies), at

—HALF-PRICE.—

A Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, by his son WM. C. BEECHER; s[on-in-]law REV. SAMUEL SCOVILLE, and R[EV.] HENRY WARD BEE[CHER.]



The book measures
9 1-2 x 6 1-2 inches
when closed, and contains
713 pages with a FULL-PAGE STEEL
PORTRAIT of HENRY WARD BEECHER and the following Illustrati[ons]:

1. Anvil and Oak Stump.
2. Foote Coat-of-Arms.
3. Church in which Lyman Beecher preached, in East Hampton, L. I.
4. Beecher Residence at Litchfield.
5. Room in which Mr. Beecher was born.
6. Elms and Well which mark the Site of the "Beecher House" in Litchfield.
7. Facsimile of the first Letter of Mr. Beecher.
8. Ingersoll House.
9. Stairs in Catharine Beecher's House in Hartford.
10. Mr. Beecher at the time of his Marriage.
11. Mrs. Beecher at the time of her Marriage.
12. Church at Indianapolis.
13. Mr. Beecher's House at Indianapolis.
14. Mr. Beecher and his Father at time of [going to] Brooklyn.
15. Pinky's Freedom-Ring.
16. Mr. Beecher in 1850.
17. Mr. Beecher at the close of the War.
18. Mr. Beecher and his Sister, Mrs. H. E. Stowe.
19. Cottage at Peekskill.
20. Old Apple-Tree.
21. Mr. Beecher on his Farm.
22. House at Peekskill.
23. Hall in New House at Peekskill.
24. Mr. and Mrs. Beecher at the time of [their visit] to England in 1886.
25. Lying in State in Plymouth Church.

Is beautifully printed on fine book paper, in large, clear type and [bound] in Seal Leather.

So many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have taken advantage of the special price offered on these books that the various styles of binding are all sold out except SEAL LEATHER. This is a beautifully [bound] book, with marbleized edges and has sold heretofore for $3.75.

Special Offer. Send us $1.75, to [which add] with 25 cts. for expressage and we will send the Book at once, PREPAID.

EVERY ONE PURCHASING THE BOOK IS DELIGHTED WITH [IT]

Mrs. J. Wrigley, Elmira, N. Y.: Mr. Beecher's Biography came duly at hand. I am very much pleased with it, and think it's really worth the full price.

Mrs. S. J. Davis, Rochester, N. Y.: Received the book of Henry Ward Beecher; was very much pleased with it. It came nicely, and I am very much obliged.

Mrs. Henry Stringham, Crum Elbow, N. Y.: "Please accept our sincere thanks for the [promptness] with which you forwarded the Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, in response to our order. [It was re]ceived in good condition, and we are [well] pleased with it."

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest Express office.

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 260 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A Grade, $60. Write to-day.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. NUMBER 32.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 7, 1895.

PRICE, 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

GLADDENED 2602 LITTLE WAIFS.

What has been Accomplished by Our Fresh Air Fund thus Far—Tenement Children Pleading to be Taken to Mont-Lawn—A Sunday Talk to the Children.

EVERY passing week sees an increase in the work of our Fresh Air Fund, and a larger number of tenement children transferred from city alleys and slums to the fresh, cool, green meadows and daisied fields at Mont-Lawn. Last week was the busiest of all, both at the Children's Home and in the city where our mission workers and the pastors, Sunday School teachers and others who are cooperating with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been indefatigable in their work of tenement salvation. This augmentation of effort at the present time is for the purpose of saving as many tenement children as possible from sickness, for August is a month peculiarly hard upon the tenement dwellers, and usually marks a dreadful period of mortality among them, through the diseases to which the children of the very poor and the neglected waifs are rendered especially liable by the unwholesome surroundings. It certainly is anything but a pleasant experience to visit these localities in midsummer; but the Christian missionary, bound on the Master's service knows nothing of personal discomfort. It isn't difficult to find localities where there are hundreds of children absolutely dying for the lack of fresh air and wholesome food—dying by inches, their lean bodies and sad, expressionless faces telling all too plainly the story of an inheritance of suffering and neglect. Wherever one of these weaklings can be brought to the Home, it is done without delay, and the result is always a happy change in the child who returns to the city strengthened, encouraged, and with a much better prospect of living.

Ever since the founding of our Children's Home up to the present time, 2602 little guests have been received, fed, sheltered and instructed there. It is conducted on the plainest plan imaginable, and the neediest and poorest children are made welcome, no distinction being recognized on account of nationality or religious antecedents. The motto of the Fresh-Air Fund is simply to do all the good it can to all the children it can reach, who have no other means of being helped. And any one who ever went among the dwellings of the very poor, must come back from such an experience convinced that there is no greater or more urgent problem before the Christian world than how to give those little ones the breath of air that means life and health, and also to implant in their young hearts the germ of that more precious life that comes to all who know and love the Divine Friend of the children—the lowly Jesus. Surely Christians, when they recall the fact that their Master's childhood was one of poverty and mean surroundings, should have a specially compassionate corner in their hearts for the poor children.

TENEMENT CHILDREN PLEADING TO BE TAKEN TO MONT-LAWN.

From a Photograph taken of a rear Courtyard in Hamilton Street, New York City.

We do not believe it is possible to estimate, even approximately, the great amount of good that has already been accomplished through the Fresh-Air Fund this season. Words cannot weigh the value of the happiness it has brought to hundreds of homes, and the vigor and buoyancy it has imparted to a host of frail and delicate little bodies. Greatest of all, perhaps, is the spiritual outcome of the work. It has opened the doors of dissipated and drunken homes to moral influences, and in helping the child has also bettered the parents. In more than one instance, families seem to have begun a new life since their little son or daughter came back to them fresh from the influences of the Home at Mont-Lawn and told them of the kindness of the good missionaries, and the prayers that the young guests learned to say night and morning and the beautiful hymns. Thus the children themselves become unconscious evangels of truth to their own parents and home is happy indeed.

Somewhat in line with this phase of Christian experience was the address delivered at the Sunday School session to the children who met in the little chapel at Mont-Lawn last Sunday afternoon. The speaker displayed on the desk as an object lesson, a seven-branched candlestick, in which had been placed wax candles: a small pink one, a white one, a yellow, two larger pink and two plain white. A candle needs the application of fire to be of any use, the speaker explained. The kind of candlestick is immaterial, and the kind of candle is not important either, so long as it will burn. A small candle too, he remarked, can light a big one just as well as a large candle could. The human heart needs the touch of Christ to kindle it to light and acceptable service. Thus, though it be but the heart of a little child, it may be instrumental in bringing some other heart—perhaps that of an older person—to Jesus, by touching and lighting it in turn.

A New York broker, continued the speaker by way of illustration, had become a slave to drink. Try as he would, he could not overcome the evil habit, which assailed him every evening. He resisted as long as possible, but the struggle usually ended in the man leaving home after dinner and returning at a late hour intoxicated. In his sober moments he deplored this sinful weakness, and in conversation with his wife declared he would do anything to overcome it. His words set his little daughter to thinking. She was only a child of ten, but she had learned to know Jesus and she loved to serve him. She had heard her Sunday School teacher say, in his address to the school shortly before, that Christ was able to keep us from falling. With the quick perception of a young mind, it occurred to her that her papa could be saved from that terrible thing that worried him and mamma so much. So, after turning it over in her mind a little longer, she resolved to speak to her father about it at the breakfast table next morning. But at breakfast time, her courage disappeared; she couldn't open her lips to frame the words, as she had intended. Next morning and the next and the next, the failure was repeated. It worried her greatly. At last a new idea came to her relief: she would write her papa a letter, telling him how he could find the help he needed. When the letter was finished, then there arose the question how it was to be delivered, and the little maid was as sorely distressed as before. The difficulty was solved, however, when she decided to write him a big card and leave it in his dressing-room. This is what she wrote:

DEAR PAPA: JESUS CAN CURE YOU. JENNIE.

She set it up in a corner of his dressing-case, and as the room was dark, she placed in front of the writing a small pink Christ-

Continued on page 507.

MAN OVERBOARD.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Jonah 1: 6, "So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not."

GOD told Jonah to go to Nineveh on an unpleasant errand. He would not go. He thought to get away from his duty by putting to sea. With pack under his arm, I find him on his way to Joppa, a sea-port. He goes down among the shipping, and says to the men lying around on the docks, "Which of these vessels sails to-day?" The sailors answer, "Yonder is a vessel going to Tarshish. I think, if you hurry, you may get on board her." Jonah steps on board the rough craft, asks how much the fare is, and pays it. Anchor is weighed, sails are hoisted, and the rigging begins to rattle in the strong breeze of the Mediterranean. Joppa is an exposed harbor, and it does not take long for the vessel to get out on the broad sea. The sailors like what they call a "spanking breeze," and the plunge of the vessel from the crest of a tall wave is exhilarating to those at home on the deep. But the strong breeze becomes a gale, the gale a hurricane. The affrighted passengers ask the captain if he ever saw anything like this before. "Oh yes," he says; "this is nothing." Mariners are slow to admit danger to landsmen. But, after a while, crash goes the mast, and the vessel pitches so far "a-beam's-end" there is a fear she will not be righted. The captain answers few questions, and orders the throwing out of boxes and bundles, and of so much of the cargo as they can get at. The captain at last confesses there is but little hope, and tells the passengers that they had better go to praying. It is seldom that a sea-captain is an atheist. He knows that there is a God, for he has seen him at every point of latitude between Sandy Hook and Queenstown. Captain Moody, commanding the "Cuba," of the Cunard line, at Sunday service led the music and sang like a Methodist. The captain of this Mediterranean craft, having set the passengers to praying, goes around examining the vessel at every point. He descends into the cabin to see whether in the strong wrestling of the waves, the vessel had sprung aleak, and he finds Jonah asleep. Jonah had had a wearisome tramp, and had spent many sleepless nights about questions of duty, and he is so sound asleep that all the thunder of the storm and the screaming of the passengers do not disturb him. The captain loses hold of him, and begins to shake him out of his unconsciousness with the cry, "Don't you see that we are all going to the bottom? Wake up and go to praying, if you have any God to go to. What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not." The rest of the story I will not recapitulate, for you know it well. To appease the sea, they threw Jonah overboard.

Learn that the devil takes a man's money and then sets him down in a poor landing-place. The Bible says he paid his fare to Tarshish. But see him get out. The sailors bring him to the side of the ship, lift him over "the guards," and let him drop with a loud splash into the waves. He paid his fare all the way to Tarshish, but did not get the worth of his money. Neither does any one who turns his back on his duty and does that which is not right.

There is a young man who, during the past year, has spent a large part of his salary in carousal. What has he gained by it? A soiled reputation, a half-starved purse, a dissipated look, a petulant temper, a disturbed conscience. The manacles of one or two bad habits that are pressing tighter and tighter will keep on until they wear to the bone. You paid your fare to Tarshish, but you have been set down in the midst of a sea of disquietude and perplexity.

One hundred dollars for Sunday horse-hire!

One hundred dollars for wine-suppers!

One hundred dollars for cigars!

One hundred dollars for frolics that shall be nameless!

Making four hundred dollars for his damnation!

Instead of being in Tarshish now, he is in the middle of the Mediterranean.

Here is a literary man, tired of the faith of his fathers, who resolves to launch out into what is called Free-Thinking. He buys Theodore Parker's works for twelve dollars; Renan's Life of Christ for one dollar and fifty cents; Andrew Jackson Davis's works for twenty dollars. Goes to hear infidels talk at the clubs, and to see spiritualism at the table-rapping. Talks glibly of David, the Psalmist, as an old libertine; of Paul as a wild enthusiast; and of Christ as a decent kind of a man—a little weak in some respects, but almost as good as himself. Talks smilingly of Sunday as a good day to put a little extra blacking on one's boots; and of Christians as, for the most part, hypocrites; and of eternity as "the great to be," "the everlasting now," or "the infinite what is it." Some day he gets his feet very wet, and finds himself that night chilly. The next morning has a hot mouth, and is headachy. Sends word over to the store that he will not be there to-day. Bathes his feet; has mustard-plasters; calls the doctor. The medical man says aside, "This is going to be a bad case of congestion of the lungs." Voice fails. Children must be kept downstairs, or sent to the neighbors, to keep the house quiet. You say, "Send for the minister." But no: he does not believe in ministers. You say, "Read the Bible to him." No; he does not believe in the Bible. A lawyer comes in, and, sitting by his bedside, writes a document that begins, "In the name of God, Amen. I, being of sound mind, do make this my last will and testament." It is certain where the sick man's body will be in less than a week. It is quite certain who will get his property. But what will become of his soul? It will go into "the great to be," or "the everlasting now," or "the infinite what is it." His soul is in deep waters, and the wind is "blowing great guns." Death cries, "Overboard with the unbeliever!" A splash! He goes to the bottom. He paid five dollars for his ticket to Tarshish when he bought the infidel books. He landed in perdition!

Every farthing you spend in sin Satan will swindle you out of. He promises you shall have thirty per cent. or a great dividend. He lies. He will sink all the capital. You may pay full fare to some sinful success, but you will never get to Tarshish.

Learn how soundly men will sleep in the midst of danger. The worst sinner on shipboard, considering the light he had, was Jonah. He was a member of the Church, while they were heathen. The sailors were engaged in their lawful calling, following the sea. The merchants on board, I suppose, were going down to Tarshish to barter; but Jonah, notwithstanding his Christian profession, was flying from duty. He was sound asleep in the cabin. He has been motionless for hours—his arms and feet in the same posture as when he lay down—his breast heaving with deep respiration. Oh! how could he sleep! What if the ship struck a rock! what if it sprang aleak! what if the clumsy Oriental craft should capsize! What would become of Jonah?

So men sleep soundly now amid perils infinite. In almost every place, I suppose, the Mediterranean might be sounded, but no line is long enough to fathom the profound beneath every impenitent man. Plunging a thousand fathoms down, you cannot touch bottom. Eternity beneath him, before him, around him! Rocks close by, and whirlpools, and hot-breathed Levanters; yet sound asleep! We try to wake him up, but fail. The great surges of warning break over the hurricane-deck—the gong of warning sounds through the cabin—the bell rings. "Awake!" cry a hundred voices; yet sound asleep in the cabin.

In the year 1775, the captain of a Greenland whaling vessel found himself at night surrounded by icebergs, and "lay to" until morning, expecting every moment to be ground to pieces. In the morning he looked about, and saw a ship near by. He hailed it. No answer. Getting into a boat with some of the crew, he pushed out for the mysterious craft. Getting near by, he saw through the port-hole a man at a stand, as though keeping a log-book. He hailed him. No answer. He went on board the vessel, and found the man sitting at the log-book, frozen to death. The log-book was dated 1762, showing that the vessel had been wandering for thirteen years among the ice. The sailors were found frozen among the hammocks, and others in the cabin. For thirteen years this ship had been carrying its burden of corpses.

So from this Gospel craft to-day, I descry voyagers for eternity. I cry, "Ship ahoy! ship ahoy!" No answer. They float about, tossed and ground by the icebergs of sin, hoisting no sail for heaven. I go on board. I find all asleep. It is a frozen sleep. O that my Lord Jesus would come aboard, and lay hold of the wheel, and steer the craft down into the warm Gulf Stream of his mercy! Awake, thou that sleepest! Arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life.

Again: Notice that men are aroused by the most unexpected means. If Jonah had been told one year before that a heathen sea-captain would ever awaken him to a sense of danger, he would have scoffed at the idea; but here it is done. So now, men in strangest ways are aroused from spiritual stupor. A profane man is brought to conviction by the shocking blasphemy of a comrade. A man attending church, and hearing a sermon from the text, "The ox knoweth his owner," etc., goes home unimpressed; but, crossing his barn-yard, an ox comes up and licks his hand, and he says, "There it is now—'the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib,' but I do not know God." The careless remark of a teamster has led a man to thoughtfulness and heaven. The child's remark, "Father, they have prayers at uncle's house—why don't we have them?" has brought salvation to the dwelling.

By strangest way and in the most unexpected manner men are awakened. The gardener of the Countess of Huntingdon was convicted of sin by hearing the Countess on the opposite side of the wall talk about Jesus. John Hardoak was aroused by a dream in which he saw the last day and the judge sitting, and heard his own name called with terrible emphasis: "John Hardoak, come to judgment!" The Lord has a thousand ways of waking a Jonah. Would that the messengers of mercy might now find their way down into the sides of the ship, and that many who are unconsciously rocking in the awful tempest of their sin might hear the warning, "What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, and call upon thy God!"

Again: Learn that a man may wake up too late. If, instead of sleeping, Jonah had been on his knees confessing his sin from the time he went on board the craft, I think that God would have saved him from being thrown overboard. But he woke up too late. The tempest is in full blast. All the sea, in convulsion, is lashing itself, and nothing will stop it now but the overthrow of Jonah.

So men sometimes wake up too late. The last hour has come. The man has no more idea of dying than I have of dropping down this moment. The rigging is all white with the foam of death. How chill the night is! I must die," he says, "yet not ready. I must push out upon the awful sea, but have nothing with which to pay my fare. The white caps! The lee-ness! The hurricane! How long have I been sleeping? Whole days, and months, and years. I am quite awake now. I see everything, but it is too late." Invisible hands take him up. He struggles to get loose. In vain. They bring his soul to the verge. They let it down over the gulf. The winds howl. The sea opens its roaring jaws to swallow. He has gone forever. And while the canvas cracked and the yards rattled, and the ropes thumped, the sea took up the funeral dirge, playing in open diapason of midnight storm, "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh."

Now, lest any of you should make a mistake, I address you in the words of the Mediterranean sea-captain: "What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not." If you have a God, you had better call upon him. Do you say, "I have no God?" Then you had better call upon your father's God. When your father was in trouble, who did he call? You heard him, in his old days, tell of some terrible exposure in a snow-storm at sea, or in battle, or among midnight marauders, and how he escaped. Perhaps forty years before you were born, your father made sweet acquaintance with God. There is something in the worn pages of the book he used to read which makes you know your father had a God. In the old, serious books lying around the house there are passages marked with a lead-pencil, passages that make you think your father was not a godless man, but that, on some dark day when he lay in the back room dying, he was ready—all ready. But perhaps your father was a bad man—profane and a blasphemer, and you never think of him now without a shudder. He worshiped the world or his own appetites. If so, then, I beg of you, call upon your father's God, but call on your mother's God. I think she was good. You remember when your father came home drunk late one night, how patient your mother was! You often heard her pray. She used to sit for the hour meditating, as though she were thinking of some good, warm place where it never gets cold, and where the breath does not fail, and staggering steps never come. You remember her now, as she sat with her Bible and spectacles, reading her Bible on Sabbath afternoons. What good advice she gave give you! How black and terrible the hole in the ground looked to you when, with two ropes, they let her down to rest in the grave-yard! Ah! I think from your looks that I am on the right track. Awake, O sleeper, and call upon thy mother's God.

But perhaps both your father and mother were depraved. Perhaps your cradle was rocked by sin and shame, and it is a wonder that from such a starting you have come to respectability. Then don't call upon the God of either of your parents, I beg you.

But you have children. You know God kissed those bright eyes, and rounded those healthy limbs, and set beating within their breast an immortality. Perhaps in the belief that somehow it would be for the best you have taught them to say an evening prayer, and when they kneel beside you, and fold their little hands, and look up, their faces all innocence and love, you know that there is a God somewhere about in the room.

I think I am on the right track at last. Awake, O sleeper, and call upon the God of the children. May he set these little ones to pray at thy heart until they charm back to the same God to whom to-night they will say their little prayers!

But alas! alas! some of these men and women are unmoved by the fact that their fathers had a God, that their mother had a God and their children have a God, but they have no God. All pious example to them is nothing. All the divine goodness is nothing. All warning for nothing. They are sound asleep in the side of the ship through the sea and sky are in mad unrest.

Many years ago, a man, leaving his family in Massachusetts, sailed from Boston to China to trade there. On the coast of China, in the midst of a night of storm, he made shipwreck. The adventurer was washed up on the beach senseless—all his money gone. He had to beg in the streets of Canton to keep from starving. For two years here was no communication between him and family. They supposed him dead. He knew not but that his family were dead. He had gone out as a captain. He was too proud to come back as a private sailor. But after awhile he choked down his pride and sailed for Boston. Arriving there he took an evening train for the center of the State, where he had left his family. Taking the stage from the depot, and driving a score of miles, he got home. He paused at, going up in front of the cottage where the bright moonlight, the place looked to him like heaven. He rapped on the window, and the affrighted servant let him in. He went to the room where his wife and children were sleeping. He did not dare to wake them for fear of the shock. Bending over and kissing his child's cheek, a tear fell upon the little face, and she wakened, and he said, Mary!" and she knew his voice, and there was an indescribable scene of welcome, and then, and thanksgiving to God.

To-day I know that many of you are seasick and driven by sin in a worse storm than that which came down on the coast of China, and yet I pray God that you may, like the sailor, live to get home. In the house of many mansions your friends are waiting to meet you. They are wondering why you do not come. Escaped from the shipwrecks of earth, may you at at last go in! It will be a bright night—a very bright night as you put your thumb on the latch of your door. Once in, you will find the old family faces sweeter than when you last saw them, and there it will be found that the God who was your father's God, and your mother's God, and your children's God, is your own most blessed Redeemer, to whom be glory and dominion throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose services, articles, or labors for Christ, are found in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Gladdened 2602 Little Waifs.

(Continued from first page.)

mas candle and lighted it. When the miserable father came home that night, and went to his room, he saw through hazy and bleared eyes, the little candle, and behind it, the writing. He managed to read it, and recognized the handwriting; the meaning sank into his brain and he sat down trembling and gazing at the words: "Jesus can cure you." Sobbing like a child, he sat there for hours, his lips giving utterance to a prayer in which the name of his little daughter was joined with that of the Saviour she loved so dearly and to whom she had pointed the erring parent. The lesson was complete, the cure effectual; and from that day to this, the once drunken father has found grace and strength to resist the temptation that had threatened to ruin both soul and body. And so the little candle, being itself aflame with love for Christ, lighted up the larger candle in turn, and a little child brought her own parent into the light of Jesus' love.

Our artist, in the present issue, has sketched a scene in a court-yard in the rear of a Hamilton street tenement, during the visit of one of our Fresh Air Fund missionaries. The rear house is an old tumble-down two-story rookery, sandwiched in among tall flats of the poorest class. Children swarm in and out of the dingy, foul-smelling rooms and through the dark and slippery hallways, as thick as bees in a hive. Staircases that threaten the life and limbs of the unwary stranger, and floors so broken that a trip is avoided only by skillful management, show that the building has about reached the last stage that precedes demolition.

When the missionary, who had gladdened the hearts of at least a dozen little ones (and also, incidentally, of several mothers), by taking their names for an outing, tried to walk across the loose and broken flagstones of the little court-yard, she found her progress impeded. Some half-dozen youngsters, all dirty and ragged as they were, hearing that the "good lady" had come from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, resolved to make an effort to get her to give them a promise of an outing. Poor little creatures! How her heart melted as she looked at them, standing before her there, on the bare stones, with tearful, pleading eyes and faltering lips, half-sobbing their entreaty to be taken "to the country."

"Won't yez take me 'n little Ted? He's me little brudder," said a girl of about eight, as she clung to the missionary's arm. Teddy in turn hung on to his sister's skirts, and howled by way of supplementing her petition. "Ah, do mum," the girl pleaded. "Ted an' me has never bin nowheres—no never!"

A little, bare-footed lad of nine, slender and pale-faced, next made appeal:

"Mam told yer I didn't have no close, but I got this," pointing to a nondescript blouse that had probably been the cast-off of some much younger child. "Can't I go up there to the place where you takes the children?" he asked eagerly. "I wanter have fun on the grass, I do, 'cause they aint no grass growin' here," and the dirty little toes kicked at the bare stones.

Attracted by the colloquy, other children, coming from nobody knows where, appeared on the rickety steps that led to the second floor. Simultaneously, adult faces could be seen at the doorways and windows. A boy of sixteen, who had been splitting kindling-wood, paused in his work and listened longingly. Poor lad! the younger ones might have a chance, but his age barred him out for consideration at the Children's Home. Still, he seemed to take a deep and unselfish interest in the result of the application by the others, and when the visitor, before finally disengaging herself, had given at least another half-dozen promises to the young applicants, no one showed more real delight than he. The missionary was glad to escape the hubbub that at once ensued when she left the court.

Many kind letters, containing substantial tokens of interest in the Fresh Air work among the tenement children, have been received during the week. One donor, Mrs. J. F. Timmerman, of Wilton, N. H., sent to Mont-Lawn a package containing one and a half dozen children's dresses and eight children's jackets—timely gifts which will bring joy and delight to the hearts of twenty-six little ones. "I think it is God's work," writes "An Invalid," Springfield, Mass., ($3), "and may he bless all the children." J. E. J., Wassaic, N. Y., ($3) says:

I wish to add one ray of sunshine to someone who does not know the pleasures of the country. My heart is full of love for them all, but my purse is small although I take pleasure in the thought of being able to do a little. My prayers will follow that it may bring unbounded happiness to some child.

This touching letter comes from Mr. and Mrs. J. W. D., Indianapolis, Ind.:

We have been constant subscribers for years and received many words of comfort from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD since we have been taking it. We lost our only dear little seven-year-old daughter, and in her name and the name of her Saviour, we send $3, for some poor child to have a ten days' outing at your Home.

There could be no more pleasing or fitting memorial than this. "It is a great privilege to help, in the smallest degree, in such a work," writes a friend, who, with a number of others, judges that the best and most practical way to exercise this privilege is to personally provide for one little waif's outing. With all of them it is a labor of love.

Mrs. S. E. Emory, Mineola, L. I. ($3) writes this very touching note:

I pray God that it may do some poor boy some good and be the means of leading him to Jesus. I send it in the name of little Dannie Youngs, who left us about two years ago.

Here is a brief letter which contains an eloquent story of one little maid's love and devotion to the work of the Master:

Enclosed you will find $3.36, which I made by having a fair on the lawn of the Alaska Hotel. I would like it to go for the Fresh Air Fund.

Ocean Grove, N. J. MARGARET BROWN.

Stella W., aged eleven, sends 50c. from Gravelpoint, Tex., to help make some poor child happy at Mont-Lawn. Stella writes:

We are wonderfully interested in reading the articles in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and wish we had more to give. But we live on Ozark's rocky hills and are poor. We have welcomed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in our home for many years. I earned thirty cents of this myself.

This brief note from Holmdel, N. J., (which came accompanied by a check for $6), will be read with sympathy by many parents who know what it is to have a child sick nigh unto death:

A "thank-offering" for the health of our own darling "Kenneth," and that two waifs may breathe the pure air of Mont-Lawn.

From Derby, Conn., comes this pleasant note:

A class of little girls in the Derby Neck Mission School, known as "The Sunbeam Circle," having become interested in the Children's Home at Nyack, and feeling a stong desire to help some little one, have for some time past been trying to earn something for that purpose. They have earned three dollars which please find enclosed with their best wishes. They are very anxious to know if you receive it all right.

The following sums have been received during the week for the work of the Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$882.86
R S N, Cohasset	3 00
The Widow's Mite, Bay View	1 00
Katie H Schultz	12 00
Mrs Rosa A Isbell	1 00
In His Name, Woodside	1 00
X Y Z, Roon	5 00
Harry Kennedy	3 60
H M K, Pa	3 00
Mrs W G Jones	1 00
Mrs H Blauvelt, N Y	3 00
Bruvold, Nels, P	3 00
A L O A, Chicago	6 00
A King's Daughter, Mt Vernon	1 00
W J L, Baltimore	3 00
Himely Children, Far Rockaway	3 00
Elmer Verrill	60
H C Duckett	80
H S Thomson	10 10
Mrs J M Lewis	50
Mrs J R M	1 50
Mrs Caroline J Bridgman	3 00
Miss Allie Smith	2 00
A C Gretchins	6 00
A Friend In His Name, Muscatine	2 00
Mrs W. B Chapman	1 00
Mrs Earnest Melhuish	1 00
Two Sisters, Shinglehouse	3 00
Mrs L Atwood	3 00
Mrs F I Wood	3 00
S——, Washington	1 00
Collins M Way	3 00
A Friend, West Derry	3 00
Mrs E Cordelia Shirtliff	3 00
Wm H Hamilton	3 00
Mrs E R James	1 00
F H S, Holyoke	3 00
X X, Astabuld	2 00
Teacher, Salisbury	3 00
Friend, Nyack	1 00
G H and O H	1 00
Invalid, Springfield	3 00
J E G, Somerville	3 00
Little Mary, Smyrna	1 00
The Children's Friend, Wassaic	3 00
Lady from Iowa	10
Reader, Andrew	5 00
Friend, Waterloo	3 00
Emma C Heese	1 00
——, Anaheim, Cal	6 00
Mrs H. I H N, Wilmington	1 50
Mrs M. I H N, "	1 50
A Friend, Chillicothe	5 00
Mattie Ketterer	3 00
J M Dungan	3 00
C. R. Gearhart	5 00
Mother of Natick, Mass	3 00
Alex H Clark	3 00
Thos McCalmon	3 00
Mr and Mrs C H C. Brockton	3 00
G C I, Jr., Brooklyn	2 00
Mrs G W Bennett	3 00
Subscriber, Haydenville	2 00
Subscriber, Charlottsville	5 00
In Jesus' Name, Cherryville	3 00
Friend, Brooklyn	2 00
Total	$1,066.46

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

X.—JACOB SHULL.

DURING the recent distress in Kansas there were abundant opportunities for the exercise of the philanthropic principles of Christianity. People in the stricken State like those in Nebraska, Colorado, and Oklahoma, learned during that time that Christians were followers not only of Jesus the Saviour of sinners, but of Jesus who fed the multitude and had compassion on the hungry. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave of their savings and denuded their ward robes to feed the destitute and clothe the naked, and the proprietor of the paper personally went to the distressed districts to superintend the work of distribution. The motive for this benevolence on all hands had its origin in Christianity, and the same motive was active in every heart that had truly entered into the spirit of the Master. There was one conspicuous instance of this in the man whose portrait appears in this column. Mr. Shull was at that time living at Manhattan, Kans., and was well known there as an earnest Christian worker, whose time and labor were freely given to Christ's service. He was a carpenter by trade, and had come from Ohio to Kansas some twelve years before, when, the necessity for his continuous manual labor having ceased, he brought his sons to settle on farms in the great Western State, and to spend the remainder of his days in doing good. The distress around him last winter proved that his Christian profession was no mere surface veneer. At any time of the day or night he was accessible to the needy. His neighbors saw him going from house to house in the poorer quarters, ascertaining what was the actual condition of families whose self respect restrained them from making known their need, and they saw him traveling over the same route afterwards laden with clothing, warm bedclothes, or food, to relieve the necessities he had discovered. He made no parade about what he did, but regarding it as merely a matter of duty, he went about it quietly, but untiringly.

JACOB SHULL.

This labor was only another form of the Christian activity with which his past life had been full. He began to work for Christ when he was but little over sixteen years of age, when with his father he removed from his native town in Perry County, Pennsylvania, to Crawford County, Ohio. It was early days to be working for a living, but Mr. Shull's circumstances required it, and he had made good use of the opportunity for learning that had come in his way. He opened an evening school for boys less fortunate than himself, and on Sundays he was teaching again, but whether on weekdays or Sundays, his pupils were always urged to give their hearts to God. All his teaching had that for its object, and God blessed his labors. Mr. Shull holds a license of the Methodist Episcopal Church to preach, but he has not limited his efforts to that church. The Congregational Missionary Association and the American Bible Society have both had the benefit of his labors.

THE NEW HOME IN CANAAN.

S. S. Lesson for August 18th. Deut. 6: 3-15. Golden Text: Deut. 8: 10. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE children of Israel were approaching the longed for end of their forty-years' wanderings. It was in the eleventh month of the fortieth year (Deut. 1: 3), that Moses addressed the whole assembly of Israel, reminded them of their past history, and repeated to them the laws which God had given them as his peculiar people. He had just completed the history of Sinai (Deut 5) with a repetition of the commandments, and he made his own comment (ver. 32,33) "Ye shall observe to do therefore as the Lord your God commanded to teach you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. Ye shall walk in all the way which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye possess." "All the way." Incomplete obedience is disobedience.

The children of Israel were entering on a new state of things. It was all the difference between school and home life. In the wilderness, all their wants had been provided for them, their way had been made for them, no responsibility had been upon them, but to trust and obey God. And as all of them were in the same circumstances, the faith and obedience of each helped the other. But it was a state of national childhood. The heir, so long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all: but he is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. The time appointed of the Father was come, and the house of Jacob were to "possess their possessions," which, however, they have never fully come into. They were about to set foot in the promised land, It was to be conquered by them and to be their inheritance. But they must first understand the mind and purpose of their God in giving it to them. When he had sent Moses to Pharaoh, king of Egypt, his claim, reiterated again and again, was: "Let my people go

That they May Serve Me."

(Ex. 7: 16; 8: 8–20; 9: 13.) If this object of their deliverance had been enforced with Pharaoh, it was but just that his people themselves, being delivered from Egypt, should fully understand that their deliverance was not for their own selfish enjoyment and satisfaction, but that they serve God. Consequently Moses, standing as God's interpreter, knowing his ways, appeals to the assembled people: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." As God, as King, as Father, Jehovah required all, from the inmost purposes of that hidden man of the heart where God can dwell, through all the soul with its intellect and its emotions, to the world of action expressed by "thy might," Jehovah made his supreme claim, and demanded unmixed worship, undivided allegiance, and supreme devotion; and all was to be the outcome of love.

But how should fallen creatures, born in sin, the sin of self-love, which is the soil in which all other sin grows, attain to such a requirement as this? It was impossible and beyond them. "By the law is the knowledge of sin," but not the power to live a holy life. The law could not do it: it was weak through the flesh. And yet the Holy One must not,

Could not, lower his Standard!

Less than perfection the perfect [illegible] not be. And as through the ages [illegible] has been the sad but true story: "No man keepeth the law." The terrible yoke of bondage to a holy law which the inward man acknowledged to be "holy and good," (Rom. 7: 12), yet impossible to fallen man, was only broken by him who fulfilled all its requirements. Jesus only did to the full love the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul and with all his strength. And having done so, he undertook to expiate in his own Person every sin of every sinner against that law, and by making room for them to take the same place which he took at the Cross when he was made a curse for us, he also made it possible for man to obey the law written in his heart. Christ's death, while it was the atonement for our disobedience, was never meant to excuse our disobedience or to make Christ "a minister of sin." (Gal. 2: 17.)

Through the sacrifices Israel might look forward to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," and find forgiveness, as David, Isaiah, and many of the Old Testament saints did. And they had the written Word, at any rate the books of Moses, who commanded them: "And these words which I command thee this day shall be upon thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shall talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. What is the ordinary conversation even of converted people at the table, in their journeys; the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night? Is it the Word of God? One has to go a long way to find Christians who make the Bible their constant companion. But there are choice souls who live in the atmosphere of heaven; God's Word is their very near companion, and the moments spent in their company are precious times when God himself draws nigh. How often, when Christians meet together, the

Time is Wasted!

Unkind remarks about other people, anxious plans about work, glowing accounts of their own doings, take up the time, which should be part of the service of the Lord, for which he has delivered us from more than Egyptian bondage.

The people of Israel, in being delivered from their school-time, and the immediate and detailed direction for their every step in the wilderness, needed all the more to have a constant Guide to refer to, and the Word was that Guide. Moses directed: "And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates." It was an easy thing for some of the Jews to obey these words in the letter, and not in the spirit. But the same men, in our Lord's time who made broad their phylacteries (these very frontlets between their eyes), and enlarged the border of blue upon their garments, were condemned by Christ as hypocrites and he asked of them: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" The Word of God is meant to enter in and possess the heart: "Thy law is within my heart."

A man who lives to serve God begins by trusting him fully. Such an one does not, and cannot forget the past. It is what his God has been to him which colors his life in the present and in the future. He has settled the matter that he exists for God, not God for him. If he does eat and is full, he blesses the Lord his God and takes heed not to forget; his heart is not lifted up so that he should forget his God. (Deut. 8: 10, 14.) Prosperity does not injure a man who [illegible] possesses that it is his own. (Acts 4: 32). Success cannot injure a man while, with Paul, he keeps his place as "crucified with Christ." With him, numbered among transgressors, and counting himself the chief of sinners: he lives to serve God.

If such a man meets with trial, he has had a good look at the other side of the testing matter: he has seen not only how the thing touches him, but also what was God's purpose in it, and instead of grumbling, he wonders at the grace which educates him. He can understand the love which suffered his people of old to hunger, and then fed them with manna which they knew not nor did their fathers know. (Deut. 8: 3.) He has got the clue of the situation. His heavenly Father is moving him and humbling him to know what is in his heart, and learns that man does not live by bread only, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE FRONTLET BETWEEN THE EYES.

THE book of Deuteronomy, from which the lesson is taken, is practically a repetition or recapitulation of the law of Israel. It is cast in the form of three discourses which Moses is represented as delivering in the plains on the East of the Jordan during the last months of his life. The first discourse ends with the fourteenth verse of the fourth chapter and is historical in character. The second, which is the main discourse, occupies the chapters from the fifth to the twenty-sixth inclusive and recapitulates with some divergences and modifications the laws previously given in the earlier books. The third discourse, in which the elders of the people are joined, occupies the next four chapters and is a kind of peroration, enforcing in an impressive manner the lessons of the previous discourses, and containing an earnest appeal to the people to obey, and with warnings and encouragements. The remainder of the book contains the Song of Moses, the final commission to Joshua and the account of the death of Moses. Whether Moses actually wrote these discourses with his own hand, or whether some one else reported them as he delivered them, or at a later date, is a matter of dispute. It is obvious that, in any case, some parts must be the work of another hand, as they refer to a condition of national life that did not exist at the time of Moses' death. The suggestion has been made, with much to be said in its favor, that Deuteronomy is the book referred to in II. Kings 22: 10, which Hilkiah found in the House of the Lord. If so, the Mosaic discourses had in the long interval been edited by some unknown prophet who gave them a more modern form with the sad applications that would be furnished by the history of Israel.

For a sign upon thine hand . . . as frontlets between thine eyes. This law was not to be kept for state occasions, but was to enter into daily, individual and family life The Jews put a literal meaning on the passage, which it is always much easier to do than to obey the spiritual meaning. They inscribed fifteen verses of the law (Deut. 6: 4–9, and 11: 13–21) on pieces of parchment. They were put in little cases or cylinders as shown in the illustrations. They were bound with leathern thongs on the forehead and the hollow of the elbow, and were fixed on the right hand doorpost of their houses. These, it is believed, were the phylacteries to which Christ referred (Matt. 23: 5) which were worn for ostentation. This was not so irksome to a Pharisee as having the law in his heart to control his wicked propensities.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God. Some one has asked whether the verb, to love, has an imperative mood. Can one love when ordered to do so? Does not love arise in the heart of its own accord, refusing all compulsion? This passage implies that love can be aroused and cor
"I cannot love a person I have seen," said a girl whose mother was her to love God. Not long afterw mother took her daughter with he on a friend whose husband had bee years in China. He was expecte soon and the lady and her daught eagerly looking forward to his
"You have never seen your fathe you?" the visitor asked the

THE PHYLACTERY.

"Ne
I can ber:
aw
I w by, the you him the que
"Oh, yes," the child answered prise. "It would be strange i not. He used to write me letters before I could read them, and he loving messages through mamm that, and he always remembers n day and sends me nice things oft loves me and I love him." The was all that was needed. The own child listened and understoc command, "Thou shalt love the God," was not so unreasonable in of the other child's experience.

These words . . . shall be in thi
A famous writer, speaking to child
You have seen the great reservoir ed by our water companies, in w water to supply hundreds of str thousands of houses is kept. N heart is the reservoir of man, an is allowed to flow in its proper That life may flow through differ
—the mouth, the hand, the eye;
all the tissues of hand, of eye, of their source from the great fountai tral reservoir—the heart; and he is great necessity for keeping this the heart, in a proper state and c since otherwise, that which flows the pipes must be tainted and corr

Beware lest thou forget the Lord.
ist in Scotland was surprised as h along a road with beautiful meado each side, to see a girl run down t a hill and close a gate that stoppe ing any farther. As he cam shut gate, the girl said, "You to pay anything to go through;
only to say, 'Please allow me to go and I will open the gate." The t the words, and the child immedia ed the gate, and he passed throug swer to his question, the child tol the road belonged to the Laird could not alienate his property, b opened the road for the public co
He wished every one to have free so he had the gate put there, and were required to ask permissio only that his right might be reco

Thou shalt fear the Lord. This seems a contradiction of the form love him; but th not inconsistent.
successful of a masters was D of Rugby. His most worshipp
he had the facult ning their love erence. One of became eminen life, gave an a friend whic how love and be combined.
was an older had entered the was a midshipm
his vessel was

SIGN UPON THE HAND.

he went to Rugby to bid his fr
by. They went into the town t dined at a hotel. When the ho ing the gates came, the Rugby say farewell. "Stay all night," sailor boy, "it will be two years meet again." The Rugby boy head. "I dare not," he said, "it the rules and the Doctor is ve lar." The sailor smiled. "You a whipping, I suppose; but we good time that will be worth a Oh, no," said the other, "I am of the whipping; but I hate to tor. He trusts us and he would and hurt if any of us deceived h fied him. He is the best of men a not annoy him for the world."

FOR CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD.

Many Great Churchmen and Moral Reformers now Assembled at Grindelwald in the Swiss Alps—A Growing Movement, Looking to Helpful Unity and Co-operative Action Among the Christian Churches Throughout the World.

SWITZERLAND has ever been known as a land of religious, as well as political progress. In the past, it has furnished martyrs for the Christian cause, and freely poured out its blood and treasure in defence of the Cross. There are valleys, nestling under those mountains' perennial snow, that have not their legends stories of heroic suffering for conscience sake, and the glorious freedom the Swiss Republic now enjoys has been dearly purchased. It is eminently fitting, therefore, that one of the loveliest of the Swiss valleys, should have been the place selected for the assembling of a succession of conventions, which may be destined to influence the religious complexion of a very considerable section of the Christian world. Few spots in Europe are more charming than the little group of hamlets in the Swiss valley of Grindelwald. Green and lovely at its altitude of nearly 3,500 feet above the level of the sea. In the entire district there is a population of about 3,000, nearly all with the exception of a few guides, waiters and hotel proprietors, being occupied in the summer and autumn with the visitors who flock to the valley by the thousand. Indeed, the Grindelwald valley is one of the most picturesque localities in Switzerland, and in the summer time it is the favorite resort of many of the most distinguished men and women of Europe. Within a short distance, the Wetterhorn piercing the blue sky, a mighty mass, the loftiest peak 12,165 feet high and capped by eternal snows, while the Lauterbrunnen gorge, the Upper and Lower Grindelwald glaciers, the dangerous Eismeer (or "Sea of Ice"), and the Little Scheidegg are all comfortably near at hand. Within a short distance, the eyes of the traveler are feasted with the magnificent panorama of the mighty giants of the Oberland, the Eiger Wetterhorn, Monch, Jungfrau, Silberhorn, Schreckhorn, Mittaghorn, Zaesenberghorn, Lauteraarhorn, Faulhorn and Breithorn, on whose smooth and treacherous surfaces, deep gorges, jagged crevasses, many a venturesome climber has found his fate. Those mountains of the sky range in altitude from 10,000 to 14,000 feet. They have looked serenely upon many a stirring scene in the lovely valleys below, but never, in recent times at least, on more august assemblages than those that have gathered in the Grindelwald every summer since 1892.

REV. DR. HENRY S. LUNN.

Concerning the origin of the Grindelwald Conference, Dr. Lunn, the distinguished divine and author who founded it, gives this interesting history: In 1891 the project of a Reunion Touring Party was first suggested, in connection with the membership of the Contemporary Club. It was thought possible to combine in a party visiting some quiet spot upon the Continent, a number of prominent people whose views on religious and philosophical matters would be helpful to each other. When the first Grindelwald party went out in January, 1892, it numbered twenty-eight in all, and included clergymen of various denominations. So satisfactory was the result that, in the fall of that year, a very notable gathering was held and the first of the series of Conferences took place. Nearly one thousand persons attended the Reunion meetings which lasted several days. Among those who took a prominent part in the proceedings were the Bishop of Worcester, Bishop of Ripon, Pere Hyacinthe and many others well known in ecclesiastical and evangelical circles. It was quickly found that a feeling prevailed in favor of the union of the churches on helpful lines of Christian work and in all the essentials of Christian belief, without impairing the integrity of denominational lines. Still greater was the public interest in the Reunion of the following year, when Archdeacon Farrar, Prof.

THE GRINDELWALD VALLEY.—LEADERS AT THE CONFERENCE OF 1895.
1. Miss Hallie Q. Brown. 2. Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows. 3. Miss Frances Willard. 4. Rev. A. H. Bradford. 5. Rev. H. P. Hughes. 6. Mrs. Josephine Butler. 7. Rev. C. A. Berry.

Mahaffy the eminent archæologist, Rev. J. E. Hanauer, and Mr. F. J. Bliss, with others almost equally famous in the ecclesiastical and scientific world, attended the gathering. In 1894, the attendance had risen to nearly three thousand, and a very large number of the churches of Great Britain had begun to display an active interest in this practical work. The Conference of that year itself showed a distinct advance upon its predecessor in the character of its discussions. The Church of England was ably represented by men of as diverse theological opinions as the Deans of Bristol and Norwich, representing the evangelical section; Professor H. C. Shuttleworth, a Broad Churchman; the late Prebendary Grier, Canon Hammond, the Rev. W. S. Swayne, members of the English Church Union, whilst Dr. Newman Hall, the Non-conformist veteran, Professor Lindsay, Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Charles Berry, Mr. W. T. Stead, and others represented the non-episcopal communities. Almost every Christian denomination was represented in the discussions.

Grindelwald is again crowded and the quiet Swiss valley, as we write, is once more the scence of amicable disputation concerning the best ways and means to advance the Kingdom of Christ. On the forenoon of Sunday, June 23, the proceedings were opened with a discourse at the Grindelwald church on "Temperance and Social Problems," by Rev. Egerton R. Young of Canada. Mr. Young's pioneer missionary work in Canada will be remembered by many of our readers, as a graphic account of it appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Other speakers during June included Mrs. Hoffman of Kansas City, Mo., Miss Hallie Q. Brown of Wilberforce College, O., Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Frances Willard and Mrs. Josephine Butler. In July was opened what is known as the "European Chautauqua," which embraced addresses, lectures and sermons by Dr. John Hunter, Prof. J. L. Robinson, Rev. Dr. Lunn, Mrs. Ormiston Chant (the lady who led the popular movement for "personal purity" in London two years ago), Rev. John Watson of Liverpool (better know as "Ian Maclaren," the famous author), Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, well known to American audiences, and also many others. During the present month, social problems will largely occupy the attention of the Conference. Among the subjects announced are: "The Churches' Care of Young Men"; "The Duty of the Press as to Gambling, Christianity and Socialism," and "Lessons from the World's Parliament of Religions;" among the distinguished speakers being Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows, of Chicago, ex-President of the World's Fair Religious Congress, Rev. George Dana Boardman, of Philadelphia, Rev. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, N. J., Rev. Charles A. Berry, of Liverpool, and Rev. Paul Sabatier, of Paris. In September, the venerable Archdeacon Wilson, of London, the Bishop of Worcester, Archdeacon of Manchester, Principal Story, Moderator of the Church of Scotland, Rev. Alexander Oliver, Moderator of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, Rev. R. Rutch, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England, Rev. Dr. Rees, Chairman of the Congregational Union, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, Chairman Baptist Union, Rev. J. W. Pope, ex-President Wesleyan Methodist Conference, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, President Free Church Congress, and a number of other famous churchmen will discuss the questions of "Church Reunion," "Presbyterian Reunion," "The Pentecostal Baptism, the Secret of Unity," etc. It is expected that the closing week will be devoted to the consideration of "International Peace."

Regarded as a whole, the growth of the Grindelwald Conferences in point of numbers and in the variety of denominational interests involved, is one of the most significant signs of the times indicative of the growing tendency to helpful unity and co-operative action among the Christian Churches of the world. Its discussions have not failed to give prominence and emphasis to the essential doctrines of the Christian faith—the Incarnation and the Atonement. Hardly a question affecting the moral and social progress of mankind, has been left untouched. Moreover, all the proceedings have been conducted in a spirit none the less earnest and devout, because exceedingly amiable and liberal. It may be truly said that such assemblages are among the greatest aids to Christian progress and cannot fail to be productive of blessing to all the interests concerned.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Among those who are taking a leading part in the Conference this year are several whose names are already familiar to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Miss Frances Willard is the founder and president of the W. C. T. U., and has passed the greater part of her life in active Christian and temperance work. Her career is too well known to need recital here. Lady Henry Somerset is one of whom it may be truthfully said that she has put a cable of love and loyalty between the women of Britain and those of distant lands. Her great wealth is used as a sacred trust for the uplifting and succoring of fallen humanity and the furthering of every Christian work. Miss Hallie Q. Brown has conducted an important educational work in connection with the Wilberforce University, Ohio. Mrs. Josephine Butler has long been one of the foremost leaders in the Social Purity movement in England.

The other portraits presented in this issue are those of pastors and reformers of international reputation. Rev. Henry S. Lunn, of London, the founder of the Grindelwald Conference, is the editor of "The Review of the Churches," and although one of the youngest in the group, has already for a number of years been recognized as among the ablest writers and thinkers on the topics that are paramount to all who have at heart the social progress and spiritual advancement of the human race.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE. G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is issued every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made to the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Postoffice and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always be given in your own name when writing to us. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York as Second-class Matter.

SHELLS FROM THE BEACH.

WE write with a long quill that reaches from East Hampton, Long Island, to our editorial rooms in New York. Our summer house is a cottage overlooking the sea. Seventeen vessels in sight—schooners, clippers, hermaphrodite brigs, steamers, great craft and small. Wonder where they come from and where they are going to and who is aboard. Just enough clover tops to sweeten the briny air into the most delightful tonic. We do not know the geological history of this place, but imagine that the rest of Long Island is the discourse of which East Hampton is the peroration. There are enough bluffs to relieve the dead level, enough grass to clothe the hills, enough trees to drop the shadow, enough society to keep one from inanity, and enough quietude to soothe twelve months of perturbation. The sea hums us to sleep at night and fills our dreams with intimations of the land where the harmony is like "the sweet voice of many waters." In smooth weather the billows take a minor key; but when the storm gives them the pitch, they break forth with the clash and uproar of an orchestra that fills the heavens and makes the beach tremble. Strange that that which rolls perpetually and never rests itself, should be a psalm of rest to others. With these sands of the beach we help fill the hour-glass of life. Every moment of the day there comes in over the waves a flotilla of joy and rest and health, and our piazza is the wharf where the stevedores unburden their cargo. We have sunrise with her bannered hosts in cloth of gold, and moonrise with her innumerable helmets and shields and swords and ensigns of silver; the morning and the night, the two buttresses from which are swung a bridge of cloud suspended on strands of sunbeam, all the glories of the sky passing to and fro with airy feet in silent procession.

We have wandered far and wide, but found no such place to rest in. We can live here forty-eight hours in one day, and at night get a Rip Van Winkle sleep, waking [illegible] feeling our gun rusty or our dog dead.

The place was settled in 1648, and that is so long ago that it will probably never be unsettled. The Puritans took possession of it first, and have always held it for the Sabbath, for the Bible, and for God. Much maligned Puritans! The world will stop deriding them after a while, and the caricatures of their earnest [illegible] will want to claim them as ancestors; but it will be too late then, for now the latter-day critics about the Puritans now, we will not believe them when they want to get into the illustrious genealogical line.

East Hampton has always been a place of good morals. One of the earliest Puritan regulations of this place was that licensed liquor-sellers should not sell to the young, and that half a pint only should be given to four men! An amount so small that most drinkers would consider it only a tantalization. A woman here, in those days, was sentenced "to pay a fine of fifteen dollars, or to stand one hour with a cleft stick upon her tongue, for saying that her husband had brought her to a place where there was neither Gospel or magistracy." She deserved punishment of some kind, but they ought to have let her off with a fine, for no woman's tongue ought to be interfered with. When in olden time a Yankee peddler with the measles went to church here on the Sabbath for the purpose of selling his nick-nacks, his behavior was considered so perfidious that before the peddler left town the next morning the young men gave him a free ride on what seems to us an uncomfortable and insufficient vehicle, namely a rail, and then dropped him into the duck-pond. But such conduct was not sanctioned by the better people of the place. Nothing could be more unwholesome for a man with the measles than a plunge in a duck-pond, and so the peddler recovered one thousand dollars damage. So you see that every form of misdemeanor was sternly put down. Think of the high state of morals and religion which induced this people, at an early date, at a political town meeting, to adopt this decree: "We do sociate and conjoin ourselves and successors to be one town or corporation, and do for ourselves and our successors, and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter, enter into combination and confederation together to maintain and preserve the purity of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ which we now possess."

The pledge of that day has been fully kept; and for sobriety, industry, abhorrence of evil and adherence to the unmixed Gospel, we know not the equal of this place.

That document of two centuries ago reads strangely behind the times, but it will be some hundreds of years yet before other communities come up to the point where that document stops. All our laws and institutions are yet to be Christianized. The Puritans took possession of this land in the name of Christ, and it belongs to him, and if people do not like that religion, let them go somewhere else. They can find many lands where there is no Christian religion to bother them. Let them emigrate to Greenland, and we will provide them with mittens; or to the South Sea Islands, and we will send them ice-coolers. This land is for Christ. Our legislatures and congresses shall yet pass laws as radically evangelical as the venerable document above referred to. East Hampton, instead of being two hundred years behind, is two hundred years ahead. Glorious place to summer! With an Atlantic Ocean in which to wash, and a great-hearted, practical, sympathetic Gospel to take care of all the future, who could not be happy in East Hampton? The strong see breeze ruffles the sheet upon which we write, and the "white caps" are tossing up as if in greeting to him who walks the pavements of emerald and opal:

> Watt, waft, ye winds, his story,
> And you, ye waters, roll,
> Till like a sea of glory,
> It spreads from pole to pole.

DULNESS AS HETERODOXY.

THE most dangerous foes of Christianity are not the men who openly assault the faith of the Bible. It is so evident to all Christian people that such men are on the wrong side, that their influence is comparatively limited. But it is the indifference and the dulness on the part of those who profess Christianity that do the worst damage. When, in pulpit, or prayer-meeting, or religious newspaper, a man sneers at God and the soul, with eyes half shut, and a manner in which there is no thrill, he practically denies the tremendous truth of the Gospel. If one ought ever to sparkle and flame, it is when he touches the questions of the soul. There can be no good apology for a dull prayer-meeting talk. If, therefore, a man have a heavy article on some Christian theme, let him first carefully correct the spelling, then punctuate it, then page it, then fold it up, then burn it. How dare you stand up there in meeting with somnolent manner, slandering our religion. Sit down! Let some man with a soul on fire take the time. How many religious meetings have two or three exhorters who act like icicles, and only get enough thawed out during the service, to drip, drip, drip in cold talk.

Do not stand there taking up the time, telling us what a sinner you are: we all knew that long ago; but tell us of some victory gained, of some glimpse of the pinnacles that you caught from the mountain-top. Hide not that one tear of emotion in promiscuous use of pocket-handkerchief, as if you merely had a cold in your head, and could not be betrayed into any emotion at all. We need more brightness and elasticity in our Christian work. If holiness be "on the bells of the horses," we care not how much the horses prance. The more speed, and the more spring, the more music. Let not professed profundity be any excuse for dulness in religion. Because a subject is deep, there is no reason why it should be obscure; yon can see the bottom of Lake Winnepiseogee thirty feet down. Mists about a religious theme are no evidence of learnedness. We cannot worship a London fog. The most damaging attack upon Christianity to-day is the stolidity and half-heartedness of many who profess to accept it.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

A. C. Gill, Double Bazan, Tex. Christ was sold for thirty pieces of silver. How many dollars were they equal to in United States money?

Assuming, with most commentators, that they were shekels, the "stater siclus" or shekel of the sanctuary (current in Josephus' time), was equal to about 55 cents.

F. Lawler, Dayton, O. Is it true that the sale of crosses, beads, and other trinkets such as the Romish church favors, is a source of great revenue at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Palestine?

It is. Thousands of pilgrims buy them to carry home, some as souvenirs of their visit, others as objects of veneration. So many of the poorer classes of pilgrims purchased these articles that a law was enacted requiring all pilgrims entering Joppa to leave a deposit there sufficient to cover the cost of their steamer journey home, otherwise they would spend all in trinkets.

Inquirer. 1. To whom do I owe greater love and gratitude, to my husband, who is very kind, or to the one who raised me and who has been very kind also? 2. Is it right for a woman, who professes to be a Christian, to wish one whom she considers an enemy, in hell? What will be the result if she dies without asking that person to forgive?

1. Your heart will tell you which you love best, and which best deserves it. Both are entitled to your affection; but the love of a true wife for her husband is stronger than filial love. 2. It would be a very poor Christian—or rather no Christian at all—who permitted such a wish to find a place in her heart. We must forgive even our enemies freely as we ourselves hope to be forgiven of God.

Mrs. B., Anapolis, Neb., writes:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is my only means of grace, for I live many miles from any place of worship. We once had a nice Sabbath School, of which I was superintendent, but times have changed. Most of the American people have left and others have taken possession. They have their own school, Sabbath school, and church. I hardly hear a sermon preached once a year and when I read in your excellent paper of the good that many are doing, my heart yearns for activity. Yet, perhaps I am doing God's work by "staying by the stuff," as well as he that "goeth down to the battle."

Reader, Pittsburg, Pa. Who was St. Augustine? What are his writings or books, and can they be bought, and where? What do they mean when they speak of his Confession?

Aurelius Augustinus was a native of Numidia, born in 354 A. D. His mother, Monica, was a Christian of great piety. Augustine became Bishop of Hippo and a famous teacher in the Church. His writings are venerated as among the earliest and most spiritual of Christian works. His "Confessions" are spiritual experiences and reflections with a great deal that is autobiographical. He wrote many other books beside. You may be able to procure them through any prominent publishing house.

Subscriber, Brent, Ky. Is there any means of ascertaining what was the mode of baptism practiced by the Apostles and their immediate successors?

The Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, instructs the teacher to baptize in living (that is, running) water. "But if it continues," "If thou hast not living water, baptize in other water; and if thou canst not in cold, then in warm. But if thou hast neither, pour water upon the head thrice, unto the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit." From this it would appear that immersion was preferred, but pouring might be practiced if immersion was not convenient.

Reader, Dallas, Texas. Am I not right in considering that a person who died here recently is now in perdition, seeing that he was never baptized? He led a moral life and attended church of different denominations but was not a member of any, and he told me not long before his death that he had not been baptized.

It is not well to dogmatize about the condition of a soul that has passed out of the world. We may wisely leave all such matters to God. If the person in question believed on Christ and trusted him for salvation, you may be sure he would be saved though he was not baptized. We cannot but wonder that such a believer should be indifferent about any command of his Lord, or should neglect the observance of baptism; but we do not believe that his doing so would involve him in eternal punishment. It is very unlikely that the penitent thief had ever been baptized, yet he received Christ's assurance of salvation.

"Reader," Scranton, Pa. Is there any other case than the one in Hebrews 12: 16, 17 of Esau's repentance? What is meant by his finding no place for it, and its application to us?

Only the record in Genesis. He had [illegible] himself out from the privileges of his birthright by his own act. He had valued them so little as to give them up rather than suffer hunger. Its present application is to persons who easily yield to temptation, and who sin against God rather than suffer hardship. Apers who will tell a lie to get out of a trouble is [illegible] whom it applies.

M. Mart, Pipe Creek, Md. Is it right to join a church without being converted? A clergyman [illegible] near here is teaching that if a person be a member of the church and is baptized he will be saved.

Membership of a church cannot save any one. The church should be composed of persons who have been born again, and who join by joining the church to confess Christ before the world. To join a church is in implied assent al of faith in Christ, and if at the time of the act the person has not exercised that faith and is not converted, he is misrepresenting his condition.

R. W. J., Lake Creek, Ill. What is meant by the limitation to the promise (1. John 5: 14), "if we ask anything according to his will, he hears us"? If it is his will, shall we not get it without [illegible]

There is direct encouragement in many places in the Bible to pray for such things as are needed. Luke 18: 1-8 is a very emphatic assurance from our Lord's own lips of the [illegible] of such prayers. The limitation is only such as a human parent would make. There are some requests that a father would deny [illegible] however much he loved him, and often must he loved him. God acts in the same way. Some Christians have had reason to [illegible] that God gave them their desire.

A. Baker, Westgate, Ia. 1. An infidel lecturer stated some time ago that no minister dare tell his people what he thought of the Bible. Is there any basis for such a charge? 2. What is the meaning of the statement in II. Chronicles 18: 22, that the Lord put a lying spirit in the mouth of certain prophets?

1. Ministers are continually telling their people what they think of the Bible. [illegible] they study it and the longer they preach it the more they love it and recommend it to others. The statement of the lecturer is a slander. There are some doubters in the pulpits, but as a rule they publish their doubts rather than conceal them. 2. The words of Micaiah, who was in danger of his life. When informed that the prophets unanimously had advised war in the name of the Lord he did not venture to dispute the fact that he was being sent of God, but represented himself as having been duped. It was the resort of a timid and politic man.

Reader, California. 1. Yes, send [illegible] it will be mailed to you. 2. There are [illegible] that cannot be explained in this life and will await God's own time to disclose their meaning. Mrs. A. M. Latham, Onancock, Va., will [illegible] scriber" the numbers asked for if still [illegible] E. U. B. The same principle is found in many other vegetable products.——Mrs. Douglass, Newcastle, Pa. Very probable.——R. M. H., Kansas. 2. Write to the Sunday School Union, Boston, Mass. [illegible] no authentic information on the subject. Litty, Bethel Corners, N. Y. Write to the Consul at Berne, Switzerland, giving all information you possess and enclosing the letter. He will doubtless be able to advise you factorily.——Jos. C. Ray, Lindsay, Can. [illegible] habilty you can. Write to the makers of strument for book of instructions.——Jar Hazelhurst, Ga. Yes; for many years unity among the churches on all essentials ty in plans for Christian work has been gaining ground.——N. P., Lisbon Falls. notism is now so generally recognized worn-out craze of magnetism and mesmerism a new name that it is hardly capable of ously considered except by the ignorant credulous.——Correct. Orthodox. Spurgeon not considered orthodox.——Mary C. Austin, Tex. 1. It does not appear in [illegible] regular collections. 2. Yes; she is his [illegible] P. P., Allen, Neb. Write to Librarian, A [illegible] N. Y. for information about the book. Mint, Washington, D. C., regarding the

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

NEW POMPEIIAN DISCOVERIES.

No less interesting than preceding discoveries are the relics of Pompeii which have just been brought to light by the excavators. A complete villa in the suburbs of the entombed city was found recently and the ashes and volcanic mud which have covered it for more than eighteen centuries have now been removed. The villa evidently belonged to a grandee of great wealth and artistic taste. A picture of the peristyle, or drawing-room, of the villa appears on this page, with the reproduction of a photograph of a piece of sculpture on one of the marble columns. The use of marble of itself indicates the high standing of the owner of the villa, as marble was very rarely employed in the buildings of Pompeii; but in this mansion there is a profusion of it. The ruins, with the descriptions of the houses of that date which Horace gives, enable us to realize how the villa must have looked in the days of its glory. The centre had a roof, and the blue sky of Italy stretched above it, the turf and flower-beds carpeted the court, surrounded with its stately colonnade, while the roof resting on them backward to the outer walls, gave shade and shelter. Here and there were exquisitely sculptured lavers, fountains and statuary on pedestals, and on the walls paintings of marvellous beauty. The sculpture of which we have a picture was probably intended to represent the god Janus, worshipped by the Romans as the beginning of everything, a custom still surviving in the name of the first month of our year. The skilful combination of the male and female heads, the arrangement of the hair and beard and the delicate formation of the eyes, all show that the sculpture was the work of a master. Works of almost equal merit were found in considerable number in the same room. The place must have been a rare spectacle of luxury and beauty on that night in August, 79, when Vesuvius suddenly vomited forth the flames and mud which buried the city with its neighbors Herculaneum and Stabiæ—one funeral pall. Where its owner and his family were on that fatal night none can tell. Of the thirty thousand inhabitants of Pompeii many were at the theatre, about two hundred were at the temple of Juno and their skeletons were found there a few years ago, while probably still larger number of the citizens were in their homes. Doubtless many attempted to escape but were buried in the awful downfall which stifled them. History presents no parallel to the catastrophe, save that which befell Sodom and Gomorrah. It is remarkable that Pompeii should have resembled them not only in the nature of its destruction, but in the abominable vices which brought destruction upon them. The fact of this two-fold resemblance is not denied by persons who regard it merely as a coincidence. To the Christian it is a fulfilment of warning as to sins of that kind.

SCULPTURE FOUND AT POMPEII.

Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. (Eph. 5: 6.)

A Disappointed Wanderer.

There is a man in grievous trouble at Greenville, O. A dispatch from that town, to a Cincinnati journal, says, that a romance like the poet's story of Enoch Arden has just occurred there. Ten years ago a business man disappeared mysteriously. He was only twenty-five years old, but two years previously he had married the belle of the town, and they had one child, a bright beautiful little girl. He was sought every where but no trace of him could be found. His affairs were in an embarrassed condition, and the deserted young wife was utterly penniless. She set resolutely to work and succeeded in making a living for herself and her little daughter. As the years passed and no word or sign came from her missing husband, she reluctantly came to the conclusion that he had committed suicide. Two years ago she listened to the pleadings of a suitor for her hand, to whom, so long as she had the faintest hope of her husband's return, she had turned a deaf ear. But when she gave up that hope, she accepted him. A divorce was necessary as a legal formality and having secured it, she was married. On July 22, she had occasion to go to the railroad depot and there to her consternation she met her first husband who had just alighted from an incoming train. He had spent the ten years of his absence in Mexico, working hard at first and speculating in mining stock when he had saved a capital. He had become rich and had returned to claim his wife, bringing a large fortune with him. He bitterly deplores now that he did not communicate with his wife, but says that all his attention was concentrated on money-getting and he always intended to return to her when he had made his fortune. He has made the fortune on which he set his heart; but there is no man in the State more miserable than he. There are some who act in the same way toward Christ, deserting him and plunging into the world's business, neglecting prayer and the church that they may give all their thoughts to attaining worldly success, but intending to make all right before they die, by repentance, forgetting that the opposite course is the rule of the kingdom.

Seek ye first the kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6: 33.)

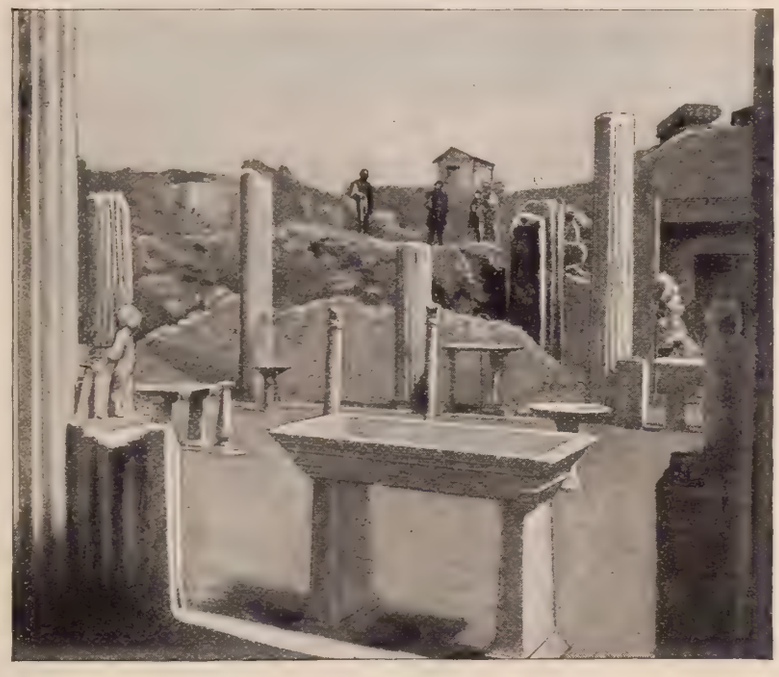
To Save the Ships.

Inquiries have been made by the Naval Department since the naval engagements of the Japanese and Chinese war, with the view of providing against a danger which affected the issue of the fight on the Yalu River. This was the fact, that when some of the Chinese vessels caught fire, there seemed no way of extinguishing the flames but to detach other vessels from the fight to go and put out the fire. The inquiries of Secretary Herbert resulted in the offer of a company to make all the wood used in the construction of vessels, absolutely fireproof. After a series of tests the offer was accepted, and the new battle-ship "Iowa" and the cruiser "Brooklyn," now being built, will have no wood in them but such as has been treated by the process. It is expected that if these prove satisfactory, all vessels built for the Navy in future will be under a like contract. The process consists in forcing into the wood sulphate and phosphate of ammonia by hydraulic or electrical pressure. The tests were invariably successful. A piece of ash which had been treated by the process was left in a fierce fire for twenty minutes, and when taken out was but slightly charred. A log of yellow pine also successfully resisted the fire. The company claims that any wood once treated, can never afterward be burned. If its claim is substantiated, there will be an extensive demand for the process for battle-ships of all nationalities. It is much to be wished that young people who are going into the battle of life would seek a like protection. The fierce fires of temptation can never hurt any whose souls are filled and permeated with divine grace.

My grace is sufficient for thee. (II. Cor. 12: 9.)

Profit from an Enemy.

A struggling enterprise in Utah has suddenly become prosperous by an ingenious adaptation. A mining company has for several years been embarrassed by a succession of floods. Its operations were frequently entirely suspended until the water that flowed into the mine, in spite of all their endeavors to prevent it, could be got rid of. A short time ago a proposition to abandon the enterprise was seriously considered, as the cost of drainage and pumping was nearly equal to the proceeds of the mine. Recently, however, their engineer adopted new tactics. He determined to use the water instead of trying to keep it out. He increased the opening through which it entered and constructed a flume five feet wide which carried the water to a rivetted pipe three feet in diameter. A hundred and twenty feet below the end of the pipe, he has set up a water wheel, on which the water gives a pressure of fifty pounds to the square inch. The power thus secured, is used to generate electricity and the company now gets a current which not only lights the mine and its mills, but runs several motors and saves an enormous expenditure of money. The Company now no longer dreads the influx of the water but welcomes it as a source of profit. So it has often been in the Christian's spiritual experience. Events which seemed on the surface to be disastrous have under the overruling Providence of God turned out to be blessings; and among the "All things" which work together for good to them that love him. Many have come at the close of their lives to speak of their losses and trials as Paul spoke of his imprisonment:



LOWER FLOOR OF A PATRICIAN'S HOUSE RECENTLY UNCOVERED AT POMPEII.

The things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel. (Phil. 1: 12.)

BRIEF NOTES.

We Invite the Co-operation of Our Subscribers in the extension of our subscription list, and in order to introduce this journal into many new homes, we will, on receipt of only one dollar, send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for six months to any address in the United States or Canada, and one copy of any one of the following premiums, all charges prepaid:

International Ruby Bible, which retails at $2.
From Manger to Throne.
Gospel Hymns, from One to Six, complete.
The Pathway of Life.

This offer will not apply to renewals, being intended exclusively as an inducement for new subscribers to try THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. No renewals will be accepted on these terms, nor will any new subscribers intended to take the place of renewals, share in this offer. Please tell your friends about it, and invite them to join our ranks. All new subscriptions sent in under this proposition must positively be mailed before August 15th, when this offer will be withdrawn.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Potter Encouraged the workers at the Bowery Mission on July 28 by a visit at the afternoon service. The Bishop's visit was unexpected, but he was heartily welcomed, and was persuaded to give a brief address. The Bishop found there an audience even more urgently in need of religious aid than that which gathers round him at the mission in Forsyth street, where he has been laboring for a month past, while the clergyman in charge took a vacation.

The Estimated Expenditure of the French Government for the wicked and cowardly invasion of Madagascar, is larger than the sum that the Missionary Societies have been able to expend for Gospel work there in fifty years.

Dr. H. H. Jessup Sailed for his Sphere of labor in Syria from New York, July 20 after his brief furlough. Mrs. Jessup accompanied him and they took with them their two daughters and a niece who will help in the Mission work.

William F. Bischoff is at Present Actively and successfully reaching the unsaved masses in Springfield, Ill., his native city. The evangelist is in charge of a Gospel tent which is moved from place to place in all the needy localities of the town.

A Marked Awakening has Occurred at Independence, Iowa as a result of the evangelistic meetings held there under the direction of Mr. M. B. Williams and his singer, Mr. Charles Alexander. Four of the churches united in these services and all have received accessions.

As an Evidence of Temperance Progress in England, it is stated that the Duke of Westminster, who had on his estates a few years ago forty-eight saloons, has closed thirty-seven of them and has rented them to persons who will carry on other kinds of business in them.

Mr. D. L. Moody Preached on July 28 to an immense audience at Convention Hall, Saratoga. The occasion was the anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association. Bishop John P. Newman, Dr. Smith of Baltimore, and many other distinguished clergymen were among Mr. Moody's hearers.

The Blessing of God on the Work at the Bowery Mission, New York, has been signally manifested. Since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD took charge in April last, no less than 1708 men have been led there to profess faith in Christ and a determination in his strength to renounce sin and strive after holiness.

Rev. Edward Beecher, an Elder Brother of the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, died July 28. He was in his ninety-second year. In the course of his ministerial career he was pastor of Park Street Congregational Church, Boston, and later of Salem Church in the same city. His last pastorate was at Galesburg, Ill., where he labored for eighteen years.

A Writer in a Roman Catholic Journal Published in Germany calls public attention to the fact that the Catholic Church in some important districts is losing its hold on the people. As a specimen case he mentions Baden, which is a Catholic stronghold. He says that the increase of Protestants since the census, twenty years ago, is 106 510, while the increase of Catholics during the same period is only 85,000.

Dr. Edward Judson Has Been Holding special services in his church in Washington Square, New York. With the aid of a stereopticon showing scenes in Palestine, he has lectured on "The Story of the Cross." Although the heat has driven every one out of town who could leave, Dr. Judson's services have been densely crowded and much good has been done.

The Foreign Missionary Work of the Christian Alliance, of which Rev. A. B. Simpson is President, is now nearing the close of its seventh year of labor. The accounts for the year are not made up, but at the beginning of the year the total amount expended during the previous six years had reached the grand total of $341,000. The income for the first year was $5 000; the second year $10,000; the third year $20,000; the fourth year $75,000; the fifth year $106,000; and the sixth year $125,000. When it is remembered that this work has no denominational backing this record is surprising.

Rev. John Lee, of Chicago, Supported by other Methodist ministers of that city, has after persistent effort succeeded in gaining the attention of the Roman Catholic Pontiff, through Cardinal Gibbons, to the injustice of the present laws in Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia. No marriages are legal in those lands but such as are solemnized by Catholic clergy and they will not marry Protestants. There is consequently no alternative for Protestants unable to leave the country, but that of remaining unmarried or abjuring their faith. Mr. Lee asked the Pope to use his influence, which is all-powerful in the countries mentioned, to secure the religious liberty which he commends in this country. Mr. Lee has received an assurance that the Cardinal-secretary will look into the matter.

ZULU "WITCH-DOCTORS."

ALTHOUGH more intelligent than any other African race, the Zulus are firm believers in witchcraft and are very superstitious. The Matabeles, a branch of the Zulu race, are like them in this. Dr. Josiah Tyler, who spent forty years among them, describes the manners and functions of the doctors as disgusting in the last degree. That they may become thoroughly acquainted with their art, they endure a great amount of self-sacrifice. They leave their homes, isolate themselves from their fellows, live and sleep in solitary places, fraternize with wild animals, endure hunger and cold and talk to the moon until they become almost, if not quite, lunatic. Their clothing is hideous, consisting of skins of crocodiles and pythons, with the teeth of wild cats and fetishes of various kinds about their necks, the bladders of birds and wild beasts on their heads and a long leopard's skin dangling about their loins. One of their functions is called "smelling out." It consists in discovering witches who are supposed to have caused illness or other misfortunes. They go through a hideous performance, and finally indicate some unhappy creature as the wrong-doer, who falls a victim to the vengeance of the people. Dr. Tyler says that even after the Zulus have become Christians, they are only with difficulty kept from calling in the witch-doctor in a crisis.

An Enemy Converted.

Two attempts were made by the China Inland Mission to get a foothold at Ninghai. Seven years ago, the first was made and there was then not a Christian in the place. Mr. Charles H. Judd and his wife settled there and they were attacked and driven away with so much violence that Mrs. Judd was confined to her bed for several weeks after reaching a place of refuge. "A third time," says Mrs. Judd, "we returned. We were cursed and pelted with stones. But this time God gave us two converts. Who were they? One was a poor, half-blind, lame beggar, and the other was a military officer. The military officer was the leading man who tried to turn us out the first time, and kept the soldiers in his house to batter our doors. But God turned that man into a disciple of Jesus Christ. If I had gone through the city in order to select the vilest and most disgraceful man that could be found, and the greatest ruffian, I should certainly have picked out that man. And now he adorns the doctrines of God our Saviour. I do not know a man in any land in whom I have seen a greater change. He is not a great speaker, but is wonderfully changed in character."

Chinese Cruelty.

The better need of China for more extended Gospel preaching is shown by the following extract from Dr. Graves's "Forty Years in China," shortly to be published by R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore, Md.: The Chinese are a stubborn and untruthful race, and their officers no doubt find great difficulty in extorting the truth in any case which comes before them. As with us, a criminal will usually plead "not guilty," however conscious he may be that he has committed the offense, so, among the Chinese, the accused will stoutly deny that he is guilty of the crime charged. The great object of the judge is to get him to confess. The Chinese proverb is, "If you are charged with stealing a well, you must confess." The magistrate must either entangle him in his talk so as to get the equivalent of a confession, or he must extort the confession through bodily suffering. When annoyed at the pertinacity or boldness of the prisoner, the judge may order all kinds of cruel tortures in order to force the man to acknowledge his guilt. Giving men hundreds of strokes, beating them until the flesh is lacerated, putting on thumb-screws, and other horrid cruelties are frequently practiced on a helpless prisoner. It is not strange that a foreigner, seeing the cruelties of a Chinese court, exclaimed: "Thank God, there is a hell where these wretches who, clothed with brief authority, inflict such pain on their helpless fellow-men, will receive the due reward for their cruelty." He might have added: "Thank God that there is grace which can change even such hard hearts." Prisoners are subjected to untold privations and suffering by their keepers, in order to extort money from them, or compel their friends to pay the keepers to remit their cruelties. Any one who has visited the dark, dirty dungeons of a Chinese prison will feel that even the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. The Chinese delight in cruelty. It was the beheading and mutilating of the Japanese prisoners at Port Arthur, that excited these men to commit the massacre at that stronghold. I was once traveling with a Chinese officer, who was describing the capture of a rebel officer at Nankin. He seemed to gloat over the sufferings he inflicted on his unfortunate prisoner. He told how he strung him up and shot and stabbed him, and said, "If you want to die, I won't let you die; if you want to live, I won't let you live." This, I am persuaded, is no exception to the sentiments the Chinese soldiers usually cherish towards their enemies who are so unfortunate as to fall into their hands.

Brahmin and Mohammedan Wed.

A strange wedding which many would regard as impossible was solemnized recently in Bombay. The bridegroom was a Brahmin and the bride a Mohammedan and both had become sincere believers in Christ. The bridegroom, Samuel Subha Rao was brought to Christ seven years ago under the teaching of Miss Reade, of the South Arcot Mission. After his baptism his relatives brought a suit against Miss Reade for the loss of their son as they considered his conversion equivalent to his death. It involved her in a long and troublesome trial. This young man has now received his theological education. Returning to Miss Reade after his ordination, he became her valuable assistant in preaching the Gospel throughout the district. In the meanwhile there had been another conversion in Miss Reade's school. This was a Mohammedan girl named Rokia Bi, and she, too, had been educated with especial view to mission service. When a few months ago, Samuel asked for marriage with Rokia Bi the thing was felt to be from the Lord. As the Brahmin bridegroom and Mohammedan bride were united in Christian marriage in the presence of the little company, including Christians who had come out from various races and castes, one realized how true it is that "in Christ Jesus" we are all one. Samuel S. Rao hopes to take his bride to visit his father and mother, who, after years of lamentation over a lost son, now realize that he is worthy of esteem. In coming into the inheritance of the Kingdom of Heaven Samuel, of course, lost his rights and privileges as the eldest son, they passing to his little brother, while in his present marriage he has withstood most tempting offers, preferring a "woman who feareth the Lord" to wordly advantages with one who lacks this. This young couple, may have a thorny path to tread but their hearts are strong and true.

A ZULU PRIEST OR "WITCH-DOCTOR" AT HIS INCANTATIONS.

The New Piano at Willard's.

ON all sides of the rough, rugged pathway rose splendid mountains, timbered to the top, and here and there we tramped over grand table-lands, watered by broad streams or intersected by foaming brooks. "I love this wild country," said Jessie Pratt, "but I would not want to live here; it is too lonely, there is too much privation. You see how quiet these mountaineers look, how grave and self-contained, and the women—they are so patient, they all look hard-working, and as if they had been repressed. No," continued Jessie, "I wouldn't like to live here."

"A schoolmate of mine," said I, "has had her home in a desolate little corner of those hills for many years. Not that the place is desolate to her; she has a fine family of boys and girls, and a neighborhood has grown around her home. But Mabel married a minister, and his work led him to the mountains; her heart was in his work, and she desired to share it, so she has been useful and happy, though not able to have the luxuries of earlier days."

"Has she a piano?" suddenly inquired Jessie.

"She has a new piano," I answered triumphantly, "a Baby Grand, sent her by the alumnae of her old college, who are very proud that one of their number, living in so remote a nook, has herself prepared three sons for college, and sent her daughter to the Alma Mater of which Mabel was once a distinguished pupil. That girl came up last year from the little manse in these highlands, passed her entrance examinations without a condition, and at once took a high rank in her class. We, old girls, remembering Mabel, felt a thrill of delight. We delicately investigated, found that Sadie had been taught music at home by her mother, and that the old piano was worn out, a perfect tin pan. So we contributed, some of us could give liberally, and all gave something, and we sent the fine piano to Willard's Landing. We will see it this evening, as we are going there for supper, and to spend the night.'

Jessie clapped her hands.

"And I will play Schubert and Chopin and Wagner for your friend, and she will feel a whiff of the old world of her youth."

"She will probably play Chopin and Schubert for you, Jessie. Sadie said her mother had never given up her piano practice, and you must not run away with the notion that culture and refinement are monopolized by towns."

As I spoke, my friend touched my arm. I turned, to see a procession of young lasses in calico dresses and sunbonnets, walking along the grassy edge of the highway. They were slender, slim creatures, graceful and shy-looking, reminding me of fawns, and they nodded and smiled in a a reserved far-away fashion, as I greeted them. All were bare-footed, and they carried their shoes and stockings in their hands.

"May I ask where you are going, young ladies?" I felt some curiosity, for it was evident their errand was one of recreation.

"To Willard's," replied the oldest of the group. "Mrs. Marchmont has a new piano, and she's asked us over to enjoy it. We're so glad that a splendid piano like those people have in the great cities has come to this place." She spoke timidly, but my sympathy inspired her with confidence.

"How far have you come?" I inquired.

"Seven miles," was the answer. "We live at the Bend, eight miles from Willard's."

"And you don't mind the walk?"

"Oh no! we like it. The road is rough, but why should we care when there's welcome and music at the end of it."

Often since that day, friends, when I have had a bit of rough road to go over I've thought of that pathetic little speech. At present of weariness and hardship with shelter and love, warmth and greeting, a welcome and music at the end of the way.

A little farther on and the ground suddenly dipped, and at our feet, as in the bottom of a bowl, lay the village in the valley, my old friend's home. The wayside friends stopped, bathed their feet in the brook and dried them with towels they produced from the bags in which they had brought their luncheons. Then they put on their boots and stockings, brushed their hair, and treed on. We jogged along slowly, our sure-footed mare not wishing to be hurried, and soon we reached Mabel Marchmont's home, a long, low frame building with verandas and vines, a place which had the home look very strongly indicated in its cleanliness and thorough air of comfort.

"I am so glad you are here to meet some of my friends," said the mistress of the little home. "We are having a house-warming for the new piano, and it is beautiful. I have been so famished to have good music in my home, that I am beside myself with joy and gratitude, and it wouldn't be complete if we did not make it a festival and call in our neighbors. Do you remember Dr. Holme's poem about the girl who had never seen a piano, and when she first heard one exclaimed, 'O let it out and please let out the bird!'"

Mabel talked as we ate her generous dinner, chicken fricassee and cream biscuits, apple pie and preserves, and real country fare deliciously cooked and nicely served, and Jessie and I looked at her. She was thin and worn, all the plumpness and baby dimples were gone, there were angular and sharp lines and wrinkles even in her face, but the beautiful eyes were alight with the beautiful soul, her voice was low and sweet, and her laugh as merry and spontaneous. Books and papers and never-ceasing work for Christ had kept her young and fresh. I bracket them together, for the books she read were in the line of religious work, and the atmosphere of her house was that of a Christian. We had our feast of music, but the best of it was neither Mabel's nor Jessie's playing; it was just being all separated, when the simple-hearted girls who had walked bare-footed those seven miles, joined hands and sang in clear, sweet tones, "Lead, kindly Light!"

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A CHINESE BOY'S FAITH.

His Death-bed a Beautiful Scene of Christian Confidence—"I See my Saviour's Face!"

IN a recent issue of "The Quarterly Token," (a missionary publication), the following very beautiful Christian experience of a Chinese boy is recorded:

"Chung To begged his father not to send for a doctor or to spend any money on medicine, for, he said, 'God's time for me to go to my house has come.' 'This is your house,' said the father. 'No, it is not, it belongs to other people; my house is in heaven.' His mother said, 'You have only been sick a few days, and why do you talk thus?' When he replied, 'I have seen two men dressed in white that I saw a few weeks ago on the hill; one was like my Saviour and the other was an angel, and I think I shall go in a few days.'

"On the fifth day of his sickness his brother asked him how he felt. He replied, 'I have had no sip for five days or nights and my body is very, very thin; I think I shall go home on the 16th of June.' His brother said, 'Where is your house?' He replied, 'Not here—this is not God—it is only for a time—my house is in heaven with my Father.'

"His aunt asked him one day how he was, and said, 'I hope soon you will soon be well and able to help your father and mother again.' 'No,' he replied, 'God's commandment and will is better than man's.' His mother on seeing the change in his features cried, and said, 'I am afraid you will die, and what shall I do!' 'Mother, do not, I told you before not to spend any money on doctors. There are three other brothers able to help you; why are you distressed? You should trust all to God; you know his salvation; you must be firm, pure, obey God's commandments, and then you will be able to come to me and see the face of Jesus with me.' The mother said 'Do pray and ask God to spare you to me longer.' The boy answered, 'I can only pray, "Thy will be done."'

"On the evening of the 5th of June he called all his relations and neighbors in and said, 'I am going home, don't be sad; God calls me. You must believe in Christ, always carry his cross, follow him and keep his Sundays. Pray for me now.'

"That evening he was unconscious and seemed in great agony. When he became conscious his mother said, 'I called you just now and you did not answer.' 'Yes,' he replied, 'I have gone, but you wanted me to stay, so I was delayed one day more. To-morrow I certainly go. You need not cry; only pray. If you cry like the heaven do, it will not benefit you. I for a time leave you; if you follow Christ, you will come to me.' He turned to his brother and said, 'I am going first, you must be careful to follow Christ and come to be with me.'

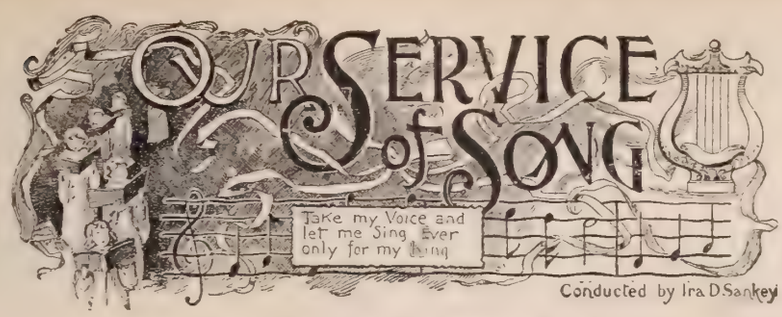
"The next day he called all to come, and said, 'You must all do one thing—sing and pray.' He opened his eyes wide, and turning to his mother he fixed them on her, and said, 'The chair has come with several angels to call me; I see a part of my Saviour's face. He is ready to receive me.' Having smiled and departed."

A JEW'S CONVERSION.

One of the most successful efforts to reach God's chosen people is the Barbican Mission to the Jews. Its leader, Herr C. Tarpshytz, thus describes the conversion of a young Israelite: The son of a landed proprietor in Austria, while still young, lapsed into reckless courses. He came in our way, and we introduced the Gospel to his notice. He laughed, and had no better name than "rubbish" for the glad tidings of salvation. Parting from him, we said: "Be sure of one thing—God is not mocked." Shortly afterwards the young man fell ill, and was conveyed to a large hospital. His case was serious; in fact, the doctors pronounced it hopeless.

With death staring him in the face, the once wild youth became serious; as he reviewed his past life, he was in despair. Over and above these feelings, he was haunted with our warning words, "God is not mocked," and he began to pray. He was dismayed as he asked the question, "How can I meet God?" and he implored the Almighty to give him time in which to prepare for eternal judgment. The chaplain of the hospital spoke kindly to him, and prayed with him. After three or four days of feverish delirium, to the surprise of all, the young man recovered.

He looked upon this as of God's peculiar mercy, and in order to his repentance. He visited us as an inquirer, and was instructed in the way of salvation. He accepted Jesus as his Saviour, and confessed him in baptism. In due course he wrote to his friends, telling them of the grace of God. By way of response, he was covered with curses, and cast adrift in the world. He received grace to stand fast in his profession; he was taken in hand by the Mission, and is doing well.



SWELL THE ANTHEM.

"SING TO GOD, SING PRAISES."—Ps. 68: 4.

NATHAN STRONG. C. C. CASE.

1. Swell the an - them, raise the song, Prais - es to our God be - long;
2. Bless - ings from His lib - 'ral hand, Flow a - round this hap - py land;
3. Hark! the voice of na - ture sings, Prais - es to the King of kings;

Saints and an - gels join to sing, Prais - es to the heav'n - ly King.
Kept by Him, no foes an - noy, Peace and free - dom we en - joy.
Let us join the cho - ral song, And the grate - ful notes pro - long.

CHORUS.

Swell the an - - them, raise the song,..... Prais-es high..... to God be -

Swell the anthem, raise the song, Praises high long;..... Swell the an - them, raise the song, Prais-es high to God be - long.

to God belong;

Copyright, 1895, by James McGranahan

From "GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2." by permission of the publishers.

THE MISSING ONES.

Reasons for Expecting that Christ's Waiting People will be Removed Before His Coming in Judgment.

BY PROF. JOHN BAYFORD, F.S.A.

Continued from page 497.

THE parable of the Virgins confirms the view we have taken on this subject. All the ten virgins went forth to meet the bridegroom, and while he tarried they all slumbered and slept. Upon the cry at midnight, that they should go out to meet him, the foolish ones found, too late, that they had no oil for their lamps, and while the went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. The others came afterwards, and said, Lord, open unto us, but he answered, "I know you not."

In Luke 13 will be found a corresponding Scripture, in the reply which our Lord gives to the inquiry, "Are there few that be saved?" He cautions them to strive to enter in at the strait gate, for "many will seek to enter in, and shall not be able, when once the master of the house is risen up and hath shut to the door." He adds, they shall then begin to stand without and to knock, saying, Lord, open unto us. But he shall tell them that he knows them not—they shall urge, that they have eaten and drunk in his presence, and that he has taught in their streets; "but he shall say, I tell you, I know not whence you are, depart from me ye workers of iniquity."

Surely these are they, who have not kept their garments; and are not found walking worthy.

The next two verses make it evident, that the time of the second advent is particularly spoken of in this passage, for they who thus stand without, are described as seeing Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, whilst they are themselves thrust out; and whilst many come from the east, and the west, and the north, and the south, and sit down in the kingdom of God.

If the gospels and epistles are carefully examined, it will be found, that exhortations unto good works are generally given with some reference to the second advent, and as if conveying a special promise to them whose walk shall be approved at that time. In the Epistle to the Ephesians 9: 1, Paul exhorts, "I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation, wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness," etc.

Continuing the subject, he adds in the next chapter, "Walk in love, as Christ hath loved us; and then, speaking of some particular sins, he says, (ver. 6), "Let no man deceive you with vain words, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience: Be not ye therefore partakers with them." Does not this afford a plain intimation, that they who believe in Jesus, and confess his name, shall not escape without stripes, if they follow after their own devices, and are so found when he cometh? So in Colossians 3 the apostle says, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth." Is not, then, this mortification necessary?

THE LORD'S COMING.

A popular little work by Mrs. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear every week in this journal. It contains fifteen chapters on the events predicted in the Bible to occur between the present time and the close of the Millennium. Third Edition—Revised and Enlarged. 104 pages. Price fifteen cents. Published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91-101 Bible House, New York.

THE PALACE OF LIFE.

A Parable for Young People — By Rev. Alexander MacLeod, D.D.*

IN the days of the Emperor Agathos many wonderful things took place. It is one of the least of these I am about to relate.

Two children, a boy and a girl, were wading one day in the little brook which ran past the village in which they lived. On the other side of the brook, as far as the eye could see, was the highway, and everybody who passed could be seen by the children. And indeed this was a great part of their joy, that so many things were to be seen. They saw carts laden with harvest-store going to the mill, and soldiers marching to the city, and students traveling to the university, and a wedding party going to the church, and a funeral to the churchyard. But there was one sight greater than all these they were that day to see. Far away in the distance it rose before them, first as a cloud of dust, then as the swift glancing of wheels and horses' feet in the sunlight, then as a blaze of scarlet and gold. It was the Emperor Agathos riding through his land.

To the surprise of the children, the horses stopped, and the Emperor commanded the two to cross the brook and come up into his carriage. In an instant they were sitting on the rug at his feet. The carriage began to move. A cloud of dust whirled up behind them, and they felt themselves swept along as if they had wings. Many a stolen glance they took on this side and on that—for at first they were a little afraid. The highway still skirts the bank of the stream; but it was now broader and deeper, and great bridges crossed it every here and there. They passed houses, and woods, and gardens, and pasture fields filled with cattle. But at last, when they had ridden many a long mile, and the sun was beginning to dip down into the west, they came to a beautiful hill with a crystal palace at the base. Under the rays of the setting sun, and reflecting the golden colors of the sky, it shone like an immense diamond.

"This is your home, henceforth," said the Emperor, pointing to the palace. The children noticed that the approach was by a bridge which crossed the stream, in whose shallow waters they had waded in the morning, along whose ever-deepening and widening banks they had driven all the day.

"This is your house," the Emperor said again, as he drove up to the huge doorway. It was a succession of arches, one within another, carved in crystal into the form of leaves and fruit and creeping things. And as the sunlight touched it, the whole seemed, to the eye of the children, like one deep arch made of colored lamps and glittering stars.

But when they reached the door, they observed in immense letters above it the words, "No Returning," and they thought of the village in which they had spent so many happy days, and of their parents, and were both afraid and sad.

The door opened with a soft noise, like the sound of a flute far out on the sea. And the two children crossed the threshold and went in. But they never could tell what happened next, nor when the Emperor left them, nor who received them. The morning sun was shining through the walls of the palace when they began to observe again.

The first thing which struck them was the size of the palace. The walls inside seemed to reach up as high as the clouds, and stretch out as far as the eye could see. All up and down the walls were the most lovely pictures of cattle and woods, and birds and beasts, and fields of wheat and barley. The butterflies were almost flying, and they came to think in a little while that the birds really sang. A brook, just the picture of the brook in which they had been [illegible] along the floor, and along the bank of it was a highway. The floor was carpeted with real grass, and clover, and buttercups, and daisies. It was one of the wonders of the place that the picture fruit-trees had real fruit on them, which the two children were allowed to gather and eat.

But what pleased them most was the discovery that their parents lived in the house, and their brothers and sisters as well. And they saw children going to school just as in their native village; and by-and-by they found themselves joining these children and sitting in school too. The days passed very pleasantly in this splendid new home. Sometimes the two children would clap their hands and dance for joy. But they could not help noticing after a while that the door by which they had come in was far behind them. They were also aware of a difference in other things; but they could not tell what that was. And then they saw right before them another door, and above it the same words they had seen outside.

One day, when the school-tasks were over and they were tired of playing with other children, curiosity drew them to the second door, which opened softly at their approach. They heard the hum of busy crowds, the click of shuttles, the ring of hammers, the beat of drums. They would fain have entered, but they were so tired out with play that, while they were listening and peeping in, they fell asleep.

When they awoke it was morning, and they found that they had been carried in. They looked round—the very first thing they did—for their parents; but neither the boy's nor the girl's could be seen. Then they began to cry, and turned to go back to them through the door. Alas! the door would not open. The great words glowed down on them like fire—"No Returning." They cried a good long while together. But when they dried their tears and looked at each other they saw that they were no longer children.

This new room of the palace was different, and yet not much different, from the one they had left. If anything, it was larger. The fruit was higher up on the trees. The trees were farther away. The songs of the birds were not so clear. But still there was a wondrous beauty all round the place. It was from the centre the noise of hammers and shuttles had come which they heard the evening before. There, a crowd of grimy men were working at forges: here, another crowd, pale-faced and clean, and women as well as men, were weaving cloth in looms. Standing about in the spaces between, some were buying and selling, others were building houses and laying out gardens. And at a distance squares of soldiers were wheeling and marching about on an open plain.

While they were looking at all these wonders a man come up to them and led them to two empty looms and said: "You are now in the work-room of the palace. Those looms are for you. You shall be taught to work them. And henceforth you shall be expected to work. Whatever your hands find to do, do it with all your might. And do it while the sun is shining. If you work faithfully you shall receive a crown." Then he placed them on the seats of the looms and left them. Then one looked to the other and said: "How like his smile was to the Emperor." Then they began to weave.

Their webs were of many colors. And as the webs unfolded, beautiful figures came out in the cloth. And the young workers were delighted with the beauty, and set themselves to work with their whole heart—at first slowly, till their hands and fingers got used to the work, then swiftly. And at last they began to sing at their work.

As their hands grew in skill, the two companions wrought together with the greatest spirit. They sometimes recalled the former days and their parents, and were a little sad. But that gave place to interest in their work. The webs were becoming more and more beautiful in pattern, and it was a continual joy to those young workers to see flowers and birds and beasts and the most wonderful shapes, flowing out in the webs they wove.

But a change came over all this, as over everything which had gone before. That joy in working did not last very long. The heart of the young man longed towards his companion more than to his work. He became negligent and careless. He could not weave for doing little kindnesses to her and listening to her songs. And one day, when the looms were standing silent, and she was singing one of her songs, the air about them seemed to grow thick, and there was a noise of distant thunder in the sky. And then, flash after flash of lightning coming nearer—every flash darted down from the clouds—the young man's web caught fire, and flew up in a thousand sparks. And when he looked to the other loom, his dear companion was fallen forward on the beam, and white as death. To all appearance she was dead. A company of mute women came in and carried her away. And the young man saw her no more. What happened after that he could never tell. His senses left him for a time. But when he came to himself, he found his loom close to a door like the two he had passed through before. Sick at heart for the loss of his companion, he was only too eager to press it open, and pass into the third room.

But not so pleasantly as the other two did this third door swing open. And not into so fair a room was the sorrowful young man admitted. The walls were the same, but not so high, and the pictures on the walls were faded, and the carpet of grass was not so green, and even the stream went sluggishly, and was not so pure as before. The air was colder, too. The workplaces were nearer, and busier, and more dreary. In the evening he felt tired in a way he had never felt before. But, most sorrowful of all, he had no companion to cheer him in his sorrows, and the friends of his youth had all disappeared.

It was in this room, however, that he began to dream every night of riding once more with the Great Emperor in his carriage. He seemed to be a little child again, and sitting at the Emperor's feet, and looking up at his smile. And every time he dreamed, he heard the Emperor say to him: "Be not afraid," or. "At evening time it shall be light," or, "He that maketh the Most High his habitation no evil shall befall him, nor any plague come near his dwelling," or some other words as comforting as these. All next day, as he sat plying his shuttle, he would think of the words he had heard in his dream, and of the smile of the Emperor, and be glad.

But there was one thing he began to notice with sadness. Every morning he found the loom shifted forward from where it had stood the day before. And he soon saw not far off, that a door like those he had passed through already, was right in the face of his path.

And by-and-by this fourth door was reached; but it was not now as at the former doors. He who was to pass, indeed, was no longer young. His hair was grey, his step was a little feeble. And when the door opened, it was with a creaking noise; and when it closed behind, it was with a heavy sound. And he stood alone in the fourth and last hall of the great palace.

I do not care to describe it. The glory of the former walls was departed. Everything was faded. The very heavens seemed further off. And within view, from the very entrance, was the egress door, dismal with iron bands and nails. Through its open chinks swept in a biting wind. And now and again there came a sound through the chinks like the sound of water — like the rushing of a river swift and deep outside. A few old people were working here and there at looms. But every day these became fewer and fewer. One after another went forward and passed out through that door. And sometimes it was a terrible sight, when through the open door, a glimpse was now and again caught of the river outside, and of great rocky banks burying it in awful shadows.

At last it came to the turn of him, whose history we have followed so long. The door opened, and he stood on the threshhold, and saw with his own eyes the swift and awful flood. And in a moment he was in its depths. But in a moment also he knew that another was by his side. A head clothed with sunlight shed light across the entire stream. An arm strong as the everlasting hills sustained him, as he struggled with the tide, and bore him safely to the other bank. And then, as the water passed out of his eyes, and he could look at his helper, he beheld that it was no other than the Great Emperor who had asked him up into his carriage when he was a little child.

But the most wonderful thing of all was this. So soon as he touched the other bank his youth came back to him again. And he saw before him another palace, crystal, golden, on the side of the hill. And far upward, another and another still, to the top. And at the top, towers and pinnacles of pearl and amethyst glowing in the sun.

And a door opened with a sound like sweet music, above which was carved the words: "They shall go no more out." And he passed into a hall more glorious than my words can describe. His parents were there to welcome. And his lost companion was by their side. And, most delightful of all the good Emperor Agathos smiling on him more kindly than before. And in that hour he learned that the Emperor had been leading him, by a way he knew not, to his eternal home; and that childhood, and youth, and suffering, and old age were but different rooms in the Great Palace of Life, and the first stations in man's everlasting progress.

Cross-Bearing.

An Address to Boys and Girls in the Reformed Church, Mott Haven, N. Y., by Rev. G. Edwin Talmage—Text, Matt. 16: 24, "Take up His Cross."

WHAT is a cross? You may ask—we hear the word very often—what does it mean? When the murderers to be [illegible] in New York State have to use electricity, [illegible] many of the States still hang a man by his neck till he be dead, but in mercy they first break his neck, so he will have almost no pain. Two thousand years ago the Romans when they put a murderer to death, if he were only a slave, crucified him, that is they fastened him to a tree or to two pieces of wood arranged (not with a rope, lest he choke to death and die too soon, but with nails through his hands and feet, and sometimes a man did not die for three or four or five days, but all the while he was thirsty and in pain and beside, everybody would look and point at him and say: "He is a miserable slave; he was a murderer; see him!" This is a horrible picture, but I tell you the horrible fact, that Jesus Christ, who never did wrong, who was a prince and not a slave, who was the Son of God, was taken by wicked men and crucified and slain, suffering just what I have described, and that is what we mean by the "Cross of Christ." Now, every one who will become a Christian must "take up his Cross," as our text says.

There are four ways in which people think they are doing this very thing. Let us see:

We might have a large gilded cross on the front of our church, and we might say the whole church was bearing that cross. I do not see any objection to that way of telling people that we believe in "Christ and him crucified," but it is not bearing Christ's Cross at all. It does not hurt us, we like it. The Cross must hurt.

A great many people wear a cross as an ornament. It is made of iron or silver or gold or jewels. Now, we are glad that so many people show by what they wear that the Cross upon which slaves die has been made glorious by Christ. But it is not wearing the cross as Christ tells us, if we put it on with our Sunday clothes or our party dresses and we like it, it is pretty, but it does not hurt. The Cross must hurt.

Another way is to wear the cross on one's back. Do you know what I mean? Not like the others at all, I mean this: that boy never plays truant, even though there be skating, and the other boys know it. He has a cross on his back.

That girl is never unruly, she is always quiet and thoughtful, perhaps losing a little fun by it. They all know it. She has a cross on her back.

That boy does not play some game, he does not go to some places that others do, because he tries to be a Christian. He has a cross on his back.

That girl gives up pleasure to help her mother. It is hard sometimes. She bears a cross and others see it. This is right way to wear it. It hurts and the cross must hurt.

The fourth way is on the heart. Nobody can see that. Do you know how? You have a nice home. Christ gave up for you. Think of that! You do your own will. Christ gave up pleasure for you. Think of that! You are tempted to tell a wrong story, to take something that does not belong to you, to rebel against father's or mother's orders. Nail it right there to the cross on your heart so it cannot move, and you will not do wrong. A bad word or evil thought comes to you. Nail it to the cross; kill it so that it may not come [illegible]

If you will be a Christian, you must take up a cross. You might wear it for ornament, you can have it on your heart. You must wear it on your heart, where it hurts, and the cross always hurts.

Flating Houses of the Nile.

Th are the "Dahabiyehs," and are t Model of the Modern House-Boat.

THERE is nothing new under the sun," says the proverb, and it would certainly seem at times as if the assertion were well borne out by the facts. So intricate and ingenious has the mind of an been in all ages, and so fertile in all des es, that it is now exceedingly difficult to cide just where originality leaves off an servile imitation begins. To ancient Egt, Greece, and Rome, all later generatio have been largely indebted, for those grit nations not only showed posterity ho to conquer and to rule, but an infinite nuber of other things of alst equal importance. Thi many of the most serceable of our modern inttions have proved on investigation to be based on model or suggestion coeived by some original brh ages ago.

ouse-boats are a growing raze among people of mes who are fond of ea methods of traveling. Inhe of those simple and coparatively inexpensive fls,—a good-sized, flat-bomed boat, practically ur psizable and with a ke—a party can enjoy an ide tour along the rivers or among the lakes, either sang or being towed by da stopping at pleasure an always anchoring in soe safe cove for shelter an rest by sundown. The are on the Mississippi and other large American rs many house-boats of the cheaper order, and a fe of a superior class, wse roomy cabins and re y homelike surroundin make them pleasant pes to live in during the hest weeks of the year. O the Thames, the Severn the Clyde, the Seine, th Main and the Danube, hseboats are no longer rarded as a novelty. Ty may cost anywhere fr $500 upward to a fone. One very cosy an successful houseboat on he Hudson, cost $600, af one on the Thames, owned by a ri nobleman, was built at an expenditure o 16,000. But simpler than most others, y none the less satisfactory because of its c parative cheapness, is the Egyptian hse-boat or "dahabiyeh," which is the tyical boat of the river Nile. The dahbiyeh has been in vogue in Egypt from tie immemorial, and is really the ancient mdel upon which the modern house-boat h been constructed. It can be propelled b both sails and oars and is so smooth, e editious and comfortable that travelers u ally prefer it to the Nile steamers.

Nearly all the Nile dahabiyehs are owned b private individuals who, during the tourist season, carry excursionists for hire, and mainly, where time is not a special consideration and the visitors want to see the wnders of the most ancient country on eth, there is no better way of doing this tin by floating down the yellow tide in a wll built, well equipped and well manned hse-boat. It is usual to hire your dahabeh at Cairo, and until your journey is ded you are to all intents and purposes e captain of the craft, directing everything from the length and frequency of the stoppages to the character of the meals. As for helm and compass, it may almost be safely averred that the dahabiyeh navigates itself. During the long, brilliant days of floating down the historic waterway, and of visits to the grandest ruins and most stupendous temples the world has ever known, the equipment is perfect. There is no more delightful way to pass a few weeks of holiday than in one of those Nile houseboats; and if the party be under the guidance of a careful and intelligent dragoman, the minds of all may be stored with a wealth of information concerning the ancient land of the Pharaohs that can never be derived from books alone. With the many and ever-increasing facilities for travel that exist in our day, there have come great possibilities; but when all methods are contrasted, it will be found that few, if any, possess so many pleasant advantages as are afforded by those quaint and picturesque-looking craft shown in the illustration.

DAHABIYEHS OR HOUSE-BOATS ON THE RIVER NILE, EGYPT.

⁂

A Miniature "Happy Family."

Here is a capital suggestion for those young folks who are lovers of nature and wish to make a collection that will afford no little pleasure and instruction: Take a wooden box—a shallow soap-box will do. It should be about four inches deep, and make a cover for it of close wire netting. This might be tacked to laths, and made to fit on as snugly as the cover of a match-box does, and yet be easily removed. Now plant in the bottom of your box some mosses, and a piece of turf, drop in some pebbles, bits of twigs, etc., and keep it well watered with a watering-pot. Do you not think it will make a safe and happy home for all the curious little living creatures whose habits you would like to study — crickets, and grasshoppers, and katydids, and tree-toads, and fire-flies, and dragon-flies, and caterpillars, and the cocoons, out of which will come gorgeous-winged moths and butterflies? Feed them sugar and little morsels of sweet cake or bread occasionally—just a little. If any of your little captives seem unhappy, you can easily let them go, and you will soon learn how to feed those which require food which they cannot find in their cage. When they have reached their fullest development, take the box containing your Happy Family to the field or the woods and open one side of it, permitting them to go free at will.

An experiment of this character begets in the childish heart, a love of nature and a kindness for even the smallest insect that walks or flies.

⁂

Christ in the Home.

It is related that a little girl once went on an errand to an elegant house. The lady was proud of her home and she showed Jennie the carpets, pictures, ornaments, and flowers, and asked: "Don't you think they are lovely?"

"They are pretty," said Jennie. "What a beautiful home for Jesus to visit! Does he ever come here?"

"Why, no," said the lady.

"Don't you ever ask him?" asked Jennie. "We have only a room and a bedroom, and we have no carpets or pretty things, but Jesus comes and makes us very happy."

The lady told her husband what Jennie had said, and he replied: "I have often thought that we ought to thank God for his goodness and ask him to come and live with us."

They became Christians, and Jesus came to live with them and made them happy, as he does every home to which he comes.

What a pity that any of our homes should be without him!

⁂

President Faure and the Dolls.

The present President of France has inaugurated a boom in dolls. Ever since his election he has devoted two mornings a week to visiting hospitals. Instead of marching through the various wards escorted by the hospital officials, he goes from bed to bed, shaking hands with the patients, inquires into their condition, and encourages them with cheering words. It is said that he tarries longest by the bedside of little children. He always asks them what he can do to make them forget their pain, and the answer is almost invariably, "Une poupee." The result is that, on the following morning, there arrive at the children's ward of the hospital boxes containing dolls. As M. Faure has now given away over a thousand dolls in this way, it will be seen what a philanthropist he is in deeds as well as in words. Of course his example has been followed by his imitators and by other well-doers in the French capital.

⁂

"Bible Boys" and "Bible Men" the Best.

"My Bible reading boys are the best in the school," remarked the principal of an educational institution. "I am in the habit," wrote a sea captain, "of reading the Scriptures to my crew. I have suffered much lately at sea, having been dismasted, and had all my boats washed away, a little to the eastward of Cape Clear. I then had an opportunity of seeing who was rustworthy: and I found the most u principled men the most useless and the greatest cowards in this awful gale, and the Bible men altogether the reverse, most useful and courageous." It is true, no matter where they are placed, that those who study God's Word and strive to honor him by faithful service, are themselves honored in turn by their fellow-men.

⁂

WASHINGTON AND THE CHILDREN.

A CERTAIN Connecticut family preserves this well-founded tradition, which is related by Ruth Hall. More than one hundred years ago, one night, the old mansion was alight with candles and crackling wood-fires, the long table was spread with glittering silver, and loaded down with good things for a guest whom all delighted to honor, was invited to dinner. Those who had been bidden meet him assembled in the stately drawing room. The host and hostess were there, but where was the principal guest? The appointed hour came and passed; servants were questioned and replied that he had been admitted at the great Dutch door an hour ago. It was a mystery where he had tarried. At length the host excused himself to the others, and started upstairs to, if necessary, bring the strangely behaving soldier—he was a soldier—from the dressing room assigned to him. The way to this apartment lay past the nursery. The sound of singing came from the children's quarters, and in a voice well-known to their father. He threw open the door. There sat the missing man, a baby astride his foot. He was "riding a child to Boston," as the peculiar pastime is still called, and singing lustily, to the delight of another little fellow close beside him. The situation was explained, laughingly, to the guest. With many apologies, he rose to go to the waiting feast below stairs. "Say 'Good-night and thank you' to General George Washington," said the father to his children. "Good-night and thank you, General George Washington!" they called out as the leader of the American armies patted their heads and then followed his host downstairs.

⁂

A Mother's Care for her Daughter.

When the present Empress of Austria chose a tutor for her daughter she sent for a certain bishop, and told him that she had decided to entrust the archduchess's education to him. "Teach her," she said, "to be a true Christian. This is the highest education. We are all in sore need of religious support to go through this life."

Recalled Stormy Times.

"Well, that looks natural," said the old soldier, looking at a can of condensed milk on the breakfast table in place of ordinary milk that failed on account of the storm. "It's the Gail Borden Eagle Brand we used during the war."

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

THE HAPPINESS OF HALF THE VILLAGE WAS IN HIS KEEPING.

CHAPTER III.— Continued.

The Two Dragoons.

PERHAPS no greater contrast could well be imagined than the careers of these two brothers, Sergei and Vladimir, beginning, as it were, from the same starting-point. Vladimir, the elder of the two by a year, had from the first the affection of the General in a far greater degree than his brother. His every whim was gratified. During their boyhood Sergei would be left in Slavo while he was selected to accompany the General on his visits to the capital, and uncle and nephew used to perambulate the toy-shops and confectioners, making lavish purchases of the articles dear to the hearts of boys. But the purchases were for Vladimir; Sergei was always left out in the cold. Often enough such tactless management led to quarrel and combat between the boys, and as Vladimir usually came off second best in these trials of strength, he would run to his uncle with bitter complaints and untrue stories of their cause. Sergei accepted his punishment in silence and bore no malice.

Vladimir avoided intimacy with the young men of the village, never participated in any of their sports, and seldom visited their cottages. He scorned them and their ways with the inbred feeling of the aristocrat, and he boasted his ignorance of their names.

If Sergei was slovenly in his methods of study, Vladimir was all that the German tutor desired. The youth indeed had early determined to get on in the world. All his studies were directed with this object in view, and in his now rarer visits to St. Petersburg, he precociously did all in his power to ingratiate himself with those who might be of service to him hereafter. But it was at home in Slavo that the development of his character was most clearly displayed.

It would not be accurate to say that he was altogether companionless in the village. The village Jew, Haim Rosenberg, was a friend of his, so was Piotr Sozontieff, the "Old Ritualist," in charge of the ferry. The Jew was the curse of the village, helped to be a curse by the improvidence and intemperance of the villagers. He kept the grog-shop and sold poisonous "vodka." The happiness or the misery of half the village was in his keeping, for there was hardly a peasant in Slavo, except the Stundists, who was not more or less in his debt. The wily Hebrew took swift advantage of their embarrassment, and lent them money at ruinous rates of interest; and as the interest was seldom paid, mortgages and foreclosures were matters of frequent occurrence. Haim had no morals and no pity. He encouraged the village children to bring him poultry, fruit, grain and eggs which they would pilfer from their parents, and for these he would reward the boys with bad cigarettes, and the girls with trumpery bits of bright ribbon. The conscience of every child he came in contact with was deadened, and they contracted habits, some of which would cling to them through life.

It was not, however, in his capacity of saloon-keeper that young Vladimir visited Haim. In some way or another the youth had contracted a passion for card-playing, probably from seeing the General so addicted to it, and as the Jew was the only person in the village who cared to risk his money, the grog-shop became his usual morning haunt. At first he won, but gradually the luck changed, and he lost heavily, and continued to lose. He soon got rid of his ready money, and then promises and post obits passed rapidly into the Jew's hands. It ended in Vladimir being overwhelmed with debt, and not knowing where to turn to find money in satisfaction of his remorseless creditor's demands.

But in addition to Haim's "kabak," Vladimir apparently found congenial society down at the ferry in the cottage of the "Old Ritualist." Between Vladimir and the ferryman there was nothing in common, unless, perhaps, it was a mutual hatred of the Stundists. This, however, had nothing to do with the young man's reason for haunting the riverside. Sozontieff had a daughter who was beyond comparison the prettiest girl in the village, and for her Vladimir had conceived a most violent attachment. She was bright and intelligent, and probably the only girl for miles round who could read and write. Pretending to be interested in the Old Ritualist's tales about his sect, and the persecutions its members had suffered, Vladimir would sit for hours in the old tumble-down "izba," and watch the fair girl as she went about her household duties. He met her often along the river, and charmed with his handsome dark face and glib tongue, she gave him ever fresh opportunities of seeing her. He read amatory French poetry and translated it into Russian for her, but she was only amused at this; he brought her roses from the General's garden, and little trinkets that had been his dead mother's—the roses touched her, and she hid them away from her father's eyes, and looked at them sometimes, wondering what the young "barin" meant.

Sozontieff, deep in the mysteries of his religion, never saw what was going on, and never suspected that Vladimir would condescend to notice his daughter, or that she would so far forget her station and her father's honor as to give heed to his addresses. When the time at last came that Vladimir was to proceed to the military school, which he did a year before his brother, he took the girl to a secluded spot along the river, and vowed eternal fidelity to her, promising to visit Slavo often, to write often, and when he had finished the academy to marry her. She smiled, pleased, but was not sure if she believed him.

Vladimir's career in St. Petersburg was as unprincipled as he dared to make it. When Haim Rosenberg could not or would not send him money there were others of Haim's class who were only too ready to come to his assistance. Of course the young cadet sank deeper and deeper into the mire. But he was far too astute to fall in the eyes of his world. His tutors and most of his companions looked on him as a hardworking and studious fellow who was a model of all the virtues; and the best houses in St. Petersburg were open to the handsome, modest-looking youth who was so attached to his profession, and before whom so fair a prospect was opening. At last he joined his regiment—the same to which Sergei was afterwards attached, and launched out into the world.

He was young only in years. He was able, unprincipled, dexterous, and had an insight into men and their motives learnt in the worst possible schools. He swindled the old General in money matters, he even managed to swindle the Jews. He seemed to fear nobody, and he believed nothing, laughing at the tremendous riddle of life that people puzzled over.

The General felt proud of him, proud of his hard, false, glittering nephew. Every winter Vladimir visited Slavo when he was on his way south to the General's villa on the southern coast of the Crimea. He would then renew his ardent love-making to Sozontieff's daughter, who had begun to long for his coming. She often wondered why he let the years run on without making good his plighted word, but he only renewed his promises, sealing them with fresh oaths. For a day or two at a time he could tolerate Slavo, but he was always glad at last to hasten away from the bare steppe village, and take refuge among the cypress and myrtle groves of the south, where there were pleasant garden parties, and music, and warmth, and rich wines, and charm-

*Translated by arrangement with Frederick H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto.

Much Run Down

Without strength or appetite, was my condition last spring. Hood's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me. The first bottle helped me. I continued and my and that tired feeling left me. Formerly my hands trembled badly, but in Hood's Sarsaparilla I found a wonderful nerve tonic. It is a grand medicine for the blood and nerves." R. SQUIRES, East Leverett, Mass.

Appetite Improved

Hood's Sarsaparilla Is the Only True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eyes today.

Hood's Pills easy to buy, easy to take, easy to effect. 25 cents.

An eminent physician's prescription carefully compounded

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure..

The great Heart and Blood Tonic. Sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. Dr. Miles' book on the Heart and Nervous System sent free. Address Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DR. MILES ...Heart Cure... Restores Health

Hay Fever Cured in One Week.

"Westford, Mass., Jan. 30, 1
Your Hyomei cured me of hay fever in one week's time. I consider it a duty to tell others who suffer. A. HAMLIN

Booth's Hyomei

The Australian Dry-Air

Treatment of Hay Fever, Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc., is a new and effective cure for all diseases of the respiratory organs. More ill-health is caused by imperfect respiration than by imperfect digestion. By inhaling Hyomei the respiratory organs are kept healthy, the blood is purified, and tone and vigor is given to the whole system. Hyomei is death to the germs that attack the air passages, and is the result of the latest scientific research. Tens of thousands use it and physicians prescribe it.

"A Blessing to Humanity."

"Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1
Hyomei is a blessing to humanity, and I add my name to the Pass It On Society.
REV. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.

Price Only $1.00.

A pocket inhaler outfit complete is sent, charges prepaid, on receipt of $1.00. Money returned if not satisfactory. Send for descriptive pamphlet.

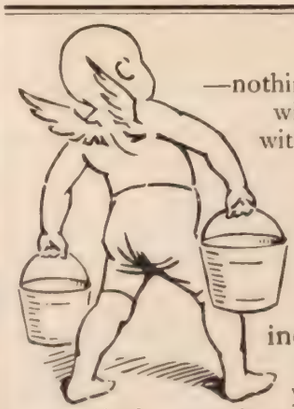
R. T. BOOTH, 18 East 20th Street, New York

Cuticura WORKS Wonders.

In curing torturing, disfiguring, humiliating humours of the Skin, Scalp, and Blood when all else fails.

Sold throughout the world. British Depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

Water



—nothing but water. That's all you need with Pearline. Don't use any soap with it. If what we claim is true, that Pearline is better than soap, the soap doesn't have a chance to do any work. It's only in the way. Besides, some soaps might cause trouble—and you'd lay it to Pearline. You'll never get Pearline's very best work till you use it just as directed on the package. Then you'll have the easiest, quickest, most economical way of washing and cleaning. 477

Millions NOW USE Pearline

FREE. A Deaf Man's Slate

25 years I was almost totally deaf; could not understand a word; had to carry a slate so that people could "talk" to me. In one week after commencing Aerial Medication, I surprised my friends by discarding the slate. I steadily improved, and now can hear the slightest noise and can understand conversation perfectly.
Edward E. Williams, Lead, S. Dk.

Medicines for 3 Months' Treatment Free

To introduce this method and prove beyond doubt that it will cure Deafness, I will for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until investigate.

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. Cleaning. NO Cracking Crumbling

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

invalid women who fascinated him a made love to him. He would swagger a ut the long esplanade at Yalta, dressed i his new uniform, laughing, brilliant, h dsome, and the poor ferryman's daugh- would sit for hours at the old, cold tryst- ir-place among the shivering reeds, weep- ir her eyes out.

CHAPTER IV.

The Countess's Ideals.

On the eve of Olga Navrotska's recep- , Vladimir arrived in town from the Crnea, where he had been spending the w ter. Although St. Petersburg is at it gayest in winter, Vladimir hated the fst and snow, it ate into his bones, so h took his winter's pleasuring in the s th. As he drove to his uncle's apart- nts he was disgusted to find deep snow s on the ground, and a warmth in the a that foreboded a thaw and slushy sets. He allowed himself to be vexed by tse trifles. He kept thinking, besides, o is winter's card-playing, and the heavy lses he had incurred; and the more he thught of this the more difficult it seemed t find a way out of his perplexities. He w s, therefore, not in the happiest of hu- rs when ushered into the General's prese e to receive the usual kiss which was th old man's way of greeting him.

"You're welcome back to Petersburg, dr boy," said the General. "The winter h seemed doubly long without you. Are y better and stronger? You're not look- in at all well. I hope you took my advice a ut the white Vorontsovka. I assure y it's only vinegar. Stick to the red, t e's blood in that. Did you look up Mlame Voronin and Princess Gagarine? Th're splendid women. How's old Boris Vsilitch? His girl must be rather pretty n ?" And so on, through a string of f ish, empty questions. The General in- q ed about old friends and old haunts, a about Vladimir's doings. The young m vouchsafed only the most laconic of a wers, and his anxious relative could n but notice that something was wrong.

"Cheer up, Vladimir, you're back now, a I fancy you'll have a gay spring. I have just got home from a reception at Ga Navrotska's. Ah, that's a woman! S was asking about you, and what you i nded doing. She's interested in you, b eve me. She thought you should not a ent yourself so long from your duties in Petersburg, and that Yalta was relaxing. Vodia, my boy, we have talked about th before; let us talk about it again. She h millions. You have only to ask her a she's yours,"

"Look here, uncle, do you really think I h e any chance there? We're very in- tiate, and all that, but somehow she only le me dance with her, and talk about the m t ordinary things in a way that any- b y might hear. As soon as I get serious sh laughs, and I have been very serious wh her at times. I have a notion she c s more for Sergei than for me, although m respected and much-beloved brother is fatoo great an ass to have noticed it."

"Well, take my advice, Valodia, try y r hand and you'll win. You know the Fnch proverb. Go to-morrow and pay y r first call; go early and you'll get a chce with her alone. If you play your c ds well you'll win."

"I had intended going to-morrow. I mt really do something. I'm smothered in verdue bills. I can't breathe. Jews a Christians, Armenians and Tartars, th're all at me at once; and that rascal Hm—I suppose you know he has opened a exchange office in Kief?—threatens to e pose me if I don't pay him a couple of th sand at once. I suppose there's no use tr ng to get anything out of you?"

"Not the least, dear boy; very sorry. I'm swept out. Yes, you had better go and th k it over. Don't go whining and cry- in to her, but do it boldly. Carry the ot osts with a dash, my boy, and the for- trs will not hold out a minute. God bless y ! Good-night, good-night!" The Gen- e resumed his funny French novel which w to be exchanged in an hour's time for a manual of devotion, and Vladimir drove h e to think it out.

He did a good deal of thinking that night. The Countess Olga and her millions were a first uppermost in his mind, and he th ght that even without her millions she w quite out of his reach. Sergei has a chce there, he thought. Still, his uncle w a sharp old fellow, and knew all about w men. And then he thought of the fine s ny times in Yalta, and the pleasant little supper, and the red and white Vorontsovka, and the invalid women who fascinated him. And then his thoughts wandered to Slavo, although he tried hard to keep them on Olga Navrotska, or on the pleasures of Yalta. He even preferred to think of his threatening Jew creditor. But he would always involuntarily hark back to Slavo, and to the house at the ferry. He felt that there was trouble brewing, and the image of the girl haunted him, and the stern stormy eyes of her father haunted him, and the face of the young Stundist preacher who, he thought, loved the girl, haunted him.

It was a restless night, full of terrible visions that could not be driven away. Ah, that girl! If he could only get her out of his mind. But she was there when he rose next day, and her image seemed stamped with a fearful and indelible pressure on his brain. He wondered if there were such things as premonitions or presentiments.

Still he dressed himself carefully in his newest uniform, and set out to visit the Countess, and if opportunity offered to begin the assault which according to the General was to end in a speedy surrender of her heart and her millions. He was received with the utmost cordiality, for the Countess liked him as a man of the world who was always bright and intelligent, and who could talk reasonably, sometimes profoundly, on a variety of interesting topics. She knew little or nothing of the shady side of his character, of his moral turpitude, of the things which besmirched his honor.

If she guessed anything she never once showed it, and to all outward appearance was more than pleased to see him.

"Why, Vladimir Alexeitch, is it you? We have been expecting you for so long. I do hope you are better?"

Vladimir always made a point of his indifferent health in his dealings with women. He had a notion that it interested them in him. A man in poor health, yet sacrificing himself to duty and to the service of the Tsar—that was his idea.

"Yes, thanks, I feel much stronger. The sea-air revived me greatly after last summer's hard work. But I was so anxious to get back. I always feel when I'm away that my friends are in danger of forgetting me."

That is a poor compliment you pay yourself, Vladimir Alexeitch."

"Yes, Countess, I know, but I feel that friendship is a thing that wants coaxing and nourishing. Absence starves it, shrivels it up. Perhaps there may be exceptions or you would not shake your head. I know well, Countess, that you are not a friend who is hot to-day and cold to-morrow. You are so true that everything and every one who comes in contact with you is sanctified and refined."

"Why, Vladimir Alexeitch, I declare you are beginning to take most serious views of things. You'll be ill again if you do. Foor Colonel Pevtsoff told me last night that he's so fat and strong because he never worries about things."

"Countess, I am serious to-day. I have come here so early because I wish to speak to you alone. I have known you for years, and every day that passes makes me feel that I must know you better. I love you, Countess; I love you with my whole heart. Forgive me. I know I'm not worthy of you but I'll try to become worthy."

"Stop, stop," laughingly interrupted the Countess. "Isn't this all very new and sudden? Hadn't we better change the subject? Have you really thought about this for a very long time? I must say you have been wonderfully successful in dissembling your passion."

To be Continued.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's
BAKING POWDER

Does the most work and the best work.

A CATALOGUE
FREE
Pianos or Organs.
$169.00 $25.00
And Upwards. :: Warranted 25 Years.
Shipped on 30 days' trial. Sold on instalments. Easy terms.

Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741. Washington, N. J.

The Leading Conservatory of America
CARL FAELTEN, Director.
Founded in 1853 by E. Tourjée.
NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. BOSTON, MASS.
FRANKLIN SQ.
Send for Prospectus giving full information.
FRANK W. HALE, General Manager.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.
OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Seven Gables FOR GIRLS of all ages. Looks to their physical as well as higher mental culture. Boating, stately trees, handsomely appointed building. Gymnasium. A thoroughly modern school. Native French and German Teachers: 20th year. Certificate admits to Smith. Direct trains from New York. Address for Catalogue
Mrs. Sarah S. Westcott, Principal. Bridgeton, N. J.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O. Begins 71st year Sept. 2. Board, tuition. Furnished room, & book, $2.80 to 3 a week; 8 courses: no saloons. Cheap, safe. Largest attendance yet. Catalog free. W. A. WILLIAMS, D.D., Pres.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.
From New York. A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Tourist Tickets Southern Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c., Georgia and Florida. Write for our 64-page Prospectus, mailed free.
C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

Canadian Prairie Grasses.
Bunches containing several varieties sent post-paid to any address for 10c. (in silver). Proceeds to aid in building a church. Address, MRS. J. W. MUTEHEAD, Whitewood, N. W. T., Canada.

CARD PRINTER FREE
Sets any name in rubber stamp. Sets cards an hour. YOU can make money with it. Adjust pretty type. Also Indelible Ink, Type Holder Pads and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker worth $1.00. Sample mailed FREE for 2c. stamps for postage on outfit and 2 cent catalogue of Type Bargains.
E. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City

CRIPPLES, Ladies and girls, if you want air or exercise, buy A FAIRY hand or foot power. TRICYCLE CHEAP FOR ALL.
FAY MFG. CO., 4 Pine St., Elyria, O.

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made.
Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE
WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00.
THE LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

COPCO
TRADE MARK.
Improvement in soap has kept pace with the demands of civilization. Have you kept pace with the improvement in soap? COPCO bathsoap is the perfect soap. It represents the latest and greatest step of the skilled soapmaker. Use it once and it will seem almost like degeneration to use any other kind. The price is another part of this great improvement—5 cents.
The N. K. Fairbank Company,
Chicago, New York, St. Louis.
COPCO
TRADE MARK.

Spencerian Steel Pens.

For THIRTY-FIVE YEARS have maintained their superiority for

Quality of Metal, Workmanship, Uniformity, Durability.

Sample card, 12 PENS, different numbers, for all styles of writing, sent on receipt of 4 CENTS in postage stamps.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
450 Broome St., New York.

CHURCH ORGANS.—The Lyon & Healy Church Organs present remarkable value. Prices from $300 for a good instrument of fine tone, suitable for a small church, upward. For $975 an instrument of great power containing 609 speaking notes, two manuals and pedals. Only church organ of the size having pneumatic pistons, pneumatic stop-action, and made of standard measurements adopted by the College of Organists, London, Eng. Indorsed by leading organists everywhere. Fully guaranteed for five years. Sketches, specifications and prices promptly furnished on application. Time payments may be arranged.
LYON & HEALY 33 E. Adams St., CHICAGO.

Study LAW at Home A LEGAL EDUCATION BY MAIL
ALSO Course in Business Law. Postal brings full particulars.
The Sprague Correspondence School of Law, No. 44 Telephone Bdg, DETROIT, MICH.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Decorative, Durable and Best
For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.
H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

HIGHEST PRAISE
By W. A. OGDEN. The LATEST and BEST collection of NEW SONGS for SABBATH SCHOOLS. 30c per 100: by mail, 35c. each. Sample copy sent on receipt of 25c.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald.

"THE LORD IS AT HAND."

Phil. 4: 5.

THE cry of the watchers long since has been heard,
Dan. 4: 13.
The cry made at midnight by heralds of God: Isa. 21: 12.
The Bridegroom is coming, talk not of delay. Matt. 25: 6.
For the night is far spent, at hand is the day. Rom. 13: 12.

This cry is to children of light and of day; 1.Thes.5:5
To gird on the armor, pursuing his way: 1.Thes. 5: 8.
The Bridegroom he cometh, to take us all home; John 14: 3.
May longing desire prompt the answer, "Lord, come!" Rev. 22: 20

The summons to meet him will rouse from the dust, 1. Thes. 4: 16.
Those sleeping in Jesus the Faithful and Just; 1. John 1: 9.
When children of light, caught up to the Lord, 1. Thes. 4: 17.
Will meet him they love, who is true to his word. 1. John 5: 20.

The mortal shall then immortality wear, 1.Cor.15: 54.
Be changed in his image, his likeness to bear. Phil. 3: 20, 21.
And see him, whom, having not seen, we now love, 1. John 3: 2.
To worship, and praise him, dwell with him above. Rev. 21: 3.

Ye children of earth, who hear now his word; John 5: 25.
Refuse not the offers of grace from the Lord; John 3: 36.
While judgment awaiteth; be wise now to-day; II. Cor. 6: 2.
And return to the Lord; seek him while you may. Isa. 55: 6, 7.

The stork, and the swallows, the turtle, the crane, Jer. 8: 7.
The time of their coming observe in their train:
Oh! where is your wisdom? ye dwellers of earth, Jer. 8: 8, 9.
And what will ye do in the day of his wrath? Rev. 6: 17.

No hope for you then, the time will be o'er, Jer. 8: 20.
Oh! to-day hear his voice, he still pleads as of yore; II. Cor. 5: 20.
He waits to be gracious, he yearneth o'er thee, Isa. 30: 18.
To give thee his pardon, so full and so free. Isa. 43: 25.

Redemption was purchased on Calvary's tree, Eph. 1: 7.
By the Son of his love for you and for me, Col. 1: 13.
For all who believe, and obey now his voice, Acts 13: 39.
Find life, full salvation, and in him rejoice. John 20: 31.

Alexandria, Egypt, March 4, '95. —L. H. S.

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN.

Many people have been distressed by the unpardonable sin and they have suffered agony in consequence. Their distress is needless; it is a proof that they have not committed the sin. The following incident shows how many act and feel when the Holy Spirit does really leave them to themselves. It occurred at a revival meeting. One of the Christians present noticed a man sitting in stolid indifference and he went to him and urged him to give his heart to God. He replied, "It is useless; God would not pardon me." "Why?" "I do not wish it, for one thing." The terrors of dying unforgiven were explained to him, but he said, "Yes, I know it all, and I wonder I am so insensible, but simply don't care." All effort to arouse him to a sense of his danger was futile. The man sighed as he said, "I wish I had the desire for salvation, and I came here hoping it would be expressed, but I have none." The minister who talked with him, afterward learned that the man had once professed in a revival to be converted, and had fallen away. He had set the seal to his doom by ridiculing conversion in worldly company. He had been in the habit of declaring that "he had tested the so-called influence of the Holy Spirit, and had found it a fraud." "I believe," said the minister who tells the story, "that God punished him by leaving him alone. He could not repent, because God would not give him power to do so."

AFRAID OF PRAYER.

A tribute to the power of prayer is reported from India. "The Church at Home and Abroad" says: A woman in South India came one day to Rev. Mr. Lewis and said: "I want you to order your catechist to pray for me no more." Three of the woman's children had been converted to Christianity, and she was much alarmed lest she, too, should become a Christian. "Only yesterday morning," said she, "when I was offering up my poojah (worship to the idols), they seemed to say: 'It is no use your worshipping these things, they are not God, they cannot help or save you.' That, she felt, was in answer to the prayer that had been offered on her behalf, and she said: "Some day I may wake up and find I am obliged to be a Christian against my will."

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

Sister Sarah, Dundonald, Ont., Can.
Michigan Lady, Osceola, Mich.
A Friend, Chillicothe, O.
Adelaine Williams, New York City.
Harry Kennedy, Phila., Pa.
Anxious Mother, Doylestown.
Mrs. Hill.
Mrs. L.
Mrs. C. D. Smith.
H. Carroll, Iowa.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Lamp-troubles are mostly over.

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa, for "Index to Chimneys;" and get of your dealer the chimney made for your burner or lamp.

Pearl-glass and pearl-top chimneys last as a teacup lasts.

Leaders of Fashion

Endorse Fibre Chamois as the best support for puffed sleeves and flare skirts in the market.

CAUTION—Beware of imitations. The genuine article is plainly stamped .....

Fibre Chamois

All dry goods stores. Three weights.

For Indigestion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. L. D. Bisbee, Phillipsburg, N. J., says: "It is an excellent remedy for indigestion and when diluted with water, a pleasant beverage."

A New Cure for Asthma

Medical science has discovered a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found in the Congo river, West Africa. Dr. Taylor & Co., 179 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., have imported the Kola and are now supplying the profession and the Kola Compound Tablets and Cure to Asthma. Send your name and address and a postal card and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Do You Knit, or do other Fancy Work?

Crochet

If so, ask your dealer for the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread or send ten cents in stamps and receive a sample spool, 500 yards, by mail. You will pronounce it as thousands of other ladies have, the best you have ever used. Try it.

Glasgo Lace Thread Co., Glasgo, Conn.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY, Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY, New York.
BROOKLYN, New York.
COLLIER, St. Louis.
CORNELL, Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh.
JEWETT, New York.
KENTUCKY, Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, Cleveland.
MISSOURI, St. Louis.
RED SEAL, St. Louis.
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN, Chicago.
SOUTHERN, St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER, New York.
UNION.

From foundation

stone to tip of spire, from priming to fi ishing coat, for inside or outside paintir use only Pure White Lead. Don't mistal the brand (see list genuine brands). It the only way to be sure.

Pure White Lead is easily tinted to a shade of color desired by using the Natic al Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead tinting c ors, prepared expressly for this purpos For further information send for pamph and color-card — sent free.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New Yor

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, China, Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is a pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Guaran Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalouge.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illustrat Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We advise y to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the supply.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK.

FREE Piano and Organ Book. Grand Art Portfolio. All latest and best styles. Organs from up, and Pianos $169 up. Shows how to buy from factory and 50 per ct. If interested book sent free. Free trial in your home and credit given. Estab'd 30 ye Instruments warranted 25 years. Write for book to-day. CORNISH & CO., Washington, N

The Haine Sanatory Institute
WARREN, OHIO,
Designed exclusively for the treatment of Internal Cancer
by new and safe remedies. No surgical operation. If afflicted describe your case and address the above Institute for further information and advice, which will be cheerfully given.

Ideal Spring Beds Our booklet, "Wide awake facts about sleep," illustrating and describing them together with an up-to-date pocket map of your State, sent on receipt of three two-cent stamps.
Foster Bros. M'f'g Co., Clay St. Utica, N. Y.

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Ho Traveling, etc: Invaluable and Indispensabl Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at le cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods an Stores. Send for Circulars; agents wanted. cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL M... 56 Broadway, New WONDER CABINET FREE. M... Purple Fairy Bottle, Pocket Ba... Wire Purse, Spirit Photos, Total... Send Pre-ath monster catalogue of ... cents for 10c. for postage. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y.

FOUR TRIAL SCENES.*

THE vivid pictures of distress and rescue [in Psalm 107] begin, indeed, with one which may fairly be supposed to have been suggested by the incidents of the return from exile; and the second of these that of the liberated prisoners, is possibly colored by similar reminiscences; but the great restoration is only the starting point, and the bulk of the Psalm goes far afield. Its instances of Divine deliverance, though cast into narrative form, describe not specific acts, but God's universal way of working. Wherever there are need and trust, there will be triumph and

The first scene, that of a caravan lost in the desert, is probably suggested by the previous record of the return of the redeemed to Jehovah, but is not to be taken as referring only to that. It is a perfectly genuine sketch of a frequent incident of travel. It is remarkable trace of a society very unlike modern life, that two of the four instances of distress are due to the perils of journeying. By land and by sea men took their lives in their hands when they left their homes. Two points are signalized in this description—the first the loss of the way, the second, the wanderers' hunger and thirst. Vainly the travelers look for some elevation

[illegible] whence the lightened spirit sees at sha[illegible]ry at Palm Trees.

No place where men dwell appears in the wide expanse of pathless wilderness. The Psalmist does not think of a particular city, but any inhabited spot where rest and help might be found. The water-skins are empty; food is finished; hopelessness follows physical exhaustion, and gloom fills their souls. The travelers are driven to God by their distress, and his answer is complete and immediate.

The second scene, that of captives, probably retains some allusion to Babylon, but an even fainter one than in the preceding strophe. It has several quotations and references to Isaiah. The gloom of the prison-house; the combination of darkness and the shade of deepest gloom and the cause of the captivity as rebellion against God's counsel and word are described in language closely resembling Isaiah. The Psalmist thinks that such bondage and deliverance on repentance and prayer are standing facts in Providence both as regards nations and individuals.

Sickness, which yields a third type of suffering, is a commoner experience than the two preceding, It paints with impressive simplicity the failing appetite and consequently ebbing strength. The grim portals which death keeps the keys, have already received the sick men; but before they pass into the shadow they cry to Jehovah, and, like the other men in distress, he too are heard, feeble as their sick cry may be.

Another travel-scene follows. The storm at sea is painted as a landsman would do it; but no landsman who had seen from a safe place who what he so vividly describes. He is impressed with the strange things that bold men who venture to sea must meet, away out there beyond the point where sea and sky touch. With sure poetic instinct, he spends no time on trivial details, but dashes on his canvas the salient features of the storm,—the sudden springing up of the gale, the swift response of the waves rolling in gigantic, with new force in the mass and a new voice in their breaking; the pitching of the remarks on Psalm 107 in the third volume of Psalms in The Expositor's Bible, by Dr Alexander Maclaren. Pp. 451. price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son 51 E. 10th st., New York.

New Discovery for Kidneys and Bladder. Will [illegible] give sufferers from kidney and bladder disease pain in back and rheumatism good advice, and a [illegible] is present for free treatment of Alkavis to the Cross Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is a wonderful remedy, and will be sent to you free and postpaid, if you send your name and address.

Cause the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through your skin in the form of pimples, eruptions and sores. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier.

craft now on the crest, now in the trough; the terror of the helpless crew; the loss of steering power; the heavy rolling of the unmanageable, clumsy ship and the desperation of the sailors whose wisdom or skill comes to nothing. Their cry to Jehovah is heard above the shriek of the storm and the tempest falls as suddenly as it rose. God the Guide, the Emancipator, the Healer is also the Stiller of the storm.

"All things work together for good to them that love God;" and the more they love him, the more clearly will they see, and the more happily will they feel, that so it is.

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Absorbs Like a Sponga

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

A new coal tar product.

The Only Odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields and similar toilet uses.

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

Contains NO Talcum,
NO Carbolic Acid,
NO Perfume.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

THE FAULTLESS ★ QUAKER DISH WASHER

Will make your wife smile, your daughters rejoice, your home happy & bright. You don't have to wait. It washes, rinses, dries and polishes dishes at once. No chipping or breaking, no scalding hands, you don't touch them—so simple a child can use it, lasts a lifetime. Honest agents, women or men wanted to introduce this humane device. A good paying business offered if you write at once.
The Quaker Novelty Co. Salem, O.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that replaces, retains & CURES RUPTURE

No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. 1000's of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.
Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO.,
27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

If you have never tried Pozzoni's you do not know what an ideal complexion powder is. Sold everywhere.

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 16c. to cover postage, etc
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

Cure RUPTURE.

Send for book of particulars and learn how.
I. B. SEELEY & CO.
25 S. 11th St., Phila.

SICK HEADACHE AND BILLIOUS ATTACKS.
My remedy will absolutely and permanently eradicate the disposition to them from the system. Simple, harmless, and never fails. Send 25c. for a package.
HENRY MOSS, 2d and Main Sts., Kansas City Mo.

"Millions of Money For an Inch of Time," wailed poor Queen Bess.

Time is just as valuable today—it is priceless. How many Queens of American homes could save half their time by using in their daily, monthly, yearly cleaning,

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER.

This wonderful preparation not only saves a woman's money, but it saves her time and strength. It's the home comfort that makes other home comforts possible. All grocers sell Gold Dust in large packages—price 25 cents. Made only by
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA.

10 Dollars for 3

Can we sell a ten dollar set of Shakespeare for three dollars? We are going to try. We shall sell just 100 sets at $3 each, and any one who is dissatisfied may have his money back. After the first 100, the price will be $4. (The regular price of the set is $10).

This is a Shakespeare for readers. It is the only edition printed in large type. It is strongly bound in good, serviceable cloth binding in eight handsome volumes of easily handleable size. The paper has a dull finish, restful to the eyes. There are copious notes by J. Payne Collier, F. S. A., the celebrated Shakespearian critic. We honestly believe it to be the best edition ever printed for actual use. We published it to retail at $10. That allowed for a retailer's profit and a jobber's profit. We will make just as much on each set if we sell direct to the reader for $4, and we think we can sell more sets. The object of this special $3 offer is to find out just what we can do Remember—the regular $10 set in eight handsome volumes (only large type edition) for $3; with the distinct understanding that the money will be returned immediately if you are not satisfied.

We refer to Dun and Bradstreet and to every bank in Philadelphia.

KEYSTONE PUBLISHING CO., 8th & Locust Sts., Phila.

PROVO CITY, UTAH, June 17th, 1895.

KEYSTONE PUBLISHING CO.,

Gentlemen:—The eight-volume edition of Shakespeare is to hand in good condition, though coming to far-away Utah. The books are a marvel of cheapness and the best book bargain I have made in a long time; the type, binding and, in fact, everything about it is first-class, except the price. To say that we are delighted does not fully express our feeling; you ought to sell tens of thousands of sets at that price.

When you have any more bargains of that kind, do not fail to let me know.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH WILKS, Pastor First Methodist Church.

400 Consumptives Cured

By using Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

Send 25 cents for Treatise on Consumption, containing interesting accounts of nearly all the above cases, and the late Rev'd C. H. SPURGEON'S hearty endorsement of the treatment; or Treatise will be sent free with Trial Bottle of the Elixir for $1.00. Other sizes, $1.75, $3.75, 7.00.

and London, England. GEO. T. CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention: different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices: {233 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky. 1122 Broadway, New York.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.

They never fail. Read this testimonial
MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 15 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic." Newport, R.I.
J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St. N.Y.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$9.00 Buy the Oxford Improved SINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 30 days' trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. Worlds Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our LARGE FREE CATALOGUE.
Oxford Mfg. Co., 342 Wabash Av. Chicago.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full-sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,
F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

At all grocery stores east of the Rocky Mountains two sizes of Ivory Soap are sold; one that costs five cents a cake, and a larger size. The larger cake is the more convenient and economical for laundry and general household use. If your Grocer is out of it, insist on his getting it for you.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

COLUMBIA QUALITY

always maintained. Far more Columbia bicycles than ever this year. Far more care that no imperfect Columbias go out.

$100 for a Columbia means $200 of pleasure and satisfaction.

Pope Manufacturing Co.

General Offices and Factories, Hartford, Conn.

BRANCH STORES: Boston, New York, Chicago, Providence, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Washington, San Francisco.

Buy Comfort Powder. What for?

For Chafing, Nettle rash, Smarting feet, Itching, Sunburn, Fetid sweat, Eczema, Insect bites, and all Inflammation.

Comfort Powder is a quick cure. It is the summer medicine box.

THE COMFORT POWDER CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

Send four cents in stamps for sample.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power

Power Leverage 64 to 1 STEEL

Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These Spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD, and were left on their hands. In order to dispose of them Quickly, we make this unheard of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00; we now offer the balance of the stock at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant plush lined case properly packed prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange. Individual checks not accepted. Postal Note or currency. Money cheerfully refended if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5,152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE

Great Special Offer!

Limited to September 1st.

Thousands of doctors, lawyers, clergymen, Sunday School superintendents, teachers, scholars, and as well as thousands of other readers of this paper, have requested us to make a special offer, for time, on our great standard dictionary and encyclopedia of the world's knowled have decided to do so simply as a means of advertising this great storehouse of information.

We do not expect to make money by this offer, as the very low price and extreme terms offered, but little more than pays for paper, printing, and binding; but the tremendous amou created will help to advertise this most modern and up-to-date home reference library.

Believing the readers of this paper are intelligent, well-meaning, and trustworthy, we do not h placing before them the grandest bargain ever offered, and on such easy terms that any can afford an investment of 7 cents per day, can take advantage of it.

No business or professional man housewife, teacher, student, young or old, prosperous or otherwis one else who wishes to keep abreast of the times, or who is interested in the laudable enterprise of cation, can afford to allow this rare opportunity to pass by without very careful investigation. U this great work embodies all the features of a complete dictionary, and a thorough encyclopedia. Th been adopted as a text-book by many schools and colleges, and is regarded as authority wh the English language is spoken. The new, revised, enlarged, and entirely up to the time

Encyclopaedic Dictionary

The above illustration is an exact reproduction of the four magnificent volumes of THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY. They are bound in rich, silk cloth, with gilt back stamp, handsomely embossed sides, and marbled edges. Each volume 9 inches wide, 11 1-2 inches long, 3 inches thick. Contains 5,357 pages, 3,000 illustrations. Weight, about 40 pounds.

It is a Complete Dictionary, of the English language. Every word is exhaustively treated as to its origin, history, development, etymology, pronunciation, and various other meanings.

It is a Thorough Encyclopedia of anatomy, botany, chemistry, zoology, geology, art, music, agriculture, physics, philosophy, mechanics, history, mythology, Biblical knowledge, etc.

It is a Superb Library Book, substantially bound, printed from new plates, in large, clea heavy white paper, and illustrated with thousands of new pictures made especially for this worl

It is better than all other dictionaries, because the latest edition of Worcester co 116,000 words and 2,126 pages; the latest Webster contains but 140,000 words and 2,011 pages; the contains but a little over 200,000 words and 2,318 pages, and even The Century contains b words and sells for $60 to $100. Encyclopedias of various kinds sell for $50 to $200. The great CLOPEDIC DICTIONARY, containing 5,357 pages over 3,000 illustrations, bound in some volumes, has over 250,000 words, 50,000 encyclopedic subjects, and is sold on such easy t everybody can buy it without financial inconvenience.

the regular price of which is $42 to $70, is now o readers of this paper f significant sum of 7 ce day, in monthly payme each, until the sum of $ This is but little more t third the regular pr four magnificent volume resented in the picture sist that all orders u special offer must b before September 1.

THIS WORK IS NOT IN BOOKSTORES, AND CA BE OBTAINED FROM OUR AUTHORIZED REP TATIVES.

This greatest of all di and encyclopedias was that world-renowned s

Dr. Rob't Hunter, A. M., assisted by scores of s in various branches of k Revised, enlarged, and down to date by Prof. Charles Morr of the Philadelphia Ac Natural Sciences, and m scholars of recognized abi

Over 17 years and $750,000.00 requi the production of this Magnificent Mon of Education.

As a condition of t offer we ask every pur speak of the work to friends, and to send u monial.

WHAT GOOD JUDGES SAY ABOUT THE WORK.

I prize highly The Encyclopædic Dictionary for the number of words it contains, for accuracy of definitions, for fullness of illustrations, and for encyclopædic comprehensiveness. Bishop Samuel Fallows, Chicago, Ill.

As a reference book it stands in the front rank. As a dictionary it meets every demand.
Rev. G. W. Rogers, Atchinson, Kan.

Has many distinctive claims to superiority. Such a work has long been needed by the business man, the active student, and in the home circle.—Philadelphian Inquirer.

I have examined The Encyclopædic Dictionary, and am much pleased with it. It is valuable as a dictionary and as a work of reference. It is copious and yet concise. In all respects it is a work that every student should possess.
George T. Werts,
Governor State of New Jersey.

The Encyclopædic Dictionary opens the war which may involve the Century, the Stan the International.—New York World.

My library contains the Century and t Webster, but I have found much informati Encyclopædic" not in either of the former. the work as invaluable.
Judge 5th Judicial Dist

I consider The Encyclopædic Dictionary s Webster, Worcester, Century, or Standard busy lawyer who wants to know things quick ter reference book could be had. Benjamin F.
Attorney and ex-State Senator, Phi

I have Webster, Worcester, and the Cen for encyclopædias I have the Britannica a tions. It is but simple truth to say that Th pædic Dictionary is a magnificent substitut them. J. H. Atwood, Attorney, Leavenwort

Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded if books are returned within ten days

Don't Forget

Our Special Offer holds good ONLY until Septem

ENGLISH PUBLISHER'S ENDORSEMENT.

We hereby certify that this is the only authorized American edition of THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DI It is printed from revised plates made from those used in the latest edition and is complete in ev THE SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia, Pa., U. S. A., are the exclusive American publish edition has been corrected and revised to date for the benefit of the American people. It has o proval and endorsement.
THE CASSELL PUBLISHING CO.

Pamphlet of 80 specimen pages free on receipt of 6 cents to pay postag

HOW TO GET THIS GREAT WORK:

Send $2 by post-office order, express order, or check, and the entire four handsome volumes w warded. Every month thereafter send $2, in the same manner, until the sum of $16 is paid. Und the whole set of 4 volumes is sent when the first $2 is paid, thus you have the use of them while t balance, at the rate of 7 cents per day. All freight or express charges must be paid by purch refer to any commercial agency, or any bank in Philadelphia, who will satisfy you, if necessary, of responsibility. Please mention this paper.

Any one wishing to pay cash for the complete set may deduct 10 per cent., and send $14.40. This is practically the cost of keeping the account if purchased on easy terms. Address

Syndicate Publishing Co., 236 So. Eighth PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS

and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 200 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A" Grade, $65. Write to-day.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this adv and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you a sample of Best Tea Imported. Any kind you may order. Over 18 cents to be saved. A The Great American Tea Co., 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

BEFORE BUYING A HARNESS Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Handmade Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty. KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego, N.Y.

"The more you say the less people remember." One word with you, SAPOLIO

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLME 18. NUMBER 33.

REV. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 14, 1895.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

COPYRIGHT 1895 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

HEROD'S PRISON-HOUSE.

radional Site of the Tower of Antonia, whence the Saviour May Have Been Led to I on Calvary — A wicked King's beautiful Fortress-Palace — The House of Pilate Paul's imprisonment in the Fortress Recalled.

VERY incident in the earthly life of Jesus is dear to the hearts of his faithful followers. From the Manger in Bethlehem, where the Divine Babe first smiled at the light and received the adoration of e Magi, to the bleak and fateful Calvary, e he hung on the Cross, there is not a ord, an action of his, that has not ndered by hosts of loving disciples out the ld. In e swift ss of ered dly, no ent as- ted ar- at- more ply in hose re- by stra- this —the of and ower onia ne ce of sign- efore man nor: er, a nd mind- the fings, unts will- s en- r the nder the n Ro- rsol- It is pris- ere- hat a ably more rest in- est sold After ate's be- l, he ed, it sil, to he ise of the High Priest, which stood only short distance from the Tower of Antonia. On the following morning, after appearing before the Sanhedrim, which met in the "Council House" of the Temple, he was taken to the Praetorium and arraigned before Pilate. Able commentators believe that the Praetorium was in the Antonia Tower, where the troops were quartered, and there also the government prison was located. When Pilate gave him up to be crucified, Jesus was led to the place where the prisoners were kept. Even at this day, it is an unsettled question whether the Tower of Antonia or a craggy rock between the upper city and the lower, which had been turned into a dungeon for condemned prisoners, was the last prison-house of Jesus. The probabilities, many believe, point to the former, and this is the view adopted by Robinson Lees in his recent book on Jerusalem, issued after the most careful and painstaking investigation, and consulting all available authorities. Bishop Blyth, the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, endorses this conclusion. It is, besides, sustained by local tradition. If this claim be well-founded, then the Tower of Antonia was the last earthly shelter afforded the condemned Saviour, and from its strong jail he walked forth to die for the sins of the world.

TRADITIONAL SITE OF THE TOWER OF ANTONIA, JERUSALEM.
The smaller Photograph shows the "House of Pilate."—Both are from original Photographs.

Paul also, the greatest of the apostles, suffered imprisonment in the same fortress, which is designated (in Acts 21: 37), as a castle. It is beyond question that, during the long period of persecution of the Christians, this dark and forbidding prison has shut out from light and liberty many a hero and martyr for the truth. The fortress, in Herod's day, stood where a Mohammedan minaret now stands. In all probability, none of the original structure now remains, although the identification of the site is generally accepted as conclusive and the building shown in the photograph may even have been reared from the ruins of its predecessor.

Another venerable structure, now in decay, and which is a continuation of the line of buildings from the Tower of Antonia, is shown in the smaller illustration. It is declared by tradition to stand on the true site of the house of Pilate.

Although many of the legends and traditions told to travelers in Jerusalem are such as to excite reasonable doubt, the identification in the present instance is one of the few that have been very generally accepted as reliable.

Gazing on these scenes, one can, in imagination, re-people them with living pictures, for they bring to the mind of the Christian the perfidious weakness of the man who delivered Jesus to death, and the contumely and ignominy our blessed Saviour endured before the great tragedy of his earthly mission was finished on Calvary.

Antonia's Tower or castle is one of the most distinctive relics of a period when Jerusalem was at the height of its greatness and prosperity, and it holds a prominent place in both sacred and secular history. Of the towers of Hippicus, Phasaelus, and Mariamne, hardly a trace remains, and the only other well-authenticated fortress which still stands is the Tower of David.

Josephus relates that after Simon Maccabeus had captured a fort which had been garrisoned by the Syrians, the foe annoyed the Temple worshippers with their arrows. To prevent this, the Jewish general exhorted the people to level the mountain so that the Temple should be higher than the citadel, and at this task they worked three years day and night without intermission.

A fortress known as Baris ("the Tower") was erected further back, beyond the range of the bowmen. It was, in those days, a citadel of extraordinary strength. According to the Jewish chronicles, its foundations were laid by "the Kings of the Asmonean race," who were also high priests long before Herod, and in it were deposited the vestments which the high priest wore when he offered the sacrifice. This fortress Herod reconstructed and repaired at an immense cost, and named it "in honor of Antony." It was situated on the north side of the Temple area, and beside being an important military stronghold, was fitted up in a style becoming an imperial palace. Its walls were 40 cubits high, and it was divided into many suites of apartments, some of regal magnificence, with broad halls, galleries and baths. It contained a spacious military barracks, and the presence of a large garrison, in addition to the number of other occupants, made it seem like a community by itself. At each of the four corners was a tower, three of them fifty cubits, and the fourth nearly seventy cubits, thus overlooking the entire Temple area, with its courts. Besides, there was direct communication between the fortress and the northern and western porticos of the Temple area, by broad flights of stairs, enabling the garrison at any time to enter the courts of the Temple and quell any tumult. A deep trench on the north made a surprise by an enemy from that direction impossible. After the lapse of nearly twenty centuries, the streets along the fosse of the Tower of Antonia are still visible, with the marks of chariot wheels, and even the lines that indicate where the Roman soldiery, composing the garrison, used to hold their athletic games.

DR. TALMAGE'S BEREAVEMENT.

His Faithful Wife Passes Away After a Protracted Illness -The Close of a Useful and Beautiful Christian Life.

A GREAT sorrow has fallen upon the editor of this journal and his immediate family. Mrs. Talmage, for thirty-two years the devoted wife of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., and a lady beloved by a very wide circle of friends in many states, passed peacefully away on Monday, August 5, at Dansville, N. Y., where she had been receiving medical treatment for a nervous affliction. She had been an invalid for nearly a year. Her illness practically dated from the Brooklyn Tabernacle fire in May, 1894, when it is thought she sustained a shock that was aggravated by an attack of Roman fever the same summer. Nervous prostration was followed by a physical breakdown so complete as to leave hardly a hope of recovery. Still, with true Christian fortitude, she kept up bravely until a short time before the end, and would not permit her husband and children to sacrifice all other interests, that they might remain by her bedside. Toward the last, however, when even her physicians could no longer hold out any reasonable hope of cure, she summoned her husband and children to her sick-room. Dr. Talmage, who loved his wife with a true and intense devotion, at once abandoned all his lecturing and preaching engagements in the West and hastened to her bedside, where the whole family were gathered about the dying mother. At sunrise on Monday, the waiting soul was liberated, and the father and his children gazed upon the lifeless form of the dear one lying white and still before them.

Probably no woman was ever more deserving of the love and gratitude of husband and children than Susan Whittemore Talmage. She was born in New York City, where her father was a prosperous banker and bank president. The family residence was afterward moved to Greenpoint. The education of the young daughter, Susan Curtis Whittemore, was a thorough one, and her teachers found her deserving of their best efforts. Clara Louise Kellogg, the famous singer, was one of her classmates.

On May 7, 1863, Miss Whittemore was married to T. De Witt Talmage in the building where they had first met a few months before, the Greenpoint Dutch Reformed Church, of which Rev. Goyn Talmage, brother of Dr. Talmage, was then pastor. At that time, the bridegroom was but little known outside of his own field; reputation had not yet come, and thus Mrs. Talmage started with her husband at almost the foot of the ladder of fame which, with her loving aid, he soon began to climb so quickly. And few wives proved such helpmeets to their husbands as has Mrs. Talmage. She fulfilled the best idea of a helpful wife. All the appointments of the Talmage home in South Oxford street, Brooklyn, reflected the excellent taste of the woman who presided so long over it. Everything showed the perfect housekeeper. The rear apartment of the second floor was Mrs. Talmage's working-room. It was tastefully furnished, but more with an eye to utility than ornamentation. In this room she spent most of her time. All the mail that was left at the house for Dr. Talmage was taken into this room and usually opened by her. It was not an unusual thing for the postman to deliver between one and two hundred letters a day, all of which passed through her hands. Business letters were answered by her, and all letters that did not call for his personal attention were attended to by her, so that his valuable time [illegible].

Besides, she had a multitude of callers. All kinds of people had to be seen, innumerable appointments made and kept, the details of a score or more churches and other matters adjusted. In addition to all these were the household cares of a large house and a family of growing children.

Mrs. Talmage was thus distinctly her husband's right hand, and all the details of [illegible] She was a thorough business woman, having rare executive ability, and capable of easily handling a number of things at the same time. Much of her husband's daily work was planned and laid out by her. She made his pastoral and social engagements, and all his lecturing interests were in her hands. She knew his capacities even better than he. Whenever a journey was to be made, it was she who laid out the route, procured the tickets and staterooms, and attended to all the details. Few public men were saved so many annoyances as was Dr. Talmage by his wife's kindly foresight and ability. But, even if she had never shared her husband's life work, she would still have been one of the busiest of women.

Mrs. Talmage was sympathetic by nature. Like her husband, she saw the cheerful side of life. Cheerful, active, vigorous, she was till within a year ago in the prime of life, and of full figure. Her face was youthful because she kept her heart young and her hands busy. She was always tasteful in her wardrobe, but never showy.

Both Mrs. Talmage's parents died several years ago. One brother still lives among the scenes of her early home in Greenpoint, prosperous and well-doing. Two sisters of Mrs. Talmage live together but a few blocks from the Talmage home in Brooklyn—as close in spirit and relations to the pastor's family as if they were material parts of it. Five children have resulted from the marriage. The eldest daughter, May Mortimer, married Mr. Mangam, a young New York business man, a few years ago. The second daughter, Edith Elwood, also made a most desirable and happy marriage. Jeanie Gasherie and Maude Demorest are the other two daughters. The only son by the marriage is Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, now pastor of a prominent Presbyterian Church in Pittsburg. In him are centred the hopes of thousands that the light of the Talmage genius will not die out with the father.

THE LATE MRS. TALMAGE.

Mrs. Talmage was well known to many, both in America and Europe. On several occasions she had crossed the Atlantic with her husband. When he made his famous tour to Palestine and Egypt in 1889, Mrs. Talmage accompanied him and visited the sacred places. Again in 1892, when he went to Russia with Dr. Klopsch to relieve the famine-stricken peasants, Mrs. Talmage shared a large part of the journey, which was not altogether without its perils.

In all his professional plans, and his pastoral activities, she bore no inconsiderable share, rendering valuable assistance by her quick womanly appreciation and sympathy and her fine business capacity—the latter a quality that proved of the greatest service to Dr. Talmage throughout his whole career. Although engaged in many charities, she was singularly unostentatious in such matters, and was one of whom it could be truthfully said that she did not let her left hand know what her right hand did. There are thousands who recall her liberal-handedness during the famine-winter of 1892-93, when she personally arranged for the daily distribution to hundreds of destitute families in Brooklyn of meat and loaves. In this most practical charity, Dr. Talmage himself heartily joined. It cost much money, time, and effort, but the good done by her quietly and almost privately during those weeks, cannot be computed in figures. Among the most sincere mourners over her departure will be the poor who have been secretly helped by a beneficence undiscovered to the world.

Mrs. Talmage was the second wife of Dr. Talmage (his first wife having been a Miss Mary Avery of Brooklyn). To her remarkable artistic and sociable abilities during the thirty-two years of married life, has been due much of the success that has marked her husband's career. Yet for mere worldly honors neither cared much. "My home is my altar, my family is my inspiration," said Dr. Talmage to a friend to whom he was explaining his strong domestic attachments. And, not once but many times, has he told in tones of warmest love and admiration, how much he owed to this true and noble helpmate who had been next to divine inspiration, his greatest impulse and incentive to high achievement.

In these hours of trouble and sorrow, the hearts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will go out in sympathy toward him who has so often, and not vainly, administered consolation to the suffering. The space that is usually devoted to this simple account of his bereavement. It was his wont, at such times, to speak words of golden consolation to other hearts that bled, and at rare intervals to reveal his own innermost heart to his friends. In one memorable sermon, preached on Jan. 6, 1881, after the death of his eldest son, we recall these characteristic and striking passages:

I know of no way of getting the wheat out of the ear except by threshing it. I know of no way of purifying the gold except by putting it in the crucible. Go among those men and women who have accomplished most for God—go anywhere, and you will find they have had the baptism of tears. Oh, there is something beautiful about baptism on sacramental day, when the water is sprinkled on the face of the child: but there is a more solemn baptism than that, and that is the baptism of tears. Just look at the consolation which comes to God's children. See how often those things which seem to have been full of disaster turned out to be full of blessing. See the difference between the experience of those who trust in this world and those who trust in God.

* * *

When it is time for me to go, I want to be ready—my wordly affairs all settled. If I have wronged others, in that last hour I want to be sure of their forgiveness. If there are hands stretched out from this world to hold me back, there will be hands stretched out from the other world to draw me on. Then, Lord Jesus, help me on and help me up. Unfearing and undoubting, may I step right out into the light and be able to look back to friends and kindred who would detain me, saying, "Let me go, let me go, the day breaketh!" I would not dare to trust myself very far in this reference or allusion. When we were riding to Greenwood, I said, "I cannot understand this composure which I feel, and this strange peace," and it was suggested then and there: "There is a vast multitude of people praying for us." That solved it.

* * *

I testify of the comforting grace of God. Religion is a tremendous reality. God will wipe away all tears from our eyes. There shall be no more sorrow or sighing; neither shall there be any more pain.

The remains were brought to Brooklyn and the funeral services were held in that city on Wednesday, Aug. 7. Thousands of telegrams have been received by Dr. Talmage, expressing the deepest sympathy with him in his great bereavement.

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKER.

XI.—MRS. S. B. CHANEY.

THERE are many young people in all parts of the country who will be glad to see in this column the portrait of the venerable lady familiarly known to [illegible] as "Grandma" Chaney. For many years this [illegible] mother in Israel has been known by [illegible] to the young folks in the Sunday Schools who have received her letters and lear[illegible]

MRS. S. B. CHANEY

venerate the earnest piety they m[illegible]. Mrs. Chaney is now in her eighty-ninth year. She first saw the light in [illegible] county, Mississippi, in the early part of this year, 1807. At that time there were not many churches in that region. In her early years the only church accessible was known as "The Ironside or Hard-Shell Baptists," and toward that church the young girl's family was not attracted. She grew up as most of the girls of her neighborhood, without religious training, and when in her nineteenth year she became a wife. [illegible] she nor her husband had given any thought to their eternal interest. Not long afterwards, however, a Methodist preacher appeared in the district and began to teach. Why he should come to that outlying section and what he could hope to gain by holding his services the people could not conceive. But he did come, as many another of his church was at that time going forth on the same mission.

It was a hard, rough life and there was no visible reward for the toilsome effort. But the love of Christ was in the man's heart, and he longed to impart to others the blessing which made his service joy to him, and was in itself a reward for all his labor. Among his hearers were the newly-married couple, and one of [illegible] converts was the young husband. The preacher organized a church eventually, and having to use the material ready to his hand, he put his young convert in charge of the prayer meeting. Mr. Chaney accepted the office, and his lack of experience was no bar to the success of the moment. He was in earnest and his earnestness was contagious. By and bye, as the preacher came only once a month, Mr. Chaney added a few comments of his own to the chapter he read at the prayer-meeting. They were not profoundly theological, but they came from the depths of personal experience and they told. The word being blessed, Mr. Chaney was blessed in it and became a duly licensed preacher. His wife was converted, to his great joy, and together they entered on a life of active usefulness. There are many opportunities in such communities for doing good, where, as in the case of our friends, there is a disposition to use them. In spite of her large family, twelve olive branches having grown around the parental stem, Mrs. Chaney found time for active Christian work. She has now a large circle of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, but the habits of her Christian life still characterize her. Even since she has attained the dignity of an octogenarian, her hand and heart are not idle. A letter to some child and a little pincushion made in the old-fashioned work are continually being sent out. The pincushion is treasured as a relic, and the letter of kindly advice is read and re-read by the young recipients. Physical infirmities preclude other ways of usefulness; this is open and she uses it as in the past she used others.

Mrs. Jamal's Syrian Girls.

Some of the Cheering Results of her Training—Class work in Jerusalem—An Encouraging Letter.

MANY of our readers who have been deeply interested in the Christian training work conducted among Syrian girls in Jerusalem by Mrs. Jamal, will take pleasure in reading this most encouraging letter just received, which makes full report of the progress of her work. The writer's unacquaintance with English accounts for many peculiarities of expression:

JERUSALEM, July 16, 1895.

I feel it is my duty to put before THE CHRISTIAN HERALD helpers of my work some account of its good results. God has remarkably blessed it, as made evident by the great change in many of the girls and in their good behavior. This I myself have both heard and seen in my frequent visits to the girls' houses in times of health and sickness.

Once, on a visit to one of my girls who was ill, on entering the room, I found another girl of my class attending her. I was greatly pleased to see this good display of feeling and love towards the sick one. They did not know each other before, except by meeting in the class, and they were not of the same creed. The mother—a widow—reported to me that she was pleased and thankful over the results of the teaching, which has become rooted in her daughters' hearts. They love to sing and repeat the hymns they learn at the training class, and the neighbors are quite amazed at their changed behavior and their example to others. On another visit to a girl when I was seated with the mother, some of the neighbors came in. After the native salutation, they gave me a very good report, saying that "our daughter no longer uses worldly songs, while busy with the housework; she uses now the beautiful sacred songs you have taught her and we do not mind her using vulgar words to her poor mother, but she helps her in a very obedient way."

One mother called on me one day all with a joyful face gave a good report of her daughter. She had left her bad habit of playing cards with the neighbors since she began coming to the class, and "now she takes her work and sits with the neighbors and tells them of the Bible stories she hears when in the class." She concluded her talk by fervently saying, "May God prolong the life of every well-wisher."

I was informed by a member of our church, that once, while on his way to Bethlehem, he was in a carriage with a mother and her two daughters. He began to sing a hymn. The two girls joined him in singing, and the man was astonished. He asked "Where have you learned to sing this?" They replied, "We have learned not only this hymn but others at Mrs. Jamal's class."

I can assure you that this gave great joy to my heart, and encourages me more and more to hold up this work, which is "In His Name."

Many girls of my class have improved in their hand-work as well as at housework, and are now of great help to themselves and to their parents, and leading a happy and useful spiritual life. I have already some Oriental fancy-work done by my class in different varieties, which I am sure will be highly appreciated as a souvenir from Jerusalem. They would furnish a full table in a bazaar. They include gold embroidery on silk staff and velvet; silk embroidery on Indian silk, used for different kinds of antimacassars; Arabic verses for book-marks; Syrian veils with needlework fringe, &c., &c. The sale of these articles will provide money for hiring two rooms close to where I live, as my house is too small to take in twenty-seven girls. I now intend to divide them in two classes under my own supervision; one will be attended by my eldest daughter, Hannah, and the second by my second daughter, Adele. It gives me pleasure to see how friendly all get when meeting together in the class. If a girl is absent for a matter of illness, on her return they salute her and express their love and sympathy. They also use the word "sister" when calling each other, because I have tried to put it in their heads that we are all the daughters of a King, and have one Saviour for us all, although we may have been of different creeds, and we also have to love one another, as by doing so we will be true children of our Lord and King.

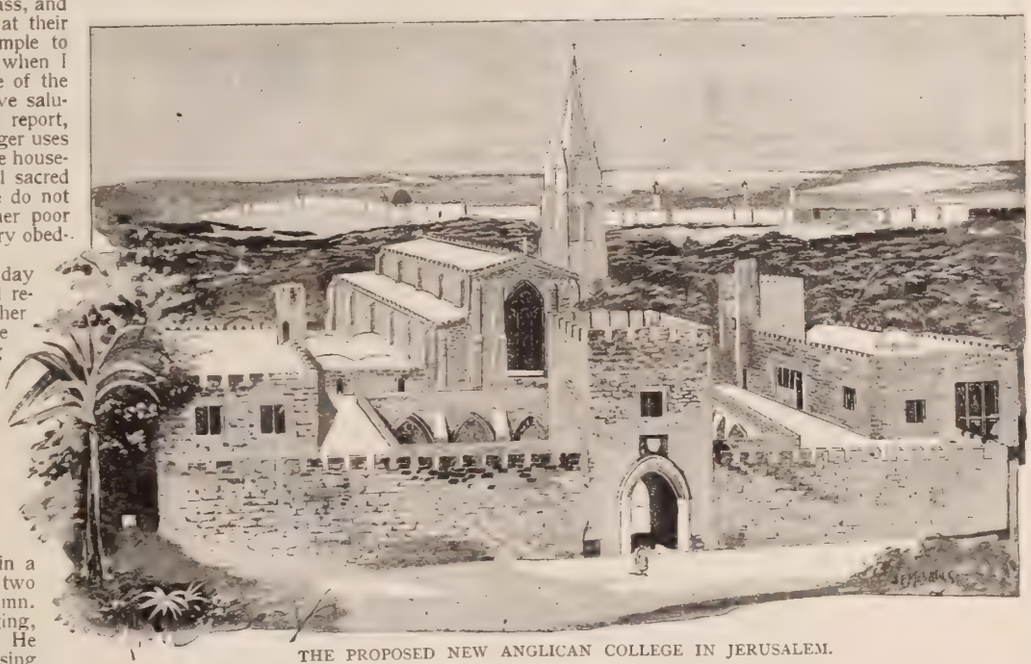
Many more mothers have applied for their daughters' admission to the class, which compelled me to accept, in addition to the fourteen girls you previously mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, thirteen more girls since May 1st. Seven of these are Moslems, poor and in great need of education. When accepting the new girls, and arranging their seats very close to each other in my cozy hall, I found that seven of them had no room to be seated, so I formed an extra class and gave them a place in my bed-room, under the care of my second daughter, Adele. She takes charge of them after we meet for our morning prayers. Very respectfully yours,

REBECCA JAMAL.

To Worship in Jerusalem.

The Proposed New Anglican College in the Holy City—A Boon to Sojourners.

AFTER may delays, work will now be pushed forward on the new Anglican College in Jerusalem. Mr. George Jeffrey, of Cairo, is the architect. The buildings will include an official residence for the Anglican Bishop, with such necessary offices as are required, and a good library. A prominent feature of the group of buildings is the Bishop's Chapel, which is large and dignified. The most interesting building in the group will be the Clergy House, which will afford residence for such clergy as will give help in intercourse with other churches, and in training native clergy and teachers for Christian work. Certain rooms are included which will serve as a "hospice" for receiving those who visit the Holy City for devotional or literary purposes, or who may be desirous of spending some months in Palestine, at a very small expense, before taking holy orders in England. To such the help of the college staff will, it is hoped, offer all the advantages of a European theological college.



THE PROPOSED NEW ANGLICAN COLLEGE IN JERUSALEM.

The increase of English residents outside the walls of Jerusalem has made it necessary that there should be church accommodation beyond that of the small and distant mission church within the walls; and for these as well as for travelers, the Bishop's chapel has for some time been of much service. The whole cost of the College buildings will be about $75,000. A site has been secured, for which $16,500 was paid, and the chapel has already been raised about twelve feet above the foundations. The chapel will cost about $35,000; the other buildings about $15,000 each, and the enclosure and outhouses will absorb the balance. A firman has been received from the Sultan covering the erection of the buildings and duly recognizing them.

TWO CEYLON BOYS.

THE heroism of two brave little lads in Ceylon is described by Mrs. Margaret W. Leitch in one of her letters to the London "Christian." It appears from her statement that the two boys, aged thirteen and fourteen respectively, had been pupils at the mission school in the village of Usan, and had learned more than secular knowledge. "They told us," says Miss Leitch, "that they had ceased to worship idols, or to perform any of the Hindoo ceremonies, and that they had for some time been regularly praying and reading the Bible daily, and keeping the Sabbath holy, and attending the Sabbath School and the preaching services. They were also accustomed now and then, when their gardens and fields had all been watered, and the work of the day was done, to go to the house of the teacher, and, together with some other young people who had also become interested in Christianity, to spend a little time in Bible study and prayer and the singing of Christian hymns.

'One day there was a festival held in connection with one of the Hindoo temples, a temple to the god Kantha-swamy, near their house. All the people of the village were going to attend in order to make offerings, enjoy the excitement, and listen to the music; and the other village boys asked these three boys to go along with them, but, to the surprise of all, the boys absolutely refused to go.

"As the annual festival of the village temple is the great excitement of the year for the people of that village, it can be easily understood that, when they refused, those who had asked them were very much astonished, and asked their reasons for such singular behavior. The boys replied that they had come to believe there was one true God, and that idols were only pieces of brass, wood, or stone.

"This conversation was reported by the village children to their parents, and they in turn reported it to the manager of the temple, who, when he heard it, was very angry indeed, for he saw that if people began to believe that idols had no power, they would soon cease to worship them, and then he and his priests would lose all the money and the offerings which now the poor people were giving so freely, and on which he and others were living in great comfort.

"So the manager of the temple went in a great rage to the father and mother of these boys, and said that unless they discontinued going to the Christian meetings, and unless they came to the temple and worshipped the idol, he would call a meeting of the high caste people to outcast the whole family. If the family, which was one of the Verlalah caste (cultivator caste), should be outcast, they would not be able afterward to enter the houses of their neighbors, or have any social intercourse with them or with their relatives, or secure any help from them in times of sickness or misfortune, neither would they be allowed to draw water from any of the village wells. The result would be not only that they would be disgraced in the eyes of all, except the handful of native Christians, but they would suffer very serious inconvenience and loss."

The father of the boys seems, from Miss Leitch's story, to have been very indignant and to have done all in his power to compel the boys to abjure Christianity. Finding that he would never succeed he grew desperate and one dark night flung both off the verandah into the darkness bidding them never return. He expected to see them come back humbly begging forgiveness, but they did not go back. Instead they went to Miss Leitch and asked to be received at the Mission. The father, suspecting where they had gone, followed them next morning, and demanded to be allowed to take them home at once. The missionaries quieted him, and told him that his sons wished to live as Christians, not because they wished to disobey him, but because they really believed that Christ was the true Saviour, and thought it their duty to follow him. "We told him," Miss Leitch continues, "that we believed that his sons were acting conscientiously, and we hoped that he would allow them to be true to their convictions. He made no reply but to ask to see his sons. They had drawn near to my sister, as if seeking protection, she had gently put an arm around each, as if to assure them that they would not be forsaken.

"When the father came near the group, the boys trembled at his approach, and drew back a step or two, but the father took the right hand of each of his sons, and turning to my sister, put their hands in hers, and said very earnestly, 'I give these boys to you; they are henceforth your sons, and you are henceforth their mother; do with them as you will.' We were all deeply touched by this unexpected action.

"Instantly my sister, reaching out, grasped the hand of their father, placed the hands of the sons within it, and then, holding all in her own clasp, said, 'They are your sons, but they are my brothers, and I will be a sister to them and to you for Christ's sake.' The boys wept aloud; tears were rolling down the father's cheeks, and we also felt our eyes grow dim with emotion. Standing thus, the hands of all four clasped together, my sister offered a brief prayer, asking God to bless the father and mother, and lead them to the light of his love and praying that a special blessing might rest upon the young disciples.

"After a little more conversation the father returned to his home, apparently comforted and contented, and the boys turned to us with grateful faces, and from that hour we have felt toward them as toward little brothers."

WILL YOU NOT COME?

YOU know of the wonderful Saviour,
You know of his wonderful love;
You know of his wonderful kingdom,
You know of the mansions above.
But do you belong to that Saviour
And give him a love that is true?
And do you belong to his kingdom
And is there a mansion for you?

How much you have heard of the Saviour,
And long the sweet story have known,
How Jesus left glory and heaven,
To seek and to ransom his own.
But have you accepted his mercy?
And have you the story believed?
And have you in penitence listened?
And have you his pardon received?

The Saviour so lovingly calls you—
How can you his tenderness slight?
Come, enter now into his kingdom,
Begin to serve Jesus to-night.
His love will abundantly pardon,
Tho' wayward and sinful you've been,
The door of salvation is open—
Oh, penitent sinner, come in.

Vineland, N. J. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

CROSSING THE JORDAN.

S. S. Lesson for Aug. 25. Josh. 3 : 5-17. Golden Text Isa. 43 : 2. By Mrs. Baxter.

"GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock," sang the Psalmist (Ps. 80 : 1). With such a Shepherd sang David, "I shall not want."

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days on my life" (Ps. 23 : 1, 6). The path on which such a Shepherd may lead is of little consequence; the difficulties, even the impossibilities of the way, only bring out more fully the love and faithfulness as well as the resources of a Shepherd such as ours.

Moses, whom God had sent to lead his people, under his direction, was dead; God had buried him in an unknown sepulchre (Deut. 34 : 5, 6). Now, by the command of God, Joshua had taken his place. But the Shepherd of Israel had become his Guarantee, for he had said to Joshua: "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." "Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee withersoever thou goest" (Josh. 1: 5,9). And now Joshua was come to the supreme moment when the children of Israel were to cease their wanderings, and for the first time to tread upon the soil hallowed to them by the promises of their God. But between the people and the land lay the river Jordan, and the same people who had formerly to go through the test of their faith in the passage of the Red Sea when they left their bondage in Egypt, must now also, in leaving the wilderness, have in the passage of the Jordan. Joshua knew how much depended upon this, and he "rose up early in the morning, and they removed from Shittim, and came to Jordan, he and all the children of Israel, and they lodged there before they passed over" (Josh 3 : 1). God is never in a hurry, and the most important crises in our life are those which most need quiet and solemn preparation. Before finally leaving the wilderness and passing over the boundary river, the people must abide "three days." These were days of learning; the people had fallen into many sins in the wilderness, they had made many and grievous mistakes. Now they must learn, before God would trust them to enter upon the land of promise, to wait before they took any step forward, until the ark of the covenant of their God was well on before them: "When ye see the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, and the priests, the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place and go after it. And they were days of consecration. Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." The priests must lead the way. Oh, how little is it generally understood that God always makes his priestly ones, who bear the people upon their hearts, go on before them! Man thinks the most active in work to be the true leaders; but, in fact, every real and lasting work of God has been prepared by the prayers of those whom he has bound to the ark of his covenant, and who understand his way and his purposes.

A New Test of Faith

"Yet there shall be a space between you and it; about two thousand cubits by measure: come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye must go; for ye have not passed this way heretofore." No sudden rush to occupy the path as soon as the way is known; quiet, sobriety, consideration always mark those who are diligent to discover and to walk in the ways of their God. There must be a "space" for considering whether a way which is apparently of God is not, after all, a human way. We must know the way, not suppose, nor guess, but know. God has given us his Spirit on purpose that we may have sure and definite direction. Only "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. 8 : 14, R. V.). He does not want any of his children to walk in an uncertain path. Again and again we come to points in our lives where we "have not gone this way heretofore;" all our old experiences are at fault; no human being can help us—there are things in our circumstances which either ought not to be or cannot be explained to another. We are shut up to God. These are often the most precious moments of our whole life.

God encouraged Joshua that he might encourage the priests: "This day will I begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel, that they may know that as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. And thou shalt command the priests." We only have power over others as God has our full attention. God's command to the priests through Joshua is significant. As soon as they should come to the brink of the waters of Jordan, they were to stand still, although the river was fuller, and therefore swifter, and their danger apparently greater than at any other season. If the priest cannot trust God with what looks like danger, how shall the people take courage?

TRAVELERS FORDING THE JORDAN.

And now only can Joshua speak to the people: a step of faith is before them: they have failed the Lord often in the past, will they rise up to the occasion at this important crisis? Forty years before their fathers had come almost as near as they were now to the promised land, and had failed their God at the last moment by believing the evil report of the ten spies; trusting man rather than God: would their children fail him now?

"Come Hither and Hear the words of the Lord your God." This was an absolute necessity. The evil heart of unbelief which belongs to every man by nature is prone to draw near to man, and to remain at a distance from God. "Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out your enemies from before you . . when the priests that bear the ark of the Lord of all the earth shall rest in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan shall be cut off, even the waters that come down from above, and they shall stand in one heap."

This was the word of the living God, would the people believe it? Would the priests be true to him? The people left their tents. Perhaps many anxious eyes watched the group of priests which bare the ark of the covenant. Many a heart may have beat quick as, with one movement forward, the feet of the priests entered the overflowing waters and they covered them. But the word of the Lord was fulfilled; the priestly barrier clave in two the flooded river, and in a few moments the lower waters had passed away towards the Dead Sea and the upper waters gathered into a fluid heap, held together by the power of the Most High, and not one drop could flow down where the presence of the ark of God forbade. The people saw it. The priests, who were partakers of the same flesh and blood, could stand still and fear no danger from the restrained waters, and where the priests could venture they also could venture: "the people passed over right against Jericho. And the priests? No sooner had they trusted their God and ventured into the river's brink, than the very water which had covered their feet, instead of rushing on as before, left their feet and the ground they stood upon dry: "The priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of the Jordan, and all Israel passed over on dry ground, until all the nation were passed clean over Jordan."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE book of Joshua introduces the great leader with characteristic modesty. He is called the minister or servant of Moses, the servant of the Lord. It is not always that the successor of any leader shows so much humility when stepping into the place of his chief. Previous to this, Joshua had done conspicuous service. He had represented his tribe on the dangerous service of exploring the country, and he had commanded the army in the battle with the Amalekites. He was descended from Joseph, being tenth in descent from Ephraim, Joseph's younger son. His family was evidently an influential one in the tribe, for in the march though the wilderness, Elishama, Joshua's grandfather, walked at the head of Ephraim's host of 40,500 warriors. Joshua was thirty-seven years younger than Moses, and was apparently over eighty years old when he succeeded him. It was a difficult position to occupy, and might easily have given rise to jealousy and rebellion. But the people were informed that God had chosen him, and they loyally accepted the appointment. The people had reached the place called Shittim, now known as Keferein, on their march northward, when Moses bade them farewell and disappeared. Joshua was notified that this disappearance was not like those of past times, but was permanent. Moses was dead and it was his duty to lead the people into the land. How the communication was made we are not told, but that it came from God, Joshua had no doubt. In the same way he was instructed to march westward into Palestine. The time was the latter part of March, or the beginning of April, nearly forty years after the departure from Egypt. Between the camp and the land flowed the River Jordan, a stream ordinarily about a hundred feet wide, but at this season, swollen by the spring floods to a width of five hundred feet. The Canaanites probably regarded this river as a sufficient defence, knowing that it could not be forded in its present condition. Otherwise, with a strong city like Jericho only five miles away, a guard would surely have been set to oppose the crossing. The miracle was doubtless worked by natural means. As the Revised Version puts it, the waters "rose up in a heap, a great way off at Adam." Where this place was, cannot now be known, but it was probably at a narrow gorge fifteen miles higher, where the fall of a rock or a landslide would dam up the river and cau the formation of a temporary lake above leaving the bed of the river dry below. T miracle consisted in such an event occurrir at the time required and continuing un the great host of two million persons w sale on the other side.

The Lord said unto Joshua. We are n told how God spoke to Joshua, whether audible voice or by creating impressions his mind. He has many ways of commu icating with his people. A city missiona was visiting in one of the large teneme houses, and turned into a room on eighth floor just under the roof. There found an old woman sitting alone. room was poorly furnished. Nothing w there but a bed, one chair, and a tab But the old woman gave him a brigl cheerful look as she raised her eyes fr the Bible as he entered. "Aren't you lone here?" he asked. "No, no," she sai "What do you do all these long evenin by yourself?" "Oh," she said, "I ha my New Testament, and I just sit here tal ing with Jesus."

When ye are come to the brink. The ro lay through the torrent. The people w to march as if there were no river bef them. Their duty was not to reason to obey. That is the way God expects to act in life. If we obey he will take c of consequences. There is a traditi among the Indians that Manatou was tra eling in the invisible world and that came upon a hedge of thorns, and af awhile he saw wild beasts glare upon h from the thicket, and after awhile he s an impassable river, but he would not t back. As he went on he found each stacle disappear as he came to it. T thorns were but shadows; the wild bea were chained; the river proved only phantom.

I will begin to magnify thee. That is ways a trying process. When the bo life begins to magnify into youth, and youth's into manhood, and the man's i full maturity, there is always difficulty a danger. They are new paths, and as G said at this time, they have not passed t way heretofore. A lady who was called a very illustrious position, and knew no ing of its duties, and had no experience guide her, went to one who in childh had been her governess, and telling her fears, burst into tears. "Do not be d couraged," said the governess, "you comprehend your difficulties when you near them. Attend to what you know, a the rest will grow light as you study i The lady found that to one earnestly des ing to do right, light always comes, no m ter how new the situation may be.

I will be with thee. Joshua had witne ed enough of God's power since leavi Egypt to appreciate the value of that pro ise. There were giants and powerful ar ies to overcome and walled cities to be c tured and this Jordan to cross, but if G would be with him there was no ca to fear, for God had delivered the p ple from Pharaoh and brought th through the Red Sea. When Felix of No was hotly pursued by his enemies who h sworn to murder him, he took refuge i cave. Two spiders spun a web over mouth of it. When the murderers w about to enter the cave, they saw the c web and one said, "See, he cannot there," and they passed on. Then said saint, "Where God, is the spider's web i better protection than a wall; but where is not, a wall is weaker than a spider's wet Behold the Ark of the Covenant. This w a new kind of guidance. At the Red S they had the pillar of cloud. Now they h the chest containing the law. The char marked a stage of development. A tr was approaching New York in which grave, elderly man was seated in earn conversation with a bright young man, parently a clerk. "I will come aboard w you," said the elderly man, "and stay til the vessel leaves." The younger m said, "Thank you, you are very kind, you have always been. I wish you w going with me. I distrust my own ju ment. I shall often wish you were n me that I might consult you." The el smiled. He said: "I want you to beco a thorough business man, and to condu this foreign branch of the house on same principles as the one here at home. will prosper in your young hands if you member your training. Your intellige must be used. You have your letter of structions. You are not a boy any long You are a business man. Now let us what you can do."

OUR FRESH-AIR FUND GROWING.

er 200 More Poor Tenement Children Sent to Mont-Lawn During the Week—A Visit to an East-side Quarter where the Little Ones literally Gasp for Air.

IN these torrid days, with the mercury sizzling in the nineties and the whole community suffering more or less from excessive heat, it is comforting to reflect that the work among the poor tement children goes on apace. This is r Fresh Air Fund's season of maximum tivity. Every week-day afternoon now ss a large group of poorly-clad boys and gls—but washed and brushed clean for occasion — assembled at the Bible use to "pass the Doctor," and, if accted, be taken to our Children's Home. gust in New York is a month always be dreaded. This year it has been peculily severe upon the very young in tenent houses. Alternating spells of intense ht and sudden, wet chills, have raised the rtality rate frightfully among the chilcn of the poor.

n a recent visit by one of the missionary rkers in the Rivington Street district, as llentered a narrow court, he counted no ls than five fire-escapes, all beside each der, and all occupied by mothers and chilcn. Some of the little ones—mere babies iarms—were gasping for air, and looked alt their puny lives might go out like the ff of a candle. Others,—slim, wee tdlers, — clung to the iron railing al looked wistfully down into the superlited court below, from which a furnace-le air was rising. Poor little creatures! No tes, nor grass, not even the leaf of a fiver or a green thing in sight; nothing t the hot, white, pitiless sky, the hotter pom indoors and the hottest of all in the cirt below! What a life for innocent cildren to lead!

Out of that group of tenements over tenty children of proper age were gathered for the Home. It would be impossible to pture the keen delight of the mothers, ven they were told that their darlings uld have the benefit of a ten days' ding among the fields and flowers, with od fresh milk and abundant food and de. Such a prospect seemed like the culmination of all their dreams, for, like most thers, no matter how poor or wretched ty may be, their first thoughts were alys for their children, the last for themves.

Over two hundred more little tenement ys and girls went to the Home at Montlawn during the week. At our Children's me, the uplifting and elevating inences of the ten days' visit are more notable in some cases than in others. One tle girl responded to the name of Tillie; thy and ragged, she was, and also stupid d sly. She was a constant source of noyance and trial to the missionary in ose charge she was. Clean dresses were tquently given her, but in a half-hour the ne repulsive state of dirt was most apprent. Never before was seen a child who s fully illustrated the fact that she was "of e earth, earthy." However, knowing mething of the depths of poverty of the ce she called home, the effort to teach l was continued, even to the end of her it. A few weeks after her return to the y, these good tidings came:

illie W—— is a changed girl since she came me. She tries to be neat and to keep her face an, and she obeys her mother, something which never used to do. In addition to this, she has ght the other children of the house where she the songs she learned at Mont-Lawn, and she, self, goes around singing all day.

Almost every day some word is received the benefit, morally and physically, of stay at the Home.

One of the guests was an Italian lad, ned Philips. His first night won for him distinction of "the worst boy in the me." Quick, restive under authority, ver having been accustomed to obedice, he was a constant source of trial. In day or so, Phillip was conquered. Perction is, of course, impossible to even hope , but the constant effort to "be good" as most apparent. His face would grow rk with quickly-roused passions, and hand would be raised to strike, but he d learned the lesson of self-control, and ran away until his fit of temper subsided.

Among the letters received during the week from friends of the work, are some from which we quote:

"It is only a mite (fifty cents), but I would willingly send as many dollars if I could, but Jesus knows all about the struggle for bread for our own dear ones," writes P. D., Mattsville, Ind.

From H. G. Meyer, La Fayette, Ind., comes this beautiful letter:

$5 00—as a help to gladden the hearts of some children at Mont-Lawn, praying the Master may bless these means for ultimate conversion to Christianity. One of the greatest blessings of my life has been to have a Christian mother: the prayer learned from her loving lips in the Fatherland over fifty years ago has been a pillar of fire by night and a pillar of cloud by day. She often lent to the Lord for she had pity upon the poor. (Prov. 19: 17.) If I have been kind and tender-hearted at times in my life I give mother the credit that by her faith and prayer, by her unfaltering trust on land and sea, in an overruling Providence my heart and hand have been opened. While God will bless me with intelligence this motherly example will live.

THE TENEMENT WAIFS- SCENE IN A COURT OFF RIVINGTON STREET.

Mr. J.W. Hawks, Manchester, Me., says:

I was so much interested in your account of the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, that I invited the Bible school to send one missionary collection to you to aid in sending poor children to the Home. Enclosed please find money order for $4.25 payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from "Manchester, Me., Bible School." May God bless you in your noble work.

"Enclosed please find $3 to make one little child happy ten days: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these'" is the letter of Mrs. Mollie Rogers, of Taylorville, Ill.

"What a glorious work it is! I enclose enough for two little ones for a few days' outing," writes a sympathetic friend, Granville, Ohio.

Miss Pearl Higby, Constableville, N. Y., writes:

I had some money saved up, and when I was reading about the Home for Children at Mont-Lawn, it seemed as if God told me to send some to you for them. I thought $3. too little to send, so I spent seventy-five cents of it, and then I read in the last CHRISTIAN HERALD of Miss E. Griffin, who sent seventy-five cents (just the amount I spent) and three dollars would send one little darling to the Home for ten days. So now I send my little offering ($2.25) to help bear out hers, so that now Miss Griffin and I together, with God's help, have sent enough money for another little girl or boy to come to your home.

Mrs. A. M. Waterbury, Cortland, N. Y., writes:

You are doing so much good constantly that I want a little part in it—so I enclose herein $3 to cover the expense of taking some one little waif out to your Mont-Lawn Home for ten days' outing.

I. H. N., Valton, Wis., says:

I send a mite 50c., to help some poor little city lassie to enjoy a ten days' outing in the free, broad country at Mont-Lawn. I should like taking care of the dear children and seeing them enjoy life at the Home.

Mrs. L.H.A., Newton, N. J. ($3), writes:

I was interested in the account of the Children's Summer Home. To save the children is to save the nation in the future. You will please find inclosed a check for five dollars, three of which I give for the expenses of the Children's Home.

Here is one of many similar letters received from those among the children who can write, after departure from Mont-Lawn:

Dear Dr. Klopsch—I was so sorry when my name was called to go home. I felt very sad to leave my dear friends. How kind you were to let me go to Nyack, where the cool breezes of the Hudson blew across my face. Oh! how I do wish I could go again. If I was old enough to work, I would repay you for all your kindness to me, and letting me go for those ten days. But all I can do, while I am young, is to thank you sincerely. If I could go this year again I would help the teacher making beds, and help her all I can, and would thank you very much. Your loving friend. CLARA CROON.

"I am so glad there is such a nice place for the poor children to go to, these hot months," writes a "Young Believer," Milford, Pa., with a gift. "It seems a blessed thought that the $3 enclosed will help to make some little one happy for ten days," says Mr. George Sisson of La Plume, Pa. "This is from my wife and myself to help some waif enjoy an outing and to hear of our blessed Saviour," is the language of a good friend in Dubuque, Ia., who sends the work a contribution "In His Name."

The Pilgrim Church Sunday School, Canaan, Conn., has generously contributed its last three months' collections ($16) for the Fresh Air Work at the Children's Home. Little Delitte and Florence Weedon, who live away up in the breezy atmosphere on top of the Blue Ridge Mountains, North Carolina, send $1 to help some tenement child to the breezy slopes of Mont-Lawn. "One who loves little Children" sends a gift from New York City.

This hearty little note comes (with $3) from a class of wee Sunday School boys at Easton, Pennsylvania:

We want to send a boy to your beautiful Children's Home for ten days at Mont-Lawn. If we could know his name, we would try to help him to go next year.

Contributions to the Work.

The following sums have been received during the week for the work of the Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$1,066.46
Friend, Ala	5 00
Jennie Heap	3 00
Mrs E M Yow	3 00
Floyd G Winkler	3 00
Mrs R B Seager	3 00
Boys' Primary Class, Pres S S, Leavenworth	3 00
Subscriber, Adairville	3 00
Jane M Watters	3 00
Friend, East Haven	1 00
Friend, Windham Co	5 00
In His Name, St Thomas	9 00
Subscriber, Sinking Valley	1 00
Zelia, Balto	3 00
D T, Oak Hill	1 00
R. B Maxwell	1 00
Ella R, Nella and Edw Vason	3 00
Miss Jennie Finley	1 00
Mrs B Hegeman	15 00
A P Bjerregard	3 00
H D Hapgood	35
In His Name, Princeton	2 00
S De Noyelles	1 50
Emily Coe	1 50
An Old Subscriber	3 00
Jean Cunard Stabb	25
A R G Edwards	1 00
Elma Scott	1 00
Friend of the friendless children, Hay Creek	50
M L H, Pella	1 50
Boys S S Class, Freehold	3 00
Mary J Gates	10 00
Mrs Mary Williams	5 00
In His Name, East Orange	1 00
James Bogert	5 00
E L Ludlow	25 00
Mrs Alex M Bruen	24 00
G M C V, New Jersey	3 00
Mrs T J Pressly	5 00
A Friend, Burkeville	1 00
Two Sisters, York	10 00
J A B, Bridgewater	3 00
Friend, Manchester	6 00
Mrs Westell Russell	3 00
L M, Maine	1 00
C M, Nash	2 00
——, York Harbor	6 00
S S, Lewiston	6 00
A Reader, Pawtucket	2 00
Mrs Hiram Cobb	1 00
M E Juniors, Mexico	10 00
A Friend, Bath	2 00
Mrs M N Wood	3 00
Ada Watkins	1 00
Mr & Mrs Watkins	2 00
A Sister in the Lord, Jacksonville	2 00
R L & M E Beevers	6 00
Proceeds of an Entertainment, Vine Cottage, Milton-on-the Hudson	7 28
A Alberta Estes	20
J G Glendming	50
Mrs Wm Beaty	3 00
F E H, Catskill	3 00
——, New York City	1 00
C L F "	1 00
F G, Morrisville	2 00
In His Name	5 00
——, Savona	21 00
Friends, Aspen	3 00
Mrs W, Bristol	3 00
——, Ocean Grove	5 00
Friends, Medina	3 00
Helen A Cook	1 00
Mrs William A Pembrook	10 00
One of His Own, Phila	3 00
B F Smith	6 00
Mrs F W Foye	3 00
J M Gillespie	3 00
Mrs J R, So Trenton	5 00
Mrs J C Keyes	1 00
D C Steiner	10 00
Mrs D M Perkins	3 00
Mrs A A P Caverly	3 00
In His Name, Kansas City	1 00
A Mother in Mass	1 00
A thank offering to Jesus, Baltimore	1 00
Friend, Bellvale	3 00
W A S, Ealing, Eng	5 00
For Christ's Sake, Northville	1 00
Mrs E B Strong	16 60
L M T, Johnstown	3 00
Henry Shepherd	3 00
A Hegeman	3 00
Harriet E Strong	15 50
In His Name, New York City	25
In Memory of Mrs Mary R Meeker	1 00
Willie Selbie	3 00
Mrs Selbie	3 00
Mrs H G Scoville	1 00
M. R.	6 00
Lucile A Cary and brother	1 25
Mrs J Musil	1 00
T J L and C A R, N Y City	6 00
Mrs L M Parmalee	1 00
A Friend, Dixboro	3 00
A and M S, New Brunswick	10 00
A Wisconsin girl	50
E & S W, Chanute	5 00
S S class of boys, Bridgeport	3 00
F Parker	3 00
A friend of the children, Huntingdon	1 00
Friend of the poor, Easton	1 00
J A P, Sea Bright	10 00
A child of the King, Allentown	3 00
Mrs G W Ostrander	3 00
G L M, Brooklyn	3 00
Grace U Davis	3 00
A B, Mass	3 00
From one among many	3 00
C E W, Jamestown	1 00
Total	$1533 54

All contributions in aid of the Children's Home will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

THE HOME GATHERING.

AT our best estate, we are only pilgrims and strangers here. Heaven is our home. Death will never knock at the door of that mansion, and in all the country there is not a single grave. How glad parents are in holiday to gather their children home again! But I have noticed that there is almost always a son or a daughter absent—absent from home, perhaps absent from the country, perhaps absent from the world. Oh, how glad our heavenly Father will be when he gets all his children home with him in heaven! And how delightful it will be for our brothers and sisters to meet after long separation! Once they parted at the door of the tomb; now they meet at the door of immortality. Once they saw only through a glass darkly; now it is face to face; corruption, incorruption; mortality, immortality. Where are now all their sins and sorrows and troubles? Overwhelmed in the Red Sea of Death while they passed through dry-shod.

Gates of pearl, capstones of amethyst, thrones of dominion, do not stir my soul so much as the thought of home. Once there, let earthly sorrows howl like storms and roll like seas. Home! Let thrones rot and empires wither. Home! Let the world die in earthquake struggle, and be buried amid procession of planets and dirge of spheres. Home! Let everlasting ages roll in irresistible sweep. Home! No sorrow, no crying, no tears, no death. But home, sweet home! home, beautiful home! everlasting home! home with each other, home with God!

One night, lying on my lounge, when very tired, my children all around about me in full romp, and hilarity, and laughter—on the lounge, half awake and half asleep, I dreamed this dream: I was in a far country. It was not Persia, although more than Oriental luxuriance crowned the cities. It was not the tropics, although more than tropical fruitfulness filled the gardens. It was not Italy, although more than Italian softness filled the air. And I wandered around looking for thorns and nettles, but I found that none of them grew there, and I saw the sun rise, and I watched to see it set, but it sank not. And I saw the people in holiday attire, and I said: "When will they put off this and put on workmen's garb, and again delve in the mine or swelter at the forge? but they never put off the holiday attire.

And I wandered in the suburbs of the city by night; the chariots kissed the dead sleep, and I looked all along the line of the beautiful cities, the young white the dead might most tastefully sleep, and I saw towers and castles, but not a mausoleum or a monument or a white slab could I see. And I went into the chapel of the great town, and I said: "Where do the poor worship, and where are the hard benches on which they sit?" And the answer was made me: "We have no poor in this country." And then I wandered out to find the hovels of the destitute, and I found mansions of amber and ivory and gold: but not a tear could I see, not a sigh could I hear, and I was bewildered, and I sat down under the branches of a great tree, and I said: "Where am I? And whence comes all this scene?"

And then out from among the leaves, and up the flowery paths, and across the bright streams there came a beautiful group, thronging all about me, and as I saw them come I thought I knew their step, and as they shouted I thought I knew their voices; but then they were so gloriously arrayed in apparel such as I had never before witnessed that I bowed as stranger to stranger. But when again they clapped their hands and shouted "Welcome, welcome!" the mystery all vanished, and I found that time had gone and eternity had come, and we were all together again in our new home in heaven. And I looked around, and I said: "Are we all here?" and the voices of many generations responded "All here!" And while tears of gladness were raining down our cheeks, and the branches of the Lebanon cedars were clapping their hands, and the towers of the great city were chiming their welcome, we all together began to leap and shout and sing: "Home home, home, home!"

THE NEED OF LANTERNS.

THIS is a dark world to many people, a world of chills, a world of fog, a world of wet blankets. Nine-tenths of the men we meet need encouragement. Your work is so urgent that you have no time to stop and speak to the people; but every day you meet scores, perhaps hundreds and thousands of persons, upon whom you might have direct or immediate influence. "How? how?" you cry out. We answer: by the grace of physiognomy. There is nothing more catching than a face with a lantern behind it, shining clear through. We have no admiration for a face with a dry smile, meaning no more than the grin of a false face. But a smile written by the hand of God as an index or table of contents to the whole volumes of good feeling within, is a benediction. You say: "My face is hard and lacking in mobility, and my benignant feelings are not observable in the facial proportions. We do not believe you. Freshness and geniality of soul are so subtle that they will, at some eye or mouth corner, leak out. Set behind your face a feeling of gratitude to God and kindliness toward man, and you will every day preach a sermon long as the streets you walk. The reason that there are so many sour faces, so many frowning faces, so many dull faces, is because men consent to be acrid and petulant and stupid. The way to improve your face is to improve your disposition. Attractiveness of physiognomy does not depend on regularity of feature. We know many persons whose brows are shaggy, and whose eyes are oblique, and whose noses are ominously longitudinal, and the mouth straggles along in unusual and unexpected directions; and yet they are men and women of so much soul that we love to look upon them, and their presence is an evangelism. They get married sooner than the painted doll-babies that call themselves young ladies, and make home happy long after the curls have turned gray and the foot of the dance has turned into a rheumatic shuffle.

PRESENT EVILS.

MEN like to hear the frailties and faults of others chastised. With what blandness and placidity they sit and hear the religious teacher excoriate the ambition of Ahab, the treachery of Judas, the treason of Athalih, and the wickedness of the Amalekites. Indeed, I have sometimes felt sorry for the Amalekites, for in all ages, and on all occasions, they are smitten, denounced, and pursued. They have had their full share of censure and excoriation. It is high time that in our addresses in pulpits, and in domestic circles, we turn our attention to the driving out of these worse Amalekites which are swarming in society to-day, thicker than in the olden time. The ancient Amalekites lived for one or two hundred years; but these are not weakened after a thousand years. Those traversed only a few leagues of land; these stalk the earth and ford the sea. Those had each a sword or spear; these fight with a million swords, and strike with a million stings, and smite with a million catastrophes. Those were conquered with human weapons; but to overcome these we must bring out God's great field-pieces, and employ an enginery that can sweep from eternity to eternity.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

If any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, desiring to do missionary work with the paper after reading it, will send name and address on a postal, stating the fact, we will at once forward to such reader the address of a missionary, evangelist or Christian worker in some foreign field, to whom the reader can send the paper direct, at a trifling cost of two cents. Here is an opportunity for quiet Christian work that should not be missed.

E. M. Lutz, Mazon, Ill. I have a volume of sermons by Thomas Wilson, Bishop of Sodor and Man, published in 1785. Who was he?

Bishop Wilson was a famous Church of England divine, who, before he became bishop, was domestic chaplain to the Earl of Derby. He was remarkable for his humility, his conscientiousness and devotion to Christian duty, more than for his forensic or literary gifts. He died in 1755 and the volume you possess must therefore have appeared thirty years after his death.

Miss S. J. Tibbols, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Can Montefiore be seen from the Hudson river?

Yes, it is clearly in sight from steamers passing between Tarrytown and Sing Sing. If, when opposite Scarborough, you will look over to the western bank, you will easily see the white observatory tower, which is the landmark of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home.

Anxious Reader. How can I study the Bible to the best advantage? Often, while reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I am inspired by the sermon and by the story of the work done in the missions, and I feel that some day I, too, might become a mission worker. I am a young wife, just going to begin housekeeping. I want to have a more complete insight into the Bible so that I may be a better home Christian.

Read your Bible daily and strive, with prayer, to put as much of the life of Christ into your daily life as you can. Get the "Helps to the Study of the Bible," which you will find bound in with the International Teachers' Bible, many thousands of which have been sent out to subscribers of this paper; you will find them a most valuable aid. It will also help you materially to take an active part in all church and Sunday School work, and to have a class if possible.

L. C., Burlingham, Kans. Is it possible for a person to be a Christian who cannot remember having experienced a change of heart?

Many persons whose lives and spirit preclude any doubt of their being sincere Christians, have no remembrance of a time of transition. It is possible when children have been reared from infancy in the knowledge of God, and have never gone astray into open sin, for the change to be so gradual as to be imperceptible. But even with them there is generally a consciousness of progress, showing that a change has occurred. The younger a person is when he becomes a member of Christ's kingdom, the less likely he is to remember the time of entrance; but usually such persons are the best and most devoted Christians.

Reader, Blake, Ont. There is a sect here calling themselves "Brethren" who denounce churches and ministers. What is their origin and what are the doctrines they hold?

The Brethren (often called Plymouth Brethren), originated in a movement led by an Irish Episcopal clergyman named John Darby. He left the church, believing that all systems and forms and church organizations were contrary to God's will and that no person ought to be ordained to preach. His followers used to meet at Plymouth, England, in 1830 to celebrate the Lord's Supper every Sunday, and to sing and pray and listen to exhortation in an informal way. Their number increased rapidly and they are found in all lands. Mr. George Miller, the celebrated friend of the orphans, belongs to the Brethren. They hold no creed but they commonly believe the doctrines held by other evangelical churches.

M. E. W., Brookfield, Conn. Is there any authentic history outside from the Bible of the crucifixion of Christ, with an account of the earthquake and the darkness that prevailed over all the land from the sixth to the ninth hour?

Yes, the crucifixion is related in that part of the ancient Jewish Talmud which was called Toledoth Yeshu Ha Nossri (the "Generation of Jesus the Nazarene.") It is there stated that he was hanged at the direction of the Jewish sages and that the body was taken down at sunset and buried outside the city. The Talmudic account makes no mention of earthquake or darkness, nor would it be likely to do so under any circumstances, being written to depreciate Jesus and his works. The Toledoth Yeshu was expunged from the Talmud in 1630 by order of the Jewish assembly at Jaslov, in Little Poland and all mention of Christ was directed to be suppressed in copies of the Talmud thereafter. This accounts for the absence in the modern editions of any mention of Jesus or his work.

R. H. B., Danville. Does prayer change God's plans? One instance of such a change as a result of prayer is certainly on record in the case of Hezekiah's sickness. II. Kings 20.

We do not know that there was any change of plan in that case. God who knows all things from the beginning knew what Hezekiah would do. We have no means of understanding the divine procedure in the matter, nor is there profit to do so profitable. Christ bade men pray and encouraged them to expect answers to their prayers and that should be sufficient for us. He would not have done so if prayer were useless.

Subscriber, Alinapee, Wis. 1. Did the remark of Caiphas about one man dying for the people (John 11: 50), imply a belief in the Atonement? 2. In what way can the men of Nineveh and the Queen of the South be judges of a generation (Matt. 12: 41, 42)? 3. To whom did Christ refer in speaking (Luke 15: 7) of just persons who need no repentance?

1. No, he thought that the disposition of the people to proclaim Christ a King would embroil the nation with their Roman masters and lead to harsh measures. He thought it better that Christ should die than that many lives should be lost in a rebellion. The evangelist intimates that the words bear another meaning and were fulfilled in a different sense. 2. Not as judges at all, but as showing a better spirit. Their conduct, by its contrition and sincerity was a condemnation of people who showed neither. 3. To the Pharisees who held that opinion of themselves. [Your other questions, sent by other readers, have been answered recently in this column.]

Constant Reader, Storrs, Conn. Is there not a contradiction between Job 19: 26 and 1 Cor. 15: 20? The patriarch and the Apostle seem to hold opposing opinions on the subject.

There is not the difference that appears on the surface. Job expected that even his body was destroyed, yet he would see God; and Paul had the same expectation. Neither thought that death would be the end. Job's expression is translated differently and more correctly in the Revised Version as "from my flesh" and the marginal rendering is still more accuracy, "without my flesh." Paul is arguing for a life beyond the grave, and is dealing with opponents who contended that there could be no existence without the body. His analogy of the wheat agrees with the idea of the continuance of life in spite of the destruction of the body. All that we know of the body of Christ after the resurrection implies that the spiritual body will resemble the natural body in appearance, but have greater powers and functions and differ from it in many ways.

Mrs. C. F. Easton, Chester Cross Road, writes a plea for the birds, in which she says this suggestion:

Will some kind woman of every town or neighborhood to which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD finds its way circulate a petition for signatures, and forward the same to the Legislature, asking that a fine of $5 be imposed upon any person over twelve years of age, known to have slaughtered one of the birds mention for ornamental purposes; or to have killed one of the same for malicious sport; or to have killed any bird in size smaller than the full-grown ruffed ridge pigeon or quail for food. We plead that teachers instruct the youth regarding the importance of preserving bird-life. We plead that the humane loving citizens of Free America do cease to feed upon bluebirds, robins, wrens and nighthawks, and all such wickedness, and feast upon the "pests." That they do all in their power to extend liberty to the lovely songsters now in captivity. It has been affirmed that the number of insects increase in proportion to the decrease of birds. They multiply would. Which is pleasanter:—to be compelled spraying the trees with some obnoxious fluid after shower, or to hear the songs of birds in the branches Louisa D. Starkey, Maxwell, Ont. The [illegible] current is cold but the shallower water [illegible] banks is sufficiently warm for the purpose.—[illegible] ular Reader, Algiers. It is published in [illegible]——M. P. Averyt, Bradley, Ind. Ter. No [illegible] not; you have got two narratives mixed. [illegible] in a cave while hiding from his enemies (see [illegible] 22: 1), but it was Robert Bruce, the fugitive [illegible] King, who was the legendary hero of the Spi[illegible] venture.——J. A. Oresham, Seattle, Wash. [illegible] don polyglot edition Bagster's, contains in [illegible] ume, the Hebrew text, Samaritan Pentateuch, [illegible] agint, Vulgate, and Syriac Versions, the Greek [illegible] of the New Testament, together with Luther's [illegible] man Version, Diodatis' Italian, Ostewald's [illegible] Scio's Spanish and the English Authorized Ver[illegible] There is also a German polyglot edition [illegible] Stier and Theile and a Hexaglot by R. de [illegible] published in London. You can order these [illegible] leading bookseller in your neighborhood.——[illegible] ry Gardner, Philadelphia. It appeared in [illegible] his earliest publications called "The Sing[illegible] grim."—— Subscriber Sterling, Kan. Conti[illegible] reverently observe the Sabbath, as your conscience directs and as God's laws command. When the day of rest and worship is turned into an [illegible] of social relaxation, its sacred character is lost [illegible] of and it is an easy step to dissipation and [illegible] startling neglect of Sabbath observance which is painfully characteristic of some cities on the Continent of Europe.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE INDIAN TROUBLE.

REPORTS of a massacre of settlers in Wyoming by Bannock and Shoshone Indians, which were in circulation recently, prove to have been false. There has been trouble, but up to the date of writing the only persons killed have been the Indians. The Bannocks are a small tribe. Those on the Fort Hall Reservation last year numbered only 772, and of those the males over eighteen years old were only 132 in number. They live by hunting and have not yet attempted any kind of land cultivation. They hold treaty with the United States Government giving them, the right to hunt on unoccupied lands so long as any game could be found there. The treaty was made while Wyoming was still a territory. Since it became a State the Legislature has passed laws prohibiting the killing of game in the State at certain periods. Whether the Bannocks were ignorant of these laws, or choosing of them, deemed their treaty rights paramount over the acts of a State Legislature does not appear. In either case they continued hunting and seventeen of them were caught in the act at Jackson's Hole, a valley south of the Yellowstone Park. The posse that arrested them allege that the Indians attempted to escape from custody and the posse shot them down. The news of the killing aroused the surviving Bannocks, their women and children were sent away as in preparation for a war, signal fires were seen blazing on the hills and parties of armed Shoshones were met on their way to the Bannock camp. The settlers naturally expected that the Indians meant to avenge the death of their brothers and they erected a fortification and appealed to the Governor for troops. The Governor having the militia appealed to the United States Government. Gen. Coppinger, commanding the Department of the Platte, was at once ordered to the scene of expected disturbance, with a force sufficient to suppress any rising there might be. He reached Jackson's Hole on Aug. 2, but found all quiet and no Indians in the neighborhood. It is hoped that the presence of United States troops may prevent a rising and that there may be no further bloodshed. It would be a grievous calamity if the Government is dragged into another Indian war by what is deplorable, and apparently unnecessary slaughter of the Bannock prisoners. The Indians have already suffered terribly at the hands of the white men, but if they attempt to avenge their wrongs they will give a pretext for an exterminating war. There is need for earnest prayer by the Christians of the nation that such a conflict may be averted, lest more lives be sacrificed and another addition be made to the long list of outrages on this much wronged race for which we as a people must be held responsible.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. (Ps. 9: 12.

Tore Up the Bridal Wreath.

The guests invited to witness a wedding at Bridgeport, Conn., recently, carried away souvenirs of a vexatious disappointment. The bride and bridegroom were popular in the town, and when the carriages were drawn up in front of the bride's home to take the party to church, quite a crowd assembled to see them start. They were surprised to see the bridegroom come hurriedly out of the basement, enter a carriage and drive away alone. Shortly afterwards another man came out and he, too, drove off alone. It was learned that he had gone in search of the bridegroom. He found him at the railroad station and after some expostulation, brought him back to the house. But there was no wedding. When the bride learned that her intended husband had run away and had been brought back only by compulsion, she refused to marry him, and soon afterward he went away. The bride insisted that the festivities should go on just as if the wedding had taken place. Taking the bridal wreath off her head she tore it to pieces and gave the flowers as souvenirs to her friends. If the girls preserve them they will be reminded that there are men who make professions in private of affection and fidelity, who yet shrink from a public attestation, that will involve duties and obligations. The number of those who act in that way, where marriage is concerned, is small compared with those who want to have the benefits of Christ's salvation without incurring the obligations which come from an open profession of Christ before men.

If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. (Luke 9:23.)

An Objectionable Flag.

The Portland "Oregonian" gives a curious explanation of a strike which occurred at the docks of that city recently. A steamer named the "Sierra Parima" arrived at her pier and the longshoremen began the work of unloading her cargo. The day following the arrival of the steamer was the birthday of the Captain's wife, who came on board to spend the day. In her honor the Captain ordered his ship decorated. All the flags she was entitled to carry were run up. Over all was the national ensign; then came the name of the ship in the flags of the code; and below, the flag of the house. The vessel looked bright and gay and was the observed of all observers on the docks. But when the longshoremen came to resume their work there was trouble. The mate went below and told the Captain that all the longshoremen had struck. The Captain went on deck to ascertain the cause and was told that he would have to haul down one of the flags before a man of them would touch a thing on board. It was a bright, yellow flag and represented one letter in the vessel's name. The men said they would not work under the Orange flag, and as the Captain would not haul it down, work was suspended for a whole day. The men were Irishmen, of course, to whom an orange flag was an abomination, being a symbol of a cause they hate. They were simply dock-laborers and the Captain probably thought that they would do the work they were paid to do, regardless of the flags flying over their heads. They could not, however, forget that they were Irishmen, and whatever the Orange flag might mean in the code, they would not work under the emblem of their country's humiliation. Their prejudice was foolish, but it is much to be wished that the spirit on which it was based was more active among Christians. The Christian in business ought never to forget that he is a Christian, and the prospect of gain ought never to tempt him to do anything dishonoring to his Master.

Abstain from all appearance of evil. (1 Thess. 5:22.)

A Priceless Document.

A reporter of a Washington journal recently had the privilege of examining the original Constitution of the United States. The original draft of the Declaration of Independence was preserved as well as the fair copy; but there is no draft of the Constitution known to be in existence. The engrossed pen copy with the signatures attached is carefully preserved in a steel safe in the government library at Washington. The safe is massive and strong and is prettily decorated in grey and gold. A combination lock protects the priceless document within. The Constitution covers four large sheets of parchment with the words written out in the quaint spelling in vogue in the latter part of the last century. The first words, "We, the people," are engrossed in very large black letters, and stand out in bold relief. On the last page are the signatures of the deputies from the various States, headed by the signature of George Washington, who signs as deputy from Virginia. The ink has faded a little in the hundred and eight years that have elapsed since the document came from the engrosser's hands and was signed, but not so much as to detract from its legibility. It was taken from its resting-place for a photograph to be made of it for the Atlanta Exposition, as the original document was accounted too precious to be allowed to pass out of the hands of the Government. It is well that so much care is taken of it, for every patriotic citizen would be sorry if by any accident it was destroyed or injured. Yet its destruction would not impair the stability of our institutions. We are so familiar with its provisions that any violation of them would be instantly detected and spurned. It would be well if the law of God were similarly so written in our hearts that no violation of it could come into our lives, and temptations were rejected, as unhesitatingly as we reject unconstitutional legislation.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES IN WYOMING—A BANNOCK CAMP.

Blessed is the man in whose heart are the highways to Zion. (Ps. 84: 5, R.V.)

An Embarrassing Falsehood.

A traveler in a Western State recently found himself in an unpleasant predicament as the result of a falsehood. A Western journal says that a man who boarded a crowded train noticed a seat which was occupied by a number of packages. He asked the man who sat near them if he would clear the seat for him. The man replied that the things were not his, but belonged to a person who had gone into the smoking-car and would be back presently to occupy the seat. "I guess I'll sit in it till he comes," said the newcomer, and he proceeded to empty the seat, putting some of the packages in the rack and the remainder on the floor. The man in the adjoining seat glared but made no objection. As a matter of fact, he owned the packages, and the man in the smoking-car was a myth he invented to retain the seat for himself. When he reached his destination he began to collect the packages, but the other interposed. He said, "I consider it my duty to protect this property. You said they were not yours, and you have no right to take them." The man became abusive and the conductor was called, who, after hearing both statements, took the packages into his own keeping and informed the man who claimed them that he would have to go to the baggage office of the company the next day and prove his ownership. The inconvenience and delay, it may be hoped, taught him a lesson which some people seem to be unable to learn but by experience, although long ago the wise king warned all who expect to profit by lying, how fleeting are the advantages derived from it.

A lying tongue is but for a moment. (Prov. 12: 19.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Arrangements are Being Made for a National Conference on Prophecy, which will be held at Allegheny City, Pa., towards the end of October.

Mr. Norwood, the agent of the American Bible Society in Venezuela, reports exceptionally large sales of the Scriptures by his colporteurs in parts of the country which have never before been visited by any Bible Society agent.

The Cross and Crown Association of Philadelphia, has followed the example of the Central Union Mission of Washington, in using a Gospel-wagon. A wagon has been secured and the police department has given a permit for meetings in any part of the city.

The Christian Alliance Convention at Old Orchard, Me., is believed to have been the largest in the history of the Alliance. A telegram to the "New York Herald" says that not less than fifteen thousand persons were in the camp ground during the sessions of the Convention.

Evangelist E. P. Telford Has Been Holding extraordinary meetings in the Eastern District of London. The Great Assembly Hall was filled every night for five weeks, and there were many conversions. Mr. Telford has arranged to hold meetings next in Bristol, Cardiff, and Leeds.

The Presbytery of Otsego, N. Y., has Granted a license to Frank B. Seeley, a student of Union Theological Seminary, thus ignoring the instructions which the General Assembly gave to the Presbytery of New York. The Otsego Presbytery contends that the instructions concerned the New York Presbytery only. Its action is to be brought before the Synod for judicial decision.

The Assembly of the Goodwill Homes for Boys began at Fairfield, Me., July 24. There is an encampment, and the cottages are mostly given up to guests. Music, study, and sports occupy the time for several days, and many distinguished specialists are engaged for the occasion. A site has been selected for similar Homes for Girls about a mile from the Boys' Homes.

Twenty-four Young Men are Ready to be sent to the Foreign Mission field, and the Presbyterian Board, after examination, has accepted them. It is now feared, however, that the Board's funds will not allow them to send more than twelve this year. The others must wait a year, although there is urgent need for them in several fields.

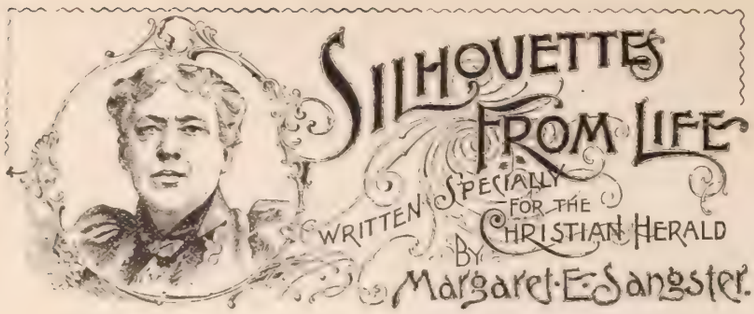
Major Cole's Services at Fort Scott, Kans., closed with an enormous meeting at which over three thousand persons were present. The number of additions to the churches of the town through God's blessing on the meetings is 818. The eleven pastors of the churches which united in the movement passed a series of resolutions expressing their devout thankfulness for the blessing that has attended the evangelist's work.

A Significant Opposition to the Movement for extending the suffrage to women has appeared in England. It is led by the "Wine and Spirit Review," a journal devoted to the interests of liquor dealers. It frankly states that its reason for opposing female suffrage is that nine women out of ten are opposed to the saloon. The struggle to keep women from the polls thus becomes on the part of the liquor dealers a war of self preservation.

The Purchase by the Order of Deaconesses of a tract of land for a hospital is reported by the Chicago "Interior." It says that the Order, of which Mrs. J. Springer of Chicago, is president, has purchased Midway Park, lying between Bloomington and Normal Park, which has been used heretofore for Chautauqua assemblies. They expect to erect immediately a hospital that will, when completed, cost $30,000.

Captain Bundy has at last Decided to Sell his famous boat "Glad Tidings," and make his home on shore. The vessel has been well-known on Lake Michigan for many years. Its lockers were full of Bibles and tracts, and the services on board led by his sweet-toned organ were used of God to the conversion of many souls. Captain Bundy is over sixty years old, but he hopes to do a great deal more work for Christ yet.

Miss Jane Addams, the Chief Worker at the College Settlement of Hull House, Chicago, has arranged for a summer school for the benefit of her young friends around the Settlement. The Trustees of Rockford College have given her the free use of the college building in order that the pleasures of a vacation may be combined with the advantages of study. Miss Addams hopes that the liberality of the Rockford Trustees will be an example that other colleges will follow.



THE TRIBE OF REUBEN.

I.

THE tribe of Reuben lived in a straggling and uncomfortable fashion over on Dead Man's Flats. These low-lying stretches of swamp land were the pregnant nests of fever and malaria; diphtheritic and typhoidal germs were incubated there, and on their edge a few wretched cabins clung hesitatingly, with sometimes a pig-pen abutting them, and sometimes a hen-roost, though the dwellers on Dead Man's Flats were famous rather for stealing poultry and anything else they could lay their hands on, than for honest thrift or care of any property belonging to them. Children swarmed in these cabins, some puny and starved-looking, others sturdy and strong, notwithstanding their miserable environment; pallid women with their hair done up in severe knots and their skirts kilted above slipshod feet, shuffled about doing their work, what there was of it, and men in shirt-sleeves with short pipes puffing vile tobacco, sat in the doorways and drowsed, or stood about and swore.

Near by, comparatively, on a rise of ground, stood a paper-mill, in which most of the men and boys, and the younger girls of the D. M. Flats, as they were called for shortness, earned such livings as they could. The livings would have been better had there been no gin-shops or "hotels" in the borough, and some of the poor bits of homes would have been brighter, if father had let beer alone.

On a higher level than the paper-mill stretched a fertile plain, where pleasant homes stood amid blooming flower patches, and away beyond this again were rounding hills and dimpling valleys, dotted with farms and twinkling at night with starry lamp-light from many bright windows.

In a household where both money and love were plenty, a household rich, therefore, and exceedingly blessed, a conference was being held one sultry morning over another and different household on Dead Man's Flats.

"I am tired of being pillaged in this way," said Judge Rainsforth, with great sternness. "Here are my leghorns stolen again; our chickens and eggs are carried off under our very eyes, and the thief can belong only to that abominable, good-for-nothing tribe of Reuben. I shall set detectives on their track at once, and the first one that is caught shall go to jail, I promise you. Now, don't plead for them, Mary," addressing his wife, "I am out of patience with this weak condoning of crime. The family of Reuben Shreves are a disgrace to the community."

"The existence of such a hole as Dead Man's Flats is a disgrace to the community," said the wife, "but while it is there, we must expect to suffer from such prowlers as the Shreves tribe. I cannot imagine, John, why you accuse me of weakness. You are the soft-hearted member of this concern. I would gladly send all the little Shreves to an institution, put the father and mother in the penitentiary, and send the old grandmother to an almshouse for the rest of her life."

The Judge laughed. "Isn't that like a woman, now? Never anything half way with your sex. You're a queer lot, Mary. Meanwhile, I have lost my leghorns, and I must [illegible] a person familiar with the premises and friendly with Rex, who is getting to be superannuated. I intend to invest in a spring-gun and a ferocious watch-dog. This robbery shall have a stop put to it, or my name's not John P. Rainsforth. Hello, Pet, what's the matter? What have you to propose, darling?"

Kate Rainsforth, generally known in the family as "Pet," had a petition to urge.

"Papa," she said, her silvery voice vibrating, her dark eyes shining, both little hands clasped on his arm, "Let me try what I can do for those poor people. They need the Christian religion down there. They need a friend. Give me leave to try what I can do for the Shreves."

"Kate," the Judge answered gravely, "that family is not fit to tie your shoes. You are too good, too dainty, too pure to breathe such air as their's. I don't like to deny you anything, but I cannot have you getting typhoid fever in Dead Man's Flats."

"I will use every precaution; I will be more than careful. I will do my very best to keep well. But, before any more of the Shreves are shut up in jail, do let some of us see what we can devise to awaken their self-respect."

Judge Rainsforth gave in, as he always did when Pet begged a favor. Her mother, who always did the same, contented herself with saying that Pet must wear camphor gum in the bosom of her frock, and take a bath immediately on her return from her expeditions, and she would interfere to put an end to the folly, the moment she saw any symptoms of danger in Pet's condition.

Pet kissed both parents, ran up stairs to her beautiful room, knelt down and said her prayers.

"I'm surprised, Papa Rainsforth," said the mother," that you did not withhold your consent from Pet's preposterous request. You ought to have said 'No,' at once. But you never have any backbone when it comes to a struggle with Pet."

"And I," said the husband, "am simply amazed, Mamma Rainsforth, that you cannot control your own only daughter. I looked at you, expecting you to shake your head, or make some sign, but you wore the expression of the sphynx. I don't believe in giving Pet her head, but what can I do, when she comes with that soft, sweet, coaxing way of hers? If she were a boy, she'd fare very differently, but a man must indulge his young daughter, as a matter of course. The government of this family depends on you, Mary Josephine, and you know it."

The Judge passed a caressing hand over his wife's brown hair, and kissed her smooth forehead. She blushed and laughed like a girl.

"We're a foolish pair, Jack," she answered, gazing fondly at the strong, fine face bent above her. "God grant our folly may not injure Pet."

"Pet is in God's hand," said the judge. "She is right, too. Dead Man's Flats is a menace to everything good, and a hot bed for everything bad in this county, and somehow we ought to change its conditions. Its a big undertaking though, and Pet's little hands won't accomplish much. I tell you she's a brave girl to tackle that tribe of Reuben."

"I was afraid she'd ask to go and live in Rivington Street, New York, at the College Settlement, or at Hull House, in Chicago," said the mother," and I'd rather keep my bonny maid at home with me for awhile. I'll watch over and help her, John all I can, and so I am sure you will—bless her heart!"

"Bless her heart and her mother's heart, to be sure I will," said the judge.

Meanwhile Pet was making her plans.

(To be Concluded next week.)

ENGLAND'S FUTURE KING—PRINCE EDWARD OF YORK.

ENGLAND'S FUTURE KING.

The royal baby, whose portrait appears on this page, will probably, if his life be spared, some day become King of England. He is the great-grandson of Queen Victoria, the grandson of the Prince of Wales, and the son of the Duke and Duchess of York. Prince Edward of York, (as the monarch in embryo has been named), is only a little over a year old and is consequently the youngest child in Europe with the prospect of a throne. What changes may take place in Europe before the royal babe reaches manhood, and what character and fitness for the duties of government he may develop are matters which the future alone can disclose.

MEDICAL WORK IN JERUSALEM.

One of the most worthy and deserving Christian philanthropies in Jerusalem is the Marienstift Children's Hospital, whose excellent undenominational work has already been referred to at different times in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Dr. M. Sandreczky, Medical Director of the Marienstift, in a recently issued report of the work of that institution, states that 413 children were admitted during 1894 for skilled medical treatment. Many were suffering from the prevalent affliction known as Egyptian ophthalmia (an eye disease which frequently results in total blindness), while others were prostrated by fevers and the diseases peculiar to childhood in that part of the world. Among the little patient were Mohammedans and Christians, and all were treated with equal care and solicitude. Concerning a Moslem patient, Dr. Sandreczky writes:

"He was the son of a man of rank in Hebron, who had however committed many crimes and been long in prison. He was related to our nurse who had been converted to Christianity, but he more than once wanted to kill her, so that, when he came with his little son, she begged that he might not be admitted, as her life would not be safe. We calmed her, and spoke seriously to the father, who swore by the Prophet and all the saints, that he would behave himself well, and after his son was cured, we found that the notorious and dreaded wolf had been changed into a tame lamb, and vowed eternal gratitude to us. God grant that the proof, that we Christians love our enemies, and do good to them after the example of Our Lord and Master, may have an abiding influence upon and bear lasting fruit in the life of this Mohammedan, who has grown gray in his life of sin."

THE CHOPPED BIBLE.

A few years ago (a clerical [illegible] in Vermont writes), a ma[illegible] was traveling through New [illegible] land, selling Bibles. Pass[illegible] by a certain house he not[illegible] a woman in the yard hangi[illegible] out clothes. He approached [illegible] and showing his wares, soon sold her [illegible] Testament. Just as the bargain was closed, her husband appeared, and [illegible] the book from the hand of his w[illegible] inquired what she had been buying. On being told, he remonstrated with he[illegible] saying that she ought not to have boug[illegible] a book, as they had no use for it wh[illegible]ver. "However," he added, "you know [illegible] wife, we always divide everything, so I [illegible] guess we will divide this," and suiting the [illegible]tion to the word, he laid the book upon th[illegible] wood block and deliberately chopped it in[illegible] two pieces.

Putting one part in his pocket [illegible] gave the other to his wife, and went out [illegible] the barn to do his chores. After dinner [illegible] went off to the woods to chop, saying [illegible]thing more about the book. In the course [illegible] the afternoon he became weary and sa[illegible] down to rest. Putting his hand in his [illegible]cket, he felt the Bible which he had entir[illegible] forgotten. He took it out and began t[illegible] examine it. As it happened, the book h[illegible] been divided at the fifteenth chapter of [illegible]ke's Gospel, and the last page of his h[illegible] contained the story of the prodigal so[illegible] He began to read it, and never having [illegible]en it before, he soon became much interes[illegible]d in the story, but unfortunately when [illegible] arrived at the point where the prodig[illegible] says "I will arise and go to my fath[illegible]" he reached the foot of the page, and th[illegible]d of his portion of the book. All the af[illegible]noon he could think of nothing else but th[illegible] prodigal. He determined to get the oth[illegible] part of the book when he arrived home. I[illegible] ish the story, but he was too proud [illegible] his wife for it, so he quietly hur[illegible]t the house over, hoping to discover [illegible] His search, however, was vain. At len[illegible], as the evening wore on, his curiosity [illegible]t the better of his pride, and finally I said, "Wife, I've been reading a story [illegible] that book you bought this morning, a[illegible] you half ended just at the most interesti[illegible] part of the story. Won't you let me s[illegible] half?"

The other part was quickly p[illegible]ed, and before he slept he knew by ex[illegible] what it was to say, "I will arise a[illegible] go to my Father."

NOBLE GIFTS TO EDUCATI[illegible].

Ours is essentially a civilizing [illegible] an educating age. There is probably [illegible] finer record in the line of secular philan[illegible]ropies than that of the American men and [illegible]omen who have voluntarily founded and [illegible]stablished many of those splendid edu[illegible]tional institutions that are making the te[illegible]chers of Europe wonder. In the last twe[illegible]ty-five years $75,000,000 of money made i[illegible] America has been given to help in the [illegible]se of education. George Peabody left [illegible],000,000 of his estate to the cause of ed[illegible]ucation. Isaac Rich, $2,000,000 to Boston [illegible]niversity; John Hopkins, $3,140,000 to [illegible]nd university in Baltimore which b[illegible]s his name; Asa Packard gave $3,000,0[illegible] to Lehigh University; D. B. Fayerweat[illegible]her left a bequest of nearly $3,000,000 to [illegible]various colleges; Cornelius Vanderbilt g[illegible]ave $[illegible],000,000 to the Vanderbilt Universit[illegible]y. John C. Green gave $1,500,000 to Prince[illegible]ton College; Asa Stone, $600,000 to Adelb[illegible]ert College. G. I. Seney, $450,000 to Wi[illegible]leyan University; Matthew Vassar, $[illegible]800,000 to Vassar College for Women; J. D. [illegible]Rockefeller's gifts to the Chicago Univer[illegible]sity aggregate $4,500,000; and Leland St[illegible]anford's estate will yield from $15,000,000 [illegible]to $20,000,000 for the University that bears [illegible]his name on the Pacific coast. Dr. [illegible]Harper, of Chicago, has given away v[illegible]ast sums during the past six years, in helpin[illegible]g worthy institutions.

MEDITATION.

WHAT is this little life we all so co[illegible]t
But waves of bitterness who[illegible] cre[illegible] are tears;
Why should we—men and wome[illegible]n
Eager to sail thereon through wea[illegible]
Eager to battle with the threatening
All the rough dangers of the sea to[illegible]
Knowing no careless rest on peacef[illegible]
Until our little bark is safe in port.

God grant the harbor lights may all [illegible]
That we may see our way betweer[illegible] peac[illegible] piers:
Each wearied boatman, safe at last [illegible]
Drift in the peace of the eternal ve[illegible]

Muskegon, Mich. —E. HELVN [illegible]

AT THE GATE OF TIBET.

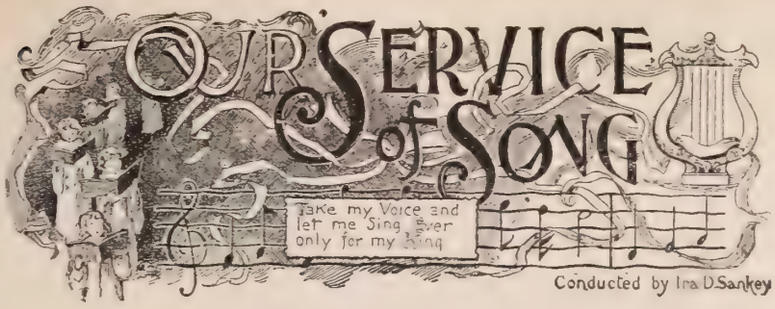
The Bearers of the Gospel Message Patiently Awaiting the Government's Withheld Permission to enter Tibet.

NEARLY two years ago we published the story of Miss Annie Taylor and told of her project for carrying the Gospel into Tibet, one of the last lands to hear the story of salvation through Christ. The party of brave men and women who went out in response to Miss Taylor's appeal was halted at the frontier. There they remained, at last accounts, preparing themselves by the study of the language, for effective work as soon as the government gave its consent to their entering the country. A Christian traveller in Northern India, recently visited them at Kalimpong, on the Indian side of the frontier, and sends us an English publication the following account of his reception:

"I found the party in a modest house, still growing above their hands, with the skilled assistance of some of their number, and among them, Phuntstiog, a striking Tibetan Christian, one of the converts at the Sikh mission, who, as well as their regular teacher, is coaching them in pronunciation. When I spoke of plans for the future, Mr. Polhill-Turner said: 'If you mention our mission anywhere, will you ask the earnest prayers of God's people that we may be guided whether to remain here or go round by the Chinese frontier. As far as we can see, this will be our wisest step in autumn if the country is not opened by that time; for there is not sufficient work to keep us here after we have made a start on the language, in comparison with the crying needs elsewhere. But I fear that if we go to work at Chinese, too, our men will remain among the Chinese on the border. If any of those who have difficulty in learning Chinese—which would be indispensable there—would love to remain here, and our present studies will show which are which. No definite plan of action is, however, yet before us and God, when he wills, will open the way."

"I was interested ro learn from the Roman Catholic missionaries at Darjiling of the sustained but unsuccessful efforts of Pere Desgoudins to enter Tibet. For ten years or more he has been working on a Tibetan dictionary, which he is now bringing through the press in Hong Kong. At Gaya, the birth-place of Buddhism, near Patna, I met with Pharmapala, the Buddhist apostle, who went to Chicago. He also had his face set Tibetwards, with a view to reforming the exceedingly corrupt form of Buddhism—rather Lamaism—which prevails there; yet even he cannot obtain admittance from this side, and contemplates an attack via China, after a session through that lethargic empire. In Almora I found Mr. Agnew, an independent worker, arranging to pass to and fro, in native garb, with caravans, a feat he has already successfully performed. In our prayers for Tibet we must not forget the Moravians, so long in the field at various outposts waiting to get in.

"Miss Taylor herself is still to the front at Chatong, some twenty miles further on as the crow flies, but some five-and-forty, or three days' climb, by the winding road. Apart from her work among the natives, she is the only chaplain for the British garrison. Her zeal and courage need no commendation, and no one need fear that her labor will be in vain. Having found the administration of a mission composed chiefly of men a more difficult matter than was anticipated, Miss Taylor is now asking for one or two ladies to take their stand by her side and prepare to push forward among the women. It was a great disappointment to find that time would not permit me to pay this noble pioneer a visit, but I take the opportunity of earnestly commending her and her work to the prayers of Christians.



A CHILD OF JESUS.

IDA SCOTT TAYLOR. W. A. OGDEN.

1. To do my du - ty day by day, In the name of the King of kings, I'll strive by faith, I'll
2. To speak a lov - ing word of cheer, In the name of the King of kings, Shall be my greatest
3. To guard my tongue from speaking ill, In the name of the King of kings, I'll try to do my
4. I'll strive some earn-est deed to do, In the name of the King of kings, To keep my spir - it watch and pray, In the name of the King of kings. A child of Je - sus I would be, For pleas - ure here, In the name of the King of kings. A child of Je - sus I would be, For Mas - ter's will, In the name of the King of kings. A child of Je - sus I would be, For ev - er true, In the name of the King of kings. A child of Je - sus I would be, For f.
FINE.
oh, He gave His life for me! I want to serve Him faith-ful-ly, And hon-or the King of kings.
D. S.—I want to serve Him faith-ful-ly, And hon-or the King of kings.
Chorus.
D. S.
And hon - or the King of kings, . . . And hon - or the King of kings, of kings, Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From "HIGHEST PRAISE" for Sabbath Schools, by per. of the publishers.

A DAISY'S MESSAGE.

A RING of snow with a heart of gold,
A daisy peeped from a bottle old,
With a twisted neck, and a broken head
On a narrow shelf by a sick child's bed.

The room was dark, 'twas a third floor back,
For rents were high and the work was slack,
And the poor must pay for a ray of light.
Though that, I ween, should be theirs of right.

The daisy smiled on a sleeping face,
Wan with disease but of wondrous grace;
The child awoke and a glad surprise
Flushed her fair cheek while it dimmed her eyes.

"O daisy, dear," she tenderly said.
"Do you have pain in your golden head?
Your fringe of snow, does it ever get black?
And do you sometimes have pain in your back?

"Where, did you come from, daisy, sweet?
Not, I am sure, from the grimy street.
But from where the waves wear caps of white,
While the breeze blows sweet by day and night.

"Did you say good-bye to the clover red,
To 'Forget-me-not' did you nod your head?
Did the bob-o-link sing you a matin song,
And the thrush a vesper, sweet and long?

"Dear flower, how did you come to me
From the daisy snow-banks of the lea?
From the meadow sweet to a tenement-room,
Oh, daisy, dear, how, how could you come?"

* * * *

Then came from the hall a Daughter fair
Of the King divine, who had listened there,
While she kissed her lips, she sweetly smiled
On the blushing face of the timid child.

Then she for the flower spoke, "My dear,
A hand of love brought the daisy here.
Hands that were little, but brown and strong,
The field-flowers gathered amid glad song.

"The childish heart of the country sweet,
Thought of the child of the crowded street,
Prayed: 'Oh Father, send flowers of joy
To the weary heart of some girl or boy.'

"Then gathered the bloom from hill and dale,
From mountain crest and lonely vale,
Clover, buttercup, daisy, wild-rose,
All in Dame Nature's garden that blows.

"But, love, 'twas the Heavenly Father, ours,
Who sent the child forth to gather flowers,
Though a teacher wise, with a tender heart,
In the gracious mission had a part."

A loving hand brought the daisy here,
A loving heart plucked the flowers there,
And the daisy speaks from God above,
And His children here, one message—Love.

New York. —HORACE W. BYRNES.

IN HIS NAME.

WHEN the path lies dark before me
And I cannot see my way,
Clouds of sin and sorrow gather,
Shutting out the light of day.
Then I to the throne of mercy,
All my sins and sorrows take;
There I plead his precious promise,
In His name and for His sake.
For the name of Jesus, ever
Gives us access to the throne;
And the Father owns and blesses,
When we trust in Him alone. —E. E. B.

WANDERING FEET.

THE dear little feet wander often
Perhaps from the pathway of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night.
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!
For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for the sweet childish voices,
For a sweet childish face at the door.
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
You'd give all the world just for this;
For the comfort 't will bring in your sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

THE EXILES' RETURN.

Prophetic Significance of the Increasing Tide of Migration to Palestine.

BY VEN. J. HUGHES GAMES, D. C. L.

THE Lord gives us the distinct promise that when he builds up Zion he will appear in his glory (Ps. 102: 16). In these words we have the rebuilding of Zion, or the restoration of the Jewish people to their own land, intimately connected with the appearing in glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. Nothing is clearer in the sure word of phophecy than that, after the long scattering of the Jews, and the down-treading of Jerusalem by the Gentiles, the chosen people are to return to their land, their city to be rebuilt on a scale of greater magnificence than before, and the theocratic kingdom to be restored to them. There are numerous predictions to this effect, as for instance Hosea 3: 4; Jer. 30: 3; 31: 10; 31: 38; Isa. 11: 11, 12; Ezekiel 37: 21; Amos 9: 11, 12, 15; Micah 4: 6, 7; Isaiah 2: 2, 3.

Now, the interval between the taking away of the kingdom from Israel, until its future restoration under its lawful king, is filled up by a parenthetical dispensation called "the times of the Gentiles"—"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21: 24). When those times are fulfilled, Gentile usurpation is to cease, and the Jews will be once more in possession of their land and holy city. During this period, the Church of God is being called out of the Gentiles; as James said, in the first council at Jerusalem, "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." "After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." (Acts xv: 14, 16.)

The "times of the Gentiles," were to continue according to the vision of Daniel, seven times, which according to the generally accepted principles of prophetic chronology, would be 2,520 years. From whatever date they are counted, it is evident that they are rapidly running out; and when they are completed, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles" no more. God's "time to favor" Zion, "yea, the set time, is" (nearly) "come." (Ps. 102: 13.) And these "times of the Gentiles" are to be followed by "the times of the blessed and only Potentate," when the usurped domination of the world-powers will be succeeded by the rule and reign of the lawful King Messiah.

The following are a few indications that in the providence of God preparations for this consummation have already commenced:

1. The increased interest taken in the conversion and religious welfare of the Jews.

2. The prominence of Jews among the nations. A large proportion of the cultured classes in Germany, Austria, and Russia are Jews. Mr. Arnold White says that the newspaper press of Europe is largely in Jewish hands and produced by Jewish brains. In commercial business and on Stock Exchanges they are pre-eminent. A considerable proportion of the moneyed capital of the world belongs to Jews.

3. A great and growing interest is taken in the exploration of Palestine. "Thy servants take pleasure in her stones and favor the dust thereof." (Ps. 102: 13.)

The Palestine Exploration Society, which commenced operations in 1872, has carefully explored the whole country, and marked out the various localities, hills and valleys, towns and villages, ruins, mounds, and heaps of stone, on a map or scale of one inch to a mile. Excavations in Jerusalem have disclosed many of the stones of Solomon's and Herod's temples, and of Solomon's palace, and also the ruins of bridges connecting Mount Zion with the hill on which the western part of the city was built.

(To be continued.)

A CHILD'S SWORD.

A Sermonette for Children Preached in Dudley Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., by Pastor A. S. Gumbart.

I WANT to talk to you this morning about swords. Not such a sword as soldiers use in battle, but such swords as every one of us must have if we hope to fight the battles of life in such a way that when at last the battle is over we may feel that by the grace of God we have fought a good fight. Let us see what battles we have to fight and what kind of sword is best calculated to give us the victory:

There are temptations outside of ourselves which need to be fought. The world is full of temptations to do wrong. If these temptations only made their power felt after we had grown to be men and women, and we could have our youth and early manhood and womanhood in which to prepare to fight against these temptations, it would indeed be a blessing, but the sad fact is that a boy or girl is hardly old enough to learn anything when the Evil One is on hand to teach them wicked things, so that by the time the boy becomes a man, it is often the case that he has already acquired such bad habits, such strong desire for wrong things that he is crippled in mind, body and soul at the very time when he should have a healthy body, a strong mind and a pure soul. And one of the worst things about it is that the temptations which attack the soul so often come in deceptive form. You know the Bible says that even Satan sometimes comes clothed as an angel of light; and so it comes to pass that unless young people will heed the warnings they receive from those who have had experience, and who have the welfare of the young people at heart, they are likely to be led astray.

There are evil dispositions in our own hearts which need to be fought. The only evidence we need in order to know that we have sin in our hearts, is to get acquainted with ourselves. We do not need to wait until we are men and women before we shall be able to find evidences that something besides good is found in the human heart. Before the child is old enough to know the difference between right and wrong, or even that there is any right and wrong, we find it showing unmistakable signs of bad temper, of selfishness and jealousy. Why, the little baby shows fight before it is able to sit up alone. Now, this evil disposition in us must be kept under, we must fight against it; and in this struggle you cannot begin too soon. Evil things spring up in our hearts like weeds in a garden and unless there is constant watchfulness and uprooting we shall soon have more weeds than flowers. Wicked deeds are born in our hearts in the form of wicked thoughts, and unless we kill the wicked thought it may some day grow to be a wicked passion which holds us as with a giant's grasp.

Now what kind of swords are we to use in this battle? There must be the sword of earnest determination to live for God. It is easy even for a child to know what kind of life is pleasing to God, but it is not always easy to live up to what we know to be God's will, but where there is an earnest determination, we may count on God's help. We must always remember, however, that God expects us to put into this fight against the evil which besets us the very best that is in us. A good soldier is just as needful as a good sword, if we expect to fight to win. It is something like this: a boy may have a good teacher, and a good text-book, but unless the boy puts into his study the very best qualities of mind and soul, neither text-book nor teacher can do him much good. So in fighting against the evils of the world, we have God for our Helper, the Holy Spirit for our Teacher, and the Bible for our text-book, but these will do us little good unless we [illegible] the spirit of earnest determination to live for God.

The sword of prayer is necessary. Next to the study of the Bible for the purpose of discovering what God requires of us, the habit of seeking God in prayer will help us to overcome our foes. Prayer does this in many ways: First, it puts us in line with what God requires of us. God teaches us to pray, and there is always untold good that comes to us when we do what God directs us to do. Second, prayer helps us because it secures the help of God. Third, prayer helps us because it imparts to us a right disposition. A prayerful heart is more likely than any other to destroy wicked thoughts and sinful desires. Fourth, prayer helps us because it makes us strong through the faith that God is on our side. A boy or girl who feels that God is with them, will be more courageous in standing by what they know to be right and true. All the truly great and good men of the world have been men of prayer.

I want to call your attention to the best sword ever made for our use. You know that Damascus, the city near to which the Apostle Paul was converted, has been renowned for centuries for the fine quality of swords manufactured there. So when you hear or read of Damascus blades, you will remember the lessons of this morning. But Paul tells of another kind of sword which he advises all Christians to use—it is the Bible, which Paul calls "the sword of the Spirit." This does not mean the sword which the Holy Spirit himself uses, but the sword which the Holy Spirit has made. He has inspired it and given it to us for our use. We must study the Bible, become familiar with its teachings, and apply them to our daily lives. If, for example, we find ourselves drawn into a quarrel, if we know our Bibles we will remember that Jesus has said, "Blessed are the peace-makers," and acting according to this teaching, we have slain our evil thoughts with the sword of the Spirit. David tried to fight Goliath, the giant, with the sword of Saul, but he found that he could not use it, and laid it aside; but here in the Bible we find a sword which every boy and girl can use, and the longer you use it the better you will be able to use it. Some swords are only made for show. I have seen many beautiful swords made of gold and silver, and inlaid with all manner of precious stones, but they were only for show; but the Bible is not a sword made for show only, but for use—use it, and God bless you.

REV. C. H. MEAD.

The New Field Secretary of the National Temperance Society.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

G. B. S. D., Wakefield.
H. A. D., Cincinnatus, N. Y.
Mrs. J. R., So. Trenton, N. J.
Mrs. J. C. Keaves, Wis.
L. H., Charleston, Pa.
A Christian Mother, Lind, Wis.
Mrs. A. A. Caverly.
A Family Being Led by Jesus

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

SCIENCE'S DEBT TO MISSIONS.

In setting forth the debt of science to Missions, Archdeacon Farrar offered these interrogatories by way of suggestion. Is it nothing that through their labor in the translation of the Bible, the German philologist in his study may have before him the vocabulary of 250 languages? Who created the science of anthropology? The missionaries. Who rendered possible the deeply important science of comparative religion? The missionaries. Who discovered the great chain of lakes in Central Africa, on which will turn its future destiny? The missionaries. Who have been the chief explorers of Oceanica, America and Asia? The missionaries. Who discovered the famous Nestorian monument in Singar Fu? A missionary. Who discovered the still more famous Moabite stone? A church missionary. Who discovered the Hittite inscription? A Presbyterian missionary."

THE NEW SECRETARY.

Rev. C. H. Mead Succeeds the Late Mr. John N. Stearns as Secretary of the National Temperance Society.

THOUSANDS of temperance workers in various sections of the country will hail with pleasure the news that the genial singer, writer, evangelist, and all-around lovable man, Rev. C. H. Mead, has yielded to the persuasions of his friends, and accepted the office of Field Secretary of the National Temperance Society. It was a matter of no little difficulty to find a man capable of filling the place which had been filled so long and so well by the late John N. Stearns. The energy, ability, and devotion Mr. Stearns had put in his work made it no easy undertaking for any conscientious man to succeed him. Those who knew the work of the Society and understood how much depended on the efficiency of the Secretary, were those most concerned about the selection; but there was general satisfaction when it became known that the office had been tendered to Mr. Mead. It was felt that in his hands there would be no slackening of effort, and no lack of the tact and courtesy indispensable in the successful conduct of the Society's affairs. But Mr. Mead was reluctant to accept the proffered honor. He loved his own work, was familiar with all its details, and was successful in it. It seemed to him unwise to give it up to undertake so onerous an office as that of Secretary. Left to himself he would undoubtedly have declined the offer. But pressure was brought to bear upon him on two sides. Influential officers and friends of the Society urged his acceptance as a duty, and personal friends who knew his calibre, made light of his modest doubts of his own powers. Eventually he has been brought to recognize the work as a call of duty, and when Mr. Mead looks upon anything as a duty, there is no further question as to his course. Arrangements have been made to relieve him of some of the routine work of the office, so as to leave him free to pursue the line in which he is an acknowledged master—that of platform speaking. With this understanding Mr. Mead has accepted the office, to the unqualified gratification of a host of friends of the Society in New York and other cities.

Mr. Mead needs no introduction to the readers of this journal. He is known to them by his charming sketches of life and character which have appeared at intervals much longer than we or our readers liked, but which could not be shorter while he had so many calls on his time. "Show Your Colors," "Uncle Ben," "His Ro[illegible] Highness," "The Song and the Sta[illegible] and many other sketches are fresh in [illegible] memory. They were written with a l[illegible]ing hand and with that tender sympa[illegible] with the frailties of human nature wi[illegible] only the Christian man really feels. Wh[illegible] the ordinary observer might see only [illegible] wretched drunkard or a poor street urc[illegible] ragged and dirty, Mr. Mead seemed to [illegible] under the repulsive exterior the soul [illegible] brother, one with whom life had g[illegible] hard and who under more propitious [illegible] cumstances would have led a better life. [illegible] pleasant, cheery greeting and a few s[illegible] pathetic words in Mr. Mead's genial m[illegible] ner would elicit the poor creature's st[illegible] which, told again in his own racy wo[illegible] aroused the sympathy in others that he [illegible] felt for his grimy, degraded brother. [illegible] the kindly heart in the man, which t[illegible] sketches evince that has enabled Mr. M[illegible] to reach so many who seemed bey[illegible] reach and to raise them. One instance [illegible] that kindliness our readers may remem[illegible] It was suggested by one of his South[illegible] experiences. He was at the post office [illegible] Southern town and saw a number of [illegible] ored people coming to inquire if there [illegible] any letters for them. He learned that t[illegible] came because they knew white people [illegible] for their mail. Some of them had [illegible] calling regularly for years and had n[illegible] received a letter. Mr. Mead realized [illegible] much pleasure it would give them t[illegible] ceive a letter at last. He obtained t[illegible] names from the Postmaster and as [illegible] travelled away from the town he began [illegible] letter-writing to the old colored people. [illegible] letters were mailed on his arrival in [illegible] York, bright, cheery, encouraging le[illegible] that could not fail to touch the heart [illegible] the readers. So much good resulted [illegible] Mr. Mead extended his operations to o[illegible] towns, and his self-imposed labor has g[illegible] him almost as much pleasure as it [illegible] the recipients of his epistles.

We are glad to learn that his new du[illegible] will not curtail Mr. Mead's platform [illegible] fulness. There he is at home and t[illegible] who have once heard him speak k[illegible] when he rises that a treat is coming. E[illegible] the children hang upon his words, for [illegible] most familiar subject becomes brighte[illegible] he handles it. Not long ago he ha[illegible] speak to some children on the subjec[illegible] the day, which was the combat of D[illegible] and Goliath. "I have always ha[illegible] special liking for David among the [illegible] characters," he said, "because he w[illegible] singer. I love singing. I can imagin[illegible] country lad singing as he chose his sto[illegible] good round, smooth pebbles from [illegible] brook. I think he must have sang, 'T[illegible] Lord is my light and my salvation: wh[illegible] shall I fear?' and as he went toward [illegible] big, bragging warrior he would sing, 'T[illegible] Lord is the strength of my life: of wh[illegible] shall I be afraid?' Then the stone [illegible] flying through the air. I don't know [illegible] the giant said when it hit him on the [illegible] head. I expect he had not been sin[illegible] any words like David's. Perhaps [illegible] had time to say anything he said, 'St[illegible] a thing as that never entered my head [illegible] fore.'" No bright boy in the aud[illegible] would miss a point like that, and Mr. [illegible] saw what he likes to see on the faces o[illegible] his hearers, whether children or grown pe[illegible]e, a smile of intelligence. Tears come [illegible] under his addresses, but they are tea[illegible] of sympathy that the speaker knows ho[illegible] to direct into practical channels. We be[illegible]e that Mr. Mead will make an exc[illegible]t Secretary and we congratulate the So[illegible]y on having secured him. In his cas[illegible]he office has certainly sought the man.

ETERNITY.

ETERNITY! Eternity!
How long thou art, Eternity!
Oh man, full oft thy thought should fill
Upon the pains of sin and hell,
And on the glories of the pure,
That both beyond all time endure,
Ponder, O man, Eternity.

Eternity! Eternity!
How long thou art, Eternity!
Who marks thee well would say to G[illegible]
Here, judge, burn, smite me with th[illegible]
Here let me all thy justice bear;
When time of grace is past, then spa[illegible]
Ponder, O man, Eternity.

Eternity! Eternity!
How long thou art, Eternity!
Lo, I, Eternity warn thee,
O man, that thou oft think on me,
To sinners, punishment and pain,
To them that love their God, rich ga[illegible]
Ponder, O man, Eternity.

—WULFER.

Indian Homes of the Dead.

The Strange Burial Houses of the Native Alaskans.

THERE are many singular customs prevalent among the Alaska Indians, showing them to have inherited from their forefathers traits that are not found generally among Indian tribes. The totems or family crests that abound in the villages, are not only the emblems of the different clans and their characteristics, but are objects of worship as well, having a dim resemblance to the ancestor-worship of China and Japan. Totem-worship is regarded as marking a higher level of religious advancement than the worship of the fetish as it is found in some parts of the globe, and is probably a survival to some extent of tree and animal worship.

The Indian loves his country and his kindred with an intensity that is rarely paralleled. His affection passed beyond the grave, and is an evidence of his belief in a future existence. With great pride and loving tenderness, the Alaskan natives give sepulchre to their dead in small neat houses that dot the pine-clad hillsides, giving the impression of a scattered village. Here and there a tall totem, with the carved figure of bird or beast lends prominence and height to the surroundings. Even after adopting the Christian faith, these Indians retain their mortuary customs, and this is especially the case among the interior tribes who practice witchcraft; shamanism (the belief that the whole earth is full of and controlled by good and bad spirits), and exorcism. They seldom bury their dead, and the desire for preservation of the body is universal. Thus their cemeteries become an aggregation of mortuary houses, in which the departed are laid with great care, covered by skins or blankets. In that intensely cold climate, the bodies are preserved for an almost indefinite period. In the hut, along with the bodies are deposited his weapons, or, if a woman, some pieces of cloth and household utensils.

Strangely enough, after the lavish display of pride and affection, the place of the dead is shunned and never visited. It is tabooed, and any Alaskan infringing this unwritten social law would be severely dealt with.

Gospel work is progressing encouragingly in Alaska, despite many drawbacks. The Presbyterian and Swedish Missions are well established and have planted many thriving stations. Rev. Sheldon Jackson, United States Commissioner of Education for Alaska, has given most encouraging reports of the religious and intellectual advancement of the people. A number of natives have already been trained as missionary teachers among their own kindred. The future is bright with promise of the overthrow of the old heathen superstitions and the establishment throughout that vast territory of the glorious Gospel.

***

To onquer Evil Temper.

Bear your own burdens and shoulder your own imperfections. Don't try to lay your shortcomings at the door of Omnipotence and say, with some: "I am just as the Lord made me; sour or pleasant. I can't help my temper." It is not true that the Lord endowed any man with a temper of horsewhips or a tongue of flails, and if you will make a prayerful effort to overcome these shortcomings, asking Divine help in the matter, you will soon be free. Above all, take Jesus into your daily life and you will soon be rid forever of those disagreeable qualities that make existence a burden to self and to others as well.

***

Don't Hurry too Much.

There is such a thing as too much hurry—a haste that spoils everything and is cruel to other hearts. Let us take time for the good-bye kiss. We shall go to the day's work with a sweeter spirit for it. Let us take time to speak kind words to those we love. By-and-by, when they can no longer hear us, our foolishness will seem more wise than our best wisdom. Let us take time to be pleasant. The small courtesies which we often omit because they are small, will some day look larger to us than the wealth which we have coveted or the fame for which we have struggled. Let us take time to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating may be a doubtful blessing to the son who is a stranger to you. Your beautifully kept house, busy mother, can never be a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress.

***

Giving Joy to a Child.

"Blessed be the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child," wrote Douglas Jerrold," for there is no saying when and where it may bloom again. I remember when I, a barefooted lad, stood at the wooden fence of a poor little garden in my native village, while with longing eyes I gazed on the flowers blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sunday morning. The possessor came forth from his little cottage; he was a woodcutter by trade, and spent the whole week in the woods. He had come into the garden to gather flowers to put into his coat when he went to church. He saw me, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations he gave it to me. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke a word, and with bounding steps I ran home. The carnation has long since withered; but now it blooms afresh." And thus does every little kindness done to the children, come back to us with interest, if not in this life, then in that which is to come.

***

Little Things and Little People.

What a vast number of little things there are in the universe! The stars seem small to us because they are far away. But they are really among the very big things. When you look at the moon through a telescope, you see that it is a great big world, with great mountains and vast oceans covering its surface. And when you look through a microscope you can see some of the very little things in the world—things that are too small to be seen by the naked eye.

Take a small drop of water out of a pond and put it under a microscope, and you will find that it has become a pond in itself, full of strange creatures, swimming about in all directions. Where did they come from? The same God who made the sun, moon and stars, and the great mountains made these little things, and "not one of them is forgotten before God." And if God cares for the little things, he cares also for the little people. He cares for the children, as well as for the parents, and for the helpless infant as well as for the grown man or woman.

BURIAL HOUSES OF THE ALASKANS, NEAR THE TOWN OF JUNEAU.

***

Small Courtesies.

One evening lately, writes Margaret Sangster, I entered a room where several young people, with books and work, were sitting around the lamp. The young man with the lexicon and the grammar on the table before him was the busiest of the group, but he instantly arose and remained standing until I had taken my seat. The little action was automatic: the habit of this family is to practice small courtesies, and the boys have been trained since childhood to pay deference to women. They always rise whenever a lady, their mother, sister, friend, or the guest of the house, comes into the room where they are at work; they place chairs gallantly and gracefully for ladies at the dinner table, they take off their hats when they meet their mother on the street, and they never kiss her with a hat on; in saying good morning or good evening to her, it is with hat in hand. Her bundles are carried, her way is made easy, a beautiful politeness waits for her word in the domestic discussions, and refrains from interrupting her, even in the most heated argument.

Neither mother nor sister goes out after dark without an escort. One of the boys can always go out of his way to see her safely to a friend's door, or to the meeting which she wishes to attend. Most winning and sweet are the equally charming manners of the girls in the home I speak of.

The fact is, life would be a far more agreeable thing for many of us if home politeness were more assiduously cultivated. We know how brutal the frankness of home can sometimes be; how sensitive natures bleed and suffer because of the wholly inexcusable candor of criticism which takes to itself license in the safe privacy of the domestic circle.

We vex our own
With [illegible]
Though we love our own
The best.

***

HOW HINDOO WIVES MOURN.

NEURALGIA and partial blindness are so common among the women of India, writes F. J. Martin, a missionary in the Muktsar district, that it excites no surprise. Indeed, one would be rather surprised to see a woman in middle life who had entire possession of both her orbs. As a rule, one eye is gone, or both are red, bleared and tearful; the eyelashes have turned inwards, and have scratched the cornea till it is opaque and nearly sightless, and past healing; or a cataract has formed in one or both eyes.

On inquiring the cause of all this, the usual reply is that she has lost a child—a son—and has cried till she has literally cried her eyes out. There is no exaggeration in this. That is probably what has actually occurred. It is always a son, sometimes a husband, but a daughter—I never heard of a woman crying seriously for the loss of a daughter.

In one case, both eyes had been sacrificed for neither son nor husband, but, by way of variety, for a buffalo. Buffalos are prized above cows for their milk. They give more milk and of a richer quality, though with something of a tallowy taste. Gurmukhsingh informed me that he had lost a valuable buffalo, for which he had paid the extravagant sum of seven times twenty rupees (that is the way the Jats say a hundred and forty), and that his wife had been inconsolable ever since. The women of the neighborhood would come in to remind her of her loss, exaggerate it as far as possible, assure her that she had incurred the envy or the wrath of the gods, that more calamities were sure to follow, but be that as it might, she was in the power of "Pararrubbit" (fate), and finally their advice was that she should cry about it as long and loud as possible. In fact, in the discharge of this duty they were prepared to assist her. So the dames of Mrs. Gurmukh's acquaintance came one and all, both young and old, some with one eye, and some with the remains of two, and some with terrific squints, and baring their heads, proceeded to form a circle with their hostess in the centre. Then all, with one accord, continued to shriek piteously for the space of two hours, while they beat their thighs and temples alternately with both hands. This is the customary mode of public mourning, though usually practiced only on the death of a husband or a son. A woman, to show her excessive grief, will frequently go on day after day for a month, inflicting blows on her temples in the manner described till blood flows, and severe inflammation is excited in the eyes, accompanied by intolerable headache. And now follows ulceration of the cornea, followed, after months of suffering, by cicatrices and opacities, and frequently as not by cataract and all but total blindness. And all this for the sake of, not genuine grief, for grief does not manifest itself by noise, but for the sake of making an impression of mourning on the neighbors. And though all the neighbors know it is sheer hypocrisy, yet each and all will, in her turn, do the same thing, imagining she is imposing on the rest.

False Economy

Is practiced by people who buy inferior varieties of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Co., N. Y.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

THE INTERRUPTED STUNDIST MEETING.

CHAPTER IV— Continued.

The Countess's Ideals.

THE laugh of the Countess disconcerted Vladimir. It was hard to have his protestations ridiculed. He looked at her reproachfully and asked, "Countess, why should you laugh at me?"

"I laugh at you, Vladimir Alexeitch, because you are so amusing. Now don't try to hoodwink me by protestation. Let me speak, please. You don't love me—if you do it has come on far too suddenly, and you should think it over again. I don't love you, and I'm not going to marry you until I do. I dare say you are a good enough and a clever enough sort of man, but somehow, Vladimir Alexeitch you don't come up to my ideal of what my husband must be. Mind you, I have thought of marrying again."

"Perhaps you would tell me what it is you think I lack. If I only knew I would work like a slave to obtain it."

"Well, Vladimir Alexeitch, I know more about you than you think I do. Don't start in that way. I'll tell nobody; I won't even tell you. You wish to know what it is you lack. That also I will not say; but I'll tell you what that particular man must have and must be who gets my consent to be his wife. Vladimir Alexeitch, he must be a man. Do you know what that means? Not a male person, remember, but a man. He must be great, strong, generous; a noble, strong, generous soldier and servant of our Tsar and our fatherland. Generous and true he must be, Vladimir Alexeitch. I always know a true man when I see him. Don't look so glum, my friend; I did not say you were not true. Then my husband must be self-sacrificing, be willing to sacrifice himself, his rest, his comfort, his luxuries for the sake of others. And he must have the power to make me what he is himself. I would rather die, Vladimir Alexeitch, than have a husband who would drag me down to his own level. He must raise me to his. And he must support me in my life, and he must sympathize with me, and if he is a man like this I'll love him—oh, I'll love him as—as—as no man was ever loved before."

Vladimir was pale and silent, and he sat gloomily watching the carpet and nervously twiddling his sword knot. The Countess was flushed, her eyes sparkled with a brilliant light. She rose to her feet.

"The husband that I marry, Vladimir Alexeitch must love the people—the poor, the oppressed people. He will call them in his heart brothers and sisters. Vladimir Alexeitch, you have lived for years in Slavo. I know Slavo very well. You know how often I go across from Krasnaya-Balka. Have you made the people there love you? Do you love them? Have they ever done you a wrong? Have you ever done any of them a wrong?"

Vladimir rose and his face became livid. "Countess, what do you mean? A wrong? No, certainly not. I have done them no wrong. What wrong?" His voice was thin, and he kept his eyes away from the radiant face before him.

"Well, Vladimir Alexeitch, you know best. But you have some of the noblest people in the world in Slavo. Do you know young Kulmenko? No?"

"I hardly know the fellow by sight even," stammered Vladimir.

"Well, I'll pass that. What was I saying? Yes, my husband will esteem it an honor to know men like Kulmenko and his friends, men whom, I dare say, you heartily despise. And he must sympathize with them, and help them, and protect them. There's the bell ringing, and that means visitors. Just a last word. Never utter a syllable to me about love until you feel in your own heart that you are a better man, a truer man, a more generous man, loving your brothers and sisters as you love yourself. When you are conscious of something like this, and if you then feel as you say you do now, come to me, and we'll talk matters over together."

She held out her hand and Vladimir took it, raising his troubled eyes for a moment to her face. He stooped and touched her fingers with his lips.

CHAPTER V.

A Village Autocrat.

On the Saturday night succeeding the events related in the last chapter, Mikhail Kulmenko, the young Stundist of Slavo, was passing quickly from house to house delivering a message to his Stundist friends. He had heard that the local commissary of police, the inveterate foe of the sect, who used the authority with which he was clothed to persecute them, unknown to the Czar, was absent from Slavo and would not return for a few days. It was a good opportunity for a meeting. The only way of calling one was to personally visit every member. There was no bell to ring, and if there had been, it would have been imprudent to ring it, for the commissary had strictly forbidden all Stundist meetings, and they were therefore held in secrecy. Mikhail was tramping about the village till a late hour, leaving at every house he visited word that a meeting for prayer and preaching would be held at his house the next morning at six o'clock. He added that they need not fear to come, as the dreaded "Uriadnik" was far away.

And so the next morning at the appointed hour there was near a hundred men, women, and children crowded into the three connecting rooms of the preacher's cottage. There were seats enough for the women and children, and there was standing-room for the men. An earnest, solemn gravity sat on every face. These men and women knew the meaning of the word persecution; the smell of its fires had passed upon them. They had borne its assault, and were prepared to bear it again.

Kulmenko opened the meeting with a brief prayer, begging for grace and strength, for wisdom and patience. He prayed, too, for their beloved land and for its mighty ruler, and for all in authority. A hearty "Amen" followed from many lips as the preacher rose from his knees. Then there was the singing of a hymn in soft, low strains, the music and the words translated and adapted from the German by Kulmenko himself.

It was like a family gathering more than a public service. These men and women knew each other well and their common peril had drawn them near to each other in a common affection. Kulmenko himself observed no formality. He asked Vassily Pavlitch to speak to the brethren, saying that he had recent troubles which hung heavily on his spirit, and would be glad if his brother in Christ would speak as the Spirit of the Lord moved him. But Vassily Pavlitch was not the man to speak when the gifted young preacher was present. He said they were all in trouble, and would hear brother Michail's talk gladly whatever it might be. So Kulmenko opened his New Testament and read a chapter from the Gospels.

But there was to be no preaching that morning. Kulmenko had not uttered many words of his discourse, when Vassily Pavlitch, whose seat commanded a view of the hill-road from the cottage-window, interrupted the speaker by a cry that their beloved friend, Panitch Sergei, was coming down the path.

The meeting was all at once thrown into a condition of ebullient delight. The children caught the contagion and clapped their hands—they all knew or had heard of Sergei. Mikhail was running up the long hill to meet him, and his old mother had fled to the kitchen to boil the "samovar" for tea, and round the door crowded the smiling throng of villagers waiting the coming of their young master whom they loved so dearly. He had been long absent from Slavo, and now that he was in their midst again they sought to show him how dear he was to them.

"Little Panitch, you make my heart glad! Little brother, you make my eyes dance!"

Sergei was anything but little. He was a great stalwart man with magnificent shoulders and a stride and bearing like a knight in chivalry. But the villagers called him "little" because they loved him, and because they had caressed him when he was a child. And now when he stood in the centre of Mikhail's room, head and shoulders above any of them, one touched his tunic and another stroked his back, while the boys examined his gilt buttons, looking wonderingly at the huge sabre at his side and the spurs that jingled as he moved his feet.

"I'm sorry, friends, if I have interrupted the service," began Sergei, "but I got here last night from Petersburg with my uncle and my brother, and as I was looking out of my window this morning I saw you all come to Mikhail's. I knew there was a meeting, and I came down to see you all together."

"We're all glad to see you, Panitch," said Mikhail, "and I was just beginning the sermon when Vassily Pavlitch noticed you coming down the hill. Won't you say something instead?"

"Not now, brother—not now." Sergei's face grew serious. "I have tremendous news to tell you. War is declared!"

"War!" exclaimed the peasants in chorus. "War! What for? Against whom?"

"Another war?" gasped out an old man in the corner. "I know what war is. I was in the Crimea. Is it the English and French again?"

"No," Sergei replied, "the Turks. I don't know much about it myself, but I heard people talking in Petersburg, and I read a little about it in the newspapers. It seems the Turks have been treating their Christian subjects very badly. Some of the things I heard, I can hardly belive. Villages are burnt down, and the miserable

Continued on page 533

*Published by arrangement with Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, and Toronto.

Erysipelas

Has been my affliction from childhood. caused by impure blood and every spri sure to have a long spell and my gener would give way. Doctors did me l good and I became despondent. Las erysipelas settled in my eyes and I be tally blind for several weeks. Hood's parilla was recommended and after ta bottle my sight gradually returned, became purified and I was restored health. With Hood's Sarsaparilla on armed to meet any foe." MISS LU 144 Market St., Memphis, Tenn.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the Only True Blood Purifier promi the public eye. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, b headache. 25c.

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

W. L. G., Phila.—Have a very weak and am also excessively nervous. What advise?

Take Gastrine, in teaspoonful do times daily, after meals. Once o week take a teaspoonful of Nathroli in a half a tumbler of hot water, hour before breakfast. Cerebrine, in doses, three times daily.

C. L. H., Fort Worth—What can you for asthma?

Take Thyroidine, extract of th gland, in three-drop doses, twice the tongue.

Dolly, New York.—What can I use for skin on the hands.

Take Thyroidine, extract of th gland, in three-drop doses, three tin on the tongue.

Mrs. J. N. A., Canaseraga, N. Y.— please prescribe a remedy for flashes lowed by profuse perspiration, also ex vousness?

Take Cerebrine, extract of the bra drop doses, three times daily, on th Once or twice a week take a dose c lithic Salts. Buffalo Druggists.

G. N. G., Buffalo, N. Y.—Sta toms of kidney trouble. Cardine, the heart, is probably indicated.

W. T. PARKER, M. D.
Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACTS.
CEREBRINE, From the Brain. NERVELINE
From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, from the Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE.
Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drachms $1.00

GASTRINE.
A new and valuable remedy for dyspepsia. $1.00

FEBRICIDE PILLS
For MALARIAL AFFECTIONS, NEURALGIA and HEADACHE.

NATHROLITHIC SALTS
For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of the Liver and Inaction of the Liver,

At all Druggists, or from
COLUMBIA CHEMICAL CO.
Send for Literature. (176) Washington, D.C.

WONDER CABINET FREE
Puzzle, Fairy Bottle, Pocket
Wire Puzzle, Spirit Photo
Send Free a illustrated catalogue stamps for Mfr. for postage.
INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt

...igians in trying to get away from their ...mi cottages are shot down by the ...shi-azouks, or knocked on the head by
...rkish police. The unfortunate Christians
...e in terror of their lives, and I hear they
...e not allowed to worship in peace."

..."Why not?" asked a boy who had been
...attentive listener, "are they Stundists?"

...It was an awkward question, but
...rgei arried it.

..."No 'go'oubtchick,' but they have a
...rfect right to worship God as they think
...although the rulers of the country are
...a different faith. The Turks are Mo-
...mans."

..."Th so have we a right," said the boy
...th flushed cheeks. "Why are we not al-
...wed to worship God as we think fit?
...ur rulers are not Mohammedans."

..."Bo boy, don't be rash," broke in the ...w voice of the boy's mother; "these are
...tters you don't understand."

..."An will Panitch also go to the war?"
...ked assily Pavlitch. "Will he also
...e a hare in this war of freedom? If ...itch goes I will go also." Vassily was ...oldman, and everyone smiled at his
...ern and enthusiasm.

..."Yes replied Sergei, "my regiment is
...ered to the front, and we have come
...wn he for a few days while the men
...get ng ready. We'll join them in Kief
...in two."

..."Tell s how war was declared," broke
...he acher's quiet voice.

...e resumed—

..."Well ur Lord the Emperor tried by every
...ans his power to obtain justice and ...ty f the Bulgarians, and for the other
...istia s under the rule of the Turks, but ...as a no use. Things got worse instead
...ette The whole of Russia began talk-
...ang ot wild with rage that people of
...sam faith as themselves should be so
...lly led by Mohammedans."

...He h wanted to speak again, but was
...ced by his mother. Everyone knew,
...ever what he would say.

...Andrio our Lord the Emperor, God
...t h, was moved to declare war
...gainst he Turks, and everybody in Pet-
...rgrad Moscow and the town is mad
...delight. I don't suppose very many ...peasants know yet awhile, although ...will have to do all the fighting. Still ...while a glorious war if any war can
...orify, and I for one pray God bless the ...Czar. God bless the Czar's armies."

..."God ess him! God bless him!" mur-
...red the Stundists in unison and with
...upl eir eyes.

...It was as all startling news for the vil-
...ge, a olt out of the blue. They hated
...was posed to Christ's teachings. They ...ew hat nations ought to and could ...settle th disputes without appealing to ...arbitration of the sword. They knew ...what war meant of loss and misery to
...themselv. Some of their young men ...knew would be probably drafted into
...the ent ordered to the front; some of ...them would perhaps die awful deaths, and
...the people at home would mourn them for
...years. at never think there was any glory
...in the dth of their boys to compensate
...them for heir loss; the fields would not be ...tilled as they ought to be; there would
...be strife and unrest among the people;
...and ey would be the cruel and vindictive
...outrages ways cultivated by a nation at ...war. The were the simple considerations
...that took hold of their minds, and that ...they all over together.

...Sergei's mother came in with the "sam-
...ovar." ergei was taking his leave, but
...they induce him to stay and take a ...cup of , so the little gathering, instead
...of which Mikhail to resume his interrupt...ed talk stood around in groups, some of ...them with a glass of tea in one hand and a ...cigar in the other. They discussed
...the coming war, feeling sad and heavy-
...hearted.

...They d come to the conclusion that ...their ght almost be called a just one,
...that they would be right in doing with
...the might all that they could in defense of ...their Christian brethern in Bulgaria, when
...they d hammering at the door startled them.
...They s sudden and unexpected that a ...cry ar eamed.

..."Who there?" demanded Mikhail.

..."Ivan iadnik.' Open in the Emperor's
...name! at do you mean by crowding to...gether e at this time of the morning?
...Hey!"

...Mikha opened the door and a burly,
...red-h an, who had evidently been ...drinking leep, staggered in, followed by
...the tarsha, or village elder.

"So you thought I was gone, did you? I got back, you see, just in time. Praying again in unlawful hours and in unlicensed houses. This is honoring God and the Czar, eh? Ha, ha! Take that." He struck Mikhail a heavy blow between the eyes, and the young man staggered back to the wall.

The cowed peasants rushed out in a tumult crying and terror-stricken, children and their parents tumbling over one another in the narrow doorway. The two ruffians then began to fling the benches, chairs, and crockery out of the window and door—Mikhail and his mother in vain imploring them to desist. When they had sufficiently wreaked their vengeance, the two executive officers reeled out of the house, roaring with laughter at the memory of the terror-stricken faces of the Stundists.

When they were gone Mikhail and his mother collected the broken furniture and things, and patiently sought to put the house to rights again. "That's the fourth time," the old woman moaned, and buried her face in her apron. Mikhail watched the departing officers of the law.

(To be Continued.)

Good Causes Helped.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Bethesda Home for Friendless Women.

Previously ack'd.	$421 93
I H N, Elkhart, Ind.	1 00
R W Jones	1 00
E L, Conquest, N Y.	1 00
W A Allen	5 00
A J. Lancaster, N H	1 00
Mrs J S Godwin	1 00
Mrs A Ketcham	1 00
Etta DeWitt	2 00
Vada DeWitt	1 00
Ida M DeWitt	2 00
J W, Toledo, O	1 00
C L F, New York	1 00
Friends, Aspen, Colo	2 00
Total	$441.93

For Mrs. Bella Cook's Work.

Previously ack'd	$38 25
Mrs A A Fordham	2 00
Total	$40.25

For the Door of Hope.

Previously ack'd	$42 65
M S, Bloomingdale, Ga.	2 00
Total	$44.65

For Foreign Missions.

Previously ack'd	42 50
Dr and Mrs E M Johnson	75 00
Total	$117.50

For Dr. Faust's Hebrew-Christian Mission.

Previously ack'd	$12 00
J P, Brooklyn N Y.	4 00
R W Jones	1 00
Total	$17.00

For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Previously ack'd	$182 25
A C Baldwin	1 00
Clarence J Dorr	1 00
R W Jones	1 00
E E & I M S, Milford Centre, O	1 00
M D S, Balto, Md.	1 00
In His Name	5 00
James Smith	2 00
A mother, Lowell, Mass	1 00
James Joshua Haughton	2 00
Mrs Ira J Saxe	1 00
"Nobody cares," E Shelburne, Mass.	1 00
Sarah W Thomas	1 50
American, Louisville, Ky	1 00
J L Grant	1 00
C Filer	1 00
Friends, Brewster	2 00
J A B. Bridgewater, Mass	2 00
A R G Edwards	1 00
Total	$208.75

For Mrs. O.E. Stombaugh Dauphin Island.

Previously ack'd.	$10 00
Dr and Mrs E M Johnson	5 00
Total	$15.00

Mr. Terry's Y. M. C. A. Work among Lumbermen.

Previously ack'd	23 75
A daughter and sister, Oxford, Pa.	10
N Hungerford	50
C H H	1 00
Flora Berg and Dell Sacket	2 00
Mr and Mrs J W Godbold	2 00
"I H N, Ten," Oxford, Pa	2 00
Sub and wife, San Jacinto, Cal	3 00
Total	$34.35

For Mrs. Jamal's Training School, Jerusalem.

Previously ack'd	$416 00
In His Name	9 00
Dr and Mrs E M Johnson	15 00
Mrs M S Leonard	5 00
"Nobody cares"	1 00
Elizabeth Bainbridge	1 00
M H, Harlan	1 00
Total	$448.00

For Any Good Cause.

Previously ack'd	$55 10
Joy offering, Evansville, Ind	1 00
Mrs John A Moore	2 00
In His Name, Beverly	5 00
J A P, Haydenville, Mass	1 00
E L, Conquest, N Y.	1 00
John M Collins	50
M Browning	85
Total	$66.45

Additional Contributions For The Western Relief Fund.

F Pelle & friends	10 00
Friends in England	3 00
Total	$13.00

A Lady's Sleeve Is no Small Matter

IN THESE DAYS.

But it is more important still to keep the arm that is inside of it beautiful and healthy, and this can best be done by using

COPCO

TRADE MARK.

in the bath. Copco is the perfect soap. Price only five cents per cake. Ask for it at your dealers. Made only by

The N. K. Fairbank Company,

CHICAGO. NEW YORK. ST. LOUIS.

Consumption Cured.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE:

"As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies, and very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

(Rev'd) C. H. Spurgeon.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

FOR

Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis,

Acts like a charm in ordinary Coughs, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough. Send 25 cents for Book on Consumption, containing accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, or the Book will be sent free with trial bottle for $1.00. Larger sizes, $1.75, $3.75, $7.

GEO. T. CONGREVE,
367 Canal St., New York,
and London, England.

A Healthy, Clear Skin

Is not only a great comfort, but is a recognized point of beauty. We have thousands of letters saying it can be

Secured, Retained, By

using Comfort Powder. When used often, pimples and other inflammations disappear. Tan, Sunburn and Roughness from exposure at once relieved by

Comfort Powder

The Comfort Powder Co., Hartford, Ct. 25c. and 50c. a box.

All Druggists Sell It.

METAL WHEELS for your WAGONS.

Any size you want, 20 to 56 in. high. Tires 1 to 8 in. wide—hubs to fit any axle. Saves Cost many times in a season to have set of low wheels to fit your wagon for hauling grain, fodder, manure, hogs, &c. No resetting of tires. Cat'lg free. Address EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

All Skin Disorders

from simple Pimples to obstinate Eczema and Tetter can be quickly and permanently cured by the simple application of

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

It makes the skin soft, smooth and healthy, producing a clear and brilliant complexion.

50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.

JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., Phila., Pa.

"LINCOLN" Rim Latch Lock. 3-keyed. Bronze trimmings. A 1 finish. Price $1.00.
"JACKSON" 3-Lever Padlock. Best in the world for 25 cents. If not kept by your dealer, we will mail samples on receipt of price. Illus. Cat. Free. Enclose 2c. stamp for our new Steel Pocket Tool.
MILLER LOCK CO., Box F 25, Philadelphia, Pa.

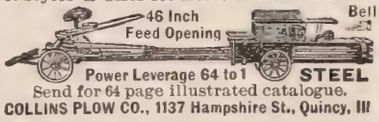
MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.

From New York A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS GEORGIA—FLORIDA Through Tickets Single and Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c., Georgia and Florida. Write for our 64 page Prospectus, mailed free.

C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power



Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.
COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill

SAGENDORPH'S PATENT SECTIONAL

STEEL CEILINGS and SIDE WALL FINISH.

Splendidly Adapted for Churches.

Catalogue, prices, and estimates, on application.
THE PENN IRON ROOFING & COR. CO., (Ltd.)
22d and Hamilton Sts., Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia, Pa.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS
Free Catalogue. Geo. R. Fuller, Box 2117, Rochester, N. Y.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Grov'ng. NO Cracking. Cleaning. Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Handmade Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty.

KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego, N. Y.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,

F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

TO EVANGELIZE THE WORLD.†

THE Church's membership and wealth are sufficient to furnish and maintain an army of missionaries of such numbers as to provide a missionary for every two thousand persons in non-Christian lands. The Church's ability to do this is undoubted, but the probability of its doing it is scarcely conceivable. The undertaking to furnish the one billion people in non-Christian lands with even one-third as large a proportionate force of missionaries, including women and other lay agents, as there are ordained ministers in the United States calls for an army of five hundred thousand, or one in eighty of the forty million evangelical communicants of Christendom. After one hundred years' agitation of the foreign mission cause, we are furnishing only about ten thousand, or one in four thousand of the Church's membership for its foreign work. We are certainly not likely to increase the force fifty-fold within a generation or even a century. Again, the financial outlay involved in the support of so vast a force would exceed six hundred millions annually, or upward of twelve hundred dollars a year per missionary. While this vast sum is far within the Church's resources, it so far exceeds its present annual contributions as to leave little doubt as to the response that would be made to such a demand. It was only with the greatest difficulty that the nearly forty million church members in Europe and America were persuaded to dole out the pittance of fourteen million dollars for the support of foreign work for 1894—less than thirty-five cents per capita for a year; less than one mill a day.

Inasmuch as it is clearly beyond the bounds of probability that the church will furnish the rank and file of an army of foreign missionaries adequate to the speedy preaching and teaching of the gospel to every creature, it is probable that it can be relied upon for a force of at least thirty thousand leaders for the enterprise. These leaders, wisely distributed, would afford a station manned by a half-dozen missionaries at the centre of every group of two hundred thousand people; and there is no doubt that this force, assisted by the newly Christianized people associated with it, can fully explain to every creature the meaning of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. Nor can the financial outlay involved in supporting this force be considered an insuperable obstacle. So far from being extravagant, it is not even generous. Thirty thousand missionaries can be supported at a cost of thirty-six millions of dollars annually—less than ninety cents a year, or a quarter of a cent a day, from each church member. If, therefore, eighty church members may not be expected to send and support one of their number at a cost of five cents a day, surely every group of thirteen hundred may be looked to for the support of one of their number at a cost of a quarter of a cent a day each. This really seems to be the only solution to the problem. If it is only one of many solutions, it deserves candid investigation; if it is the only solution, it demands the most prayerful consideration of every student of missionary problems, of every foreign missionary, of every financial supporter of the missionary cause, of every one who ever prays, "Thy kingdom come."

[illegible] a move[illegible] evangelization, by Luther D. Wishard. Pp. 97; cloth [illegible] Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, and Toronto, publishers.

New Cure for Kidneys and Bladder.

We are glad to announce to sufferers from [illegible] and Bladder troubles, that the eminent [illegible] Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., has announced a positive cure for these maladies. Many [illegible] and we advise [illegible] Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, who will send you treatment free by mail postpaid. It costs you nothing.

See to it that your blood is purified and enriched by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Then you will not be troubled with [illegible] and boils. Try it.

AT HIS TABLE.

BREAK the loaf with trembling finger,
Round the cross let memory linger;
Oh, my soul, with deep emotion
View this proof of Christ's devotion.

Drink the cup with feelings saddened,
Drink it, too, with spirit gladdened;
Sad because the Lord hath sorrowed,
Glad because of hope thus borrowed.

Do you smile, be rather careful
That the soul be deeply prayerful;
Pray for sins you have committed,
Pray that they may be remitted.

By this bond of sacred union,
Hold with Christ a sweet communion;
Never break this tie asunder,
Which e'en makes the angels wonder.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Summer Note Book, a dainty, richly illustrated little volume describing the numerous summer resorts that may be reached by the Michigan Central Railroad and the means adopted by the management of the road to insure the safety, comfort and enjoyment of its patrons. Many extracts from prominent journals are added, testifying to the care and courtesy and general good service rendered by the Michigan Central to all who travel over its lines. May be procured at the Depots of the Road at Detroit and Chicago, or of Mr. W. H. Underwood, Eastern Passenger Agent, Buffalo, N. Y.

You don't know how good a lamp you have got, unless you use the right chimney on it. Consult the "Index to Chimneys"—free.

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Pearl-glass and pearl-top chimneys last as a teacup lasts.

Corticelli
Lace Embroidery.

The materials for this work are Corticelli Lace Embroidery Silk, size No. 500 and Honiton braid; these are applied to fine bleached linen in simple but pretty designs, which give the work popularity. "Florence Home Needlework" for 1895, which is now ready, explains the subject fully. The other subjects are Mosaic Embroidery (new designs), Crochet and Correct Colors for Flowers, embroidered with Corticelli Wash Silk.

Send 6 cents, mentioning year, and we will mail you the book; 96 pages, 66 illustrations.

NONOTUCK SILK CO., FLORENCE, MASS.

Walter Baker & Co. Limited,

The Largest Manufacturers of
PURE, HIGH GRADE
COCOAS and CHOCOLATES
On this Continent, have received
HIGHEST AWARDS
from the great
Industrial and Food
EXPOSITIONS
IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Caution: In view of the many imitations of the labels and wrappers on our goods, consumers should make sure that our place of manufacture, namely, Dorchester, Mass. is printed on each package.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD. DORCHESTER, MASS.

B&H LAMPS

Most desirable and satisfactory ever made. Ask your dealer for them and send for giving more information about them and our Gas and Electric Fixtures, Art Metal Goods, &c.

Our Little Book, 5

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO.
MERIDEN, CONN.
New York. Boston. Chicago. Phila.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, China Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is a pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Guarantee Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalogue.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illustrated Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We advise you to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the supply.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one-quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INCOMES—BIG PREMIUMS, &C. C. H. The Great American Tea Co. Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$9.00 Buy the Oxford Improved SINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 30 days' trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our LARGE FREE CATALOGUE. Oxford Mdse. Co., 342 Wabash Av. Chicago

NEW MUSIC.

GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN, and STEBBINS. Now being used by MR. MOODY in Northfield Summer Conventions. Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts.

HIGHEST PRAISE. For Sabbath Schools. By W. A. OGDEN. $30 per 100; Sample Copy, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy
By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S. London.
D. G. LONG & CO., 1613 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
"Every one should read this little book."—Athenæum

Delicate Cake

easily removed without breaking Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 10c. ea. Circulars free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6 St., Bath, N.Y.

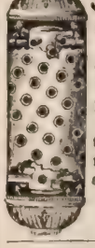
Ideal Spring Beds Our booklet, "Wide awake hints about sleep," illustrating and describing them together with an up-to-date pocket map of your State, sent on receipt of three two-cent stamps.

Foster Bros. M'f'g Co., Clay St., Utica, N. Y.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O. Begins 71st year Sept. 2. Board, tuition, Furnished room, & book, $2.80 to 3 a week; 8 courses; no saloons. Cheap, safe. Largest attendance yet. Catalog free. W. A. WILLIAMS, D.D., Pres.

LADY AGENTS WANTED TO SELL CORSETS DIRECT FROM FACTORY.
OHIO CORSET CO., CINCINNATI, O.

SAVE ⅓ YOUR GAS



By using our (stove pipe) ADIATOR With its 120 Cross T's, ONE stove or furnace does work TWO. Drop postal for [illegible] prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR, the first order from each n[illegible] filled at WHOLESALE price. [illegible] an agency. Write at once

ROCHESTER RADIATOR [illegible]
15 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N.

1895 High Grade Bicycles

Shipped C.O.D. to dealers at $100 $85 $65 $20

Latest models, wood or steel rims; pneumatic to 30 lbs.; all styles and prices. Large illustrated Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St.

FEATHERBONE

FOR WAISTS, SLEEVES [illegible]

Instruction free. Call at our [illegible] way, New York, 185 Wabash av., [illegible] st., Boston; 102 North Charles st., Baltimore; Chestnut st., Philadelphia. Send 2c. for Sample Skirt Bone.

Warren Featherbone Co., Three Oaks, Mich.

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP

For the Skin, Scalp and Complexion. [illegible] 20 years experience treating the skin by dermatology with every cake. Dr. John H. Woodbury, Dermatologist, N. Y. City. Send 10c. for sample soap and [illegible]

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send an elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect [illegible] mense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover [illegible] R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT St., N. Y.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE

The Family Wash Blue. ALWAYS [illegible]
For Sale by Grocers.
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 N. 2d [illegible]

MURDERED MISSIONARIES.

Seeking News from Shanghai of the Massacre of English Missionaries in China.

DISTRESSING cable reports were received on Aug. 3d, of an attack on English missionaries which had occurred on July 31, at Kucheng, in the Province of Kansu-Sinkiang, China. The news had been delayed in reaching Shanghai and was in a mutilated state when it did arrive. But there is only too strong reason for believing that at least ten lives have been sacrificed. Of these were four English ladies connected with the Zenana Mission, Dr. and Mrs. Stewart, of the Church Missionary Society, two lady missionaries of the same Society, and two children of Dr. and Mrs. Stewart. It was at first reported that the victims included Miss Hartwell, of Dover, N. H., who was with M. C. Wilcox and Dr. Gregory, who are at the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Kucheng, but a later cablegram gave assurances of her safety. No details are at hand as to the time of writing of the cause of the massacre.

The Shanghai dispatch says that the Chinese mandarins attribute the crime to the work of secret societies, but the Europeans openly regard their charge as an evasion, and believe that the authorities connived at the outrage. The dispatch received by the "London Times" says that the missionary sanitarium at Whasang, near Kucheng, was attacked and five women were killed, and two women and two children were wounded. Some others are missing. Later reports, the dispatch adds, "state that ten persons were killed. The Rev. Dr. Stewart and his wife and one child were burned to death in their house. Miss Marshall, and two Misses Saunders, the two Misses Gidon and Miss Newcombe were murdered with spears and swords. Miss Codrington was seriously wounded about the head. The experiences of the survivors were terrible. They say that death was the least part of the sufferings of the butchered women."

The indignation in Shanghai is intense. Nevertheless, the many war-ships in the harbor are idle. A mass-meeting has been arranged to protest against the lack of energy on the part of the authorities and to urge that reparation be made and that the guilty persons be punished.

Dr. S. L. Baldwin, of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society, says that Kucheng is a city of about forty or fifty thousand inhabitants. The place is only accessible by sedan chairs and after a long ride of about ninety miles from Foo Chow. To reach it you go by boat to a point sixty miles distant, Chui Kau, from which place you take the sedan chairs. Then the trip over mountain ranges that are wild, rocky and exceedingly dangerous. The missions of the English and of the M. E. Church are both located on the outskirts of the city and about half a mile apart.

An English journal has received a dispatch from Hong Kong, saying that the mob set fire to the house of the missionaries and killed eight women, one child and the husband of one of the women. Several Christians were wounded, two of them probably fatally. All the foreigners who were killed were British, the Americans escaping. The members of the attacking party belonged to a Chinese sect called the Vegetarian Society. The outrage was entirely unprovoked. The Rev. H. S. Phillips of the English Church Missionary Society, witnessed the atrocities at Whasang, but was powerless to prevent them. The rioters, who numbered fifty, were led by a man carrying a red flag. It seems that the massacre was carefully planned. The same dispatch states that the American mission at Shashi, near Hankow, on the Yang-tse-Kiang River, has been destroyed and its former occupants are fugitives.

If you Lack Energy
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It vitalizes the nerves, helps digestion, feeds the brain, makes life worth living. It is a medicine, a tonic and a delicious beverage.

An Asthma Cure at Last.
European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo River, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Aug. 4, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends: "Mother," Keene, N. H. That her only son and his wife may be brought to Christ.——M. S. G., Jesus: Dale, Va., for a poor widow who is training her seven children under great difficulty, in habits of [illegible] poverty, but who does not know what it is to have them for Christ: also for a gifted young lawyer far from his boyhood's home, who lacks the one thing needful.——"One who Believes," on behalf of a husband and three children for whose conversion she has long been praying: also, for a dear friend whose way seems hedged up, that God would mercifully give guidance and protection.——A. O., Ohio, that God's converting grace might reach a hardened, impenitent man; also, for the salvation of a niece.——"Subscriber," S. Dak. That a wicked man may be converted, and that those depending on him may be preserved from going the downward road.——"Mother," St. Louis, Mo. That an erring son may be brought to Christ.——"Anxious Mother," Jackson, That a son who recently lost his wife, and in his trouble has become addicted to drink, may no longer be a backslider, but turn to God for comfort and forgiveness.——"Anxious Mother," Doylestown, that her husband, in danger of becoming a confirmed drunkard, may be saved, and that her six little ones may grow up to love the Lord.——"One who wishes," etc., Battle Creek, Mich., for her aged husband who does not believe in religion.——"Subscriber," Lydia, O., that the eyes of a loved one may be opened to the error of his ways, and that he may be saved from a drunkard's grave.——"Old Subscriber," that her husband may be saved from a besetting sin, and be brought back to the Saviour, whom he has forsaken.——"Reader," Nevada City, for the conversion of a man upwards of seventy years old, who has no concern for his own salvation; also that two beloved little girls may be led to give their hearts to Christ.——"A Mother," Manchester, Iowa, that her husband may be a more devoted Christian, and her children may be saved.——H. R. B., Asbury Park, N. J., for the conversion of husband and son.——"Anxious Mother," on behalf of a son exposed to many temptations, and of a weak, yielding nature, that God would mercifully deliver him and make him his own child.——"Reader," Rockford, Ill., for the reclamation and salvation of an intemperate son.——C. B., Allegheny, Pa., for the conversion of a sister-in-law.——"Anxious One," that God would save husband, father, and brother, taking away their desire for intoxicating liquor and saving their souls.——Believer, Williamsport, Pa., for the conversion of a man who was once a professing Christian, but has now become a slave of drink.

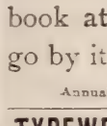
For the Restoration of Health. Reader, Quitsnan, Miss., for the recovery of a dear mother now prostrate with fever.——Subscriber, S. Dak., that wonted health may be restored.——A. N. A., Jamaica Plain, Mass., for recovery from a long prostrating illness.——T. J. S., Washington, D. C., who has been a sufferer now for forty weeks, that God would restore her health if it be his will.——B. A. B., Monona, Ia., for some relief from the agony of neuralgia that is wearing life away.——N. B., a sufferer for two years, asks prayer for recovery that she may not continue a useless burden on kind friends.——M. H. P., Art., Ind., who, with her mother, is heavily afflicted, that God would restore both of them to health and strength.——Constant Reader, Dryden, N. Y., that a sister suffering under mental derangement may recover her reason.——H. B. T., Walter, Ala., that God would recover him from a protracted illness.

For Special Blessings. "Believer," etc. That a just man anxious to pay his debts honestly, may succeed in disposing of property to obtain the necessary funds.——"One who wishes to be saved," that God would mercifully give the Holy Spirit to enlighten and convert.——A. W. K., Nunda, N. Y. That a grievous financial burden may be lifted and a way opened to an honest livelihood.——"One who believes in prayer, and is anxious to serve the Lord," that timidity and backwardness may no longer obstruct the efforts hitherto made.——"One in Trouble," that God would remind some who are acting unkindly of past obligations, and lead them to open their doors to the homeless.——"Interested Subscriber," Hagerstown, Md., that God would give grace to those whose prayers he answers to make public confession of his loving kindness.——H. R. B., Asbury Park, N. J., that God would send the financial help so urgently needed.

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
45 Liberty st., New York, sells all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat. free.

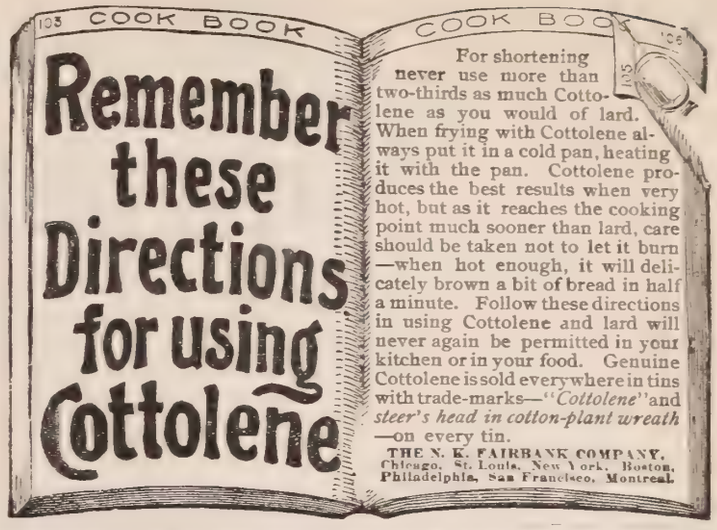


CARD PRINTER FREE
Sets any name in one minute; prints fine cards as beautiful as you can make money with it. A perfect pretty type, also Indelible Ink Type Holder, Pads and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker; worth $1.00. Sample mailed FREE for 10c. stamps for postage on cuffs; and large catalogue of 1000 Bargains.
R. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

WALL PAPER.
Samples free from largest Wall Paper concern in U.S.
KAYSER & ALLMAN 932-934 Market St. 418 Arch St. Philada.

SICK HEADACHE AND BILLIOUS ATTACKS.
My remedy will absolutely and permanently eradicate the disposition to them from the system. Simple, harmless, and never fails. Send 25c. for a package.
HENRY MOSS, 2d and Main Sts., Kansas City, Mo.

GET Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate Pure, wholesome, convenient—made in a jiffy—NO BOILING.



108 COOK BOOK
COOK BOOK 108
Remember these Directions for using Cottolene
For shortening never use more than two-thirds as much Cottolene as you would of lard. When frying with Cottolene always put it in a cold pan, heating it with the pan. Cottolene produces the best results when very hot, but as it reaches the cooking point much sooner than lard, care should be taken not to let it burn—when hot enough, it will delicately brown a bit of bread in half a minute. Follow these directions in using Cottolene and lard will never again be permitted in your kitchen or in your food. Genuine Cottolene is sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2

In the Preparation of Artificial Food for Infants.

Value of this Water in Diseases Incident to Teething.

Hunter McGuire, M. D., LL. D., President and Professor of Clinical Surgery, University College of Medicine, Richmond, Va., says:

"For some time I have been using BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in the preparation of artificial food for infants. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and it is impossible to get a wet nurse. One serious objection, along with many others, to cow's milk, is its acidity. Human milk is always alkaline, but cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many babies, and lime water is often added to this milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of lime water is hurtful to digestion, and last summer, when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal derangement, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use No. 2 BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in preparing the food, with immediate and continued good results. The water was added until the milk lost its acidity and was neutral or alkaline."

Dr. John H. Tucker, Henderson, N. C., President of the State Medical Society of North Carolina, referring to Spring No. 1:

"I have observed marked beneficial results from BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 1, in the disorders of Teething Infants. I have sent many patients of this class to the Springs for the use of this water and, without exception, they have returned to me cured or greatly benefited."

This water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

Springs Open for Guests from June 15th to October 1st.

Thomas F. Goode, Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.
Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.
They never fail. Read this testimonial
MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 18 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic." Newport, R.I.
J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N.Y.

EVERY WOMAN
Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use-Traveling etc: Invaluable and Indispensable: Soft, Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for Circulars; agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO., 56 Broadway, New York.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and inferring pressure that retains, protects, relieves & CURES RUPTURE
No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. 100's of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.
Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO.,
27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE
WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

WATCHES, GUNS. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS & CO., 62 Fulton street New York. Mention The Christian Herald.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION
MODENE
AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and to scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERSEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Circulars advertisements sent.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED.
MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A.
Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations.
You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.

We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

"The more you say the less people remember," One word with you, SAPOLIO

Pears'

Pears' soap takes care of the skin, and the skin takes care of the rest of us.

There are plenty of other soaps, but none without alkali.

The Cranks of a Columbia Bicycle

"1896 Machine in 1895."

differ from all other bicycle cranks. Easy to take off, easy to clean bearings, easy to put back. No nuts or bolts to work loose or catch trousers.

Look like one piece; are one piece mechanically.

One of the many improvements that maintain Columbia Standard.

GET THE NEAREST AGENT TO EXPLAIN.

POPE MANUFACTURING CO.
GENERAL OFFICE AND FACTORIES, HARTFORD, CONN.
BRANCH OFFICES:
BOSTON, NEW YORK, CHICAGO, PROVIDENCE, PHILADELPHIA
BUFFALO, BROOKLYN, BALTIMORE, WASHINGTON, SAN FRANCISCO

Cuticura

THE GREAT

SKIN CURE

Works wonders in curing torturing, disfiguring diseases of the skin, scalp, and blood, and especially baby humours.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

A Fob For You.

A heavy silk fob, with a warranted gold-plated buckle. We will mail it to you on receipt of ten cents, in order to make known to you, through a book that goes with the fob, The Harris Wire Buckle Suspenders, Harris Garter and other

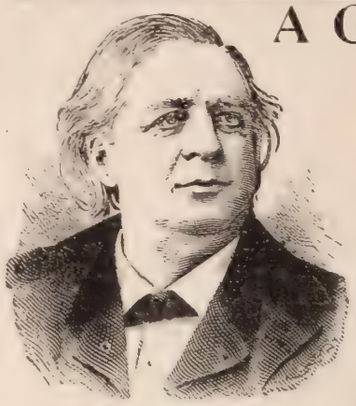
WIRE BUCKLE SUSPENDER CO., Williamsport, Pa.

Harris Patents

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's
BAKING POWDER

Cooks like it. It's sure to make cake light and dainty.
Recipe book free. Send stamp and address. Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York



HENRY WARD BEECHER.

A Great Bargain.

$3.75 FOR $1.7[illegible]

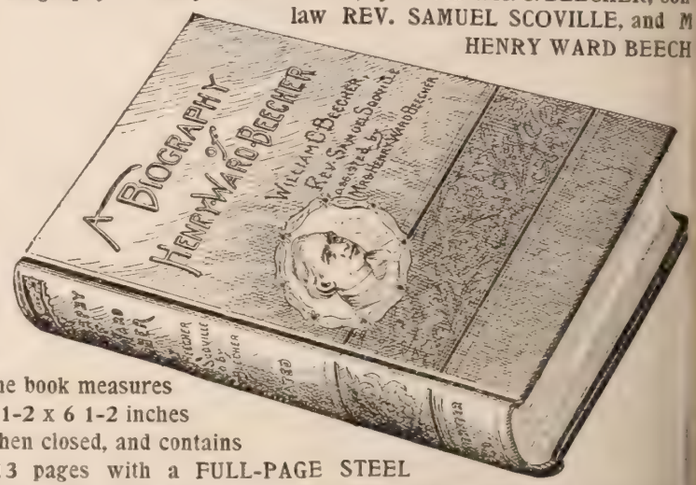
So many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN H[illegible] have requested us to make another special offer of the magnificent

Biography of Henry Ward Beecher,

that we have concluded to offer the balance of our stock of this interesting Life of the Great Preacher (only a few hundred copies), at

—HALF-PRICE.—

A Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, by his son WM. C. BEECHER; son-in-law REV. SAMUEL SCOVILLE, and MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER.



The book measures
9 1-2 x 6 1-2 inches
when closed, and contains
713 pages with a FULL-PAGE STEEL
PORTRAIT of HENRY WARD BEECHER and the following Illustrations:

1. Anvil and Oak Stump.
2. Foote Coat-of-Arms.
3. Church in which Lyman Beecher preached, in East Hampton, L. I.
4. Beecher Residence at Litchfield.
5. Room in which Mr. Beecher was born.
6. Elms and Well which mark the Site of the Beecher House in Litchfield.
7. Facsimile of the first Letter of Mr. Beecher.
8. Ingersoll House.
9. Stairs in Catharine Beecher's House in Hartford.
10. Mr. Beecher at the time of his Marriage.
11. Mrs. Beecher at the time of her Marriage.
12. Church at Indianapolis.
13. Mr. Beecher's House at Indianapolis.
14. Mr. Beecher and his Father at time of Call to Brooklyn.
15. Pinky's Freedom-Ring.
16. Mr. Beecher in 1850.
17. Mr. Beecher at the close of the War.
18. Mr. Beecher and his Sister, Mrs. H. E. B[illegible]
19. Cottage at Peekskill.
20. Old Apples-Tree.
21. Mr. Beecher on his Farm.
22. House at Peekskill.
23. Hall in New House at Peekskill.
24. Mr. and Mrs. Beecher at the time of Visit to England in 1886.
25. Lying in State in Plymouth Church.

Is beautifully printed on fine book paper, in large, clear type and bound in Seal Leather.

So many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have taken advantage of the special price offered on these books that the various styles of binding are all sold out except SEAL LEATHER. This is a beautifully bound book, with marbleized edges and has sold heretofore for $3.75.

Special Offer.

Send us $1.75, together with 25 cts. for expressage and we will send the Book at once, PREPAID.

EVERY ONE PURCHASING THE BOOK IS DELIGHTED WITH IT

Mrs. J. Wrigley, Elmira, N. Y.: Mr. Beecher's Biography came duly at hand. I am very much pleased with it, and think it's really worth the full price.

Mrs. S. J. Davis, Rochester, N. Y.: Received the book of Henry Ward Beecher; was very much pleased with it. It came nicely, and I am very much obliged.

Mrs. Henry Stringham, Crum Elbow, N. Y.: "Please accept our sincere thanks for the promptness with which you forwarded the Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, in response to our order. It was received in good condition, and we are much pleased with it."

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest Express office.

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

ONLY 99c

FORMERLY SOLD FOR $9

FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD.

[illegible] to introduce our goods in a manner that will [illegible] the World's Fair trade by [illegible] SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GILT PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing a head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1892 and reading "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, reading one of the finest souvenir spoons ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00 per set. Our offer for a limited time only is ONLY 99 CENTS. Send in cheerful pleasing manner, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange. Or directing C.O.D. to be accepted. Postal Notes or currency. Money cheerfully refunded if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5,152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS

and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 200 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A Grade, $16. Write to-day." "A Grade, $60. Write to-[illegible]

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LUME 18. COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH NUMBER 34.

V. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 21, 1895.

PRICE 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

RESCUING THE WANDERERS.

T Wonderful Work Done by the Central Union Mission, at Washington, D.C., in the Rescue of the Lost—The Mission and the Workers.

MAJOR GEO. A. HILTON.

CHAIRMAN E. D. BAILEY.

WHATEVER may be the tastes and peculiarities of a visitor to the National Capital, he will find in Washington something to please and interest him. Whether he delights in politics, in his- . in art, or in some other of the many fi s to which he is attracted by natural l lection, education or association, \shington affords gratification in his pe- r field. It is fitting therefore that the m . in whose life religion occupies the c place, should also find in Washington s thing that will fill his soul with joy a stimulate him to emulation in his own n aborhood. He will certainly find this it visits the great building in Louisiana a ue in which the Central Union Mission nights home. Dr. Louis Klopsch, the pro- pr of this journal, spent some time th during a recent visit to Washington, ar was astonished at the energy, devo- ti wonderful organization and conse- crated Christian self-sacrifice that he witnessed there. The scene and the work are truly phenomena that should interest the student of human nature. There are meetings in which the ruined gambler, the roue, the drunkard, and even the convict may be seen. Audiences in which the miserable victims of almost every kind of moral leprosy are represented. Later on, about midnight, there will be another meeting for those victims of vice who cower in hiding in the day, and riot in the night. Going from one person to another, listening to stories of sin and sorrow and shame, are sympathetic men who not only listen to the sorrowful tale, but tell the victim how he may recover himself and pour into his ear encouragement and assurance of victory. It is Christ-like work this of raising the fallen and speaking peace to the troubled. The Master delighted in it, and these men follow in his footsteps. Nor do they wait to be sought. There are some who during the evening have been out on excursions to various parts of the city, in a Gospel Wagon, in which is an organ; there has been singing of Gospel songs, and they have been giving the Gospel invitation to the crowds who gather around the strange vehicle, from the crowded alleys and tenement houses, and from the parks and loafing places of the city. They lead busy lives, these men, who thus labor in Christ's own way. The day is occupied with business of one kind or another, requiring their best thought and their close attention. Some hold responsible positions in the civil service, others are in banks and stores; they are cultured, highly educated men, respected and honored by their associates for their intelligence and efficiency. When the hour for quitting work comes, a thousand

THE CENTRAL UNION MISSION'S GOSPEL WAGON — MR. GEO. W. WHEELER.

(Continued on page 541.)

COMFORT.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Revelation 7 : 17.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

RIDING across a Western prairie, wild flowers up to the hub of the carriage wheel, and while a long distance from any shelter, there came a sudden shower, and while the rain was falling in torrents, the sun was shining as brightly as I ever saw it shine; and I thought, What a beautiful spectacle this is! So the tears of the Bible are not midnight storm, but rain on pansied prairies in God's sweet and golden sunlight. You remember that bottle which David labeled as containing tears, and Mary's tears, and Paul's tears, and Christ's tears, and the harvest of joy that is to spring from the sowing of tears. God mixes them. God rounds them. God shows them where to fall. God exhales them. A census is taken of them, and there is a record as to the moment when they are born, and as to the place of their grave.

Tears of bad men are not kept. Alexander, in his sorrow, had the hair clipped from his horses and mules, and made a great ado about his grief; but in all the vases of heaven there is not one of Alexander's tears. Alas! me! they are falling all the time. In summer, you sometimes hear the growling thunder, and you see there is a storm miles away; but you know from the drift of the clouds that it will not come anywhere near you. So, though it may be all bright around about you, there is a shower of trouble somewhere all the time. Tears! Tears!

What is the use of them, anyhow? Why not substitute laughter? Why not make this a world where all the people are well, and eternal strangers to pain and aches? What is the use of an eastern storm when we might have a perpetual nor'wester? Why, when a family is put together, not have them all stay, or if they must be transplanted to make other homes, then have them all live?—the family record telling a story of marriages and births, but of no deaths. Why not have the harvests [illegible] Why the hard pillow, the hard crust, the hard struggle? It is easy enough to explain a smile, or a success, or a congratulation; but, come now, and bring all you dictionaries and all your philosophies and all your religions, and help me explain a tear. A chemist will tell you that it is made up of salt and lime and other component parts; but he misses the best ingredients—the acid of a soured life, the viperine sting of a bitter memory, the fragments of a broken heart. I will tell you what a tear is: it is agony in solution. Hear then, while I discourse of the uses of trouble.

First. It is the design of trouble to keep this world from being too attractive. Sometimes [illegible] If it were not for trouble this world would be a good enough heaven for me. You and I would be willing to take a lease of this life for a hundred million years if there were no trouble. The earth cushioned and upholstered and pillared and chandeliered with such expense, no [illegible]

We would say: "Let well enough alone. If you want to die and have your body disintegrated in the dust, and your soul go out on a celestial adventure, then you can go, but this world is good enough for me!" You might as well go to a man who has just entered the Louvre at Paris, and tell him to hasten off to the picture-galleries of Venice or Florence. "Why," he would say, "What is the use of my going there? There are Rembrandts and Rubens and Raphaels here that I haven't looked at yet." No man wants to go out of this world, or out of any house, until he has a better house. To cure this wish to stay here, God must somehow create a disgust for our surroundings. How shall he do it? He cannot afford to deface his horizon, or to tear off a fiery panel from the sunset, or to subtract an anther from the water-lily, or to banish the pungent aroma from the mignonette, or to drag the robes of the morning in mire. You cannot expect a Christopher Wren to mar his own St. Paul's cathedral, or a Michael Angelo to dash out his own "Last Judgment," or a Handel to discord his "Israel in Egypt," and you cannot expect God to spoil the architecture and music of his own world. How, then, are we to be made willing to leave? Here is where trouble comes in.

After a man has had a good deal of trouble, he says: "Well, I am ready to go. If there is a house somewhere whose roof doesn't leak, I would like to live there. If there is an atmosphere somewhere that does not distress the lungs, I would like to breathe it.

If there is a society somewhere where there is no tittle-tattle, I would like to live there. If there is a home circle somewhere where I can find my lost friends, I would like to go there." He used to read the first part of the Bible chiefly, now he reads the last part of the Bible chiefly. Why has he changed Genesis for Revelation? Ah! he used to be anxious chiefly to know how this world was made, and all about its geological construction. Now he is chiefly anxious to know how the next world was made, and how it looks, and who live there, and how they dress. He reads Revelation ten times now where he reads Genesis once. The old story, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," does not thrill him half as much as the other story, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." The old man's hand trembles as he turns over this apocalyptic leaf, and he has to take out his handkerchief to wipe his spectacles. That book of Revelation is a prospectus now of the country into which he is soon to immigrate; the country in which he has lots already laid out, and avenues opened, and mansions built.

Yet there are people here to whom this world is brighter than heaven. Well, dear souls, I do not blame you. It is natural. But after awhile you will be ready to go. It was not until Job had been worn out with bereavements that he wanted to see God. It was not until the prodigal got tired of living among the hogs that he wanted to go to his Father's house. It is the ministry of trouble to make this world worth less and heaven worth more.

Again, it is the use of trouble to make us feel our dependence upon God. Men think that they can do anything until God shows them they can do nothing at all. We lay our great plans, and we like to execute them. It looks big. God comes and takes us down. As Prometheus was assaulted by his enemy, when the lance struck him it opened a great swelling that had threatened his death, and he got well. So it is the arrow of trouble that lets out great swellings of pride. We never feel our dependence upon God until we get trouble. I was riding with my little child along the road, and she asked if she might drive. I said, "Certainly." I handed over the reins to her, and I had to admire the glee with which she drove. But after awhile we met a team and we had to turn out. The road was narrow, and it was sheer down on both sides. She handed the reins over to me, and said, "I think you had better take charge of the horse." So we are all children; and on this road of life we like to drive. It gives one such an appearance of superiority and power. It looks big. But after a while we meet some obstacle, and we have to turn out, and the road is narrow, and it is sheer down on both sides; and then we are willing that God should take the reins and drive. Ah! my friends, we get upset so often because we do not hand over the reins soon enough.

After a man has had trouble, prayer is with him a taking hold of the arm of God and crying out for help. I have heard earnest prayers on two or three occasions that I remember. Once, on the Cincinnati express train, going at forty miles the hour, the train jumped the track, and we were near a chasm eighty feet deep; and the men who, a few minutes before, had been swearing and blaspheming God, began to pull and jerk at the bell rope, and got up on the backs of the seats, and cried out, "Oh God, save us!" There was another time, about eight hundred miles out at sea, on a foundering steamer, after the last lifeboat had been split finer than kindlingwood. They prayed then. Why is it you so often hear people, in reciting the last experience of some friend, say, "He made the most beautiful prayer I ever heard?" What makes it beautiful? It is the earnestness of it. Oh! I tell you, a man is in earnest when his stripped and naked soul wades out in the soundless, shoreless, bottomless ocean of eternity.

It is trouble, my friends, that makes us feel our dependence upon God. We do not know our own weakness or God's strength until the last plank breaks. It is contemptible in us when there is nothing else to take hold of, that we catch hold of God only. Why, you do not know who the Lord is! He is not an autocrat seated far up in a palace, from which he emerges once a year, preceded by heralds swinging swords to clear the way. No. But a Father willing, at our call, to stand by us in every crisis and predicament of life. I tell you what some of you business men make me think of. A young man goes off from home to earn his fortune. He goes with his mother's consent and benediction. She has large wealth, but he wants to make his own fortune. He goes far away, falls sick, gets out of money. He sends for the hotelkeeper where he is staying, asking for lenience, and the answer he gets is, "If you don't pay up Saturday night you'll be removed to the hospital."

The young man sends to a comrade in the same building. No help. He writes to a banker who was a friend of his deceased father. No relief. He writes to an old schoolmate, but gets no help. Saturday night comes, and he is moved to the hospital.

Getting there, he is frenzied with grief; and he borrows a sheet of paper and a postage-stamp, and he sits down, and he writes home, saying: "Dear mother, I am sick unto death. Come." It is ten minutes of 10 o'clock when she gets the letter. At 10 o'clock the train starts. She is five minutes from the depot. She gets there in time to have five minutes to spare. She wonders why a train that can go thirty miles an hour cannot go sixty miles an hour. She rushes into the hospital. [illegible] says: "My son, what does all this mean? Why didn't you send for me? You sent for everybody but me. You knew I could and would help you. Is this the reward I get for my kindness to you always?" [illegible] bundles him up, takes him home, and nurses him well very soon. Now, some of [illegible] treat God just as that young man treated his mother. When you get into a financial perplexity, you call on the banker, you call on the broker, you call on your creditors, you call on your lawyer for legal counsel; you call upon everybody, and when you cannot get any help, then you go to God. You say: "O Lord, I come to thee. Help me now out of my perplexity." And the Lord comes, though it is the eleventh hour. He says: "Why did you not come for me before? As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." I like to throw us back upon God that we have this ministry of tears.

Again, it is the use of trouble to educate us for the office of sympathy. The priests, under the old dispensation, were set apart by having water sprinkled on their hands, feet, and head; and by this sprinkling of tears people are now set apart to the office of sympathy. When we are in prosperity we like to have a great many young people around us, and we laugh when they laugh, and we romp when they romp, and we sing when they sing; but when we have trouble we like plenty of old folks around. Why? They know how to talk. Take an aged mother, seventy years of age, and she is almost omnipotent in comfort. Why? She has been through it all. At 7 o'clock in the morning she goes over to comfort a young mother who has just lost her babe. Grandmother knows all about that trouble. Fifty years ago she felt it. At twelve o'clock of that day she goes over to comfort a widowed soul. She knows all about that. She has been sailing in that dark valley twenty years. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon some one is at the door, wanting bread. She knows all about that. Two or three times in her life she came to her last loaf. At 10 o'clock that night she goes over to sit up with some one severely sick. She knows all about it. She knows all about fevers and pleurisies and broken bones. She has been doctoring all her life, spreading plasters and pouring out bitter drops and making up hot pillows and contriving things to tempt a poor appetite. Doctors Abercrombie and Rush and Hosack and Harvey were great doctors, but the greatest doctor the world ever saw is an old Christian woman. Dear me! Do we not remember how, in the room when we were sick in our boyhood? Was there any one who could ever so touch a sore without hurting it?

Where did Paul get the ink with which to write his comforting epistle? Where did David get the ink to write his comforting Psalms? Where did John get the ink to write his comforting Revelation? They got it out of their own tears. When a man has gone through the curriculum, and has taken a course of dungeons and imprisonments and shipwrecks, he is qualified for the work of sympathy.

When I began to preach, my sermons on the subject of trouble were all poetic or semi-blank verse; but God knocked the blank verse out of me long ago, and I have found out that I cannot comfort people except as I myself have been troubled. God make me the son of consolation to the people! I would rather be the means of comforting one perturbed spirit to-day, than to play a tune that would set all the feet of mirth reeling in the dance.

I am an herb doctor. I put into the caldron the Root out of dry ground, without form or comeliness. Then I put in the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the valley. Then I put into the caldron some of the leaves from the Tree of Life, and the Branch that was thrown into the bitterness Marah. Then I pour in the tears of Bethany and Golgotha; then I stir them up. Then I kindle under the caldron the fire made out of the wood of the cross and drop of that potion will cure the worst kness that ever afflicted a human soul. ry and Martha shall receive their Lazas from the tomb. The damsel shall rise. d on the darkness shall break the morn-. and God will wipe all tears from their es.

Jesus had enough trial to make him mpathetic with all trial. The shortest rse in the Bible tells the story: "Jesus pt." The scar on the back of his either nd, the scar on the arch of either foot, row of scars along the line of the hair, ll keep all heaven thinking. Oh, that eat Weeper is just the one to silence all nly trouble, wipe out all stains of earth-grief. Gentle! Why, his step is softer n the step of the dew. It will not be a ant bidding you to hush up your crying. ill be a Father who will take you on left arm, his face beaming into yours, ile with the soft tips of the fingers of the ht hand he shall wipe away all tears m your eyes.

Friends, if we could get any appreciation what God has in reserve for us, it would e us so homesick we would be unfit our every-day work. Professor Leon-, formerly of Iowa University, put in hands a meteoric stone, a stone thrown from some other world to this. How ggestive it was to me! And I have to you the best representations we have of ven are only aerolites flung off from t world which rolls on, bearing the mul-ides of the redeemed. We analyze these olites, and find them crystallizations of rs. No wonder, flung off from heaven! od shall wipe away all tears from their es."

Have you any appreciation of the good d glorious times your friends are having heaven? How different it is when they news there of a Christian's death from at it is here! It is the difference be-een embarkation and coming into port. erything depends upon which side of the er you stand when you hear of a Chris-'s death. If you stand on this side of river, you mourn that they go. If you nd on the other side of the river, you re-e that they come. Oh, the difference ween a funeral on earth and a jubilee in aven—between requiem here and triumph re—parting here and reunion there! gether! Have you thought of it? They together. Not one of your departed nds in one land and another in another d; but together, in different rooms of same house—the house of many man-ns. Together!

never more appreciated that thought n when we laid away in her last slumber sister Sarah. Standing there in the age cemetery, I looked around and said: here is father, there is mother, there is ndfather, there is grandmother, there whole circles of kindred;" and I thought myself, "Together in the grave—togeth-n glory." I am so impressed with the ught that I do not think it is any fanat-m when some one is going from this rd to the next if you make them the rer of dispatches to your friends who gone, saying: "Give my love to my rents, give my love to my children, give love to my old comrades who are in ry, and tell them I am trying to fight good fight of faith, and I will join them r awhile." I believe the message will be ivered: and I believe it will increase the dness of those who are before the throne. gether are they, all their tears gone.

My friends, take this good-cheer home th you. These tears of bereavement that rse your cheek, and of persecution, and trial, are not always to be there. The therly hand of God will wipe them all ay. What is the use, on the way to h a consummation—what is the use of tting about anything? Oh, what an ex-aration it ought to be in Christian work! e you the pinnacles against the sky? It the city of our God, and we are ap-oaching it. Oh, let us be busy in the rs that remain for us!

put this balsam on the wounds of your art. Rejoice at the thought of what your departed friends have got rid of, and that you have a prospect of so soon making your own escape. Bear cheerfully the ministry of tears, and exult at the thought that soon it is to be ended.

Then we shall march up the heavenly street,
And ground our arms at Jesus' feet.

The Study of Antiquity.

Famous Greek Schools that Conduct Investigations and Explorations.

THERE are in the city of Athens no less than five schools for the exploration and study of Grecian antiquities, supported respectively by the French, the Germans, the Americans, the English, and the Greeks themselves. These schools are designed to complete the education of Greek scholars by the study of Hellenic thought and genius amid the topographical and architectural conditions in which they were developed, and to direct in the excavations to uncover additional remains of Grecian art and civilization. The prosecution of these purposes requires a considerable annual expenditure of money. The French school seems to be the best furnished with financial resources, having an annual revenue of $15,000. The German school has $12,000, and the American $10,000.

It is a curious fact that the English school, supported by a cosmopolitan nation, whose scholars have had part in nearly all the excavations of the world, has the smallest financial support of any. The British school of last year had an income of less than $2,500. Outside the regular revenues, the French and German have been favored with large grants to promote special explorations. On the explorations at Delos the French Chambers have expended, in the aggregate, $145,000; while the Germans have expended on the excavations at Olympia $200,000, with superb results. The Americans, with very much smaller financial resources, have done commendable work at Platæa, Argos, Sikyan, Sparta, Icaria, and during the past year at the Heræum, and at Eretria in Eubœa. The British school, on the other hand, has had no funds for the work of exploration. But the English leaders have determined to improve their record. A meeting was recently called in London by the Prince of Wales to increase the funds of the English school, which resulted favorably. By the combined efforts of the schools the explorations in the old Greek territory may be expected to go forward with greater vigor and even better results than in the past.

BISHOP POTTER AT THE CATHEDRAL MISSION, STANTON STREET, NEW YORK.

THE GOSPEL AND THE SLOVAKS.

WRITING from Braddock, Pa., to "The Home Missionary," Miss Anna Hodous gives some interesting details of mission work among the Slovaks or Hungarian laborers in that section of the Union. She says: "I was sent to Braddock as a Bible reader, four years ago. In the following October, Rev. John Jelinek, the first preacher to the Slovaks, came there, and we two, single-handed, strove to win one hundred thousand Slovaks. After careful search through Braddock, I found two Bibles, which, however, were not read. My first visit to these Slovak homes was not very encouraging. They lived in crowded, scantily furnished rooms, each family having as high as twenty boarders. Drinking, card-playing and fighting was a daily recreation; Sunday a regular feast day, which ended with full police stations. At Duquesne, one of our out-stations, a member of our church noticed several men who, Sunday after Sunday, played cards; he took his Bible and spoke to them. The result was that one of the men offered his large room for meeting. A wonderful change followed: cards were replaced by Bible; quarrels, discussions, and drinking ceased. The man who offered his house for our services was their leader in sin, but was first to accept Christ. Before his conversion he visited his priest, taking a Bible with him. They had a long interview, at the end of which the priest told him, 'Lock your Bible in the trunk; that is only for educated people; beside, neither I nor you will be a saint.' I wish that I could tell of the sorrow of this man. For years he had been serving in houses of different church dignitaries, and, as he expressed it, not one ever asked him, 'Son, do you pray?' and now when he found the treasure he was told to lock it. Every one of our eighty-eight members used liquor — many excessively; now all are strict abstainers. Our homes are changed to clean, pleasant places where the Bible is a chief attraction. The small Braddock work had spread, beside the Duquesne and McKeesport station, to Johnstown, where Miss Bochek works, to South Norwalk, Conn., and to Europe. The two Bibles increased to 1,745, with 961 Testaments and over 1,000,000 pages of tracts. We have many proofs which show that God approves of our work."

TRUSTING, WAITING, DOING.

LET us trust our Lord and Master,
Put our hand in his each day,
As His path appointed opens.
Walk where He shall show the way.
O'er sharp thorns, or flower-bordered,
Crooked, straight, where trials come,
Knowing sure, that evening brings us
Sleep and peace, the rest of home.

Patient wait the silent working
Of God's purpose, oft concealed,
Till in His good time and pleasure,
His own plan shall be revealed.
Sweet it is to know He careth
For us in life's tangled way;
Watches still with love unceasing,
Through a dark and cloudy day.

Seek in all things close to follow
In the footsteps of the Lord,
Seek to know His will and do it,
Listening for His gracious word.
Opportunity, oft golden,
Each new laden day may bring
Large or small, still use for others,
In the service of our King.

So to grow in strength and beauty,
Of his likeness, pure, divine,
That the spirit of the Master
From our lives may clearly shine.
Still in all good works abounding
As we onward, upward go,
Glorify our heavenly Father,
Unto whom all things we owe.

—PHEBE A. HOLDER.

A Bishop in the Slums.

Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter's Midsummer Work Among the East-side Poor of New York.

FOR several weeks past, Bishop Potter of the Diocese of New York, one of the leading dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, has forsaken his palatial home in Washington Square and taken up his residence at the Cathedral Mission in Stanton street, in the heart of one of the poorest and most populous sections of the great East-side of New York. During that time Bishop Potter has performed all the duties that ordinarily fall to the lot of a humble mission rector, the regular incumbent having been granted a month's leave of absence.

It is a novel experience for a high dignitary of the Episcopal Church to take up voluntarily the burden of a city missionary's work, but Bishop Potter made the change in order that he might learn by actual personal experience the nature and needs of the East-side mission field. He is, moreover, a clergyman of broad and liberal views, and believes that the Cathedral Mission should be the means of exemplifying the principle that the Episcopal Church is for the poor as well as the rich.

In the territory of the Cathedral Mission, there is a population composed of many nationalities. Russian and Polish Jews and Germans predominating, and it is of these races that the Mission congregations are mainly composed. In the square mile of which the Mission building is the centre, there are over 350,000 souls, making it the most densely-peopled section of its size in any city in the world. The work of the Mission includes regular services, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, besides the supervision of an employment bureau, a free dispensary and medical corps, baths, gymnasium, kindergarten, men's clubs, mothers' meetings, King's Daughters, friendly societies and other organizations. There is also considerable Fresh-Air work among the East-side children. During his stay at the Mission which has just ended, the Bishop lived in the Mission House, entirely apart from his family who are now in the country. His rooms were a small, very plainly furnished suite, immediately adjoining the church, and which have not been used in the last three years. The little apartment which he has used as an office, has windows looking out upon the tenements of Stanton Street. Here he has received scores of visitors every day, personally giving attention to all their wants, and coming into active contact with every phase of the Mission's work among the poor. He has also made a large number of pastoral visits among the poor and sick, and has found out by personal observation much that will be helpful to him in his higher office, with regard to the moral and social condition of the Mission neighborhood.

It is hardly necessary to say that the services of the Mission were unusually crowded during the Bishop's stay in Stanton street. His last Sunday was signalized by a special song service, in which a number of trained boy choristers from the East-side took part. The effect of Bishop Potter's sojourn at the Mission has been to direct public attention anew to the great need of that section of New York and the example he has given of active personal interest, in a most Christian and loving spirit, cannot fail to be beneficial and encouraging to all engaged in work of this character. Bishop Potter strongly deprecates any idea of sensationalism in his new experience. He has not taken a step without precedent, for the Archbishop of Canterbury, the primate of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has frequently gone into omnibus yards in England on Sundays, and preached to the men there from the steps of a coach.

Bishop Potter is said to have stated that he had been impressed with the conviction that the Church was not reaching the very poor as efficiently as it should, and that he desired to learn for himself, what was necessary to be done to reach down to the dwellers in the tenements. Doubtless, his recent experience will prove serviceable in the formation of any new plans for Gospel work among those multitudes who form the principal population of the crowded East-side of New York.

THE FALL OF JERICHO.

S.S. Lesson for Sept. 1. Josh. 6: 8-20. Golden Text, Heb. 11: 30. By Mrs. Baxter.

GOD speaks of Israel as "the people which I formed for myself, that they might [illegible]." Isa. 43: 21. His purpose in calling them was that he might, through them, act upon the nations. Thus we see he dealt with Joshua, so that through him he might act upon the priests, through the priests upon the people, so that through the people, "all the peoples of the earth may know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty; that they may fear the Lord your God forever." (Josh. 4: 24). The tidings of the miraculous passage of the Jordan reached the ears of the neighboring peoples and "their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more." Israel was already in the land; but before the people might enter upon a permanent possession of it they should keep the passover. The [illegible] of their deliverance from bondage and their exemption from the death which came upon Egypt, and upon the Egyptians, their oppressors. It was only as blood-bought ones that they might eat the old corn of the land, and their wilderness provision of manna might cease. They were already entered upon a new order of things, and all that was temporary and provisional must pass away. As we enter really into the death of Christ, as we take up our position as being crucified with him, we too leave the transitory and provisional in our experience, and the light of eternity, the power of an endless life, takes fuller possession of us. Rooted on the ground of God's Word, which is our land of promise, we are no longer wandering aimlessly through a wilderness of experiences, not knowing to-day whether we may have to retrace our steps to-morrow; we know no what all things are ours (1.Cor. 3: 21), we know that "all things work together for good to them that love God," (Rom. 8: 28), and that every step God leads us is our truly conquered ground.

But Joshua himself also must learn a lesson, before Israel, God's inheritance could enter fully upon Canaan, their inheritance. He had learned under Moses who it was that really ruled and provided for the people, and he had had before him the example of a man who walked always in close communion with God, and whose habit of life was to wait upon him continually. But Joshua had yet to learn how literally God's Word should be fulfilled: "The Lord your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you." (Deut. 20: 4). Joshua had to lead the people in a warfare, totally unlike that of any of the surrounding nations; certain conditions fulfilled, victory was sure: but the warfare was to be of faith, having no regard to the comparative strength of themselves or their enemies. Such warfare required absolute obedience and unquestioning confidence in him who promised unvaried victory so long as his conditions were complied with, and who was perfectly [illegible]

As [illegible] been offered by the Canaanites; Israel was yet encamped on the Canaan side of Jordan by Jericho when a man with a sword drawn in his hand suddenly appeared to Joshua. With the natural impulse which his sense of responsibility gave him, Joshua inquired, "Art thou for us, or for our [illegible]"

Captain of the Host of the Lord am I now come," said the stranger. "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" said the prostrate, worshipping [illegible] "Put off thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy." And Joshua did so. No sooner was he put in charge than he must renounce all which could glorify the flesh, or exalt himself; he must work constantly under orders, without intruding his own presence into the council of war, by letting so much as the sound of his footfall be heard, where Jehovah was Commander-in-chief. Joshua understood and obeyed. Was it a hardship for him thus to be nothing, under such a Leader? Is it a hardship for us that God should gain victories in and over us, which bring no shadow of credit to us? Now the Lord could go forward; he had a man on his side who could be a willing, ready instrument, and who could consent to whatever measures should be set on foot by his unerring wisdom. But God's ways are not as our ways, and his warfare is not as man's warfare; therefore Joshua's preparation was in the school of faith, not the art of human warfare.

Jericho, the first city to which the children of Israel came in their march forward, "was straitly shut up because of the children of Israel; none went out and none came in." This was one of the cities walled and very great which had alarmed the ten spies: how could it be taken? Joshua was not alarmed; the responsibility of the war was his no more—it was not for him to make the first move. God was true to his servant; he called him, in the first place, to believe: "I have given unto thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valor. Victory was certain, but Joshua must now act faith, and lead the people to do the same. The hearts of men in those days were the same as now. It cost people as much, then as now, to be peculiar, to do what might be misunderstood and appear foolish in the sight of others. When God unfolded his scheme to Joshua, it might have been far from easy if he had thought of how he should persuade the people to walk round the city six days, without doing one single thing in the way of attack. It would look so puerile, like playing at war.

But Joshua had God's Word on his side, "I have given thee Jericho," and immediately behind him was the experience of God's faithfulness in the passage of the Jordan. God had then magnified him in the sight of Israel, and, looking away from the difficulties, he obeyed his Divine Commander, and conveyed his commands to the priests. The same God who had manifested his power over Jordan was mighty to make the walls of Jericho fall, and the priests, who had trusted him at Jordan, now took their ram's horns and led the march of faith around the city. Immediately after the priests followed the ark of the covenant, with the cloud of the presence of Jehovah upon it, and then the people, in solemn and unbroken silence. Joshua had commanded them, saying, "Ye shall not shout, nor let your voice be heard, neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth, until the day I bid you shout." (ver. 10.) This is the attitude of faith, praise to God—silence to man becomes us: the ark of the covenant is with us as our guarantee: we do not need to discuss, but only to obey.

The inhabitants of Jericho might well think this mode of warfare was singular, but the very silence of the people, together with their recent deliverance at the Jordan, would speak more powerfully of the presence of their mighty God than anything else could have done. Some might ask: "Why should six days have been occupied with so useless a proceeding as simply walking around the walls, and blowing [illegible] God [illegible] our faith. Human nature is always in a hurry. "Your time is always ready." [illegible] of the long suffering of the Lord was salvation (II. Pet. 10: 15), to some of the citizens of Jericho? Perhaps others besides Rahab, the harlot, may have learned to acknowledge the only true God, during these days of suspense for Jericho, and of waiting upon the Lord on the part of Israel?

Each day the march around the city was in the early morning, but the seventh day it was seven times, the people knew now that the moment of victory was at hand. And the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua gave the signal, and although no breach had been made in the walls and not one of their enemies had sustained the slightest injury, the people believed their God and shouted with one voice the shout of victory, and the mighty walls cracked with a thundering sound and fell inwards. Not a stone fell on the outside, where the God-led assailants were, so that they could mount with ease the fallen masonry, and "go up every man straight before him." (Ver. 5.)

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

PRIESTS WITH RAM'S HORNS.

EMERGING from the bed of the Jordan, the people pitched their camp at Gilgal, about a mile from the bank of the stream. That they should have been able to do so, unmolested, is astonishing, when we remember that there was no doubt as to their purpose. They were invaders; and the people of the country who were powerful and warlike, recognized them as such. An explanation of their inactivity may be found in the revelation which Rahab made to the spies. (Josh. 2: 11). She said that a great fear of the Israelites had fallen on the Canaanites, "neither did there remain any more courage in any man." It was characteristic of the Israelitish nation that although encamped in an enemy's country, liable to attack at any moment, they deliberately incapacitated themselves for fighting, that they might put themselves right with God. The covenant rite, which had been neglected since leaving Egypt, was observed. Having been delayed so long, it would seem a time very ill-chosen to observe it. Their prompt obedience was as striking a proof of their faith and their confidence in God's protection, as any they had given, even at the passage of the Red Sea. The time for celebrating the Passover had come around and it was kept doubtless with great joy and solemnity. The majority of these people had been born in the wilderness and knew of the deliverance from Egypt only by hearsay and the others had only the dim recollection of childhood. But the passage of the Jordan was recent and the festival would suggest the inspiring reflection that in the difficulties before them, they would have the help of the God of their fathers. The first military triumph was to be one of a [illegible] character. The people were to learn that God's power, exercised in their behalf, was of more moment than all they could do by military prowess. Jericho must be taken and destroyed. The people could not afford to leave so strong a fortress in their rear, as they went forward to subdue the country. Yet without siege equipment, how was the stronghold to be reduced. The walls were so thick that houses were built upon them and there was doubtless a strong garrison within. Again their faith was to be tried. They must do a seemingly foolish and ineffective thing to overcome the city. Simply march around it and shout. Judged by human reason, that was no way to capt[illegible] the city. But neither had looking a[illegible] brazen serpent been a reasonable way [illegible] curing snakebite. Yet that had pro[illegible] effective and this might, too. The pe[illegible] obeyed, and the history records the trium[illegible] ant result.

The wall fell down flat. What me[illegible] God used for the purpose no one knows [illegible] may have been an earthquake. All natu[illegible] forces are at his command, and there [illegible] some very mighty ones which even [illegible] this day have not been discovered. [illegible] have faint clues to them, but nothing m[illegible] One of these, called "the key-note" [illegible] structures, is very interesting. Dr. Pelou[illegible], quoting Prof. Lovering, of Cambri[illegible], mentions several facts about it. "An [illegible] bridge," he says, "was being built at C[illegible] brooke Dale, when a violinist who [illegible] watched the work for some time, decl[illegible] that he could 'fiddle the bridge down.' [illegible] workmen made fun of him, and bade [illegible] fiddle away. He played until he struc[illegible] particular chord, when there was a dist[illegible] vibration in the bridge. He continued; [illegible] ing, leading up at regular intervals to [illegible] chord, until the bridge oscillated so viol[illegible]tly that the workmen became alarmed [illegible] drove him away. Another instance occu[illegible] in one of the mills at Lowell, Mass. [illegible] day the building was so shaken that ev[illegible] one was frightened. The oscillation [illegible] so great that a pail of water was ne[illegible] emptied as the water tipped from sid[illegible] side. The machinery was not going fa[illegible] than usual, yet the building never swa[illegible] so violently. In fact, when the machi[illegible] went faster or slower, the building [illegible] steady. Experiments were made to st[illegible] the movement, and it was found that a [illegible]tain speed always affected the buildin[illegible] that way. The simple remedy was ado[illegible] of always running either faster or slow[illegible] to throw the rhythmic movement out of [illegible] with the building." Every soldier kn[illegible] that in crossing a bridge a regiment [illegible] break step and go in open column, les[illegible] measured cadence of the step of the [illegible] pact column bring down the bridge. E[illegible] neers say that a bridge over which a c[illegible] of men and cattle and wagons may [illegible] safely, would not be safe for sixty [illegible] marching with measured tread. The s[illegible] pension Bridge at Angiers, France, [illegible] brought down in this way. Repeated [illegible] ers were given to the troops to break [illegible] sections, but old habits were too stron[illegible] or the orders were not understood. They [illegible] tinued in marching order, and the b[illegible] fell. Another clue to the same ta[illegible] is quoted in "Harper's Young People." A [illegible] with a peculiar tone of voice was sin[illegible], when the globe of the chandelier imm[illegible]iately in front of her was shattered as [illegible] uttered a high note. None of the [illegible] globes in the chandelier was broken. [illegible] experiment was tried of holding a [illegible] tumbler in front of her mouth, and it [illegible] when the peculiar trilling note was utt[illegible]. All this shows that there is some co[illegible]tion between sound and force that w[illegible] do not yet understand. When this law is [illegible] covered, it may be found that the Isra[illegible] were divinely guided to the key-note o[illegible] walls of Jericho.

They compassed the city and returned. [illegible]thing more inadequate to the end t[illegible] be achieved could not be imagined. Reas[illegible]able men in the Israelitish army, like t[illegible] inside Jericho must have laughed to s[illegible] this way of capturing the city. Ju[illegible] to walk around it and blow a trumpet [illegible] shout—who ever heard of a city being [illegible] quered in that way? Yet it is remarkable how many great results have come [illegible] small and almost contemptible means. [illegible] Blaikie cites a few of them. He says: "no [illegible] would have supposed that the fisherm[illegible] of Galilee would in the end triumph over [illegible] the might of kings and rulers; [illegible] learning and intellect of the philoso[illegible], and over all the prejudices and passio[illegible] of the multitude? Who could have th[illegible] that the distress of a blind-hearted me[illegible] student in London for a crowd of [illegible] "who didn't live nowhere," and whose [illegible] faces as they lay on a cold night on the [illegible] of a shed, stirred in him an irresistible [illegible] passion would give birth to one of the [illegible] velsof philanthropy—Dr. Barnardo's [illegible] ty institution caring for four thousand [illegible] titute children? When Carey on his [illegible] maker's stool planned for the evange[illegible]tion of India, there was as great a gul[illegible] tween the end and the apparent mea[illegible] these was when the capture of Jerich[illegible] planned. It is not by human might [illegible] the greatest things in the world's hi[illegible] have been achieved.

Rescuing the Wanderers.

Continued from first page.)

ractive places beckon them with offers amusement and pleasure. Fashionable, stocratic homes would open to them hos- able doors; the most exclusive clubs uld welcome them to membership; the ncert, the ball-room, and the theatre are en to them; but turning their backs on they go to the Mission or the Mission agon to try to save souls. It would be icult to explain their conduct if we did know how much men have done and l do, when they can say, "The love of rist constraineth us."

THE LATE MR. J. H. HITCHCOCK.

The mission originated in the sympa- tic consideration by a few Christian ng men of the peculiarities of Washing- life. The Capital has a magnetic at- ction which is felt in the farthest cor- s of our broad land. Congressional siness draws many; the hope of secur- Government employment attracts ers; the desire to associate with people ose talents, wealth or political power e put them in the front rank of Amer- n life, influences others. Far away from ir country homes for a longer or shorter iod, free from the restraining influence the small town where every one knows m, they are an easy prey to the enemies heir souls. Washington, consequently, nerally contains within its borders at given time, a larger number of social ecks than any other city of the Union. ere are over twenty thousand cases an- ally in its police courts, and five thou- d annually in its jails. And they are the greater part men especially worth ing. Men of culture and good family among them, men who might do much Christ in the world if they would give h their service instead of giving it to . These facts were well known to every dent of Washington, and it was also wn that the churches, where alone re was any hope of rescuing such social elicts, were carefully avoided by them. ew young men—less than a dozen— ing over the situation near the end of year 1884, and deploring the evil, deter- ed to make some effort to remedy it. y thought they could not do much, but resolved to do what they could. y found a room in Pennsylvania Ave- that would hold about seventy-five sons, and they rented it for a meeting, hich special effort should be made to ich the Gospel to the worst of sinners. y also arranged to hold street meetings r the place, to invite people into the n. That was the beginning of the ement—the little seed which God sed and which is now grown to so it a tree—a veritable tree of life for the ing of the nations.

he briefest summary of the stages of elopment is all that is possible in the e at our command. The first public ting was held on January 25, 1885. ing the very first week, the hearts of workers were cheered by seeing fruit n their labors. A notorious gambler converted in the little mission room—a who gave such clear evidence of the ity of his conversion that no one would bt it. He has since led for ten years exemplary Christian life, the first of a t host to whom the mission has been a itual birth-place. During the year 1885, the meetings in the room and on the street were continued. Fifteen persons were known to have been brought in from the open-air services and the workers rejoiced that God was using their humble efforts for the conversion of sinners. The room soon became too small to accommodate the people who attended the meetings, especially on Sunday evenings, and a Dime Museum was rented for those services. The summer of 1886 saw the beginning of the Gospel-Wagon movement, which has been a wonderful source of good. It was only an old omnibus that was used. Three meetings were held in different parts of the city every Sunday afternoon with most gratifying results. In one section seventy-five persons, mostly heads of families, were converted, and a branch of the Mission known as "Providence Hall" was started. In the spring of 1887 a Gospel Wagon was built at a cost of $775. Branches of the Mission have been organized in different sections of the city, cottage prayer-meetings held in the homes of converts, tents erected, homes, hospitals and lodging-houses visited, until the Central Union Mission has become in fact the city evangelization society of Washington. From the first it stood as the representative of the Churches, and this most cordial relation has never been disturbed. In January, 1887, a larger hall was secured at 930 Pennsylvania avenue for headquarters. The Mission soon outgrew this, and on November 1, 1892, the property formerly occupied by the city post-office, on Louisiana avenue, was purchased at a cost of $56,000. It was occupied January 1, 1893, while the repairs and remodeling were in progress. Almost every line of work known to Christian enterprise is being successfully carried on under the blessing of God, with the approval and co-operation of the Churches. There is a debt of $16,000 in notes of $250 each, which may be paid at any time, and a trust of $30,000. The work of the Mission is growing rapidly and the future is full of promise.

THE HOME OF THE CENTRAL UNION MISSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The valuable work done by the Mission has won the hearty approval of the churches of the city of all evangelical denominations. From all quarters have come gifts to enable it to extend and develop the work, and as the Directors and chief workers receive no salaries from the Mission, the gifts go directly and intact into effective operation. The Mission and its branches now occupy fourteen building in various sections of the city, and last year the number of meetings was 2,170, at which there was an aggregate attendance of 243,941 persons. Of these, no less than 1,740 made profession of faith last year, making a total of over seven thousand who have come forward to declare themselves on the Lord's side since the Mission was opened. An extensive philanthropic work is carried on in addition to the strictly evangelical services. Free lodgings, gifts of clothing, an employment bureau, and free meals are all included in this hive of Christian activity.

On this page and on the first page we give portraits of a few of the consecrated Christian men who have given their time and labor for the past ten years to the development of the Mission. The chairman of the board of directors, Mr. E. D. Bailey, is the leader of the evangelistic work, and Mr. George W. Havell, the present editor of the "Mission Bulletin," is the leader of the music. Mr. Bailey came to the city twelve years ago as an evangelist and editor of a reformatory paper. After graduating from Wheaton College, Illinois, he held a professorship in the institution for six years, but resigned his place to take the field as an evangelist, and in this chosen profession he had very marked success. After coming to Washington he accepted a government position, became an examiner in the civil service commission, and devoted his time, outside of office hours, to the Mission. Mr. Havell, after devoting some of his best years to evangelistic work in the South, where he suffered many privations on account of the poverty of the people among whom he labored, took a position as examiner in the pension office, and plunged enthusiastically into Mission work. He had already acquired some celebrity as a Gospel singer, but his power and capacity for service were never fully tested until he took the lead of the Mission Gospel singing, in which field he has few equals in the power to move people by the presentation of the Gospel in song. He is an Englishman by birth, but came to this country when quite young. Mr. Geo. W. Wheeler was one of the five original directors of the Mission, and the first secretary. When he came to the city, more than twenty years ago, he was far from being a Christian. He held various positions at the Capitol in connection with Congressional committees, but finally became an expert accountant in the treasury department. Several years before the Mission started he was converted, and at once became an active worker. Naturally enthusiastic and aggressive, he threw his best energies into the Mission work and became one of its most successful workers. Not brilliantly gifted either in speaking or singing, he nevertheless developed a real ability in organizing and conducting meetings, his ability being most marked in the direction of setting others to work. He is leader of the Saturday Night

MR. GEO. W. HAVELL.

Meeting, and has charge of the very useful and successful Midnight Mission Work.

Mr. J. H. Hitchcock's name cannot be mentioned without a pang. He was chairman of the Board of Directors from the beginning until September 10, 1894, when God called him from service on earth to his presence. One of the kindest, most tactful of men, his ear was ever open to the troubles of others, and his heart and hand were engaged in their relief. His death was a loss to the mission that was severely felt by his colleagues. Major Geo. A. Hilton is another well-known mission worker. His evangelistic work called him away from Washington soon after the mission entered on its wider work, but in the hard and difficult task of the opening and the plans for its earlier operations, Major Hilton's energy and fertile brain were invaluable. Major Hilton is a New Yorker; he served in the war, and thirty years ago learned by sad experience the need of such efforts as the mission is making. Struggling frantically to rid himself of the chains that a dissipated life in Washington was binding around him, he failed again and again, and would have sunk in despair but for the grace of God. Major Hilton is now president of the National Gospel Mission Union, an organization designed to assist in planting such missions as the one in Washington, in every city in our land. Major Hilton has the cordial support in this national movement of a Board of Electors, composed of Christian laymen, including such well-known workers as Mr. C. N. Crittenton, Rev. Stephen Merritt, Mr. A. W. Dennet and the proprietor of this journal.

THE MASTER'S QUESTIONS.

HAVE ye looked for sheep in the desert,
For those who have lost their way?
Have ye been in the wild, waste places
Where the lost and wandering stray?
Have ye trodden the lonely highway,
The foul and darksome street?
It may be ye'd see in the gloaming
The prints of wounded feet.

Have ye folded home to your bosom
The trembling, neglected lamb,
And taught to the little lost one
The sound of the Shepherd's name?
Have you searched for the poor and needy,
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of Man was among them—
He had nowhere to lay his head.

Have ye carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul?
Have ye said to the sick and wounded,
"Christ Jesus makes thee whole?"
Have ye told my fainting children
Of the strength of the Father's hand?
Have ye guided the tottering footsteps
To the shore of the golden land?

Have you stood by the sad and weary
To smooth the pillow of death,
To comfort the sorrow-stricken,
And strengthen the feeble faith?
And have you felt, when the glory
Has streamed through the open gates
The presence of Christ at the portal,
Where he tenderly, loving waits?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES.
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.
B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald [illegible] every Wednesday. [illegible] per year, postage free to subscribers in the United States.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances [illegible] to be made by postal note, express order, or draft on New York. Postage stamps will be received for fractional parts of a dollar. Money Orders are always safe and cheap. Send [illegible] at our risk.

Register [illegible] letters, when you remit by cash.

Renewals. [illegible] to renew [illegible] weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure [illegible].

Back Numbers. — We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. — It takes [illegible] weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration [illegible] on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. — Always give both your old [illegible] address when you write us to change your address.

The Name [illegible] Town and the State you live in [illegible] always [illegible] with each remittance or in writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our [illegible] unless this is done.

Letters [illegible] addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York as Second-class Matter

YOUR PULPIT.

IF you want to be qualified to meet the duties which this age demands of you, you must on the one hand avoid reckless iconoclasm, and on the hand stick not too much to things because they are old. The air is full of new plans, new projects, new theories of government, new theologies, and I am amazed to see how so many Christians want only novelty in order to recommend a thing to their confidence; and so they vacillate and swing to and fro, and they are useless, and they are unhappy. New plans — secular, ethical, philosophical, religious, cisatlantic, transatlantic—long enough to make a line reaching from the German universities to Great Salt Lake City. Ah, my brother, do not take hold of a thing merely because it is new. Try it by the realities of a Judgment Day.

But, on the other hand, do not adhere to anything merely because it is old There is not a single enterprise of the Church or the world, but has sometimes been scoffed at. There was a time when men derided even Bible Societies; and when a few young men met near a haystack in Massachusetts and organized the first missionary society ever organized in this country, there went laughter and ridicule all around the Christian Church. They said the undertaking was preposterous. And so also the work of Jesus Christ was assailed. People cried out, "Who ever heard of such theories of ethics and government? Who ever noticed such a style of preaching as Jesus has?"

Ezekiel had talked of mysterious wings and wheels. But here came a man from Capernaum and Gennesaret, and he drew his illustrations from the lakes, from the sand, from the ravine, from the lilies, from the corn-stalks. How the Pharisees scoffed! How Herod derided! How Caiaphas hissed! And this Jesus they plucked by the beard, and they spat in his face, and they called him "this fellow!" All the great enterprises in and out of the Church have at times been scoffed at, and there have been a great multitude who have thought that the chariot of God's truth would fall to pieces if it once got out of the old rut.

And so there are those who have no patience with anything but [illegible] In church architecture, or with anything like good, hearty, earnest church singing, and they deride any form of religious discussion which goes down walking among every-day men rather than that which makes an excursion on rhetorical stilts. Oh, that the Church of God would wake up to an adaptability of work!

"Sir," say the people, "we would [illegible] ing to be converted; you must be patient; the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of Christ." Never, unless the Church of Jesus Christ puts on more speed and energy. Instead of the Church converting the world, the world is converting the Church. Here is a great fortress. How shall it be taken? An army comes and sits around about it, cuts off the supplies, and says: "Now we will just wait until from exhaustion and starvation they will have to give up." Weeks and months, and perhaps a year, pass along, and finally the fortress surrenders through starvation and exhaustion. But, my friends, the fortresses of sin are never to be taken in that way. If they are taken for God it will be by storm; you will have to bring up the great siege guns of the Gospel to the very wall and wheel the flying artillery into line, and when the armed infantry of heaven shall confront the battlements you will have to give the quick command, "Forward! Charge!"

There is work for you to do and for me to do in order to bring about this grand accomplishment! Your pulpit is the bank. Your pulpit is the store. Your pulpit is the editorial chair. Your pulpit is the anvil. Your pulpit is the house scaffolding. Your pulpit is the mechanic's shop. I may, through cowardice or through self-seeking, keep back the word I ought to write; while you, with sleeve rolled up and brow besweated with toil, may utter the word that will jar the foundations of heaven with the shout of a great victory.

Oh, that all might feel that the Lord Almighty was putting upon them the hands of ordination. I urge you, every one, go forth and preach this Gospel. You have as much right to preach as any man has. Only find out the pulpit where God will have you preach, and there preach.

STORMS.

ONE summer among the New England hills, there was an evening memorable for storm and darkness. The clouds, which had been all day gathering, at last unlimbered their batteries. The Housatonic, that flows in silence save as the paddles of pleasure-parties rattle in the row-lock, was lashed into foam and its waves staggered, not knowing where to lay th mselves. The hills jarred at the rumbling of God's chariots. Blinding sheets of rain drove the cattle to the bars, and beat against the window-pane as if to dash it in. The corn-fields crouched in the fury, and the ripened grain-fields threw their crowns of gold at the feet of the storm-king.

After the night shut in, it was a double night. Its black mantle was rent with the lightnings, and into its locks were twisted the leaves of uprooted oaks, and shreds of canvas torn from the masts of the beached shipping. It was such a night as makes you thank God for shelter, and bids you open the door to let in even the spaniel howling outside in terror. We went to sleep under the full blast of heaven's great orchestra, and the forests with uplifted voice, in choiring hosts that filled all the side of the mountains, praising the Lord. We waked not until the fingers of the sunny morn touched our eyelids. We looked out; the Housatonic slept as quiet as a baby's dream. Pillars of white cloud set up along the heavens looked like the castles of the blest, built for hierarchs of heaven on the beach of the azure sea. The trees sparkled as though there had been some great grief in heaven, and each leaf had been God-appointed to catch an angel's tear. It seemed as if God our Father had looked down upon earth, his wayward child, and stooped to her tear-wet cheek, and kissed it.

Even so will the darkness of our country's crime and suffering be lifted. God will roll back the night of storm, and bring [illegible] of peace. Its golden light will gild the city spire, and strike the [illegible] and [illegible] masts of Mobile; and with one end resting upon the Atlantic [illegible] and the other on the Pacific coast, God will spring a great rainbow arch of peace, in token of everlasting covenant that the land shall never again be deluged with crime.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Inquirer, Dayton, O. What is the effect of alcohol on the action of the heart?

It accelerates its action perceptibly. The heart of a water drinker, scientists affirm, beats 100,300 times per day and that of an alcohol drinker from 25,000 to 30,000 times more.

O. O., Coal Creek, Ind. Why did Nebuchadnezzar think the fourth person in the fiery furnace was like the Son of God? What did he know of God?

He probably used the words to indicate the majesty and dignity of the fourth person. The recently deciphered hieroglyphics show that a king of that time would be familiar with a very elaborate mythology, and, like the Greeks, would associate beauty and dignity of form and face with divinity. To him, the words "Son of God," would mean the appearance of God in a human form—a temporary incarnation.

Amos Z. Myers, Mechanicsburg, Pa. Do not such passages as Luke 16: 18, Mark 10: 11, 12, etc., forbid Christians obtaining divorce for any cause? Neither of the two evangelists mention the exception given in Matt. 5: 32.

The rule in cases of two documents referring to the same matter is to follow the fuller report. We have to decide whether the exception recorded by Matthew is an interpolation, or whether Mark and Luke omitted it. Comparing the reports, the latter appears the more likely supposition. Matthew's report of the whole discourse is much more complete. It contains many things omitted by the other two, and it was fair to suppose that this was one. We do not believe that Christ required his followers to submit to the grievous injustice of remaining bound to a partner who committed so heinous an offence. At that time, and afterward in Paul's time, divorce had become far too common, and was granted for trivial reasons. The teaching of Paul was directed against this evil.

S. Ratibone, Newburg, N. Y. What is the best way to conquer a besetting sin? Is it possible to overcome constitutional sins?

It depends largely on the nature of the sin what is the best way of conquering it. As you are not explicit, we can give only general advice. First and chiefly, pray for help. God sympathizes with any honest endeavor to lead a holy life, and he will gladly help you. Constitutional sins may certainly be overcome, though constant vigilance is necessary. You should make a study of your past experience and note the occasions of your fall. If certain places and certain companionships induce it, then those should be avoided. In some cases the kind of diet has something to do with the fall. Constant occupation and some subject to study that interests you, are valuable aids. Take every means your mind suggests to avoid the occasion of falling. Show that you are in earnest and God will give you the victory.

New Disciple, Detroit, Mich. Do you think it would be wrong in me, having recently joined the church, to go to the theatre? I am very fond of theatricals and cannot see the harm of them, but I am told I must give them up.

You must consider the effect on yourself, and the effect on others, of your going. If you are not injured yourself, your example may be injurious. There are many kinds of theatres, but your friends may not discriminate. A person who goes to see a vicious play may quote your example in defence of himself, because he, like you, went to a theatre, though you may detest the nastiness of such plays as he delights in, and you may go only to pure and elevating performances. As to the effect on yourself, you must judge. We think if the love of Christ and his divine life are in your soul, you will not care to go to the theatre. You will be so much in earnest in seeking growth in grace that you will not have patience to watch a theatrical performance. You will have no disposition to spend in that way time that may be used in Christ's service,

A. E. McIntyre, Detroit, Mich., writes:

For years all lovers of birds have been pained at the destruction of beautiful plumage for the adorning of women's bonnets, and also for an additional attraction upon hotel bills of fare, and it has been a gratification to me to see articles in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD upon the subject. I wish you would call attention to the programme of a "Bird Day," which I am happy to say, has been used in several public schools in different localities.

This is one of the many letters received commending THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S plea for our feathered songsters. "Bird Day," mentioned by our correspondent, was celebrated for the first time on the first Friday in May, 1894, in some of the Pennsylvania schools, by teachers and children, the object being to acquaint the little ones with the beauties and utilities of bird life, and the desirability of protecting the birds from wanton slaughter. There is some talk of a "Bird Day" in other States.

Mrs. I. A. E. [illegible], Lumberton, N. H. Where did the Christadelphians originate and what are their [illegible]

The Christadelphians (or "Brethen in Christ"), are a religious body of recent development. The organization was founded by John Thomas, formerly an associate of Alexander Campbell, founder of the Campbellites. In 1844 the followers of Thomas adopted the name Christadelphians, and about the same time organization was effected in Great Britain, Canada, and our own country. They have [illegible] clergy, and practically no ecclesiastical organization. They meet on the first day of each week, and hold a sacramental service, which may be conducted by any member of the body. They claim to teach Christ by living example. They build no churches, but hire cheap halls or rooms and have no fear of debt. They believe in the second advent, hold the Bible as fully inspired, and demand its literal interpretation, accept the atonement, and believe that man is not inherently immortal, but is endowed with immortality through Christ. Annihilation they believe to be the fate of the wicked and that the larger part of mankind never will see the light of resurrection.

Reader, Egan City, Ill. 1. When were the Old and New Testament first printed together and called the Bible? 2. Who translated the Psalms: some of the Gospels into Anglo Saxon?

1. About the fifth century. 2. According to tradition, Caedmon, a monk of Whitby, died in 670 A. D.

J. P. B., Philadelphia. Is not the "King and Cobweb" story told of more than Robert Bruce?

Yes; the Talmud relates that when David was fleeing from Saul and took refuge in a Cave of Adullam, a spider wove its web across the entrance, and Saul, observing it, passed by. The same incident is related of Mohammed and St. Felix.

A. Emory, Lansingburgh, N. Y. Who discovered the Moabite Stone and under what circumstances?

Rev. Dr. Klein, a Prussian missionary, in 1868, while traveling in Palestine, heard of a stone among the ruins of an ancient city called Gibon, east of the Dead Sea in what is known as the land of Moab. There had been some official dispute about it. Klein found it a thick slab of black basalt, with one side inscribed with thirty-four lines of Semitic or Phoenician characters. The Arabs, in order to destroy it, heated it with fire and then threw water upon it, breaking it into three large fragments. Klein contrived to secure impressions of these, and the impressions are now in the Louvre. The genuineness of the stone is undoubted. It is believed to have been engraved about 1000 B. C.

Irish Girl. 1. In John 14: 21, does it mean that by keeping God's commandments we are loving him, whether we feel love to him or not? A servant may endeavor to carry out every wish of his Master, and yet have no love for him. Please explain this to me: it has troubled me much. 2. Is the offer of the Teacher's Bible meant only for new subscribers? 3. Would you send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the old country every week? If so, on what terms?

1. No; it means that obedience and acceptable service are themselves the fruit of love. Love of God cannot exist in the heart without making itself manifest in the life, and the manifestation comes in the form of service. The obedience that has no love in it, like which is yielded in indifference or from selfish motives, is not to be compared with the voluntary service of the true Christian, who finds his delight in doing the will of God. 2. Both for new and old subscribers. 3. Yes; it will cost $1 extra for foreign mailing.

Constant Reader, Strait, writes:

I have frequently seen the question asked: Are we to forgive all who have injured us, if they do not ask forgiveness, or acknowledge their wrong-doing? I think our Saviour's example answers the question. "Father forgive them they know not what they do," and Stephen calling upon God and saying, "Lay not this sin to their charge." I know the [illegible] blessing of forgiving those who have injured us. Many years ago I had a high regard for a lady member of a church, whom I considered a Christian. After some years of friendship, she [illegible] wounding me in my most tender feelings. I prayed for her every day, asking God to bestow his choicest blessings upon her. One day the Holy Spirit whispered gently, "She is a Christian. The Lord Jesus Christ loves her as much as he does you." I then prayed that he would put the same love in my soul for her that he had for her. In a moment my feeling were changed, it appeared of little consequence what had been said against me, but I had pity for her, that she had seen things in so wrong a light.

F. P. DeWitt, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., has several [illegible] numes of religious weeklies which he will send any missionary who can use them for distribution. —Sam'l C. Lee, Emans, Pa. Write to direct [illegible] Mint, Washington, D. C., for accurate information. —A Reader. No; we cannot always exclude evil thoughts, but we can resist them and pray to be delivered from them and fight against yielding to them. Not temptation but the yielding to temptation is sin. — Reader, Ottumwa, Ia. Certainly not. It would be a flagrant desecration of the Sabbath. — Miss C. Gaulin, South Bethlehem, Pa. We do not believe it has yet appeared although it is in preparation. — Rev. H. C. Keeley, Shiloh, N. Y. We do not know the organization. — Nellie C. Cartney, Taylor, Tex. The question has already been repeatedly answered in The Man Box. — L. S. Barton, Durango, Colo. Write to Librarian of Congress library, Phila., for the information. — Reader. It is his duty as a Christian and good citizen to submit to valuation whatever taxable property he owns and to pay the tax. See Luke 20: 25. — Samuel K. Gibraltar, Pa. There is no reason why he should not do so. — H. Green. Write to the Health Department and state the grounds of your complaint. — Mrs. F. A. Houck. 1. Because it is not harmless. 2. To a limited extent but not to-day. — Anxious Inquirer. Regenerate Christians already done so recently. 2. The fact that they were of the same stock would establish relationship, but the exact degree could not be determined. — P. S. P., Chicago. The only authority is the usual theological literature. It does not exist in the Evangelists. — J. F. Dodd, Delaware, O. The [illegible] fication was unquestionably a hoax. — Reader, Clifton Forge, Va. Write to the Secretary of the Royal Historical Society, London, for all information

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE MARTYRED MISSIONARIES.

LATER dispatches received since the first confused reports of the massacre of missionaries in China, a brief summary of which we published last week, unhappily confirm the sad news. It appears from a dispatch to the New York "World," that Dr. J. J. Gregory, who is in charge of the Methodist hospital at Kucheng, that the murders were committed on August 1 at Hwasang, a mountain resort twelve miles from Kucheng. The town is in the district of Foochow, an important mission-station centre in the Province of Fo-kien on the south-eastern coast of China. Kucheng is about ninety miles from the coast and is difficult of access The first authentic news of the massacre reached Dr. Gregory in a letter from Mr. Phillips, a missionary recently arrived from England, who was staying at Hwasang, in a house at some distance from the other missionaries. Dr. Gregory at once notified the authorities, and as soon as he could get bearers and a guard of soldiers he started for the scene of the atrocities and reached it the same evening. Of the missionaries and their families—numbering in all seventeen souls, one had been killed outright and the other eight were more or less severely wounded. Two of these, who were children of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, died afterwards. Dr. Gregory put the mangled remains of the dead in coffins and attended to the wounds of the survivors, and carried all to Sulkow, and thence by boat to Foo-Chow. One of the survivors was Miss Mabel C. Hartford, an American missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose home is at Dover, N. H. She has been eight years in China. She was badly wounded but was able to give an account of the outrages. She had not arisen on the morning of August 1, when a servant rushed into her room and bade her dress and fly for her life, for the Vegetarians, a dreaded secret society, were murdering the foreigners. Before she could make her escape, a Chinaman armed with a short spear forced his way in. He wounded her in the head and struck her violently, but she and the servant grappled with him and Miss Hartford slipped out of his hands, rushed down an embankment and succeeded in finding a hiding-place, where she remained concealed until the rioters left. On returning to the town, she found that four out of the English Zenana Mission had been killed, and that Mr. Stewart, of the English Church Mission with his wife and one daughter and two attendants were dead in their house a pile of smoking ruins Mr. Stewart believes they were murdered before the house was set on fire. The cruelty of the outrage is peculiarly atrocious because of the beneficent work of Miss Hartford and the other missionaries. Apart from the preaching and preaching, the medical service rendered was invaluable The Kucheng missionary hospital is one of the largest in China. Over two thousand native Chinese have been treated, nursed and cured there. Like Him whom they serve, they have received cruelty in return for love, and wounds in return for blessings. But as it was with the cruel soldiery at Calvary, so it is with the Chinamen and for them, too, the Master's prayer is offered :

MISS MABEL C. HARTFORD.

Father forgive them : they know not what they do. (Luke 23: 34.

The Prisoner's Friend.

The warden of a prison in San Francisco relates a pathetic incident of prison-life. He had in his custody a skillful burglar whose past record was of a character to suggest extra precautions to keep him safely. He was known to be a hard desperate character, and it was supposed there was no tender spot in his heart. He was sullen and morose in the prison at first, but after a few weeks there was a marked change. He became bright and cheerful. There was no apparent reason for the change, and the warden reasoning about it in the light of experience, suspected that in some way the prisoner had struck an idea of how he could escape. With the object of discovering it, he was visited in his cell at unusual times, but he was not caught in any suspicious proceeding. The burglar was generally looking out of his cell window in a listless manner. Suspicion was directed to the window, and when the burglar's time for exercise came around, it was closely examined. Nothing was found but a few strands of golden hair tied to one of the iron bars. They were drawn in and it was found that they were attached to others and those again to others, and so on, until the slender golden thread reached the ground outside. Each strand was about two feet long and consisted of some six or seven hairs tightly twined together. The delicate rope could scarcely be seen from outside the prison, but it was strong enough to form a means of communication, and probably, if it had not been discovered, would have been used to draw up a rope by which jail-breaking implements could have been sent to him. Evidently some woman loved the man, coarse and unlovable as he appeared to be; and loved him enough to sacrifice her hair to help him escape. It is strange that a woman capable of such devotion should have lavished it on one so unworthy But love is not measured by the worthiness of its object. The human race has reason to rejoice in the fact, for God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. (Rom. 5: 8.)

A Dangerous Prize.

A narrow escape from a watery grave is reported by a San Francisco journal. It states that a resident of Fresno County, California, who has been spending a few weeks near Ukiah, hunting and fishing, came very near losing his life during his trip. Riding homeward one day along the beach, he saw a number of sea-lions sunning themselves. He determined to get a shot at one. Accordingly dismounting, he took aim and fired, but his aim was untrue, and though wounding the animal severely, it was still able to make its way to the water. Being an expert with the lasso, the hunter undertook to capture the creature and, mounting his horse, he unloosed his rope and threw it over the lion's head and behind one of its flippers, then taking a turn with the rope around the pummel of his saddle. Notwithstanding the wounded condition of the lion, it still struggled toward the water. It was not long before all were floundering in the surf. The hunter finally succeeded in loosening the rope from the pummel of the saddle, when he found he had forgotten to unfasten it from the horse's neck. Being in the surf, it was too dangerous to now try and cut it, and, to save himself, he cast adrift his faithful animal and struggled for the shore, which he reached in an exhausted condition. He saw his horse but once afterward, and it was then being towed to sea. It was found the next morning dead on the beach. The hunter grieved for the loss of his horse, but was thankful that he did not lose his life, too. There are some who try to capture the world's prizes who have even a worse experience. In their eagerness to secure them they are dragged into temptations in which they lose their souls.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction. 1 Timothy 6: 9.

How a Rock was Split.

A singular natural phenomenon is reported by the Boston "Transcript" as having occurred among the Berkshire hills. An observer noticed some time ago, a tiny leaflet sprouting from the top of a gigantic granite boulder, not far from the place where he was staying. Curious to ascertain how it could find life in the stone, he examined it more closely and found that it came through a minute crevice, and had its root in the soil below. He was deeply interested in the strange growth, and at every subsequent visit to the neighborhood has gone to examine its progress. He went to see it this summer and, to his amazement, found that the huge granite boulder was burst into three great fragments. The leaflet had become a noble birch-tree with abundant foliage. The young plant had found a way for itself through the crevice in the boulder to reach the sunlight, and then there had been a contest of strength between the living plant and the adamantine granite going on silently day and night until the dead stone yielded, and as with a giant's crowbar it had been forced asunder. It is so with hearts that seem as hard as rock. The love of a woman or a child has often found a rift in the heart of a fierce, implacable man, whom severity could never subdue, and the gentle, living force has broken him down and humanized him. It is that force—the force of a living Saviour—that gives Christianity the power it exerts in prisons, in heathen lands, and in all the habitations of cruelty and iniquity.

THE ENVIRONS OF FOO-CHOW, CHINA, OVERLOOKING MISSION BUILDINGS.

What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his Son, etc. (Rom. 8: 3.)

His Own Physician.

A Boston journal publishes an instructive experience of an American physician who has been taking a course of study in Vienna, with the view of becoming a specialist in diseases of the throat and lungs. Overwork and lack of exercise caused depression of spirits; he lost weight, was unable to throw off a cold, and became convinced that he was breaking down with quick consumption. One night, after a spasm of coughing, he found drops of blood on his handkerchief. He examined the blood with a microscope, and his fears were confirmed. Without consulting a physician he abandoned his studies, packed his trunk, and returned to his home in New England, as he supposed, to die among his friends. The ocean voyage and relief from overwork brought color to his cheeks, and his friends found it hard to believe that he had galloping consumption. When they sought to reassure him, and urged him to consult a lung specialist, he shook his head mournfully. "It is only the last flicker of the candle!" he groaned. "My microscope has told me the truth. I have only a few weeks to spend on earth. It is not necessary to call in a specialist." At the end of a month the improvement was so decided that he lost confidence in the revelations of his microscope, and consulted a famous specialist in New York. "Your lungs," said the physician, after a thorough examination, "are as strong as my own. There isn't the slightest trace of disease." The delighted man asked how the microscope had indicated the disease, but the specialist would not listen. "Your own morbid fears," he said, "affected the glass. No wise man attempts to be his own physician." The doctor was right, and we may add that no wise man attempts to be his own Saviour. Many have tried, but all have failed. Christ is the only Saviour.

Neither is there salvation in any other. (Acts 4: 12.)

BRIEF NOTES.

As Our Stock of Teachers' Bibles is now completely exhausted, we must withdraw our offer of a Bible as a premium to new subscribers. With that exception, the liberal proposition made recently in this column still holds good, and we continue to send on receipt of only one dollar, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for six months to any address in the United States or Canada, and one copy of any one of the following premiums, all charges prepaid :

From Manger to Throne.
Gospel Hymns, from One to Six, complete.
The Pathway of Life.

This offer will not apply to renewals, being intended exclusively as an inducement for new subscribers to try THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. No renewals will be accepted on these terms, nor will any new subscribers intended to take the place of renewals, share in this offer. Please tell your friends about it, and invite them to join our ranks.

The Waldensian Colony in North Carolina has become ecclesiastically connected with the Southern Presbyterian Church, its pastor having been placed on the roll of the Presbytery of Concord.

News Comes from Russia of the Arrest of one of the leading Stundists, the famous preacher, Karpo Dubovik, who has converted more of the Orthodox to Stundist doctrines than any other living man. After being kept in prison several months, he is to be banished for five years.

Rev. Satori Kato, the Japanese Evangelist who has been spending some months in this country expected to sail from Vancouver, on August 26, for his native land. The work at the Tokio Mission has been carried on by his assistants during his absence. He is looking forward eagerly to the joy of resuming charge and extending the work of evangelization on his return.

One Thousand Three Hundred and Fifty-five Canadian physicians were asked if general health would be improved by total abstinence, and 1,068 replied in the affirmative. Of the remainder, 287 replied to a question on moderate drinking, 90 said that the use of intoxicants, even in moderation, is injurious to health and to activity of body and mind.

The Jewish Grand Rabbi of France in Advocating recently a new translation of the Bible, said : "It is a matter of the greatest moral and religious importance that we give our people a French Bible at such a price that even the poorest can procure a copy, and to give this Bible in a clear, transparent language readily understood by the masses. Such a work can be produced only by the combined efforts of the French rabbis."

The Cruel War of the French on Madagascar appears to be nearing its close. A correspondent in Antananarivo writes that the Malagasy Government is secretly making overtures for peace, but, fearing a revolution, is massing troops outside the capital, and declares it will resist the French to the death. Feeling is growing against the Europeans. A native preacher incited the soldiers in camp to massacre the British in revenge for their desertion of the Queen in her trial.

The Charity Organization Society of New York is obliged to curtail one of its most useful departments. The laundry in which many women are employed and where many are trained to be skilled laundresses is now almost without work, owing to the absence from the city of many families. The Society asks us to state that if families at the seaside and country resorts would send their garments by express, the necessity of reducing the number of needy helpers would be averted.

Mr. Moody is reported by "The Independent" to have spent sixty-six dollars recently rather than have an important guest arrive in Northfield on Sunday. The guest was an Englishman who reached Springfield, Mass., on a Saturday night after the last train to Northfield had left. The alternatives of spending the night in a hotel or travelling on Sunday were considered by Mr. Moody and both rejected. A special train was put on to a point where Mr. Moody could meet his guest with a carriage in which the guest was conveyed to Northfield.

FAR FROM SCORCHING ALLEYS.

Nearly 2,000 Tenement Children Sent to Mont-Lawn thus far, this Summer Our Fresh-Air Fund Steadily Growing.

AUGUST, this year, is proving itself to be a month of almost phenomenal heat, and the amount of suffering endured by the tenement population is great in proportion. For our Fresh-Air Fund and its missionaries and co-workers, it is a month of almost ceaseless activity. Systematic visitation among the tenement poor has revealed many localities where few of the children have ever been off the wretched, dilapidated blocks in which they live, and where there are hundreds of little ones who are total strangers to green fields, flowers, cool woods and grassy lawns. To such children, the invitation to Mont-Lawn seems, as many of the little tots themselves declare, 'too good to be true!"

During the week, over 200 more little guests were sent to our Children's Home, a large proportion of them being taken from the tenements of the West-side. This makes the total for the season nearly 2000 in all. As usual, at this time of the year, there is a great deal of sickness among the children of the very poor, and the scenes that are witnessed by our missionary workers are frequently sad in the extreme. Small children in the last stages of infantile disease, whose tender young lives might have been spared, had they enjoyed even the briefest outing in the country, are found in many of the dark, unwholesome dwellings. Wherever, in the doctor's opinion, it is possible to take them away with safety, those little ones are given an opportunity to regain their strength at the Home at Mont-Lawn; but alas! for the many whom death has already marked for its victims, and whose short span of life will be spent and over, without even a glimpse of green fields or a breath of health-giving air. Like the eyeless fish in dark, subterranean streams, there are thousands of the children of the alleys and slums, whose environment denies them forever the enjoyment of those healthful and beautiful surroundings which our Father designed and provided for all his children alike.

Among the many pleasant experiences in the Fresh-Air Fund work, not the least is the genuine happiness that shines forth in many humble homes, when the little son or daughter comes back from Mont-Lawn. In all likelihood, the ten days' absence has been the first occasion on which the child has ever been away from the mother's side. Glad as the latter may be to give her little daughter the chance of a happy visit to beautiful Mont-Lawn, and entirely satisfied as she is that her girl is in safe hands, it's when the child returns that the simple, genuine mother-love reveals itself the most. A CHRISTIAN HERALD staff artist accompanied one of the returning parties of children to their homes on Tuesday last. One wee pilgrim after another had been deposited under the home roof and now there remained but one little maid who was coming home half-glad half-sad, as all the little folks are when they leave Mont-Lawn—for they never quit the pretty rooms, the great, wide-spreading play-grounds, and the flower-decked fields without real regret, however delighted they are to be home again. At last the Baxter street tenement is reached where the little one lives. Hand in hand with her Sunday School teacher, the light-hearted girl climbs the rickety stairway—she is half-ashamed of its broken steps and battered plaster—and touches the well-known door. She lingers just a moment, for although she knows that mother and Jen, and granny, and the baby are all there, [illegible] minute longer. She knows they expect her, for one of the good teachers at Mont-Lawn [illegible] Then she has heard [illegible] voices through the [illegible] panels. At last she gives a sharp [illegible] handle, and there is a [illegible] within the room [illegible] "Say, mommer, it's [illegible] those sharp eyes have [illegible] the [illegible] a shrill welcome. "Oh, mother, [illegible]" exclaims the girl, running for- [illegible] "I'm back with yez. Its good to be back again, but oh, mother, they wuz awful nice to us at the Children's Home, and this is the teacher lady as brought me up from the steamboat, mother."

The poor tired mother, tears of joy and gratitude filling her eyes, grasped the hand of the lady and said: "Thank ye, mum, for all the kindness to my Molly. But, oh! haven't they made yez the lady, me darlin'? An' it's a foine dress—a better nor ye ever had yet—that they give ye, and shoes, too." "An' see the color on her cheeks, mother," interrupted Jen, as she pulled her mother's sleeve. "Whisht will ye, an' not be interruptin' me, Jenny," said the mother. "Won't ye be seated, miss?" (to the teacher).

A few minutes' talk disclosed the facts concerning this typical home of poverty. The father, an industrious but unfortunate truckman, had only had an odd job or two for many months. Debt, dirt, distress—and drink—had brought the once tidy household to a depth of misery that can hardly be exaggerated. When she was taken to the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, little Molly's health had already begun to give way. "The poor thing was ailin' all the time," said the mother, "never much, but she was pinin', and we had no strengthin' food to give her; but she now looks better nor I ever saw her since she was a baby. May the Lord reward them as helps to send the poor children to such a fine, healthy place, I say." After a few kindly words of encouragement, and a promise to see whether little Jen might not also soon be helped to an outing by the Fresh-Air Fund.

"OH, MOTHER, THEY WAS NICE TO US AT THE CHILDREN'S HOME."

Contributions to the Work.

The following sums have been received during the week for the Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$1,533.54
Loana Huse	10 00
C D C, Altoona, Kans	1 00
R A W, Highland Park, Ill	3 00
A reader of the C H, Otisville, N Y	1 00
S A D, New London, Ct	1 00
Workers, Newcastle, Pa	4 00
A Sister, Lotus Falls, N Y	3 00
S C, Denver	5 00
In His Name, Lake Grove, N Y	6 00
A A H, Hawley, Mass	1 00
[illegible], Dover, N H	1 00
Mrs L Goodwin	50
[illegible], Liberal, Louisville, Va	5
In memory of R S, Long Branch, N J	5 00
One of the King's Daughters, N Y	3 00
George, Grand Rapids, Dak	1 00
Mrs C and C, Worcester	3 00
Miss S M Parker	1 00
D & F M Robertson	3 00
Answer to Prayer, Roxbury, Mass	3 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	1 00
In H[illegible]	1 00
M[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
Mrs L Baird	5 00
[illegible]	5 00
[illegible]	5 00
[illegible]	1 00
A friend, Jersey City, N J	1 00
—, Milton, Pa	6 00
Mrs C J Wood	1 00
Friend, Newark, N J	2 00
One who cares for the little ones, Ridge Road	1 00
B M Butler	1 00
In His Name	1 00
Junior C E Society, Ryegate	3 00
—, Mendota Ill	1 00
Gerty Clare	1 00
W W Porter	3 00
Hiram F Clark	3 00
From Babies Theo and Stuart	9 00
Mrs J B Price	3 00
A Friend, Springfield, O	3 00
Friends of the Cause, Wyman, Ia	3 00
Friend, Phila, Pa	2 00
In His Name, Westhampton, N Y	1 00
Mrs G E Clapp	2 00
Friend, Norwich, Ct	3 00
In His Name, Balto, Md	1 00
A Friend, No Dartmouth, Mass	1 00
Annie Juliet Webb	3 00
A Friend, Pekin, Ill	5 00
Mrs E Tilley	3 00
M Berney	1 00
A friend of the children, Benton, Wis	3 00
Jas Henry Lawrence	1 00
H C Keely	3 00
Flora Snurrell	20
Mrs J M Self	50
Aurelia Balick	10
Mrs B M Cheney	10 00
An old Sub'r, Woodstock, Ill	1 00
Charlie, Brooklyn, N Y	1 00
Arthur Meachen	1 00
Blanch B Bartnite	3 00
W C T, Bethlehem, Pa	6 00
C A G, Hazleton, Pa	10 00
In His Name, Phila, Pa	6 00
—, Asbury Park, N J	5 00
In His Name, Newport, R I	1 00
A Widow, M A	6 00
E H Lyon	3 00
L A B, N Y C	10 00
E B S, Scranton, Pa	25 00
Sam'l Lafever	3 00
Maggie Hanna	3 00
M M Finch	1 00
J M G, Johnstown, Pa	6 00
All for Him, Pa	6 00
Mrs G W Bartholomew	2 00
M O S, Glove City, N Y	5 00
Mamie C. Paterson, N J	1 00
Henry Koerber	6 00
Mrs S P Gordon	1 00
In His Name, Warren, Pa	3 00
Mrs Henry Raynor	1 00
Mrs Lamma Maxwell	1 00
Mrs Z T Husted	3 00
E F Gibson	1 00
—, Passaic, N J	2 00
Mrs Thompson	3 00
Wm J B, Buffalo, N Y	5 00
Friend, Sandie, R I	1 00
—, Schoharie, N Y	1 00
H B H, N Dighton	1 00
Frank, Newark, N J	3 00
Miss Edith Scott	3 00
Mrs Dan'l S Webb	3 00
—, Derry	3 00
B W D, Granite, Mass	3 00
N Robbee	3 00
A Carr	2 00
J M S, Westfield, Mass	5 00
L F White	3 00
H C Ortman, Henry & Bertha	3 00
Mrs A A Emerson	1 00
—, Waymart	1 00
Cora E S, Pa	3 00
Lewis De Lancey	2 00
A friend of the friendless, Greenfield Hill	5 00
Babies Louise and Lillian, McGees Mills	2 50
Proceeds of a fair held by 6 little girls	8 00
Marvin A Dimmick	1 00
I A Dutton	3 00
A Sub'r, Placerville	1 00
J W C, Middletown	3 00
Jose Isles	1 00
M W Palmer	1 00
C J Newton	50
Mrs C C L Marion	50
[illegible] Spratley	3 00
Mr. [illegible] Ave	6 00
Junior League, Asbury	6 00
Mr. W D E Wortz	1 50
Mrs A H M, "	1 50
Wm Wadsworth	3 00
Miss Barnes	1 00
Sarah A H, Veteran's Home	2 00
In His Name, Bennington	2 00
Leonard Bennington	2 00
A friend of the poor, Alliance	1 00
Mr. [illegible] Wortz	1 00
[illegible] Duncan	3 00
—, Leeds	1 00
Paul M[illegible]	3 00
Mr. C H Bissell	6 00
A Friend, Phelps	[illegible]
—, Port Chester	[illegible]
Edith Weir	[illegible]
Janet "	[illegible]
Robt "	[illegible]
H Humiston	[illegible]
Mrs S Reid	[illegible]
Mrs Jno G Peebles	[illegible]
R & L Knight	[illegible]
A Sub'r to the C H, Phila, Pa	[illegible]
F Gilbert	[illegible]
S M C, Worcester	[illegible]
C A & Lizzie C Colcord	[illegible]
Thankfulness, Maine	[illegible]
S L M, Bridgeport	[illegible]
Mrs S S Tutlow	[illegible]
Clarence N Wiley	[illegible]
Ethel L "	[illegible]
Mrs Geo W Jones	[illegible]
M A W, Deposit	[illegible]
G H Shepherd	[illegible]
Cash, Enfield	[illegible]
Mrs Charles Olmstead	[illegible]
Mrs E M Rockwell	[illegible]
B B L	[illegible]
Mrs Lizzie MacDonald	[illegible]
Rev N H Dailey & members of Ill Bapt Church	[illegible]
Mrs Mary L Meredith	[illegible]
A friend, Bay City, Mich	[illegible]
M A Willis	[illegible]
Mr and Mrs Jas W Brooks	[illegible]
S Agnew	[illegible]
Mrs E H Spur	[illegible]
Quay Mears	[illegible]
Jennie Mears	[illegible]
M E Sage	[illegible]
Mother and Daughter, Cornell, Ill	[illegible]
K H Auston	[illegible]
Ft Calhoun S S Birthday Box	[illegible]
J S Chase	[illegible]
L C Needham	[illegible]
Mr and Mrs H E Peck	[illegible]
Annie Martin	[illegible]
Mrs Mary L McClure	[illegible]
Walter Vail	[illegible]
Mrs W B Guild and friend	[illegible]
Mrs T H Workman	[illegible]
A Reader and mission worker, N Y City	[illegible]
"Maclon" Montgomery	[illegible]
Friend, Heislerville, N J	[illegible]
M H, Maxwell, Neb	[illegible]
Mrs Cline and Mrs Cook	[illegible]
Mrs M Kilgore	[illegible]
Margaret, Cleveland, O	[illegible]
Mrs S M Davis	[illegible]
Mrs McKee	[illegible]
Mrs R E D, Bloomington, Md	[illegible]
"In Memoriam," Morristown, N J	[illegible]
Two Sisters, Easton, Pa	[illegible]
The Resolute Circle, Ivoryton	[illegible]
Friend, New London, Ind	[illegible]
C G Simonson	[illegible]
M D Packard	[illegible]
Friend, Belmar	[illegible]
Amelia Oakwood	[illegible]
In His Name, Chalk, Kas	[illegible]
Elsie May Maritt	[illegible]
Mrs Henry Culver	[illegible]
G E H, Fall River, Mass	[illegible]
Reinhardt Weiss	[illegible]
E R Randolph	[illegible]
Sympathizer, Waldron, Ark	[illegible]
M E P and Mother, Gloversville, N Y	[illegible]
C S, Cohocton, N Y	[illegible]
Reader, Brooklyn, N Y	[illegible]
J D, Los Angeles, Cal	[illegible]
A Reader of the C H, Winchester, Va	[illegible]
A N, New Brunswick, N J	[illegible]
Mrs I S Woodworth	[illegible]
Two Readers of the Herald, Union Deposit, Pa	[illegible]
A friend, Boulder, Colo	[illegible]
B and C, Allegheny City, Pa	[illegible]
M A Lamb	[illegible]
Mrs A Williams	[illegible]
W C T U, L I, N Y	[illegible]
King's Daughters, Chatham, Can	[illegible]
In His Name, Fredericksburg, Tex	[illegible]
W DeMott	[illegible]
Mrs J G Houghton	[illegible]
Salome Brandt	[illegible]
In Jesus' Name, Bridgeton, N J	[illegible]
Friend, Polk, Wis	[illegible]
—, Albany, N Y	[illegible]
A well-wisher, Plymouth, Mass	[illegible]
Mrs C N Baker	[illegible]
J J Schooley	[illegible]
Mrs A L Matlock	[illegible]
M T Gunderson	[illegible]
H C W, Philipsburg, Pa	[illegible]
Mrs Martha Swift	[illegible]
Band of Hope, Millville	[illegible]
An interested reader, Quincy, Mass	[illegible]
Waldo Taylor George	[illegible]
Sub'r, N Y City	[illegible]
A friend, Middleboro, Mass	[illegible]
M E Church S S, Westhampton	[illegible]
A L V M, Kansas	[illegible]
Emma Grey	[illegible]
Two friends, Winchester, Va	[illegible]
E D G, Leeds, N Y	[illegible]
L and L E, Anderson, Ind	[illegible]
A lone mother, Dubuque, Ia	[illegible]
D M Buckwalter	[illegible]
J C, Rahway, N J	[illegible]
Mr and Mrs L R Crampton	[illegible]
H A Bounnes, N Y	[illegible]
R P Holeman	[illegible]
Mrs W M Brown	[illegible]
—, Chicago, Ill	[illegible]
Mrs M D Palmer	[illegible]
Earnest Workers' Circle, K D	[illegible]
—, Brooklyn, N Y	[illegible]
A E C, Putnam, Ct	[illegible]
A friend, Cairo, Ill	[illegible]
S C, Balto, Md	[illegible]
Emma and Abbie, Cottam, Ont, Can	[illegible]
A M Jefferies	[illegible]
L D Chesley	[illegible]
In His Name, Clay City, Ind	[illegible]
Mrs W M Dudley	[illegible]
Mrs Wm Hall	[illegible]
Mrs W Davis	[illegible]
F S and M E L, Parkersburg	[illegible]
Mrs D Miller	[illegible]
Wm N Cromwell	[illegible]
Martha M Wakelee	[illegible]
Mrs O C Barney	[illegible]
A widow, Laurelville	[illegible]
Annie M and Dora S Wiestling	[illegible]
Belle P Rushmore	[illegible]
[illegible] Tibbles	[illegible]
An invalid, Lunenburg	[illegible]
Lucy A Humphrey	[illegible]
A C Thompson	[illegible]
Arthur Waldman	[illegible]
A friend, Sidney	[illegible]
M L M, Pomona	[illegible]
Mrs N I Mayo	[illegible]
Martha Koehler	[illegible]
In His Name, Spartia	[illegible]
J J Heath	[illegible]
A Sub'r and Daughter, Byfield	[illegible]
G D Legner	[illegible]
Kings Daughters, Leith	[illegible]
Mrs F F Smith and Mrs P Baker	[illegible]
Bertha, Herbert and Winfield, Phoenix	[illegible]
Emma V Hughes	[illegible]
M B, Dubuque	[illegible]
Miss C H, Pomona	[illegible]
Total	$4,1[illegible]

A TERRIBLE PROCESSION!

John G. Woolley's Eloquent Picture of the Alcoholic Juggernaut as he saw it.

IN a recent address at Music Hall, Boston, before the Christian Endeavor Convention, J. G. Woolley, the noted temperance orator delivered this remarkably eloquent passage, descriptive of his own personal experience:

I stood at the corner of Fulton Street, in New York, sad and an utterly hopeless man. The light had gone out. There was no soul on the face of the earth except one woman and a little boy who believed in me. They were in their desolate home in the far north-west: my wife, worse than widowed, because her husband was not dead. There are worse things than widowhood. I stood there and heard a splendid band playing. It was at the head of the dram sellers who were out for their holiday, with their carriages decorated with banners. I saw with my sorrowful heart, with my wrecked life and with an awful lump of homesickness in my throat such sights in that procession as no other man could describe. I could see at every turn of the carriage wheel some heart crushed and my own boy cursed with the hereditary taint of the drunkard; I could see them crushed under the wheels of the juggernaut of the drink traffic of New York and Brooklyn. Broadway seemed to be paved that day with the fragments of broken lives. I could see joined to the carriage wheels a countless multitude of men such as I was, friendless, beggared, starving, dragging their pitiful way to be part of the saloon keepers' spectacle, and I could see haggard-faced women holding in their arms little, pinched and ragged-clothed babes, which looked at their mothers' starved breasts in vain for food. I could see my own wife in the procession.

I could see the gray locks of my mother woven into the fine cloth that was worn on the backs of those dram sellers. I saw a trembling drunkard join the procession began to move, and when it had passed by I found myself standing there with my face toward heaven, and I found myself saying by the grace of God I will not make another fight for myself again, but I would extend every energy to stop that procession in this country.

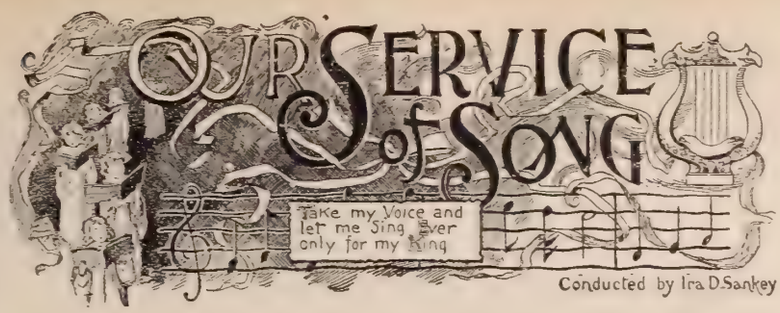
I have no ambition in the world beyond being a missionary to the drunkards in the slums. I desire to spend the remainder of my life beseeching misled men to come and find deliverance and the salvation of their own souls."

Protestantism's Progress.

One of the most influential publications in Germany has recently collected some interesting statistics from reliable scientific sources. The population of the earth is estimated to be 1,500,000,000. There are 200,000,000 Protestant Christians, 195,600,000 Roman Catholics, and 105,000,000 Greek Catholics, making a total of 500,000,000. There are, it is estimated, 8,000,000 Jews, 200,000,000 Mohammedans, and 812,000,000 heathens; making altogether 1,000,000,000 non-Christians. One-third of the world's population, if these data are correct, is Christian. Another important fact brought out by the estimate is that Protestantism has outstripped the Roman Catholics by more than four millions, while it practically shares the destinies of all the leading nations—England, Germany, the Netherlands, and the United States are Protestant countries. These countries, with their colonial possessions, control almost half of the inhabitable parts of the earth. People who speak the English tongue very materially influence almost half the globe. All things point to the fact that the great mission of evangelizing the world is to be conducted by the English-speaking peoples. The sooner we realize this the more speedily will this mission be accomplished. If each person could feel that he had an individual part in this work, which he and he alone could do, it would greatly add to this great world-movement.

INSTANT IN PRAYER.

Being "instant in prayer" was beautifully explained by Stonewall Jackson one day, when his sense of its meaning was required. "I can give you," he said, "my idea of it by illustration, if you will allow it, and will not think I am setting myself up as a model for others." On assurance being given that there would be no misjudgment, he went on to say: "I have so fixed the habit in my mind that I never raise a glass of water to my lips without a momentary asking of God's blessing. I never take a letter from the post without a brief sending of my thought heavenward. I never change my classes in the section-room without a brief petition for the cadets who come in." "And don't you sometimes forget to do this?" "I think I scarcely can say that I do; the habit has become as fixed almost as breathing."



THOU REMAINEST.

"THOU, O LORD, REMAINEST FOREVER."—Lam. 5: 19.

EL. NATHAN. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Moderato, with expression.

1. "Thou re - main - est," Blest Re - deem - er, Lord of peace and Lord of strife,
2. Sa - tis - fy - ing ev - ery long - ing, Of my sin - ful soul for grace,
3. Earth - ly joys may soon be fad - ing, Win-t'ry frosts sweet flow'rs de-stroy;
4. One by one my loved may leave me, Voic - es sweet no more be heard;
5. When from earth, Thou Lord shalt call me, Calm I'll lay my bur - den down, Je - sus, Sav - iour, Lord for - ev - er, "Thou re - main - est" Christ my life.
From my weak - ness nev - er turn - ing, "Thou re - main - est" Christ my peace.
But a - bove the cloud that's shad - ing, "Thou re - main - est" Christ my joy.
But of God naught can be - reave me, "Thou re - main - est" Christ my Lord.
For I know what - e'er be - fall me, "Thou re - main - est" Christ my crown.
CHORUS.
"Thou re-main - est," "Thou re - main - est," "Thou re - main-est" Christ my "Thou remainest," "Thou remainest," all, (Christ my all); Peace or con - flict, joy or sor-row, "Thou remain-est" Christ my all.

Copyright, 1894, by James McGranahan.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2,
By Permission of the Publishers.

THE EXILES' RETURN.

Prophetic Significance of the Increasing Tide of Migration to Palestine.

BY VEN. J. HUGHES GAMES, D. C. L.

Continued from page 529.

FROM the three facts already cited about the Jews—1, the increased interest in their conversion; 2, their prominence in politics and finance; and 3, the increased interest in the topography of Palestine—we drew the conclusion that the time of our Lord's return is near. He taught us to look on such conditions as precursors of his coming. But there are other signs that confirm the view we have taken.

4. The return of the Jews in large numbers to the Holy Land, and particularly to Jerusalem. The number of Jews residing at present in Palestine has been variously estimated at from 100,000 to 120,000, or nearly three times more than those who returned under Zerubbabel and Joshua. Twenty years ago the number was only about 30,000. Now they are returning at the rate of 1,000 a year, a rate which may, at any time, be largely increased. Up to 1841, only 300 Jews were permitted to live in Jerusalem; in 1882, there were only 10,000 actually living there; now there are believed to be 40,000, or two-thirds of the 60,000 inhabitants of Jerusalem. It has been well observed that, "if cities be determined by the majority of their inhabitants, Jerusalem is at last again a Jewish city." This has been brought about principally by the persecution of the Jews in Russia, where about 5,000,000, or nearly half the Jews in the world, reside; and also from the hostile feeling which exists towards them in Austria, and the German Empire, and elsewhere.

5. The colonization of the land. Formerly, Jews were prohibited by law from holding landed property in Palestine. That law has now been repealed, and many colonists have acquired land, and settled in different localities throughout the country. There are some twenty-five colonies of Jews in Palestine, some comprising but a few, others as many as 100 to 150 families, but the largest numbering 400 colonists in all.

6. A good deal of building is going on in Jerusalem and elsewhere. Not so many years ago Jerusalem was little more than a desolate Moslem village. Now there are many buildings in it arranged after the European fashion; hundreds of houses are being or have been recently built. "The measuring line" is passing beyond "the hill Gareb," and that hill and "Goath" are being covered with houses (Jer. 31: 39); the city is extending far beyond its former limits; and Jerusalem outside the old city walls is larger than the city within them.

7. The rapid introduction into the country of various modern improvements. Twenty-five years ago there were only two good roads in Palestine; now there are such roads on the north, south, and east of Jerusalem, while on the west is the railway to Jaffa. Another railway is in course of construction from Damascus across Lebanon to Beyrout, which is intended also to run southwards to the Isthmus of Suez. A third railway is planned to pass south of the Sea of Galilee, and reach to Acre.

8. The land itself is being prepared for the people. In Palestine there are two seasons—the dry from April to October, and the wet from October or November to March or April. Until some ten or twelve years ago, there was scarcely any rain after March, and it was almost unknown in April. For the last five years there has been as great a rainfall in April as in March; thus the land is becoming more fertile.

SILENT SOUNDS.

A Sermonette Delivered by Rev. J. Reid Howatt. Text: Psalm 19. 2. "Day unto day uttereth speech."

IT sounds rather curious, does it not, to hear about one day speaking to another? Though you have been far away from the noisy city, away in the country, where there was not a murmur to be heard, and though you have been as mute as a mouse and have listened ever so hard yet you have not been able to hear a day speaking. That is true; and David, who wrote this psalm, knew that also, for he says in the very next verse, "No speech, no language, their voice is not heard"—and yet, "day unto day uttereth speech!"

How can that be? Because there are more ways of speaking than one. There is the way the deaf and dumb speak—on their fingers. Their voice is not heard, yet they speak. Then a book speaks. The moment it is open, and you see the words, you understand what they mean—they speak to you. There is a tribe of savage people far away, and what do you think is the name they give to a book? They call it "The Whisperer." The only way they could make out why different men could speak the same words from the same book was by supposing the book whispered to them, and so they gave it the name. But it does not whisper; it has no voice nor sound, and yet it speaks.

Now how do you understand what people say when they speak on their fingers? or how do you ever come to know what a book says? Isn't it by first learning how to understand? You carry the way to understand inside yourself. A boy who hadn't learnt to speak with his fingers might see others talk so, but he would not understand; and a boy who hadn't learnt to read might see a hundred books open, yet he would not know one word that they said. It is only the one who has the way to understand inside himself who can hear what they say, though they have no voice or sound.

It is just in the same way we get to understand thousands of things that are round about us, and that speak to us of God. As we learn to love God more, we learn to see his writing everywhere around us, and to hear his voice speaking in many ways. It was so with Jesus. When he looked on the plants he said, "See! these flowers are little sermons, telling you that God cares for the youngest of you, for it is God who makes each flower so beautiful; he does not forget one of them, and do you think he can forget you?" And when he looked on the birds he said: "These birds are whispers from God, telling you not to be anxious. For the birds went to sleep last night quite content, though they hadn't a single crumb laid up for to-day. But yesterday they got their pick and their bit from God's hand, and they were sure God would not go to sleep while they slept; he would be taking care for them, and would provide for them somehow to-day as he had done yesterday; and you see they are flying about. Somehow they have got their pick and their bit again, for our heavenly Father feedeth them, and he will [illegible]

[illegible] of God everywhere, because he carried inside himself the [illegible] I wish us to learn from everything. The way, then, to understand what the days speak, [illegible] what everything says about God, is to get much of God's Spirit into our hearts.

Three things at least which the days utter you must try to keep in mind:

There's nothing new! To-day is just like yesterday. Yesterday came up beautiful, became brighter, had clouds and sunshine, and then faded away. So will it be with to-day. Yesterday carried away on its white wings the spirits of thousands of men and women, and wee, wee children, too; and the night came, and covered their bodies, and they were seen no more. So it will be to-day. There's nothing new. But [illegible] [illegible] new about the day, but everything is new [illegible] to-day won't be the same that you had yesterday; the night has come like a black wall between you and yesterday, and to-day you get a fair start again; and to-day you may do better than yesterday, or to-day you may do worse, but you can't blame yesterday. It is gone; this is a new day, and everything is new to you. You were naughty yesterday perhaps, and you are determined you won't be naughty to-day in the same way. That is good; but, take care! you will be tempted to-day in another way. So, you can't afford to forget Jesus: a new day means a new way, and only Jesus can guide you rightly upon it. But this also the days say: Time tells of eternity! As the days pass away, we pass away with them—passing away, passing away, out into eternity. When you are in a train or a horse-car, you notice that all the people do not go to the journey's end. Some go only a little way, others go farther, new ones come in; perhaps you yourself get out before the whole journey is done. Anyway, they are very few who go all the way. It is just the same with our lives. Some only go a short distance through the days—God calls them away when they are young. Some go a little farther, others a little farther still; but they are very few indeed who come to be very old. Shoud n't every day then make us think of what is to be the end of all?

When you awake then, in the morning, think with yourself: "This is a new day; to-day Jesus wants me, and to-day Satan will tempt me; there is only one way in which I can be safe, by remembering Jesus, and trying to do what he wants. I shall try to speak kindly to brother and sister to-day; I shall try to do what mother bids me; I shall try hard to keep always in mind that Jesus wants me to-day to be his child."

Do this, dear children, and you will soon learn a very very great deal more of what is said in this silent language as "day unto day uttereth speech."

GENERAL MARTINEZ CAMPOS.
Commanding the Spanish Troops in Cuba.

HIS BANNER.

"He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." Cant. 2. 4.

O GLORIOUS banner,
The banner of love!
O wonderful foretaste
Of glory above!
While here midst the sorrows
Our pilgrimage brings,
Among cruel envies
And jealousy's stings

Where starving souls greet us
On every side—
Where trouble and famine
Will always abide—
There's a banqueting-house!
Cordial welcome to all.
Who accept invitation
And enter the hall!

Behold! the ensign that Floats over the door;
'Tis one word—more precious
Than volumes of lore.
What is it you see as
You look up above?
Our Lord's blessed banner,—
One word only—love.

'Twas that brought him down
From his heavenly throne,
To die on the Cross
For [illegible] me!
O, come to the feast
Of salvation to-day!
That [illegible] banner
Will banish away.

[illegible] to the banquet
His promise to prove—
God [illegible]
The [illegible] love.

—L. M.

CUBA'S LONG STRUGGLE.

Both Sides Believe the War Nearly Over, but the Result Still Uncertain.

AFTER months of severe fighting, attended by considerable losses on both sides, the crisis seems to be approaching in Cuba's war for freedom. Gen. Martinez Campos, the brilliant soldier whom the Spanish Government sent to Havana three months ago, with a great flourish of trumpets and the promise of an early suppression of the rebellion, has thus far signally failed to bring about such a result. His troops sustained a severe check some time ago at Bayamo, where the Government forces were skillfully divided and ambushed by the patriot army under Gen. Maceo. It is said that in that engagement, Campos was wounded and obliged to retreat, leaving his dead and wounded, but that Maceo generously permitted the Government troops to revisit the field and carry off the Spanish troopers who had fallen. In return for this magnanimity on the part of the foe, Campos gave orders for the liberation of a large number of patriots who had been arrested as suspects or captured in battle during the previous month. Spain is now preparing to send out 30,000 fresh troops to Cuba, which together with the regular forces now under Campos' command, will give him an army of 80,000 regulars and an equal number of volunteers so that, within the next month, a supreme effort will be made by land and sea, to crush the rebellion.

This prospect, however, does not daunt the patriot troops, who are now between 25,000 and 40,000 strong, and well armed. It is claimed that a large part of Spain's forces will be required to garrison the cities and fortifications, especially along the coast, and that fever will do more havoc among the new troops who take the field during August and September than patriot bullets.

IN THE JAPANESE HOSPITALS.

An interesting letter from Miss H. M. Browne describes her work among the wounded Japanese soldiers at Hiroshima, during the war now happily ended. She writes that having given away Testaments and talked with some of the patients, a man mysteriously beckoned to us. On going near, he said, "What is this Christ and the Christian doctrine? I want to know." Very many say, after hearing a few minutes, "Ah, we never knew before; we can't believe until we hear."

On remarking to one man that he looked quite ill, he replied, "Yes, this is my last journey." I gave him the tract I had in my hand, "Guide to Eternal Life." I visited him two or three times afterward, and at each visit found his perception of the truth increasing, and hope and joy in his face. The truth seemed to take fast hold of him. Another man, from a tract first, and then a book concerning faith, became an earnest believer. The other men of the ward laugh good-naturedly at him for being so zealous, but that does not deter him. His words stirred up one patient who at first did not care to receive a tract even, but at my next visit asked me for something that would explain the truth, for he wanted to examine into it. The man so in earnest has got two friends who visited him to study the Bible, and say, "I must go home soon and get the people of my village to believe." On my remarking that he must become well grounded himself first, he replied, rather astonished, "Why, it will never do for me to believe this alone; I must tell them."

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

XII.—MRS. F. L. SPIVEY.

ONE of the most remarka instances of the power the love of Christ to spire unselfish devot to others, that we h heard of is in the life work of the lady wh portrait appears on t page. Mrs. F. L. Spivey is doing ostentatiously a noble work in a cou district in Georgia, denying herself necessaries and of rest and comfort she may teach the ignorant, careless degraded something of Christ and his giving Gospel. A lady who has wat the work, has sent us the story of heroism which would otherwise have n been heard of outside the communit which it is done.

Mrs. F. L. Spivey settled in Geo some five or six years ago. As a Cl tian woman she was shocked by the d spiritual and mental darkness that found lying all around her. There wa church, no day, or Sunday School an religious service of any kind in a circu twelve miles. The condition of the population may be imagined. But wha heavily on her heart was the conditio the children, who might be reached kept from growing up to be such men women as their parents. Mrs. Sp thought of it and prayed about it until thought grew unbearable. At last, fa all other means, she secured the loa an abandoned hut and opened a school. taught the children to read, to commit sages of Scripture to memory, and to have less like savages. When the months' vacation came and her pupils busy in the field, she filled the school colored children and taught them.

The cabin was always occupied and work went on. After three years of trial, Mr. Spivey gladdened his wife's by building a neat little school-house her. The State also gave a little hel appropriating pay for three months' te ing in the year. Mrs. Spivey then ad Sunday School to her other work, in w she was Superintendent, teacher, orga Nearly a hundred children now gather every Sunday, and after the school, g people come, and Mrs. Spivey reads a ter, offers a prayer and reads a sermon of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD or some religious journal. It is true the men sm during the service and the women snuff, except on some special occasion as Easter Sunday, when in compli with Mrs. Spivey's request, pipes and sticks are left outside, yet the people a tentive and the seed is sown. Durin these years, Mrs. Spivey has had no portunity of attending church, but has ried on her own quiet work for Christ.

Nor in teaching alone has this good proved her love for her Lord. Occasion Mrs. Spivey's friends in the North from her, and her letters contain a for second hand books or clothes, bu though she knows what it is to wa clothes and even good food for herself family, she never speaks of that, but ways of the wants of others.

LIVING IN A SOD-HOUSE.

MABEL REED lived in a sod shanty on the prairies of Dakota, with her father, a twelve-year old brother named Harry, and Maud, a little sister of six summers. Mabel was the oldest, and was trying hard to fill the place of the ...ld mother who had gone to join the ... some years before. Mabel was ... brave-hearted, but on this spring ...ng, as she sat looking from the win... the living-room, upon the parched ...ithered garden on which they had ... so much strength and ... few tears stole from her ... As she looked at the ...stretch of dried grass ... the prairie she felt lonely ...nged so much for her ... A light knock at the ... "I wonder who it can ...thought Mabel, as she ... wiped away her tears. ...e engaged the summer ... in this district and should ... find one of the school... if you will kindly direct ...," said a pleasant-voiced ... as Mabel opened the ...

"...me right in; papa is a ... director, and will be in ..." Miss White — the ... — felt drawn toward ... intelligent young house... The rooms were as neat ... ...x. White muslin cov... ...he walls, completely hid... ...e ugliness of the black. ... The cook stove and floor ...ere scrupulously clean. Wild ... violets and Solomon's ... which grow in Dakota ... —were blooming in tin ... the window. Before ... realized it, she had open... ... heart to her new friend, ... as pathetically telling her ... former home in the ...sland how her father ... after their circumstances ... taken up a homestead ... Dakota. "If everything ...ews it did the first two years ...re here, we would not be ... to live in this old sod... now. You are a new... Miss White, and do not know the ... ways in which we had to economize ... the drought years. Papa says its ...rful, the amount of nourishment there ... the wild grass here. Notwithstand... dry seasons, the horses and cows ...ved well upon grass alone."

"...what way do you make a living, in ...ard times?" kindly inquired the in... listener. "We sell a great many ... of butter, and dozens of eggs, and ...gh we do not get a good price for ..., it furnishes a living. Harry, ... and I, have saved every penny we ...arn toward building a frame house. ... and I have raised chickens for ... : we earned twenty-five dollars in ...ay. Then, one good year, we picked ...oseberries and plums—on a govern... ...laim in a gulch — and sold them at ...es and made five dollars. Then a ... or gave Maud a little pig, which she ... weeds for all summer, and gave him ... of milk. When he was full grown ... old him for ten dollars; and our little ... m called it her house-money, and in... upon its being put with the rest, so ...e we have forty dollars laid up. Papa ...use a cent of it, though he needs it ... at times."

"...you do all the house-work alone?" ... Miss White. "Oh! no; papa and ... do the the churnings, and help with the washings. The sewing troubles me the most. I can't make my dresses look right." "Here is a chance for a King's daughter to do something in His name," thought Miss White. "Could I engage board with you for three months? I assure you I would make little trouble, and I like simple fare best."

Mabel was radiant at the prospect. It was finally arranged that Mabel should board the teacher, if her father had no objection. "I must tell papa about it," she said as she excused herself and ran out to the barn where her father had just come. "Oh! papa I have taken the school teacher to board, if you will agree. She will help manage the work so that I can go to school, and will pay ten dollars per month for board," exclaimed Mabel as she ran breathlessly into the barn. "Mabel, dear, you may do as you please, and we will try to spare part of the thirty dollars you earn, toward your frame house fund," was the reply. "We have had many hardships since the drought," thought the overburdened father as he watched his daughter trip away. "Surely God is good to us. We always have something to be thankful for; and I count my plucky children my greatest blessing." KATIE B. MCNEIL.

A PILGRIMS' REST-HOUSE AND BATH, BY THE WAYSIDE, JAPAN.

***

"Rough" Children.

Some boys, and not seldom those of well-to-do families, pride themselves on being rough. They think it indicates manliness. On the contrary, it shows a small, low nature. It has a bad influence on your associates, and, at the same time, well-bred boys will avoid your society. It is said that Benjamin Franklin, when he was a workman, reformed the habits of the entire shop. The results of good or bad manners are almost incredible. Your manners, to a certain degree, indicate your character, and you are judged by them. To be sure, a boy may sometimes be gruff outwardly who has a kind heart, but you will find that that kind heart will keep him from being boorish; and yet how much better he would succeed in the world if his manners were more gracious and cordial! The learned metaphysician, Locke, was writing about his son's education to Lord Peterborough. He said: "Your Lordship would have your son a thorough scholar, but I would have mine well-bred and well-tempered."

***

Travelers' Rest-Houses in the East.

Throughout the East, where facilities for travel are still exceedingly primitive, public consideration for the comfort of weary pilgrims has expressed itself in the erection of odd-looking structures that are known as "rest-houses." In China, Japan, India, Siam, and even Tibet, such structures are found judiciously distributed over the long and difficult mountain trails and across the valleys between. Here the traveler may at least find water, and also a roof to cover his head. The "rest-house" is usually a cheap structure of reeds laid upon heavy beams, and enclosed with sufficient strength to afford protection from wild beasts as well as shelter from storm. One of these rude buildings is shown in the photograph on this page, being a "rest-house" on a mountain road in Japan. In this instance it possesses the additional luxury of a bath, wherein the footsore and tired traveler may refresh himself after his toilsome journey. It must be confessed, however, that the bath-tub, like the house itself, is primitive to a degree that cannot be appreciated by Europeans or Americans trading in Japan. Such places are indications of the existence of a humane feeling on the part of the people, and doubtless afford protection to many.

***

Children in the Morning.

Children will wake up early in the morning, writes Dr. Talmage. Perhaps you have been disturbed in the night, and gone wandering around the room in your somnolent state, as much confused as ourselves on one occasion, when, at midnight we heard a croupy cough in the nursery, and give the ipecac to the wrong baby. Just as you begin your last morning nap, you hear a stir in the adjoining room. The trundle-bed is evidently discharging a lot of bare feet on the floor. You hear suppressed laughter at the door, slipping out into an occasional shout as one of them applies the force of a tickle to the bottom of the other's feet. You are provoked to be interrupted at such unseasonable hours, and proclaim children a nuisance. You are glad that the door is locked. But they rattle the knob. They blow through the keyhole. They push slips of paper under the door, and, getting more and more bold, they knock. Ten fingers, tipped with the rosy tints of the morn, are running races up and down the panel. Your indignation begins to cool, and your determination not to admit is giving way. The noise of fingers is intermingled with the stroke of dimpled fists. At last you open the door, and there bursts in a snow-flurry of night-gowns, and they bound along, brunette and blonde, wild as young Arabs. The lock that would have confounded burglar, and the bolt that strongest hand could not have broken, flew oped at the touch of the tip-end of a baby's finger.

***

MUSIC AND ANIMALS.

ALMOST everybody knows how wonderfully domestic animals are affected by musical sounds, but few have seen the results of any experiment on wild beasts. Not long ago, Mr. Cornish, a scientific gentleman, went to the Zoological Gardens in London, and played upon his violin to an audience of insects, reptiles and beasts. He records the results as most remarkable. The tarantulas listened, or did not listen, unmoved and sulky. The scorpions became agitated, and wreathed and danced tumultuously, their excitement increasing with every crescendo and decreasing with each diminuendo. The monitor lizard listened and swayed its head in time with the music. Black snakes were attentive, and started up and hissed at every discord. A boa crept as close as possible to the instrument, and seemed enraptured. The cobra on hearing the violin, raised itself on its tail, spread its hood, and gently swayed to and fro. At a tremolo passage it puffed its body out. At a bagpipe "drone" its hood was expanded to the utmost, and at every sharp discord it flinched as if it had been struck with a stick.

The polar and grizzly bears stood up at the front of the cage to listen, and flinched at discord. The wolves snarled and cowered in abject fear at the sound of the violin. So with the jackals and foxes. As for sheep, they naturally found pleasure in that which frightened the wolves. So did the wild hogs, the bisons, and the zebras. The elephant did not like it, but snorted and whistled with rage. The monkeys listened eagerly, with nods and other gestures of appreciation. The only animals that were entirely indifferent were the seals.

***

Children as Questioners.

It is to the parent that a child ought to be privileged to come in unrestrained freeness as a questioner. Both the mother and the father should welcome from a child any question that the child honestly desires an answer to. And every parent ought to set apart times for a child's free questioning, when the child can feel that the hour is as sacred to that purpose as the hour of morning and evening devotion is sacred to prayer. It may be just before breakfast, or just after, or at the close of the day, that the father is to be always ready to answer his child's special questions. It may be when the father and child walk out together, or during the quieter hours of Sunday, that the child is sure of his time for questioning his father. The mother's surest time for helping her child as a questioner, is at the child's bed-time; although the child may be free to sit by her side when she is sewing, or to stand near her when she is busy about other household matters, and to question her while she is thus working. Whenever the child's hour for questioning arrives the parent ought to feel bound to give to the child's every question a loving and well-considered answer.

Feed Them Properly

and carefully; reduce the painfully large percentage of infant mortality. Take no chances and make no experiments in this very important matter. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has saved thousands of little lives.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

"[illegible] BRAVE WOMAN."

CHAPTER VI.

Sergei says Farewell

THE morning after her reception Countess Olga Navrotska rose tired and out of sorts.

It was by no means the first time that this feeling of weariness had prostrated her. Perhaps it was hardly so much weariness as dissatisfaction with her surroundings that worried her, but she hated sitting down to find out which it was. She hated introspection, for she felt that in her case it would only reveal a very empty life, and that candor with herself could only result in making her more miserable still. She knew herself to be the slave of her surroundings, of her conventional friends, and their ways of life and thought, and with all her undoubted courage and resource she dreaded any break with them which would get her talked about and misrepresented, or bring upon her the ridicule of the world in which she lived.

"If I only had strength to rise above it all?" she sighed to herself that April morning. "If only I had some one to whom I could open my heart, and tell how empty it is, and how I long to have it filled with some great sympathies, some great love, some great work, that would get me out of and away from myself!"

She went over to her book-case and took out a French life of St. Catherine of Siena, and an English life of St. Francis of Assisi, and turned over their pages and shook her head.

"That is not what I want," she said to herself, "that is all mediæval and far away—oh, so far away! How would that suit St. Petersburg? Not at all. People's wants are so numerous and complicated nowadays."

But she read on and grew interested in the simple lives of Italian peasants, in the details of Catherine's home life, in those very simple desires and aims respecting which St. Petersburg society knew little, and cared less. And then came an inexpressible longing to get away from the distractions of the city, from folly and fashion and from all the futilities of her past life, a longing to lead a natural life among the simple people on the steppe, whose hearts were still soft, whose tongues were still single, whose eyes were often lifted above the earth and earthly things, whose life, no matter how sordid its ways and how [illegible] might seem to the mere worldling, yet in her eyes bore dewdrops and lustre that the sun illuminated at times.

"Ah, the consecrating powers of nature!" she thought, "[illegible]"

The Countess was a woman who could speedily make up her mind when she liked. She decided to leave St. Petersburg as soon as possible, and her decision was made without a pang; indeed a great rushing feeling of relief came over her as though some heavy load had been lifted from her heart. There was a great ball at the Winter Palace that had been looked forward to, a reception at a Grand Duchess's, a banquet at an ambassador's, all of which she had either arranged or had promised to attend, but she incontinently threw them all over, and only thought of her Krasnaya Balka, the great farm near Kief where she had beautiful gardens and orchards and hundreds of peasants' cottages full of people whom she would try to love with her whole heart.

Krasnaya Balka, she reflected, was only a short day's drive from Kief, and not half that distance from Slavo. She thought long about the holy city, and wondered whether she would not visit some of the shrines there before she settled in Krasnaya Balka. She decided she would, and felt sorry that her heart hitherto seemed to have had all thoughts of holy things banished from it. And when she thought of her neighborhood to Slavo it was with a queer undefined feeling in her heart. She had been over to the Alekhins' village several times already, and knew some of the peasants there—Mikhail Kulmenko among others. She was interested in the Stundists, and had been quick to perceive the natural and moral differences between them and the other villagers. It was part of her plans for the future to see more of them. But there was something else that stirred her. Vladimir and Sergei would probably be there sometimes, and they would come over to see her at Krasnaya Balka. She had a curiosity to watch Vladimir, and notice any improvement in his disposition and conduct. She felt, besides, more than interested in Sergei's strong character, and wished to see him among his own people, and she knew he loved them and had determined to come oftener among them.

It was when she went next day to say good-bye to Colonel and Mrs. Pevtsoff that the Countess first heard that war had been declared against Turkey, and that the dragoons were to go to the front, the Alekhins' regiment as well. The Countess quickly caught the prevailing contagion, and her enthusiasm for the Czar and the cause which he had espoused, knew no bounds.

"How noble, how good of him!" she thought; "Russia will now show to Europe that in deed and in truth she has the welfare of her co-religionists at heart, and that it is not selfishness or deep-laid schemes of self-aggrandizement which urge her on."

She was very patriotic, and believed in her country and its destiny. The news of the declaration of hostility hastened her departure. She could not bear to stay on and see the anxious weeping women and the departing officers, so she hurried on to Kief intending to pray for them all.

What a resting place she found Krasnaya Balka. It was a farm left to her by her late husband—his favorite country retreat on which he had lavished great wealth and considerable taste. A few mornings after her arrival she went out for the first time. Everything was fresh and bright and green, and she let the emotions begotten by the entire tranquility of the scene filter into her soul. There were long alleys of noble trees, and broad stretches of half-wild lawn, and an English garden, with old brown brick walls around it, supporting fruit trees ablaze with blossom. Opening into the garden were little wrought-iron wickets that were rusty, and creaked on their hinges, but they were beautiful, and the Countess knew it.

She ran down to the lake, and looked at the stately swans sailing on it, and she stood before the old marble sun-dial, comparing its record with her watch. She smiled up at the mossy-coated marble garden nymphs scattered here and there; she chatted with the gardeners at their work.

Krasnaya Balka seemed somehow new to her this morning; she had never found it half so interesting before, and her heart danced as a child's heart dances when he is realizing some long looked-for happiness, and can hardly believe it is real yet.

Ah, it was not altogether the English garden and its apple-blossom, nor the lake with its proud swans that filled the Countess's heart with so much pleasure and joy in life. Perhaps these sweet and gracious things had great share in it, but there was something else that had a greater share still. A gloom that would not lift had settled upon her immediately on reaching Krasnaya Balka, and here it was lifted at last, and by such insignificant means that she laughed to herself as she thought of it. It was a little note in her pocket which she had received late on the previous night that had banished her gloom, rousing her to life and action, and filling her heart with sensations which were as yet inscrutable, and whose existence was unimagined. In the note itself there was not much. It ran thus:

"DEAR COUNTESS:—When I called at your house in Petersburg to say good-bye, I was told that you had gone to Krasnaya Balka. Will you please not take it as an intrusion if I call to-morrow morning? Volodia and I arrived at Slavo last night with uncle. Yours, SERGEI ALEKHIN."

"P. S.—Volodia and I leave for the front the day after to-morrow."

Yes, she would be glad to see Sergei—his frank, genial ways always did her good. She knew, besides, that under a somewhat careless and lazy exterior he owned qualities of heart and head that were as rare as they were valuable. She had seen more of Vladimir than of his brother. She had met him everywhere in society, and in her society moods she had always sought him to be entertained by his bright and witty talk, and his caustic judgments on men and men's foibles. Sergei she never met in this way. He hated balls and parties, and never would learn to dance. He had an idea that he looked thoroughly silly and ungainly when threading the mazes of some intricate cotillion. He despised heartily the ideas and ideals of society, and when he wanted relaxation or pleasure, he found it in long gallops in the parks or suburbs, in an hour's hard work at his table, rather than a heated ball-room at midnight amidst the silly; worldly talk

Continued on page 549.

DISFIGURING HUMOURS

Prevented by

Cuticura SOAP when all Else Fails

CUTICURA SOAP purifies and beautifies the skin, scalp, and hair by restoring to healthy activity the CLOGGED, INFLAMED, IRRITATED, SLUGGISH, or OVERWORKED PORES.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

Buy Comfort Powder. What for?

For Chafing, Nettle rash, Smarting feet, Itching, Sunburn, Fetid sweat, Eczema, Insect bites, and all Inflammation.

Comfort Powder is a quick cure. It is the summer medicine box.

THE COMFORT POWDER CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

Send four cents in stamps for sample.

From Infancy

My daughter was troubled with scrofula. A swelling formed in one of her ears and br[illegible] open. It discharged freely and the whole [illegible] of her head became affected. The trouble [illegible] tinued ten years and she lost the hearin[illegible] that ear. After an attack of typhoid fever [illegible] was left very weak. She coughed and ra[illegible] a great deal. We resorted to Hood's Sa[illegible] parilla and after taking six bottles she [illegible] greatly improved. Now the sores are perfe[illegible] healed and she has good hearing in that e[illegible]

MRS. M. WILKINSON, Parham, Tenn.

Hood's Sarsaparil[illegible]

Is the Only True Blood Purifier prominent [illegible] the public eye. $1; six for $5. Prepared [illegible] by C. I. Hood & Co., Apothecaries, Lo[illegible] Mass., U. S. A.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with H[illegible] Sarsaparilla.

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

Bookkeeper, New York.—Am confined t[illegible] desk eight hours a day. Suffer extremely [illegible] indigestion; bad breath; constipated, latter a[illegible] Please prescribe.

Use Gastrine, teaspoonful after each r[illegible] Eat less food of starchy nature. Nathro[illegible] Salts each morning before breakfast: [illegible] week. Rise earlier and take a walk b[illegible] breakfast.

J. J. B., New York.—Am troubled with n[illegible] gia and pains in the back of my head, gen[illegible] after I get up in the morning; am also consti[illegible] What would you advise?

Take one Febricide Pill, three times [illegible] for two weeks. Teaspoonful of Nathro[illegible] Salts, in a half-tumbler of hot water, on [illegible] twice a week a half-hour before breakfas[illegible]

James Doty, New York.—Gastrine, one [illegible] spoonful three times a day, after meals.

Wm., J. C.—I am troubled with pains in my h[illegible] especially when I walk fast or run.

Take Cardine, extract of the heart, in t[illegible] drop doses, on the tongue, twice daily.

J. P. B., Washington.—There is no b[illegible] remedy inside or outside of a drug sto[illegible] dyspepsia than Gastrine. It cures!

W. T. PARKER, M.

Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACTS.

CEREBRINE, From the Brain. MEDULI[illegible] From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, From [illegible] Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE.

Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drachms. [illegible]

GASTRINE.

A new and valuable remedy for dyspepsia, [illegible]

FEBRICIDE PILLS

For MALARIAL AFFECTIONS, NEURALGIA and [illegible] HEADACHE. 50 [illegible]

NATHROLITHIC SALTS

For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of the L[illegible] and Inaction of the Liver, 50 [illegible]

At all Druggists, or from

COLUMBIA CHEMICAL CO.,

Send for Literature. (177) Washington, [illegible]

FREE

We Direct Specia[illegible] tention to the [illegible] lowing Remark[illegible] Statement:

For many years I su[illegible] rom Catarrh of the head[illegible] throat, which destroyed [illegible] hearing, and for twenti[illegible] years I was so deaf that I could not [illegible] stand conversation at all. Could not [illegible] clock strike by holding my ear against [illegible] had tried every known remedy, and n[illegible] had ever given me the slightest relief. [illegible] summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatmen[illegible] had not used it three weeks until my h[illegible] began to improve, and has steadily impr[illegible] ever since, and now I can hear comm[illegible] versation across a room without diffi[illegible] can hear a clock strike in an adjoining r[illegible] 30 feet away, with the door closed, [illegible] think I am entirely cured and my hearin[illegible] permanently restored. I urge all who are af[illegible] as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatmen[illegible]

EDWIN COLEMAN, Box 585, Wichita, [illegible]

Medicine for Three Months' Treatment [illegible]

To introduce the treatment and prov[illegible] beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for [illegible] ness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Dise[illegible] I will, for a short time, send Medicine [illegible] three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinna[illegible] O.

WONDER CABINET FREE. [illegible]

INGERSOLL & BRO. 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

of the sinful, worldly people to be found ...

...mong all the crowd of people whom ... knew in St. Petersburg, there was ... one to whom he felt drawn, and who ... certain was better than her surround... He thought of her often, and always ... a glow in his heart. Sometimes a ...ng for her akin to pity seized posses... of him, and he wished that he could so ...ntrude upon her as to hint that there ... grander views of life and conduct to ...h she might attain. But Sergei never ...ed so bold an attitude towards the ...tiful Countess, and as he felt he could ... and dare not interfere with her and ... the life he thought she had marked ... for herself, he kept away from her cir... the risk of being thought uncivilized. In addition there was some sort of pride, a ... pride if you will, which kept him ... from the Countess. He was poor, ...ld general dealing out a most niggard ...ance to him in order that Vladimir ... t live in affluence. He knew that the ...mous wealth of the Countess was per... a more tempting bait to the crowd of ... who surrounded her than her exquisite ...y and the supreme qualities of heart ...intellect with which she was undoubt...nd ...ved.

"...h, if she were only as poor as I am," ...ght the young soldier, "better still if ...ere ...er!"

...never once wished to be as rich as ...as. When he called at the great pal... on the Nevsky Prospect to say good-... and heard that she had gone to Kras... Balka, he felt relieved. He hated the ...ind the city life, and he believed that ... Navrotska in the country and among ...villagers would have opportunity for ...shing the growth of the great powers ...ood which the city only stunted or ...sickly. He would see her in the coun... thought, and before he said good-... perhaps forever—for who could tell ...rtune of war?—he would seek to put ... higher ideals before her than these ... ambitions and empty futilities which ...been forced so much upon her in St. ...burg.

...of such thoughts he rode slowly up ...ing avenue of beeches at Krasnaya ... to the house. One or two peasants ...t took off their caps and bowed low ... passed. He had a few cheery words ...em, and his request that they might ...heir caps on doubtless excited some ...se in their minds. He looked long and ... at the low rambling house at the ...f the alley. It was a beautiful old ... Great elms and beeches, just com... to leaf, sheltered the house behind; to ...ght lay the English garden and the ...re grounds, to the left the lawn ... down to the artificial lake. Sergei, al... his was so simple a nature, had the ...prehensile eye of the artist, and when ...w a beautiful girlish figure in some ...olored dress coming through the fan...-wrought iron wicket, carrying a long ... of blossom, and the apple trees inside ...rden spreading their shoots partly ... the opening, something moved him ... had never felt moved before.

...sprang from his horse, and they met ...asped hands, and her lucent eyes ... and smiled up at the clear strong ... the young officer.

"...gei Alexeitch!"

"...ga Pavlovna!"

"...e been expecting you all the morn... thought you would have come earlier. ...Kolya will take your horse. Won't ...me in? You're tired after your long ...

"...a bit, Countess, I assure you. Vas... a shoe when we were only half-way ...d that accounts for the delay; I did ... to ride him hard. Would you mind ... I say that out here, in this bright ...ne, is infinitely preferable to indoors?"

"...ink you're right. Let us go into the ... I was actually trying to do some ... of the apple trees when I heard the ...f your horse, and came out to meet ...

...ne went again through the iron ... with the apple blossom hanging ... and Sergei bowed his head low and ...l her. She led him to a garden seat ...made of a tall arbor-vitæ. He will ...rget how the perfume of the brave ...lets on the bank at his feet seemed ...de the air.

...hen he tried several times to lead ...versation into a channel that would ...n the opportunity he desired: but it ... as though the Countess resolutely sought to thwart him. At last, in despair, he abandoned the diplomatic method of leading up to what he wanted to say.

"Countess," he broke out, "I came to say good-bye. We leave to-morrow, Volodia and I. The regiment is to form in Kisheneff in a week from to-day. Olga Pavlovna,"—Sergei's voice trembled a little—"do not remember against me any of my rudeness. I'm sure you must have thought me ungrateful for so persistently refusing all the kind invitations you sent me during the winter."

"Indeed I do not. You employed your time to far better purpose. Don't let us talk any more of St. Petersburg, I hate it."

"Well, Countess, besides that terrible wrenching 'Good-bye,' I have just one word more, and then I'll go away. I must go at once. Be a good brave woman . . ."

Olga Navrotska's head dropped and turned away, and her eyes grew moist.

"You are good and brave. I know that, Countess. But people want your help so much, and I want you to help them. A word from you, and they are your slaves to make or mar them. Do not, I implore you, fritter away your fresh youth and your great powers in the distractions of society. There is so much to be done. Yes, I feel I am offending you, but I cannot help it. Countess, Countess, do you remember what we are to live for—for the poor, the humble, the neglected, the broken-hearted? God bless you, Olga, God bless you, and think of me sometimes."

He rose and seized the hand that lay on the bench beside him, and kissed it, and then kissed it again and again. He turned and strode along the path out under the apple-blossom and came to Kolya walking his horse. Mounting it, he rode away homewards across the sunny steppe.

Olga cried after him, but he did not hear. She cried, "Oh, Sergei, Sergei, stay and help me!"

(To be continued.)

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sale more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Don't ask your dealer what chimney to get for your burner or lamp. The "Index to Chimneys" tells. It is equally useful to you and to him.

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Pearl-glass and pearl-top chimneys last as a teacup lasts.

Fits, Spasms, Epilepsy,

The most frequent cause of these frightful nervous disorders, is chronic headache. The attacks vary in intensity from a sudden dizziness or partial loss of consciousness; to the severer form of convulsions and insensibility. Dr. Miles' Nervine will cure them. Sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit or money returned. Book on Nervous disorders free. Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Restores ...Health

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use-Tweezing etc: Invaluable and Indispensable: Soft Light. Antiseptic. Deodorant, and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for circulars; agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO., 56 Broadway, New York.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

To Readers of The Christian Herald.

As many people have expressed great satisfaction with the Crayon Portraits obtained by coupons which have appeared in the leading New York papers, The Favorite Photograph and Portrait Studio agree to furnish for a limited time only a free hand life-size Crayon Bust, with a handsome burnished carved gilt frame—size 20x24 outside, and 16x20 inside. The regular price of the same with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD CRAYON PORTRAIT COUPON is $15

HOW TO GET THIS CRAYON PORTRAIT.

Cut out this coupon below and enclose it with a photograph, tin type, or good daguerreotype, etc., of the person—head or whole—a cabinet picture you desire, and a deposit of one dollar. In eight or ten days we will send you by express a life-size crayon bust, with elegant frame complete, like cut, with privilege of examination before you pay the balance due of $4.50 on your Crayon Portrait and the express charges.

If not satisfactory, we cheerfully return your deposit. Send Coupon to

THE FAVORITE PHOTOGRAPH AND . . . PORTRAIT STUDIO . . .

17 Union Square, - New York.

Near Tiffany's

CUT OUT THIS COUPON.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 21, 1895.

Send your photograph and this Christian Herald Coupon to THE FAVORITE PHOTOGRAPH AND PORTRAIT STUDIO, 17 Union Square, near Tiffany's, New York, who will make for the holder of this coupon one fine hand life-size Crayon Portrait bust, with Elegant Burnished Carved Gilt Frame—size 20x24—for $5.50, on deposit of $1.00; balance due when Crayon is delivered, with privilege of examination. $5.50

NAME_____

Good only until Sept. 21, 1895. ADDRESS_____

Order today, as the Crayon Portrait Coupon may not appear again.

400 Consumptives Cured

By using Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

Send 25 cents for Treatise on Consumption, containing interesting accounts of nearly all the above cases, and the late Rev'd C. H. SPURGEON'S hearty endorsement of the treatment: or Treatise will be sent free with Trial Bottle, size by mail $1.25. Other sizes, $2.25, $4.25 and $8.25.

and London, England. GEO. T. CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York.

Five Cents Per Cake

COCO TRADE MARK.

The Perfect Soap

At your dealers.
Made only by
The N. K. Fairbank Company,
Chicago, New York, St. Louis.

Spencerian Steel Pens.

For THIRTY-FIVE YEARS have maintained their superiority for

Quality of Metal, Workmanship, Uniformity, Durability.

Sample card, 12 PENS, different numbers, for all styles of writing, sent on receipt of 4 CENTS in postage stamps.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
450 Broome St., New York.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.

We will give $200.00 in gold to any one who will sell within the next three months [illegible] or Tales of Christian American Women. One of the most popular books ever published. Over 15,000 copies already sold. Agents sell from 10 to 15 copies a day. Beautifully illustrated. Freight paid and credit given. Complete canvassing outfit and full information 25 cents.

$100.00 BICYCLE GIVEN to any one who will send us copies of two books. Agents with the largest sale of the prizes also get liberal commission.

Best book published for the Holidays.

We offer the most liberal rates on other books and Bibles. Write at once.

R. H. WOODWARD COMPANY,
BALTIMORE, MD.

NEW MUSIC.

COSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN, and STEBBINS. Now in use at the Northfield Summer Conferences. Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts

HIGHEST PRAISE. By W. A. OGDEN. $30 per 100; Sample Copy, 25 cts.

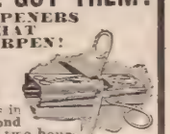
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

AT LAST WE'VE GOT THEM!

SHARPENERS THAT SHARPEN!

Agents Wanted

Price 35c. by Mail.



You can get better results in two minutes with a Diamond Knife Sharpener than with two hours hard work on a steel or stone.

NO MORE DULL SHEARS! You can make the most [illegible] with our Diamond Scissors Sharpener that we warrant. For barbers, shears, and every woman in the land. [illegible]

DIAMOND CUTLERY CO., 62 B'way N. Y. City.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this ad. and 15c. in stamps and we will mail you one quarter lb. Sample of Best Tea Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INDUCEMENTS—Big Premiums & Commissions. The Great American Tea Co. P.O. Box 289, 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Conference Service and Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Aug. 11, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends. E., [illegible] for the conversion of her husband.——"Reader," [illegible] for the conversion of her husband.——"Reader," [illegible] that God would save her husband.——"Reader," [illegible] for the conversion of her husband.——"Reader," [illegible] for the conversion of her husband.——"Reader," [illegible] for the conversion of

WHAT ONE TRACT DID.

e following is related as illustrating may be accomplished through little s: A son of one of the chiefs of Burdwas converted by a single tract. He not read but he went to Rangoon, a ce of two hundred and fifty miles. A sionary's wife taught him to read, and fty-eight hours he could read the tract
gh. He took a basketful of tracts, much difficulty preached the Gospel home, and was the means of cong hundreds to God. He was a man luence. The people flocked to hear and in one year 1500 natives were ed in Arracan as members of the . All this through one little tract!
ract cost one cent.

---

w Kidney and Bladder Cure.

w botanic discovery Alkavis, is an assured kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back matism. The best proof is that the Church Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New ill send you treatment by mail prepaid free.
end them your name and address. Alkavis ainly wrought some wonderful cures, and we ur readers to try it, as it is offered free.

---

women should stop and consider the dangers threaten them because of their weaknesses of ambition. Hood's Sarsaparilla will pur-and give strength.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

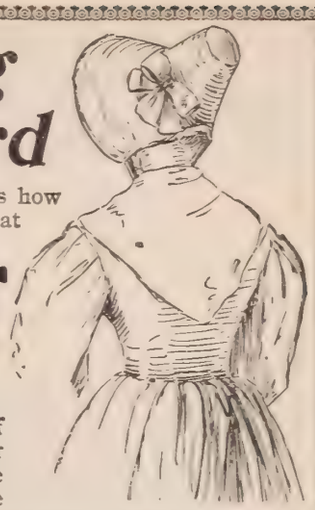
Formula on Every Bottle.

Looking Backward

to the good old days one wonders how the colonial housewife succeeded at all without



GOLD DUST Washing Powder

This famous preparation is one of the greatest boons science has ever given woman. It has been the means of giving her the leisure she rightfully deserves. There are thousands of thoughtful, thrifty housewives to-day who would hardly know how to begin without the aid of GOLD DUST. Get a package and look backward to the days of hard work. Sold everywhere. Price, 25 cents.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,

Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, China, Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Guarantee Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalogue.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illustrated Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We advise you to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the supply.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK.

Leaders of Fashion

Endorse Fibre Chamois as the best support for puffed sleeves and flare skirts in the market.

CAUTION—Beware of imitations. The genuine article is plainly stamped . . . . . .

Fibre Chamois

All dry goods stores. Three weights.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

TRADE + AMOLIN + MARK
the only
Odorless Antiseptic
Dress Shield
PAT. JAN. 7 1892

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

A new coal tar product.)

The Only odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.

A New soothing, healing, antiseptic

Remedy for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

Do You Knit, or do other Fancy Work? Crochet

If so, ask your dealer for the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread or send ten cents in stamps and receive a sample spool, 500 yards, by mail. You will pronounce it as thousands of other ladies have, the best you have ever used. Try it.

Glasgo Lace Thread Co.,
Glasgo, Conn.

Pins of Stiffness

You can drive a Puritan Pin through a plank—pull it out and put it through another plank.

If you can't buy them at your store, send three 2 cent stamps to American Pin Company, Waterbury, Conn.

SIDE COMBS.

These are coin silver triple plate side combs 2¼ in. long by 1 in. wide. Very fashionable and great value. Sample pair, by mail, 36 cents (postage stamps taken). Address LYNN & Co., 48 Bond St., New York City.

FREE Piano and Organ Book. Grand Art Portfolio. All latest and best styles. Organs from $25 up, and Pianos $169 up. Shows how to buy from factory and save 50 per ct. If interested book sent free. Free trial in your home and credit given. Estab'd 30 years. Instruments warranted 25 years. Write for book to-day. CORNISH & CO., Washington, N. J.

CRIPPLES, Ladies and girls, if you want air or exercise, buy a FAIRY TRICYCLE CHEAP FOR ALL.

Pine St., Elyria, O.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

ABDOMINAL BELTS for Corpulency and Umbilical Rupture. Immediate relief and solid comfort. Write for particulars and prices.
I. B. SEGLEY & CO.,
25 S. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DROPSY TREATED FREE

Cured with Vegetable Remedies Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. In 10 days at least ⅔ of all symptoms are removed. Book of testimonials of cures and 10 days treatment free by mail. Drs. Green & Sons, Atlanta, Ga.

FREE As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, etc. N. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

SICK HEADACHE AND BILLIOUS ATTACKS.
My remedy will absolutely and permanently eradicate the disposition to them from the system. Simple, harmless, and never fails. Send 25c for a package.
HENRY HOSS, 2d and Main Sts., Kansas City, Mo.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

To cleanse matting, use four tablespoonfuls of Ivory Soap shavings and a handful of salt to a pailful of warm water. Rub the matting with a cloth or sponge well squeezed out.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

LIKE FLYING

UNEQUALLED UNAPPROACHED

COLUMBIA BICYCLES

$100

BOSTON, NEW YORK, CHICAGO, BUFFALO, PROVIDENCE, SAN FRANCISCO.

HARTFORD BICYCLES $40, $60, $50.

POPE M'F'G CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

CATALOGUE FREE FROM ANY AGENT, OR BY MAIL FOR TWO 2CT. STAMPS.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.

They never fail. Read this testimonial

Messrs. J. F. SMITH & Co.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 18 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD.

Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R.I.

J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N.Y.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

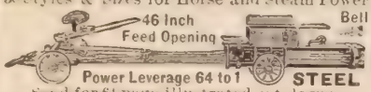
NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power



Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Hand-made Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty.

KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego, N.Y.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

ONLY 99c

FORMERLY SOLD FOR $9

FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD.

SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, and a GOLD PLATED BOWL, each spoon representing a different building on World's Fair. The handles are finely carved likeness of head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and inscription "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, and in the future will be valuable as collectors' articles. Sold during the Fair for $9.00. Now, while the introduction of this souvenir is new, ONLY 99 CENTS. Send by express, prepaid, postal note, money order or draft on New York Exchange. Remit by express, prepaid, postal note, money order or draft on New York Exchange. If goods are not satisfactory, return at our expense, and we will refund your money.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5, 152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE.

Bear in Mind that "The Gods help those who help themselves." Self help should teach you to use

SAPOLIO

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

Only rounded spoonfuls are required, not heaping ones

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

A Great Bargain

$3.75 FOR $1.75

So many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN [illegible] have requested us to make another special [illegible] the magnificent

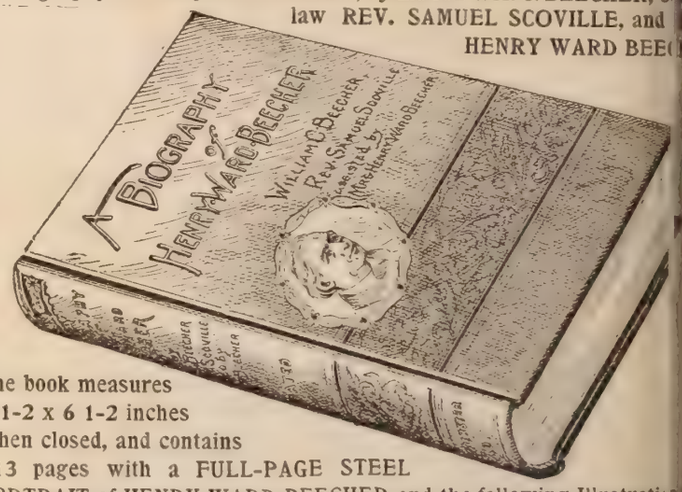
Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, that we have concluded to offer the balance of stock of this interesting Life of the Great [illegible] (only a few hundred copies,) at

—HALF-PRICE.—

A Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, by his son WM. C. BEECHER; [illegible] law REV. SAMUEL SCOVILLE, and [illegible] HENRY WARD BEECHER



The book measures
9 1-2 x 6 1-2 inches
when closed, and contains
713 pages with a FULL-PAGE STEEL
PORTRAIT of HENRY WARD BEECHER and the following Illustrations:

1. Anvil and Oak Stump.
2. Foote Coat-of-Arms.
3. Church in which Lyman Beecher preached, in East Hampton, L. I.
4. Beecher Residence at Litchfield.
5. Room in which Mr. Beecher was born.
6. Elms and Well which mark the Site of the "Beecher House" in Litchfield.
7. Facsimile of the first Letter of Mr. Beecher.
8. Ingersoll House.
9. Statues in Catharine Beecher's House in Hartford.
10. Mr. Beecher at the time of his Marriage.
11. Mrs. Beecher at the time of her Marriage.
12. Church at Indianapolis.
13. Mr. Beecher's House at Indianapolis.
14. Mr. Beecher and his Father at time of [illegible] Brooklyn.
15. Pinky's Freedom-Ring.
16. Mr. Beecher in 1850.
17. Mr. Beecher at the close of the War.
18. Mr. Beecher and his Sister, Mrs. H. E. [illegible]
19. Cottage at Peekskill.
20. Old Apple-Tree.
21. Mr. Beecher on his Farm.
22. House at Peekskill.
23. Hall in New House at Peekskill.
24. Mr. and Mrs. Beecher at the time of [illegible] Engagement.
25. Lying in State in Plymouth Church.

Is beautifully printed on fine book paper, in large, clear type and [illegible] in Seal Leather.

So many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have taken advantage of the special price offered on these books that the various styles of binding are all sold out except SEAL LEATHER. This is a beautifully [illegible] book, with marbleized edges and has sold heretofore for $3.75.

Special Offer.

Send us $1.75, together with 25 cts. for expressage and we will send the Book at once, PREPAID.

EVERY ONE PURCHASING THE BOOK IS DELIGHTED WITH IT.

Mrs. J. Wrigley, Elmira, N. Y.: Mr. Beecher's Biography came duly at hand. I am very much pleased with it, and think it's really worth the full price.

Mrs. S. J. Davis, Rochester, N. Y.: Received the book of Henry Ward Beecher, was very much pleased with it. It commends itself. I am very much obliged.

Mrs. Henry Sterling, Conn.: [illegible] Please accept our sincere thanks for the [illegible] with which you forwarded the Biography of Henry Ward Beecher in response to our order. [illegible] ceived in good condition, and we are much [illegible] with it.

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest Express office.

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, HARNESS and Bicycles, at Factory Prices. Work guaranteed and 20 to 40 per cent saved. Our goods received the highest awards at the World's Fair. Our 1895 Mammoth Illustrated Catalogue is free to all. It shows all the latest styles and improvements and reduced prices. It has 200 pages and is the largest and most complete catalogue ever issued. Send for it. It's free. Alliance Carriage Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"A Grade, $60. Write to-day.

"A [illegible] Write to-day.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH. NUMBER 35.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York. NEW YORK, AUGUST 28, 1895. PRICE 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE GOSPEL IN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

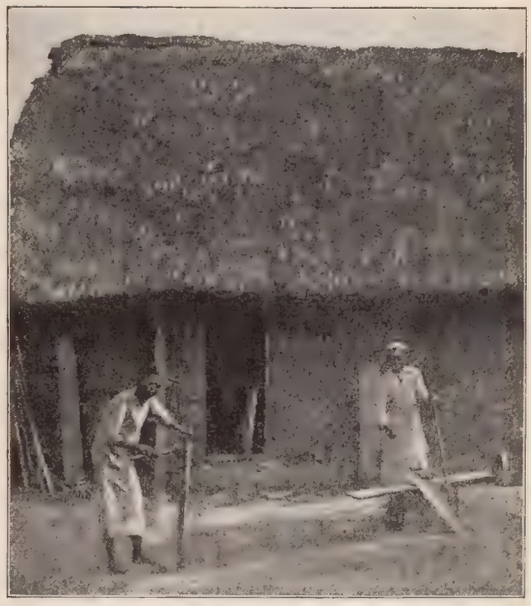
How God has Signally Blessed the Mission at Bihe — Rev. Walter T. Currie's Nine Years' Labor Bearing Precious Fruit—Many Souls Won to Christ.

ROW OF "BOYS' HOUSES" AT THE CISAMBA MISSION.

THREE years have almost passed since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave to the world the story of the planting and growth of a lonely Christian mission in the tropical African kingdom of Bihe, ev. Walter Thomas Currie, a Cana- Filled with zeal for the work, he with his young wife to carry the el message to the heathen in that t land, some ten years ago. Their s were to be conducted under the au- of the Canadian Missionary Society, ganization belonging to the Congre- al denomination, and which operates mission field through the American l of Commissioners of Foreign Mis- Bihe, their destination, is in West al Africa, south of the Equator, and us to their arrival, it had been a scene ntention, the Portuguese government g temporarily expelled the missiona- ut the quarrel afterward d, and the new laborers the field tranquil and npromising. During a at Bailundu they had d the language, and on ing their destination went ork with willing hearts an opeful spirits, looking to G for a blessing upon their labors. The site of the mission station was at Cisamba, 125 miles inland Bailundu, and their sur- lings were thus described r. Currie:

"Our cabin was eleven feet sixteen, made of boughs driven into the ground and the spaces between filled with mud, which quickly dries in that climate. There was neither window nor chimney, and the fire had to be kindled in the middle of the room, while the smoke found its way out through the roof. The people at Cisamba wanted to sell me ivory, india-rubber, bees-wax and slaves. When I refused they were surprised and wanted to know what I had come for, if not for trade. I told them I came to teach the boys. They are great traders and very intelligent, and were visited by Cameron, Arnot, Pinto and Livingstone, who in their explorations followed the roads which the Bihéans had constructed."

There was much difficulty at first in persuading the natives to allow their children to come to the mission school which Mr. Currie established, but their objections were finally overcome. "I convinced them." Mr. Currie wrote, "that I was their friend, and I formed a school of fifty boys, not one of whom has, since being under my care, drunk beer, danced at their festivals, or joined in any of the fetish rites common in the country. Their religion is a development of fetichism; they employ charms to ward off or produce rain; to protect them in war and on journeys and to cure diseases. They worship 'Suku,' an invisible god, who they believe made the earth. They have a small building which serves as a temple, and they consecrate a priest to the service of a minor god, whom they call 'Kundundu,' and also a woman to act as a prophetess." Sacrifices of goats and pigs were offered to Kundundu, and also to other minor deities of whom there were a number. The priests pretended to have direct communication with these minor gods, and their oracular utterances were regarded with great veneration by the people. Suku, however, they regarded as the supreme god of all. This was the situa- when the devoted missionaries began their labors. Mrs. Currie, already weakened by sickness shortly after her arrival, soon succumbed to the terrible African climate. Her grave is at Bailundu. But her short companionship, now a sweet and fragrant spiritual memory, infused new energy in the lonely missionary, and Mr. Currie felt himself now doubly consecrated to the work. How abundantly it has been blessed in these intervening years, and how it has expanded under his hands, may be gathered from the report received from him by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and extracts from which are given below. The hearts of the people of Bihe have been wonderfully touched, and where nine years ago there were thousands of heathen worshipping hideous idols of stone and wood, and doing all manner of wickedness, there is now a large and growing Christian community. Additional missionary workers have reinforced the mission. New mission houses have been erected, and the school facilities have been greatly extended. In the training-school the labors of the missionaries have been specially blessed, and a number of young natives who were taken into the school in the early days of the mission, have themselves become preachers and teachers of the glorious Gospel of Jesus to their kindred in Cisamba and elsewhere throughout the kingdom of Bihe. Among the photographs forwarded by Mr. Curried, and published in this issue, is one which shows a group of six native preachers of the Word, who have all been trained with a special view to the work which they are now performing with so much success. Other illustrations include a row of "boys' houses," as the comfortable dwellings of the pupils at the mission are called, a view of the mission carpenter shop, and also a glimpse of the exterior of a native pastor's home—all demonstrating, with the fidelity of the camera, how great has been the progress of these people toward civilization and right living since the Gospel came among them.



THE MISSION CARPENTER SHOP OF CISAMBA.

A NATIVE PASTOR'S HOME

SIX NATIVE PREACHERS OF CISAMBA, AFRICA.

(From Photographs Forwarded by Missionary Walter T. Currie to "The Christian Herald.")

In his report of the work for the year ending April, 1895, Mr. Currie writes:

"The year has witnessed quiet, healthy progress in every department. Mr. Read and family (new missionaries) came last July to increase our force, and thus place us in a position to meet the growing demands of the field. The supply of carriers has been very good; and we have thus been enabled to obtain materials from abroad with greater facility than during any previous year in the history of the station. We have done less building than usual. One substantial house of three rooms was erected, which now serves Mr. Read as a temporary dwelling. We are preparing to build a school-house, 30 x 70 feet inside, in memory of Mrs. Clara Wilkes Currie, and two small houses for girls in memory of Mrs.

(Continued on page 555.)

SURPASSING SPLENDOR.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: I. Cor. 2:9: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard."

"I AM going to heaven! I am going to heaven! Heaven! Heaven! Heaven!" These were the last words uttered a few days ago by my precious wife as she ascended to be with God for ever, and is it not natural, as well as Christianly appropriate, that our thoughts be much directed toward the glorious residence of which St. Paul speaks in the text I have chosen.

The city of Corinth has been called the Paris of antiquity. Indeed, for splendor, the world holds no such wonder to-day. It stood on an isthmus washed by two seas, the one sea bringing the commerce of Europe, the other the commerce of Asia. From her wharves, in the construction of which whole kingdoms had been absorbed, war-galleys with three banks of oars pushed out and confounded the navy yards of all the world. Huge-handed machinery, such as modern invention cannot equal, lifted ships from the sea on one side and transported them on trucks across the isthmus and set them down in the sea on the other side. The revenue officers of the city went down through the olive groves that lined the beach to collect a tariff from all nations. The mirth of all people sported in her Isthmian games, and the beauty of all lands sat in her theatres, walked her porticoes, and threw itself on the altar of her stupendous dissipations. Column, and statue and temple bewildered the beholder. There were white marble fountains into which, from apertures at the side, there rushed waters everywhere known for health-giving qualities. Around these basins, twisted into wreaths of stone, there were all the beauties of sculpture and architecture; while standing, as if to guard the costly display, was a statue of Hercules of burnished Corinthian brass. Vases of terra-cotta adorned the cemeteries of the dead—vases so costly that Julius Cæsar was not satisfied until he had captured them for Rome. Armed officials, the "Corinthiarii," paced up and down to see that no statue was defaced, no pedestal overthrown, no bas-relief touched. From the edge of the city a hill arose, with its magnificent burden of columns, and towers, and temples (one thousand slaves awaiting at one shrine), and a citadel so thoroughly impregnable that Gibraltar is a heap of sand compared with it. Amid all that strength and magnificence, Corinth stood and defied [illegible]

Oh! it was not to rustics who had never seen anything grand that St. Paul uttered this text. They had heard the best music [illegible] evening groves; they had passed their whole lives away among pictures, and sculpture, and architecture, and Corinthian brass, which had been molded and shaped, until there was no chariot wheel in which it had not sped, and no tower in which it had not glittered, and no gateway that it [illegible] for Paul to stand there amid all that, and say, "All this is nothing. These sounds that come from the temple of Neptune are not music compared with the harmony of which I speak. These waters rushing in the basin of Pyrene are not pure. These statues of Bacchus and Mercury are not exquisite. Yon citadel of Acrocorinthus is not strong compared with that which I offer to the poorest slave that puts down his burden at that brazen gate. You, Corinthians think this is a splendid city; you think you have heard all sweet sounds, and seen all beautiful sights; but I tell you 'eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.'"

You see my text sets forth the idea that, however exalted our ideas may be of heaven, they come far short of the reality. Some wise men have been calculating how many furlongs long and wide is heaven; and they have calculated how many inhabitants there are on the earth; how long the earth will probably stand; and then they come to this estimate: that after all the nations had been gathered to heaven, there will be a room for each soul — a room sixteen feet long and fifteen feet wide. It would not be large enough for me. I am glad to know that no human estimate is sufficient to take the dimensions. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor arithmetic calculated.

I first remark that we can in this world get no idea of the health of heaven. When you were a child, and you went out in the morning, how you bounded along the road or street—you had never felt sorrow or sickness! Perhaps later—perhaps in these very summer days—you felt a glow in your cheek, and a spring in your step, and an exuberance of spirits, and a clearness of eye, that made you thank God you were permitted to live. The nerves were harp-strings, and the sunlight was a doxology, and the rustling leaves were the rustling of the robes of a great crowd rising up to praise the Lord. You thought that you knew what it was to be well, but there is no perfect health on earth. The diseases of past generations come down to us. The airs that float now on the earth are unlike those which floated above Paradise. They are charged with impurities and distempers, The most elastic and robust health of earth, compared with that which those experience before whom the gates have been opened, is nothing but sickness and emaciation. Look at that soul standing before the throne. On earth she was a life-long invalid. See her step now and hear her voice now! Catch, if you can, one breath of that celestial air. Health in all the pulses! Health of vision; health of spirits; immortal health. No racking cough, no sharp pleurisies, no consuming fevers, no exhausting pains, no hospitals of wounded men. Health swinging in the air; health flowing in all the streams; health blooming on the banks. No head-aches, no side-aches, no back-aches. That child that died in the agonies of croup, hear her voice now ringing in the anthem! That old man that went bowed down with the infirmities of age, see him walk now with the step [illegible] forever young again! That night when the needlewoman fainted away in the garret, a wave of the heavenly air resuscitated her forever. For everlasting years, to have neither ache, nor pain, nor weakness, nor fatigue. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, that we can in this world get no just idea of the splendor of heaven. St. John tries to describe it. He says: "The twelve gates are twelve pearls," and that "the foundations of the wall are garnished with all manner of precious stones." As we stand looking through the telescope of St. John, we see a blaze of amethyst, and pearl, and emerald, and sardonyx, and chrysoprasus, and sapphire—a mountain of light, a cataract of color, a sea of glass, and a city like the sun.

St. John bids us look again, and we see thrones: thrones of the prophets, thrones of the patriarchs, thrones of the angels, thrones of the Apostles, thrones of the martyrs, throne of Jesus—throne of God. And we turn round to see the glory and it is—Thrones! Thrones! Thrones!

St. John bids us look again, and we see the great procession of the redeemed passing; Jesus, on a white horse, leads the march, and all the armies of salvation following on white horses. Infinite cavalcade passing, passing; empires pressing into line, ages following ages. Dispensation tramping on after dispensation. Glory in the track of glory. Europe, Asia, Africa, and North and South America pressing into lines. Islands of the sea shoulder to shoulder. Generations before the flood following generations after the flood, and as Jesus rises at the head of that great host and waves his sword in signal of victory, all crowns are lifted, and all ensigns flung out, and all chimes rung, and all hallelujahs chanted, and some cry, "Glory to God most high," and some "Hosanna to the Son of David;" and some, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain"—till all exclamations of endearment and homage in the vocabulary of heaven are exhausted, and there come up surge after surge of "Amen! Amen! Amen!"

"Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it." Skim from the summer waters the brightest sparkles, and you will get no idea of the sheen of the everlasting sea. Pile up the splendors of earthly cities, and they would not make a stepping-stone by which you might mount to the city of God. Every house is a palace. Every step a triumph. Every covering of the head a coronation. Every meal is a banquet. Every stroke from the tower is a wedding-bell. Every day is a jubilee, every hour a rapture, and every moment an ecstacy. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, we can get no idea on earth of the re-unions of heaven. If you have ever been across the sea, and met a friend, or even an acquaintance, in some strange city, you remember how your blood thrilled, and how glad you were to see him. What then will be our joy, after we have passed the seas of death, to meet in the bright city of the sun those from whom we have long been separated! After we have been away from our friends ten or fifteen years, and we come upon them, we see how differently they look. The hair has turned, and wrinkles have come in their faces, and we say, "How you have changed!" But oh, when you stand before the throne, all cares gone from the face, all marks of sorrow disappeared, and feeling the joy of that blessed land, methinks we will say to each other, with an exultation we cannot now imagine, "How you have changed!" In this world we only meet to part. It is good-bye, good-bye. Farewells floating in the air. We hear it at the rail-car window, and at the steamboat wharf—good-bye. Children lisp it, and old age answers it. Sometimes we say it in a light way—"good-bye;" and sometimes with anguish in which the soul breaks down. Good-bye! Ah! that is the word that ends the thanksgiving banquet; that is the word that comes in to close the Christmas chant. Good-bye! good-bye! But not so in heaven. Welcomes in the air, welcomes at the [illegible] welcomes at the house of many ma[illegible] —but, no good-bye. That group [illegible] stantly being augmented. They are [illegible] up from our circles of earth to join i[illegible] voices to join the anthem—little ha[illegible] take hold of it in the great home cir[illegible] tle feet to dance in the eternal glee[illegible] crowns to be cast down before the [illegible] Jesus. Our friends are in two gro[illegible] group this side of the river, and a gr[illegible] the other side of the river. Now the [illegible] one from this to that, and anothe[illegible] this to that, and soon we will all b[illegible] over. How many of your loved one[illegible] already entered upon that blessed pla[illegible] I should take paper and pencil, do yo[illegible] I could put them all down? Ah! my f[illegible] the waves of Jordan roar so hoarse[illegible] cannot hear the joy on the other side[illegible] their group is augmented. It is grave[illegible] and coffins and hearses here.

A little child's mother had died, an[illegible] comforted her. They said: "Your [illegible] has gone to heaven—don't cry;" a[illegible] next day, they went to the graveyar[illegible] they laid the body of the mother dow[illegible] ground; and the little girl came up[illegible] verge of the grave, and, looking d[illegible] the body of her mother, said, "Is thi[illegible] en?" Oh! we have no idea what i[illegible] is. It is the grave here—it is darkne[illegible] —but there is merry-making yonder[illegible] thinks when a soul arrives, some[illegible] takes it around to show it the won[illegible] that blessed place. The usher-ange[illegible] to the newly-arrived: "These are th[illegible] tyrs that perished at Piedmont; thes[illegible] torn to pieces at the Inquisition; thi[illegible] throne of the great Jehovah; this[illegible] sus!" "I am going to see Jesus," [illegible] dying negro boy. "I am going to [illegible] sus;" and the missionary said, "Y[illegible] sure you will see him?" "Oh! yes [illegible] what I want to go to heaven for." [illegible] said the missionary, "suppose that [illegible] should go away from heaven—what [illegible] "I should follow him," said the dy[illegible] gro boy. "But if Jesus went down [illegible] —what then?" The dying boy th[illegible] for a moment, and then he said, "I[illegible] where Jesus is there can be no hell! [illegible] to stand in his presence! That [illegible] heaven! Oh, to put our hand in tha[illegible] which was wounded for us on the C[illegible] to go around amid all the groups of [illegible] deemed, and shake hands with pr[illegible] and Apostles, and martyrs, and w[illegible] own dear, beloved ones! That will [illegible] great re-union; we cannot imagine i[illegible] our loved ones seem so far away. [illegible] we are in trouble and lonesome, they [illegible] seem to come to us. We go on the [illegible] of the Jordan and call across to the [illegible] they don't seem to hear. We say, [illegible] well with the child? Is it well wi[illegible] loved ones?" and we listen to hear [illegible] voice comes back over the waters. [illegible] none! Unbelief says, "They are de[illegible] extinct forever," but, blessed be G[illegible] have a Bible that tells us different [illegible] open it and find that they are neithe[illegible] nor extinct—that they never were so [illegible] alive as now—that they are only w[illegible] for our coming, and that we shall joi[illegible] on the other side of the river. Oh gl[illegible] reunion; we cannot grasp it now. "Ey[illegible] not seen, nor ear heard, neither ha[illegible] tered into the heart of man the things [illegible] God hath prepared for them that love [illegible]

I remark again, we can in this wo[illegible] no idea of the song of heaven. You [illegible] there is nothing more inspiriting tha[illegible] sic. In the battle of Waterloo, the [illegible] landers were giving way, and Welli[illegible] found out that the bands of musi[illegible] ceased playing. He sent a quick dis[illegible] telling them to play, with utmost sp[illegible] battle march. The music started, the [illegible] landers were rallied, and they dashed [illegible] the day was won. We appreciate the [illegible] of secular music; but do we appreci[illegible] power of sacred song? There is no[illegible] more inspiring to me than a whole c[illegible] gation lifted up on the wave of holy [illegible] dy. When we sing some of those de[illegible] psalms and tunes they rouse all the [illegible] ries of the past. Why, some of them crad-songs in our father's house. They are l sparkling with the morning dew of a housand Christian Sabbaths. They wer sung by brothers and sisters gone now —by voices that were aged and broken in the usic—voices none the less sweet because they did tremble and break. When I he these old songs sung, it seems as if all e old country meeting houses joined in the horus, and Scotch kirk and Sailor's Bet l and Western cabins, until the whole conment lifts the doxology and the sceptres of eternity beat time to the music. Aw then with your starveling tunes that chi the devotions of the sanctuary, and mu the people sit silent when Jesus is coming to hosanna.

But, my friends, if music on earth is so swe, what will it be in heaven! They all now the tune there. Methinks the tune of heaven will be made up partly from the ongs of earth: the best parts of all our hymns and tunes going to add to the song of oses and the Lamb. All the best singers f all the ages will join it—choirs of red-robed children! choirs of patriarchs! choirs of Apostles! Morning stars clapping their cymbals. Harpers with their harps. Great anthems of God, roll on! Salvation!—other empires joining the harpers till the thrones are full of it, and the mountains all saved. Anthem shall touch anthem, chorus join chorus, and all the sweet sounds of earth and heaven be poured into the ear of Christ. David of the harp will be there. Gabriel of the trumpet will be there. Germany, redeemed, will pour its deep bass voice into the song, and Africa will add to the music with her matchless voices.

I wish we could anticipate that song. I will in the closing hymns of the churches to-day we might catch an echo that slips through the gates. Who knows but that when the heavenly door opens to-day to let some soul through, there may come forth the strain of the jubilant voices until we catch it? Oh, that as the song drops down from heaven it might meet half way a song coming up from earth!

EDUCATION IN AMERICA.

In all the schools of the United States, public and private, elementary, secondary, and higher, says a statistical writer, there were enrolled in the year 1894 about 15,500,000 pupils. This number includes all who attended at any time in the year for any period, however short. But the actual average attendance for each pupil did not exceed ninety days, although the average length of the school session was 137. Sixty-nine pupils were enrolled out of each one hundred of the population between the age of five and eighteen years. At this rate of attendance the entire population is receiving on an average a little less than four and one-half years' schooling of 200 days each. In some states this average falls as low as two years, and in others it rises to nearly seven years, as in Massachusetts.

But of this entire number deduct the private and parochial schools of all kinds, elementary, secondary, higher, and schools for art, industry and business, for defective classes and Indians, and there remains only 13,500,000 for the public school enrollment, or nearly 88 per cent. of the whole. In the twenty-four years since 1870 the attendance on the public schools has increased from less than 7,000,000 to 13,500,000. The expenditures have increased somewhat more —namely from $63,000,000 to $163,000,000 per annum, an increase from $1.64 per capita to $2.47. To account for this private increase of 50 per cent. in the cost of the common schools one must allow for the slight increase in the average length of the school term, and for the increase of the enrollment from less than 17 to more than 20 per cent. of the population. But the chief items of increase are to be found in teachers' wages and the cost of expert supervision. These account for more than two-thirds of the 50 per cent., while the remaining one-sixth is due to better apparatus and more commodious school buildings.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

The Gospel in Equatorial Africa.

(Continued from first page.)

Clarke, who died here at her post two years ago.

"The boys in connection with the Industrial School have made encouraging progress in the cultivation of the soil, the management of cattle and care of domestic animals; cutting of timber, carpentry, blacksmithing, building, etc. At the threshold of the year, we were compelled to close our Dispensary in consequence of a debt of seventy dollars ($70), while the prospective grant for the year's supply of medicines was somewhat less than our debt. The cry from the natives for help at length became so loud that we could no longer turn to it a deaf ear; and believing that 'in some way or other the Lord will provide,' we reopened our Dispensary. Soon our hearts were cheered by a gift from the native Christians of Alcham, Turkey. This, together with the earnings of the Dispensary, has enabled us to do a much larger medical work than during any previous year. Sincere is our gratitude to God for the large opportunity of usefulness opened to us."

Mr. Currie's letter adds another to the rapidly accumulating proofs of the great value of medical training in foreign mission work. In Africa, as in China, Japan, India and elsewhere, missionaries who have received a medical education find their skill a frequent means of opening doors to them that would otherwise remain closed. The report continues:

"The Senior and Junior Schools for boys and girls have been conducted with marked regularity and the work done has been very satisfactory. There are now ninety-three scholars under instruction. This is a gain of twenty-four on last year. The Sunday morning prayer-meeting conducted by the pastor and officers of the church, and the Wednesday afternoon prayer-meeting have been well attended, and judging from the testimony of the young people, they have been thoroughly enjoyed and spiritually helpful. The Catechumen's Class has been attended by an average of twenty-five, and at the present time it contains twenty-one candidates for baptism. The Sunday School was reorganized last July and placed under the superintendency of Mr. Read, assisted by the lady missionaries, together with six of the young men from the teaching staff. The school is now becoming a strong arm of the work.

"The little church has improved its organization. A pastor and three deacons have been elected. Monthly church meetings are held to take counsel, pray, and plan for the work. Six members were added to it during the year. The support of a pastor and associate has in part, been assumed by the church; the young men choosing to earn the balance of their support, working side by side with the young men and boys on the station. The attendance at the Sunday morning services has been well sustained throughout the year. At these meetings, a series of sermons have been delivered by Mr. Currie and the native pastor (both preaching at each meeting), which series has carried us through most of the Acts of the Apostles, and nineteen chapters of Matthew's Gospel. We have reason to believe that the truth has not been without a healthful influence on the minds and hearts of the crowds who attend.

"The pastor and officers of the church, assisted by all the members, have conducted meetings regularly on Sunday afternoons at four out-stations. The average attendance at these services has been about two hundred a Sunday. The pastor and his associate, assisted from time to time by young men from the station, have itinerated among the villages, spending usually two days weekly throughout the year declaring to the people 'the old, old story,' and both they and their message of 'pardon and peace' have been everywhere received with favor. Mr. Read has also done evangelistic work in about sixteen districts and reports a welcome and a good hearing in nearly every place he went. In this work he has been assisted by from two to seven lads from the Industrial Department.

"In conclusion, we have to thank God for the goodwill shown to us by the people; an excellent health record, and enlarged opportunities for service. We hope with divine aid during the coming year to do more vigorous educational work; to improve the Medical Department, and to press forward with greater zeal to spread the knowledge of Christ to every village and hut within our reach."

It needs but the contrast of this picture of vigorous and successful evangelical work with that of the condition of the people of Cisamba and surrounding territory ten years ago, to convince even the most sceptical of the great value of Christian missions as civilizing agencies and for the enlightening and uplifting of the heathen world. Here, as everywhere else, brave, unselfish missionaries have been the pioneers in all good deeds: they have blazed a broad path through the African swamp, forest and jungle, and have beaten down the native idolatries and conquered the hearts of the darkened and superstitious people, not by human weapons, but by the power of Divine grace and love, as shown forth in the blessed Gospel. To such faithful workers as those devoted men and women in Bihe, who for ten years have been striving earnestly to win souls to Christ, the love and sympathy of Christians in all lands go out in glad greeting over the results accomplished, and will unite with them in the hopes of still greater spiritual triumphs yet to be won.

ONE OF THE FIRST SCHOOL-HOUSES ERECTED AT CISAMBA, AFRICA.

THE BRIGHT SPOT IN HER LIFE.

Evangelist B. Fay Mills relates this incident, which fitly illustrates the folly and emptiness of "fashionable" life:

"A gentleman who had been educated among fashionable people and had become a minister, was recently at dinner where he met one of his former acquaintances, a lady whom he had not seen in years. She spoke to him jestingly of his having become a minister of the gospel and said, 'I should think you would find it exceeding stupid; I do not see how you can bear to lead such a life.' He turned to her and said: 'I should think you would be the one who would find life stupid, and I should think you would find your existence almost intolerable.' He said that even at the table her face flushed, and he saw tears gathering in her eyes. For some time she did not make any reply. A little later, however, she sought him in another room and said: 'You were right in what you thought about my life; it is almost intolerable, and would be wholly so except for the visits that I pay to the Children's Hospital once a week. I dress myself in my brightest gown and take some of my most valuable jewels, and without telling anyone where I am going, I drive to the Children's Hospital and there try to amuse the suffering little ones for an hour. This,' she said, 'is the one thing that makes my life worth living.' It is a sure balm for the healing of all unrest and discontent, that one should give himself to the alleviation of the woes of others."

OUR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

XIII.—JAMES P. HALL.

WE hear a great deal in these days about the difficult problem of reaching the masses with the Gospel. The worker whose portrait appears in this column, has made an attempt in his own way to solve the problem and is deeply grateful to God for his success. About six years ago

MR. JAMES P. HALL.

there was an old saloon standing idle at the corner of Eighth and Vine streets, Philadelphia. It was to be removed, but for some cause the work of demolition was delayed. In standing idle the saloon had reached a gratifying stage of development, inasmuch as it had ceased to be used for evil purposes. But that was at best only a negative good, and Mr. Hall proposed to advance it another stage and make the good positive and active. He persuaded the owner to let him have the building for Gospel services so long as it should remain standing. The first meeting was held in it on the evening of Thanksgiving Day, 1889. It was an appropriate time and a few Christian people gathered there to inaugurate the movement. The old walls, which had echoed obscenity and profanity in days gone by, that evening almost trembled with the joyful singing and the earnest prayers put up within them. At that time it was supposed that the building could be used for its new purpose, at the most for only a few weeks. But, as Mr. Hall believes, in answer to prayer, God overruled the affairs of owners and builders so that the delay in commencing operations was continued for a period of over five years. During that time on Sundays and week days there was no evening without a meeting in the old saloon, save when on several Sundays it was necessary to adjourn on account of the large attendance to a more commodious building. Even then the bibulous connection was maintained and the meetings were held in an adjacent malthouse. Occasionally, when circumstances favored, an afternoon meeting was also held, and on holidays the meetings continued all day. Of actual results it is difficult to make an estimate. It was no part of Mr. Hall's programme to organize a church. As one and another made confession of faith, he urged them to become members of some church in the neighborhood. He regarded himself as a pioneer, a breaker of the ground and a planter, leaving to others the nurture and development of the new life. Over eight thousand persons, however, have expressed anxiety for the salvation of their souls, and have knelt with the workers in the little "Inquiry Room," adjourning the main room, to plead with God for pardon and acceptance. The number of those who have been led to peace in believing, included men, women and children from the hoary patriarch of seventy to the budding youth of twelve. Beside this direct benefit, there has been the result of example. Some friends of the mission were encouraged by what they saw of the fruits of Mr. Hall's effort to start a similar mission in North Ninth street, and a second one was started in Germantown, both of which are successful. The old saloon has now been removed, but the work continues in a building nearby.

CALEB'S REWARD.

S.S. Lesson for Sept. 8, Josh. 14: 5-14. Golden Text, Josh. 14: 14. By Mrs. Baxter.

"JOSHUA the son of Nun and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that spied out the land," (Num. 14: 5), had given in their report in "another spirit" than the rest of the spies; they "followed the Lord fully." Another spirit following quite another current, swimming against the tide—O how much this costs until we are wholly conquered by our God! In how many churches the world and self reign, and how hard it is to be of another spirit! But this man has learned to follow the Lord fully; he has taken his Lord for better for worse, and cast in his lot entirely with him. He asks no higher, no easier portion than his, he does not shrink from unpopularity so long as it is the presence of his Master with him which makes him unpopular; he can afford for Christ's sake to love those who hate him, while they for their own sakes hate him because his life is a reflection upon theirs; and all this is without strain or effort; it is the indwelling God which makes him godly. But it was not always so. There was a time in every such life of agonizing suspense when the choice was made, and the decision was pending whether he who made it could drink thus of Christ's cup and be baptized with his baptism of burial to the world and self. There was a supreme moment of decision whether he could be nothing, and let the Holy Spirit use him as an instrument only.

But the man of "another spirit" has his own place in the church. Trouble comes, and those who are "neither cold nor hot" find that the God whom they have trifled with in the time of their prosperity cannot be commanded by their prayers in the day of adversity; they have not proved in secret that they have power with God and prevail, and now they would fain make use of God when all else fails them, when their prayer turns again into their own bosom, and the bitter consciousness of having neglected God haunts them and makes them miserable. Then it is that the man of another spirit comes to the front; he knows his God and intercedes for those distressed ones; he knows the human heart, and can tell where the trouble is, and lead in a love which they know and feel they do not merit, those who have despised him to a real faith in God which places them above their misfortunes. They see at last that to be of "another spirit" than the ordinary Christians who surround them. Had it [illegible] with God to which it led, Joshua and Caleb might have burned with a righteous indignation that they two, who had alone followed the Lord fully, should be condemned to accompany the disobedient and rebellious [illegible] Lord see God in everything, and thus are [illegible] in reproaching man as the cause of their [illegible] the main reason why the Lord Jesus has [illegible] and Calebs who have followed the Lord fully, and who have yet, by their very one-[illegible] waiting, age after age, for the moment when the Church would awake to her high [illegible] sufferings and conformity to his death (Phil. 3: 10), shall not be in vain. Like Paul they [illegible] from among the dead." May not this be the ingathering of the first company whom the Lord shall be able to raise from the dead, and take away without dying from among the living, his first ripe fruit, when "one shall be taken and another left?"

It Pays for Eternity

The wanderings of that generation of the children of Israel in the wilderness, while it was in judgment for their unbelief in listening to the unfaithful spies, was still accompanied with the miraculous care of Jehovah. Day by day they were sustained by the bread from heaven which God provided; the water which they drank was a supernatural gift, their clothing and their shoes were kept from wear by God's own special intervention, reversing in their case the usual order of decay. Moses could say to them, "Your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot." (Deut. 29: 5.) But there was another miracle which did not touch the people as a whole, but only the men of another spirit. The same God who had suspended the law of wear and decay in the clothing of all the people, worked the same miracle in the bodies of Moses and Caleb, perhaps of Joshua also. Of Moses it is said: "And Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated." (Deut. 34: 7.) And Caleb could say to Joshua when he claimed his inheritance: "I am this day fourscore and five years old. As yet I am as strong in this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; as my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, and to go out and in." (Josh. 14: 10, 11.) Those men who were condemned to die in the wilderness fell one after another around him, but neither sickness nor death, neither change nor decay could touch the man who had stood true to his God. While the hair of others turned grey with age, his retained its freshness; and the forty-five years had passed over him without leaving their usual traces in the wrinkled brow, the slower step, etc., etc., which marks advancing age. God is responsible for the loss which his faithful ones may suffer through the miserable failure of an unfaithful church. Caleb had said of the enemies of Israel in Canaan, 'They are bread for us; their defence is departed from them." (Num. 14: 9), and he experienced that all he suffered through the unbelief of Israel was bread for him, an exercise of his faith which should be his truest gain.

Caleb had learned to wait. O how "blessed are all they that wait for him!" (Isa. 30: 18.) The land had been conquered, and five years beyond the forty years of wandering in the wilderness had passed by, and yet Caleb was not come into his inheritance. Joshua had already distributed much of the land among the tribes, when the tribe of Judah drew near, and very specially Caleb, Joshua's old companion and friend. He came with a retrospect and a petition. Addressing Joshua, he said: "Thou knowest the thing that the Lord spake unto Moses, the man of God, concerning me and concerning thee, in Kadesh Barnea." Who could forget it? These two men had been specially singled out by God from among the people, as those who had another heart from the rest, and had followed him fully; if every other remembrance had faded from them; surely this would remain indelibly engraved on their memories!

Then Caleb recalled how, at the the time of the defection of the spies, he had brought Moses word again, "As it was in mine heart . . . And Moses swore on that day, [illegible] hath trodden shall be an inheritance to thee [illegible] hast wholly followed the Lord my God." [illegible] mands: "Now, therefore, give me this mountain, whereof the Lord spake in that day; for thou heardest in that day that the Anakim were there, and the cities great and fenced: it may be that the Lord will be with me, and I shall drive them out, as the Lord spake." For forty-five years the faith of Caleb that God was stronger than the Anakim, had remained unshaken and immovable, laid up within him for God's time to come. For forty-five years he had looked forward to certain victory. Time had not changed or weakened his faith more than his physical force; like Peter, his God made him a man of rock: he saw nothing impossible with such a God.

"Joshua blessed him." This is not spoken of any other. And he gave Hebron unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh, for an inheritance. "Therefore Hebron became the inheritance of Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kennizzite, unto this day, because that he wholly followed the Lord, the God of Israel."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

MODERN HEBRON.

AFTER the fall of Jericho, described in last week's lesson, there came about six years of hard fighting, the decisive battles being Beth-horon (Joshua 10), in Southern Palestine, and that of Merom (Joshua 11), in Northern Palestine. At the end of the period, although many parts of the country remained in possession of the native tribes, and still continued so, even in the time of David, sufficient power had been gained to justify a division of the land among the tribes. Two and a-half tribes—the descendants of Reuben, Gad and half of Manasseh's descendants—had asked permission to settle on the eastern side of the Jordan and Moses had granted their request. It was not a wise choice, although the country was fertile. It was more exposed to the enemies of the nation, and as a matter of history, was the first to fall. The remainder of the land was divided among the other nine and a-half tribes. The descendants of Levi were to have no section assigned to them. To them belonged the priesthood; but the number, twelve, was made up by the arrangement about the descendants of Joseph. They counted as two tribes, Jacob having decided that Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh should rank as his own sons and should have a portion each, instead of Joseph's portion divided between them. When the portion of Judah was assigned, and the distribution of the section among the families of the tribe, by lot, was about to take place, Caleb presented his claim for reward. Reminding Joshua of the service he had rendered at the time of spying the land—a claim which, Joshua, who had participated in it, would be sure to recognize, and also of the promise Moses had made at the time (Deut. 1: 36), Caleb asks that the Hebron region should be given to him. It is true that Hebron was still in possession of the enemy and that it was a difficult place to capture, but Caleb insists that there need be no apprehension on that ground, nor any fear that his brethren might be harassed by leaving an unsubdued city within their borders. Caleb assured them that although he was an old man now, he was well able to subdue it. It was the voice of the fearless man, who more than forty years before had bade the people go on without fear for they were able to overcome. Forty years of toil and hardship had made no difference in this man's courage. His claim was recognized and some late editor of Joshua reminds his readers that Caleb's descendants still owned the place at that day. It would be prized for its associations. Abraham had often lived there in the course of his wanderings. There he entertained the angels and there Sarah died. There, too, was the Cave of Machpelah, where she was buried with Rebekah and Leah and there were laid the bones of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. It afterward became the royal city in which David reigned for seven years, before Jerusalem became the capital. The city still exists and shares with Damascus the distinction of being the oldest city in the world. It lies on the vine-clad slope of a steep vine surrounded by rocky hills. The houses are of stone and of a better class than most of the towns of the Holy Land. The cave of Machpelah is still shown and is one of the few sites whose identity is not disputed. It has now about five thousand inhabitants.

As my strength was then, even so is my strength now. We must not estimate men by their years. There are some men who live such lives of dissipation and disregard of the laws of their being that they are more decrepit at forty than other men are at seventy or eighty. Gladstone in England and Bismarck in Germany are specimens of vigorous old age. Goethe when a young man said, "We must be young for great things," and he wrote his "Sorrows of Werter" when he was twenty-five. And when he was eighty-two he was still writing, and he disproved his own apothegm by setting the last words to his Faust.

The Lord hath kept me alive. So excellent was John Wesley's constitution, and so pure had his life been, that in his seventieth year, he could preach so as to be heard distinctly by twelve thousand persons, and at seventy-two his eyesight was unimpaired, and even in the severest weather he preached with difficulty persuaded to travel except in a carriage. He had ridden on horseback upwards of one hundred thousand miles. When he was at Kingswood he preached under the shadow of trees he had himself planted. He attributed his vigor to God's good pleasure and to the fact that he had never lost a night's sleep in his life. The habit of getting up to preach at five o'clock in the morning was, he was wont to say, the healthiest exercise in the world.

The Anakim were there. Caleb had not been afraid of these giants when he was a young man and in his eighty-fifth year he still believed he could drive them out. During the wars of Nassau a council of officers debated whether there was any hope in attacking a certain town. A Dutch general had so much to say about the formidable guns by which it was protected, that he almost grew discouraged. "Heed them not, my Lords," said Horace Vere, "those who look into the mouth of a cannon ought never to be a soldier's uniform."

The Lord will be with me. A request made one night in the last century to a pious English lady to go to a woman living ten miles away, who had been taken ill suddenly and who needed money. She packed up all the money in the house and consulted about her person and mounting her horse set out in the dark night. "You will lose your way," said one timid woman. "You will be robbed by highwaymen," said another. The old lady paid no heed. "I have said my bit prayer," she replied, "I am on the Lord's errand and trust him." She rode away, but as she passed the dark skirts of a wood a highwaman sprang out of the darkness and seized her bridle-rein. But the same holding a pistol at her head, he was so cool that the robber wondered. "Are you not afraid?" he asked. "No," she said, "I have a good Protector." The robber looked around, but in the darkness could see no one. But there might be a well armed man near, and the woman's confidence seemed to imply that she had reason for not fearing him. Discretion seemed to the robber the wisest course, and he drew the rein and ran, leaving the pious old lady to go on her way.

I wholly followed the Lord. The man who succeeds in any course is the man who gives his whole soul to it—who wholly follows it. It is the listless, variable man who is never earnest in anything, who fails. There was a district on the outskirts of Bristol, England, that was notorious for its profligacy. It was the boast of the rowdies who lived there that no church, nor school, nor preaching place was in it and that no religious man lived there or should live there. A prominent merchant of the city was powerfully moved about that section. It seemed to him that something should be done. He resolved that he would go about it himself. He was warned that his life would not be worth an hour's purchase if he went; but he did go. Within six months of his first visit there was in the centre of the district a library and reading room and a Methodist preacher proclaimed the Gospel unmolested every Sunday. The merchant's whole-souled earnest effort had won the respect of all and the district was eventually transformed

The Prayer-Wheels of Tibet.

They are almost Universally Used among the People of that Singular Country—How they are Operated.

PRAYER is an office common to all religions alike, but the religion of Jesus Christ differs from all others in its attitude toward prayer. It is the only religion that encourages the human petitioner to approach his Maker without the intervention of idol, emblem, living priest or dead saint. While the superstitious and unenlightened in other lands are appealing through their dumb images or symbols, to mysterious Power controls things, Christian his face rd the one of y and and lays the se- of his in- heart to d as a to a fa- trusting in all rhaps no ger de- was ever oyed in ers than at is wn as 'prayer- el," as general- sed in t at the present time. Mr. Simpson, respondent, writes this interesting detion of it to "The Illustrated London s: he Lamasary of Hemis, on the left bank he Indus, about twenty miles above is a place of note among the monas- of Tibet. It so chances that I paid a ng visit to it when travelling in that of the world. The most striking thing I noticed was a long row of praying- ls, or cylinders—for they are like bar- -in the courtyard of the place, so ar- ed that the monks, or anyone passing, l turn each with the hand while walk- long. Two nights before my visit to is, at Ghia, there was a praying- l turned by a water-wheel, making a ing sound at each turn, which I could when I chanced to wake during the t. In some of the monasteries there ery large ones, which the monks turn neans of a crank. There are small made of brass, which the monks can in the hand, and whirl as they walk, hile conversing. In some parts of t these barrels are turned by wind- . Their real character is now under- l, but it would require a long article to a full explanation; it may be sufficient to say that the intention of their use is ected with 'praise,' rather than with ver.'

PRAYER WHEELS ON A TIBETAN STREET.

They have very long and elaborate ces in these Lamaseries, in which they their 'manies,' or praying-wheels, bells, beat drums, and blow through long trumpets. The service lasts so that they regale themselves with tea. nd the altar there is generally a colos- gure of some Buddhist saint, clothed bright-colored garments, and strips of y silk hanging round. On more than ltar I noticed seven small brass cups what seemed to be water in them: suggested some form of symbolism. as amusing to find European bottles nged upon some of the altars. French dy bottles, with peacocks' feathers in , are prominently visible. In one asery that I visited, the Lamas pointed pride to a bottle on the altar, with a ant label in gold and colors, on which was a cat with the words 'Old Tom.'

he large number of monasteries in t is a surprise to some travelers, but ne who has made himself acquainted India during the Buddhist period will miliar with the existence of the same astic system, which filled that country institutions of a similar kind. 'The glittered with the yellow robes'—yellow was the color worn by the Buddhist monks in India, as it is at the present day in Ceylon—and it was in these words that the triumphs of Buddhism, in its success over Brahminism, were at first described. Buddhist monasteries, with crowds of monks were to be found all over India as late as the seventeenth century.

"Tibet is now likely to become what may be called the newest region for the more adventurous tourists. Already a number of men have lately traveled in that bleak and dangerous region. Rockhill and Littledale have passed through, adding thereby to our knowledge. Surgeon Waddell has sojourned among the Lamas in order to learn from them. Bonvalot, Younghusband, and Bower have made daring journeys across Tibet; the latest news from that quarter being the murder of a French traveler."

Many attempts have been made to establish Christian missions in Tibet, but without avail. Much good seed has been sown, however, by the widespread dissemination of portions of the printed Gospel which missionaries on the border have sent to the interior by traveling merchants and caravans. Several of the leading missionary societies are holding themselves in readiness for the opening which, sooner or later, the Lord is certain to provide for the evangelization of that benighted country.

A NOTABLE FAMILY.

A Christian gentleman, traveling in Java, arrived in Soerakarta, where the Dutch have a trading-station which they hold under a treaty containing the extraordinary article that no missionary shall preach there. But he found a banker there named Kuchenius, whose consistent life and personal influence are doing effective Christian work. This man visits the natives in their homes and reads the Bible to them. From the position he holds he is the head and side of every local movement or enterprise and no one can tell what his influence means. Two of his brothers, equally faithful, manage two other branches of the Java Bank. His father it was who, as Prime Minister, preached the Gospel in the Holland Parliament, standing Bible in hand, to refer to it as the basis of every law, and boldly proclaiming, "Of him whom millions serve as they have served none other, I have the honor to be the slave." A brother of his, an uncle therefore of the Mr. Kuchenius whom the writer met, was formerly Dutch Resident in Soerakarta, and when after years of work he was recalled, he said in his farewell speech, "Gentlemen, I know why I leave you; I have urged on you a way too strait for you, but by the grace of God I stand here to-night to tell you once more that there is salvation in no other than Jesus Christ, and through him alone can you hope to attain eternal life."

Among Chinese Villages.

Miss M. E. Talmage's Story of Missionary Journeys around Amoy.

THERE is no sign of any diminution of missionary effort in China as a result of the recent murders. Men and women are offering themselves in greater numbers than ever to go and live in that teeming land to preach the Gospel to the lost. The missionaries on the field continue their work and show no sign of panic. Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, the leader of the China Inland Mission, writing from Shanghai, says: "These riots are no accident, they are part of God's great plan for blessing China. We do not know how he may use them, but we know that he will use them. 'Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?' Is it that Satan sees his time is short, that the Master is soon coming, and that his opportunity of harassing God's children will soon be passed?

"We are quite sure that God will overrule these trials for the yet more wide opening of the door for China's evangelization. Let us therefore rejoice in the Lord, and give ourselves much to prayer, especially for our beloved native brothers and sisters, who, if persecuted, have nowhere to flee to, and often bear the heaviest part of the trial."

In an interesting letter to "The Christian Intelligencer" from Miss M. E. Talmage, who, with her sister, Miss K. M. Talmage, nieces of the editor of this journal, is laboring in the region hallowed by the forty-five years work of their sainted father, she says:

We have recently been to Tang-oa, a village about five-and-a-half hours' journey from Amoy. A Bible-woman accompanied us and she is staying behind to labor among the people.

There is any amount of work to be done in this region. Around are villages in every direction, thickly populated, and the people are willing to hear. But who is going to teach them? One feels sad at every visit to this station on seeing the amount of work to be done—doors open on every side, and the opportunities lost from lack of workers. We hope in time to have resident missionaries here to overtake this work, but at present we lack men, women and money. Yesterday, (Sunday) I spent the day with the women at Tokio, two miles from here, an out-station belonging to this church. Here we have a new church building erected by money lately sent through the "Woman's Board." When the church was built it was with the distinct understanding that the screen separating the men from the women (they do not sit together) must run down the centre of the church; for this purpose two front doors were made, one for men, one for women, giving the women equal opportunities for hearing, instead of tucking them off on each side of the pulpit behind high screens, as the Chinese are so fond of doing. A small corner of the church behind a screen is quite good enough, they think, for a woman. And whether or not she see or hear, it matters but little—she is only a woman.

MISS M. E. TALMAGE.

We have been on another trip to a place called Kio-shau, on the island of Amoy. The sights one sees in passing along are many and varied! Women with babies tied to their backs, men carrying burdens, beggars of all descriptions, or rather beyond all description; some so leprous and filthy one can hardly realize them to be human! Men carving idols, women making incense sticks and spreading quantities of the stuff in the sun to dry; peddlers making and selling food, all kinds of dainty (?) dishes which just a sight of gives one an attack of sympathetic dyspepsia! One sees also here and there dead cats tied to trees, with a little yellow charm paper attached to ward off the cat demon, which they greatly fear. They think by tying dead cats to the trees to demonstrate to the demon how cats which come to their neighborhood are despised, and thus frighten him away.

Just outside the town we passed a house where four have lately died with the plague. The young man was a new convert, baptized only a short time ago. He was a very promising Christian. At first he met with much opposition from his wife and parents. His wife, however, came to church with him, and seemed much interested and anxious to learn. The young man caught the plague by nursing a relative who had it, and died in a few days. He died very peacefully, urging his wife and parents to worship God, and telling his wife not to sorrow, as they would soon meet in heaven. Little did they know how soon. On the following Sunday (he died on Friday) his wife with two of the children came to church, and I had a good opportunity of speaking with her. She said she fully determined to worship God. That afternoon she was attacked with the plague and died very soon. Shortly after this both the parents caught the same disease and died. In visiting about Amoy we meet so many who have lost friends by this epidemic.

Sunday was a busy day at Kio-shau from soon after breakfast until sunset, but spent with a much more quiet and intelligent company of women than those I talked to at Tokio. Monday was given to visiting more distant villages. We visited one family who have lately come out from heathenism. A crowd gathered in the large centre room of their newly-built house and listened so quietly that we had a very good opportunity of teaching them. On coming away the family gave us their idols, seven in all. As the woman took them down from their shrine on a high table to hand to us, she said to them: "May you be blessed and return to heaven in peace." This will show how full of superstition these people are, and how difficult it is, even when they have decided to worship God and trust only to him, for them to give up at once all superstitious ideas connected with their idols, which they have been taught to worship from infancy. I said: "If you do not wish to give us your idols, we do not wish to take them." She answered, "I am very willing to give them to you."

WORSHIPPING IN A BUDDHIST TEMPLE IN TIBET.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest possible way, at the command of the remitter. Post-Office or Express Money Orders are always safe and can be sent at our risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by delay in renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions. The date on the wrapper shows when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always be given when you write to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Lafayette Place, New York City.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, as Second-class Matter.

THE INDIFFERENT.

THERE are people who have asked for our prayers, and we suppose there are some who have been anxiously talking about their souls, who will miss heaven. They do not take the last step, and all the other steps go for nothing until you have taken the last step, for in the presence of God and his people, we have to announce the solemn truth, that to be almost saved is to be lost forever. Then there are the careless, the indifferent. You say: "I come to church because a friend invited me to see what is going on, but with no serious intentions about my soul. I have so much work, and so much pleasure on hand, don't bother me about religion." And yet you are gentlemanly, and you are lady-like in your behavior, and, therefore, we know you will listen respectfully if a person talk courteously. Christians are sometimes afraid to talk to men and women of the world less they be insulted. If they talk courteously to people of the world, they will listen courteously. So now we come in that way, and in that spirit, and talk to those of you who tell us that you are careless about your soul.

Then you have a soul, have you? Yes, precious with infinite capacity for joy or suffering, winged for flight somewhere. Beckoned upward, beckoned downward. Fought after by angels and by fiends. Immortal!

> The sun is but a spark of fire,
> A [illegible] shortly:
> The [illegible] is,
> Can never die.

Your body will soon be taken down, the castle will be destroyed, the tower will be in the dust, the windows will be broken out, and the place where your body sleeps will be forgotten; but your soul, after that, will be living, acting, feeling, thinking—where? where? Oh there must be something of incomputable worth in that for which heaven gave up its best inhabitant, and Christ went into martyrdom, and at the coming of which angels chant an eternal litany and devils rush to the gate. When everything above you and beneath you, and around you, is intent upon that soul, you cannot afford to be careless, especially when there are thousands of souls in heaven rejoicing that they attended to the matter in time, while at this very instant there are souls in the lost world mourning that they did not attend to it in time.

Oh, if the wan spirits of the lost could come up, and we could stand before them [illegible] and then ask them if they would accept it, those would come up in [illegible] multitudinous, overwhelming cry: "Yes! yes! yes!" No such fortune for them. They had their day of grace, and sacrificed it. You have yours, will you sacrifice it? we wish that we could have you see these things as you will one day see them.

WOMEN'S OPPORTUNITIES.

THE curse of American society is that our young women are taught that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, tenth, fiftieth, thousandth thing in their life is to get somebody to take care of them. Instead of that the first lesson should be how under God they may take care of themselves. The simple fact is that a majority of them do have to take care of themselves, and that, too, after having, through the false notions of their parents, wasted the years in which they ought to have learned how successfully to maintain themselves. There is no happiness in an idle woman. It may be with hand, it may be with brain, it may be with foot; but work she must, or be wretched forever. The little girls of our families must be started with that idea.

There are wemen toiling in our cities for two and three dollars per week who were the daughters of merchant princes. These suffering ones now would be glad to have the crumbs that once fell from their father's table. That worn-out, broken shoe she wears is the lineal descendant of the twelve-dollar gaiters in which her mother walked; and that torn and faded calico had ancestry of magnificent brocade that swept Broadway clean, without any expense to the street commissioners. Though you live in an elegant residence and fare sumptuously every day, let your daughters feel it is a disgrace not to know how to work. We denounce the idea prevalent in society that, though our young women may embroider slippers and crochet and make mats for lamps to stand on without disgrace, the idea of doing anything for a livelihood is dishonorable. It is a shame for a young woman belonging to a large family to be inefficient when the father toils his life away for her support. It is a shame for a daughter to be idle while her mother toils at the wash-tub. It is as honorable to sweep the house, make beds or trim hats as it is to twist a watch-chain.

As far as we can understand, the line of respectability lies between that which is useful and that which is useless. If women do that which is of no value their work is honorable. If they do practical work, it is dishonorable. That our young women may escape the censure of doing dishonorable work, we shall particularize. You may knit a tidy for the back of an arm-chair, but by no means make the money wherewith to buy the chair. You may with a delicate brush beautify a mantel ornament, but die rather than earn enough money to buy a marble mantel. Do nothing practical if you would in the eyes of refined society preserve your respectability. We scout these fine notions. A woman, no more than a man, has a right to occupy a place in this world unless she pays a rent for it.

Now, we say if there be any preference in occupation, let woman have it. God knows her trials are the severest. By her acuter sensitiveness to misfortune, by her hour of anguish, we demand that no one hedge up her pathway to a livelihood. Oh! the meanness, the despicability of men who begrudge a woman the right to work anywhere in any honorable calling!

GOOD TIMES.

WE do not belong to the great army of croakers. We do not believe that things are going to crash generally, that the Palisades are to tumble down and crush out Christianity, that we have fallen upon evil times, and that truth and virtue and goodness only walked the earth in the good days of old. People who lament over the good old times forget one thing; they forget that their good old times were when they were children—when they thought and spoke and acted as children; —and so they pass judgment on a constructive excellence the sense of which they drank in from the cup of their child-wonder, a half or three-quarters of a century ago.

No! the good times, if we will but believe it, are now,—the better times are not backward. We believe, as in the past so in the future, the world will grow better and better. By-and-by the world and all that there is therein shall pass away, but in the new heavens and new earth righteousness, only righteousness, shall dwell; and even then who can doubt that growth, constant growth, will ever mark the progress of the soul? There will be no croakers in heaven.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

B. J. S., Lisbon, N. H. 1. Would you advise any particular course of study for a young lady, who intends in some future time, if God wills, to go as a missionary to India? 2. Will you please explain 1. Pet. 4: 6?

1. There are numerous missionary training schools and institutes where missionary students are taught what is considered essential before leaving for the field. 2. It refers to the dead who, in their lifetime, had the Gospel preached to them.

J. J. M. To what extent is piety promoted by proper food, properly cooked and properly eaten? Are not destinies involved in this question?

To a much larger extent than is generally supposed. Improper diet is injurious to both body and mind, and produces gloomy and hypocondriacal views of everything. Improper or too rapid eating, is another evil prevalent among business men. It is asserted by some writers that Napoleon lost more than one battle through sleeplessness caused by indigestion.

E. Humphries, Middletown, N. Y. Who were the Stylites? Were they a religious sect or merely a school of fanatics?

They were religious ascetics who dwelt on the tops of pillars, and their name is derived from the Greek "stylos," a pillar. Simeon dwelt on a pillar thirty-seven years, the last twenty years being passed on a pillar sixty-five feet high and three feet diameter. Daniel of Constantinople, another famous stylite, lived in the same way for over thirty years.

M. E. S., Jersey City, N. J. What is the meaning of the expression, "the ways of them" (Ps. 84: 5)?

The rendering of the passage in the Revised Version is: "In whose heart are the highways to Zion," which is a more accurate rendering. It is supposed to have been written by some one who loved the house of God intensely, but who was prevented by sickness or some other cause from going there. After dwelling on the delights of the public service, and the happiness of joining in public worship, he says that still more blessed is the man whose heart is in unison with God, who when deprived of the aids of the ritual and the gorgeous ceremonial of the Tabernacle or Temple, had in his heart a way of access to God.

M. Clarke, Providence, R. I. Do you recommend the Revised Version of the Bible or the King James Version?

If you want to read an accurate translation you should use the Revised Version, but if you do not care about accuracy and like the familiar phrases of the Authorized Version, you will find it substantially correct. Some of the changes are not graceful, and in some instances the meaning of a passage as given in the Revised Version, is entirely different from that in the Authorized, but there can be no question that the Revisers made an honest attempt to give a truthful rendering. They have succeeded as far as was possible, and their version will doubtless gradually supersede the other. The King James Version was unpopular at first and was a long time winning its way into favor.

From New York City we have received this letter, which tells its own story of an awakened conscience:

NEW YORK, Aug. 13, 1895.

DEAR SIR: When you were distributing those pieces of polished wood from Olivet, and while some were in transit to your offices in the Bible House, I took three or four of them without asking for them. It did not bother me at the time, but my eyes have been opened to see all the wrong I have done, and I promised God I would reimburse you for my taking them, and so have enclosed $1.50 from CONSCIENCE.

When Christ comes to a man's heart, the desire to right any wrong of which the man has been guilty, is one that constantly oppresses until the proper step be taken. See Luke 19: 8, also II. Cor. 7: 10, 11.

Constant Reader, Carlington, O. 1. Is there any Gopher wood growing in America now, or any other part of the world? What other tree does it resemble? By what name is it known now? 2. What was the size of the ark in feet and inches?

1. Translators differ on this point, some holding that it was a wood resembling the pine, and others that it was cedar, which has always been plentiful in Asia. The Chaldee version gives cedar. Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria, asserted it was a wood called "Sag," equivalent to the modern teak-wood. Samaritan translators of the Chaldaic give "sisam" as the synonym of gopher. Probably the larger number of writers have held that gopher is really the cypress, which is an i[illegible] ruptible wood, and was, besides, very at[illegible] ant in that part of the world where N[illegible] ark was built. 2. A cubit, according t[illegible] ancient Hebrew measurement, was [illegible] twenty-one inches, the Mosaic cubit bein[illegible] hand-breadths of three and one-half i[illegible] each. Apply this rule to Gen. 6: 15.

Albert Titus, Chickasaw, Ia. Do you think th[illegible] pastor of a church or any of the church [illegible] bers are showing a good example to the [illegible] when they go to horse races and mine[illegible] dances?

We have repeatedly stated in THE [illegible] BAG that such practices, apart from being [illegible] ful in themselves, were to be condemn[illegible] being inimical to spiritual growth. This s[illegible] be to Christians the test of all amusem[illegible] The example of such acts as you describe [illegible] not fail to be injurious to many.

A. H. N., Luton, Ia. How could Solomon's t[illegible] have been reared if no axe or hamme[illegible] used, as stated in 1. Kings 6: 7?

The stones were cut and dressed in the [illegible] terranean quarry which has recently [illegible] found near the site of the temple. They [illegible] mortised so skilfully that when convey[illegible] the temple and put in position they fitte[illegible] each other with absolute accuracy. Jos[illegible] says that the spectator could see no ma[illegible] "sign of any hammer, or other instrum[illegible] architecture having been used" upon [illegible] The Eddystone Lighthouse on the E[illegible] coast was built of stones so dovetailed, [illegible] object of the exclusion of tools in the T[illegible] was to impress the people with the sanct[illegible] the place.

J. M. Lawton, Indianapolis, Ind. What is th[illegible] est known book in the world, of a [illegible] character?

Until within a few years ago the bricks [illegible] posed to belong to royal libraries, une[illegible] at Tel-Amarna and the traditional site [illegible] chish, were believed to have been amo[illegible] oldest secular writings in the world. [illegible] however, the "Papyrus Prisse," so-calle[illegible] the fact that it was found by the invest[illegible] Prisse in a tomb in Thebes, is claimed [illegible] the oldest of secular writings. It date[illegible] twenty-five centuries before Christ an[illegible] events to which it relates belong to a [illegible] some eight hundred years earlier. It pu[illegible] to be the "Injunctions" of Ptah Hotep, [illegible] in the time of Assa, Theban King of the [illegible] and South, and is full of maxims and [illegible] sayings.

Lou Rowe, Plainfield, Ia.; Subscriber, Bal[illegible] Md., and others. What is the "Didache" [illegible] which you quoted in your issue of Aug. [illegible] the Apostolic mode of Baptism?

The "Didache" is an ancient manu[illegible] found at Constantinople and translate[illegible] published in 1883 by Philoletheos Brye[illegible] Metropolitan of Nicomedia. Previous t[illegible] time it was an unknown document, but i[illegible] known that such a writing had been in[illegible] ence, because Clement (who died about [illegible] Eusebius (who died in 340), and Athan[illegible] (who died in 373), quote from it in their [illegible] Who its author was is not known, but i[illegible] ports to be a digest or summary of the [illegible] ing of the Apostles and was evidently fr[illegible] pen of a Jewish Christian. Some sc[illegible] think it dates from the year 120 and othe[illegible] sign it to a later date. The early writers [illegible] of the document as among the Apocry[illegible] the New Testament and only Clement [illegible] it as authoritative.

Gwendola Inch, of Parsons, Kans., ha[illegible] stirred by the accounts of the work [illegible] Children's Home and sends us these [illegible] verses:

TEACH THE LITTLE ONES TO PRAY.

GO and gather the children in
From wickedness and strife,
And give them a sight of the world of God—
A glimpse of country life.

Their little hearts beat wild with joy,
Among the daisies white,
And their wan, pale cheeks grow warm and [illegible]
In the sun's bright, mellow light.

And playing among the grasses long,
Their voices sweetly ring,
And in the landscape fair they see
The works of God, their King.

And there, where the wild flowers grow,
Show them the Light, the Way,
And when the stars shine bright above,
Teach the little ones to pray

Constant Reader, Pompeii and Herculaneum [illegible] overwhelmed and buried during a frightful [illegible] tion of Mt. Vesuvius in A. D. 79, and vast nu[illegible] perished. — Mrs. A. L. Griffing, East M[illegible] N. Y., replies to an inquiring subscriber th[illegible] verses, "Another Closing Day," can be found [illegible] musical publication entitled: "The Royal Di[illegible] published by Biglow and Main, N. Y.—P[illegible] Burnham, Lowell, Mass. Thanks for the clip[illegible] We are disposed to agree with your coach[illegible] —Subscriber, Westchester, Pa., writes in[illegible] where the verses beginning, "Paul Revere [illegible] rider bold," may be found.—N. S. We advi[illegible] to pay no attention to the letter from Chambers[illegible] We have reason to believe that a number of p[illegible] are making a living off sympathetic people. [illegible] addresses they have somehow procured, by pr[illegible] ing to be Nebraska sufferers. Any reader [illegible] journal who receives such a begging letter [illegible] forward it to Rev. L. P. Ludden at Lincoln, [illegible] —Hettie M. Crow, Toodsboro, Ia. Send reli[illegible] literature to any nearby jail or hospital, whi[illegible] will doubtless be welcomed.—Mrs. Ara Ha[illegible] Manton, R. I. See answer to N. S. above, on [illegible] subject.—Anxious Inquirer, Fort Reno, Okla[illegible] will have to make your questions somewha[illegible] explicit than appears from your note.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

AN ISLAND IN DISPUTE.

AN international difficulty has been stirred over the possession of the Island of Trinidad, a desert of rocks, six miles in circumference, about seven hundred miles off the coast of Brazil. The very e of the island was known to scarce- but geographers and mariners, until d, finding it a convenient station for Argentine telegraph cable, took ion of it a short time ago. The claim dates from the year 1700. Captain Halley landed there and the British flag. Brazil contends 1782 the island was given up to l, and that it is now Brazilian ter- Public meetings have been held in eiro to protest against the British and in the Brazilian Chamber of s resolutions have been passed urg- Government to resist the attempt to Brazil of its rights over the island. claim of a somewhat amusing r comes from an Irish-French gen- calling himself n Harden-Hickey, ys that two years tified the Powers had become King island, under the James I. He has ellor who lives in rt and has never the island. This an believes that his r has plans for or- a settlement and ng his realm, and formally protested the British occu- He did not know any people there n the island. He d that at one e were forty, but be that now there t more than ten. er seems the more number, as the ons given of it to be, unlike Trin- the West Indies, e most desolate in . Mr. E. E. n his "Cruise of the Falcon," says e is absolutely no living vegeta- the island. There are a large num- ead trees, which at one time must wn very close together and have a great height. They appear to perished long ago at the same if stricken by a sudden blight. He the island but could find no living nothing but precipitous crags ic origin some of which were over ndred feet high. That the island worthless is proved by the fact gland, Portugal and Brazil have ed it in turn, and if Brazil persists jection to its becoming a telegraph n England's hands, it will prob- ain worthless, as the British claim t be pressed in the face of Brazil's Thus a selfish greed of territory ve an obstacle to an enterprise uld benefit the whole world. The position permeates all society. Men, and children suffer and die for the necessaries, while others have n they need and more than is good n. It is by no means an evil of growth. The ancient preacher said: a grievous evil which I have seen under namely, riches kept by the owner thereof to Eccles. 5: 13.)

in a Mine.

lling story of heroism comes from arre, Pa. The recent fire in the ork & Scranton Coal Company's e me near ending the lives of four- n. It broke out in the pump-house rned rapidly inward. The pump- was alone, but he fought the fire most superhuman power. He knew fire was inch by inch cutting off pe of the men at work beyond. At last he realized that it was impossible to extinguish the flames. If he had considered his own safety he would have run to the foot of the shaft; but he would not leave his comrades to perish. Covering his face, he made a wild dash through the flames and ran down the gangway shouting "Fire!" with all his might. The men were at work nearly three thousand feet away and did not hear his shouts for some minutes. At length a faint cry reached their ears, and they saw the light of a lamp approaching. Presently it was extinguished. Fearing that something had happened, they went to see what the lamp meant. There they found their brave comrade fallen and almost unconscious from the pain of his burns. He told them of the fire, and together they hurried through the mine to the farther shaft. The gangways were full of smoke and the men were almost suffocated: but all succeeded in reaching the surface safely. The pump-runner's burns are reported to be very serious, but it is hoped that he will recover. We admire the man's noble self-sacrifice in incurring peril and pain that he might warn others of their danger, but how few there are comparatively who do what they can to warn their fellow-men of their eternal danger! Yet by such self-sacrifice on the part of the Son of God salvation was purchased for the world

He saved others; himself he cannot save Mark 15: 31.

THE ISLAND OF TRINIDAD CLAIMED BY ENGLAND AND BRAZIL.

Lost Underground.

Two boys aged twelve years had a distressing experience at Hazleton, Pa., on August 12. They had a great desire to see the inside of a coal mine, and they succeeded in getting permission of the men at the elevator to descend. They said nothing at their homes about their intended expedition, fearing that objections would be raised. They were equipped with lanterns and they had a good time threading the subterranean passages. After penetrating the gloomy corridors for a considerable distance, they struck a reverse current of air suddenly, which extinguished the lamps they carried. They had not thought of guarding against such an emergency, and found themselves in darkness. How to get out was then the serious question. They did not know which way to turn. Their cries for assistance were answered only by the echo, which reverberated through the subterranean tunnels, and added to the chill of fear which took possession of them. They could not get out. They remained all night groping their way about in the labyrinth without finding the shaft. When the miners went to work the next morning, they were surprised to find the lads on the gangway. They were piloted to the surface and sent to their homes, where their parents were anxiously awaiting them. Distressing as their experience was, it was infinitely less disastrous than that of many young people whose curiosity leads them into the mazes of the world's vicious ways where they wander in darkness and often make wreck of their souls.

Who leave the paths of uprightness to walk in the ways of darkness. Prov. 2: 13.

Why the Building Fell.

Building inspectors and Coroner's officers in New York were busy for several days last week trying to discover the reason of the collapse of an unfinished building which occurred on August 8th. The catastrophe was a fearful one involving the death of at least fourteen persons. The building was eight stories high and exceedingly strong, having great iron floor beams and fireproof floors. The walls were up and the roof on and a large number of electricians, tile-layers, decorators and laborers were busy with the interior arrangements, when the central portion, comprising about one-half the floor area, fell in with a resounding crash. A clear space from basement to roof could be seen with its jagged edges, where the eight strong floors had been a few moments before. In the pile of debris in the basement, mixed with iron beams and concrete, were the mangled remains of several men and men still more unfortunate than the dead, who lived a few hours suffering fearful agony. That a building so strong in all its parts should have collapsed so suddenly was a mystery, until a thorough investigation was made. A discovery made by the laborers who were set to dig around the main pillar in the centre of the building suggested an explanation of it. The pillar rested on a huge capstone, and this on a concrete bed. Below the bed was a heap of rubbish covering a deep cistern, eight feet wide, with brick walls which had been dug to supply the houses that formerly occupied the site. As the weight of each floor and of the roof had been added, the pillar gradually sank, until pillar, capstone and concrete bed fell into the cavity beneath them, and the building, deprived of its main support, collapsed. Whether this was the cause of the catastrophe or not the Coroner's jury now sitting will decide. We know that an analogous cause often accounts for the collapse of conspicuous careers. In modern as in olden times, men of genius and unquestioned ability, who have climbed to honorable positions in state and society and won power and influence have fallen into disgrace by some immorality that has astounded the public. The cause was that their character was not founded on the rock foundation which God has laid in Christ.

Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a tried stone . . . he that believeth shall not be confounded. (Isa. 28: 16).

Electricity Excluded.

A scientific journal discusses a strange phenomenon that puzzles electrical experts. It seems that when the long Hoosac Tunnel near North Adams, Mass., was constructed, no ores, magnetic or otherwise, were encountered, although there was general expectation that rich ore pockets would be found. It is now believed that such ores do exist there, though they were not found, and the belief is based on a curious fact. No electrician has been discovered who can send a telegraph message on a wire running from portal to portal of that tunnel, be such wire run inside of an ocean cable through the huge cavern or out of it. Such messages have to be sent on wires strung on poles over the top of the mountain, fully nine miles, and that is the way in-going and out-coming passenger and freight trains are heralded to the keepers of the two tunnel approaches. In order to maintain this overland mountain line, a swath of woodland has to be kept clear of trees and bushes directly up the steep mountain side. It is evident that there must be some ore in the sides of the tunnel which prevents the electric current giving the intelligible information that it gives in other surroundings. There is good reason for believing that the failure of some people to receive the message of the Holy Spirit in God's Word is due to an analogous cause. Where sin and lust reign in the nature, the Word which speaks peace to others does not penetrate.

The Word preached did not profit them, not being mixed in faith in them that heard it (Heb. 4: 2).

BRIEF NOTES.

Evangelist W. F. Bischoff has been Holding successful meetings in a tent at Springfield, Ill. The tent has been crowded and every evening some have made profession of conversion.

Persons who Sent Letters to the Missionaries in China about the middle of May need not draw alarming inferences from the fact of their not receiving answers. The mail courier who carries the letters between Tientsin and Tung-cho was set upon by highwaymen and the letters were stolen.

A Street Collection was Recently taken up in London in aid of Dr. Barnardo's Homes for street waifs. The amount given was eight thousand dollars. A large part of it was in pennies, showing that the gifts came from the poorer class who know the value of the institutions.

Major Mathison, an Officer of the English army, who has served eighteen years and participated in the battlefields of Egypt has resigned his position to become a missionary. He will go to Ceylon under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society and will work without pay.

Rev. B. Fay Mills says that in an audience of 1,339 Christian people he asked them to state the ages at which they experienced conversion and the Christian life. It was found that those who began before the age of twenty numbered 1,000; between twenty and thirty, 180; between thirty and forty, 35; between forty and fifty, 14; over fifty, 10.

The Annual Convention of The Christian Alliance of which Rev. A. B. Simpson is President has just been held at the Gerstum, Pa. In response to Mr. Simpson's appeal, it was to carry on the foreign missionary work of the Alliance gifts and pledges were received to the amount of twenty thousand dollars. Two pieces of real estate and several articles of jewelry were among the gifts.

A Remarkable Instance of Broad-minded Liberality as reported from England. The Dean of Westminster was given permission to the admirers and friends of the late Prof. Huxley to place a slab or medallion portrait of the distinguished agnostic in Westminster Abbey.

At the Recent Meeting of the International Congress the Norwegian explorer, Borebgrevinck, expressed the conviction that the great continent he discovered in the South Polar circle is eight million square miles in area, or twice the size of Europe.

The National Encampment of the Boys' Brigade of America will be held at Highland Park, Aug. 25-29. Commander-in-Chief Bolton has appointed Dr. Rusk, post-chaplain. Dr. Rusk expects to have a new speaker every day, and a series of fine meetings. Great good as well as fun is expected.

Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam, whose Portrait we published recently, has addressed over fifty meetings on Indian affairs. He has been confined by sickness but is now recovering. He is staying at Miss Jennie Smith's hospitable home, Mountain Lake Park, Md., where he is slowly regaining health.

News has been Received of the Death at Insein, India, of Mrs. Charlotte B. Thomas, one of the most famous Baptist missionaries in that land. She was sixty-nine years old and labored nearly all her life in India and Burmah. She was the first white woman to go among the Karens of Henzadah. Four years ago considering her work finished she came home to Amsrica to die, but after a few weeks in her native air had restored her health, she went to the officers of the Missionary Union and begged to be sent back. She was sent and did more valuable work. She was a descendant on her father's side of Miles Standish and on her mother's of John Alden and Priscilla.

Two Parties of Missionaries Left New York on Aug. 17 for their fields of labor. One party of eight went to Africa under the auspices of the newly organized African Inland Mission, whose headquarters are in Philadelphia. Rev. [illegible] Sothard and his sister are the leaders of the party. One of the ladies is an accomplished [illegible] who was rescued some years ago from a [illegible] in New York. The other party was sent out by the Presbyterian Board and goes to the Laos country in Siam. A third party of ten missionaries also sailed for China from San Francisco. One member of the party is Miss Ida Rose, daughter Dr. Ida Rose of Soo Chow, who goes to help her father in his work.

MANY FRIENDS FOR THE WAIFS.

Our Fresh-Air Fund Still Growing—Kind Letters of Encouragement for the Work.
Gifts Sent with Prayers from many Christian Homes.

For the many notable philanthropies in which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have actively interested themselves, have touched a deeper chord of human sympathy than the Fresh-Air work at Mont-Lawn among the tenement children of the metropolis. From every State in the Union and even from Canada, come letters expressing the warmest approval of the work. Almost every letter is accompanied by a contribution in aid of the Home. Loving parents who have happy children of their own, and others, some of whose little ones, it may be, have "gone before," are naturally very deeply interested in our Fresh-Air Fund's efforts in behalf of the little hapless sufferers in the tenements. But the interest is by no means confined to parents; for it has spread among kind-hearted, humane people everywhere.

In these terribly torrid August days, the condition of the tenement children in town is indeed one to excite pity. Mr. Jacob Riis, who has passed much of his life in helping them, writes of an August experience:

A message was sent to the Board of Health asking that a nurse be sent to a tenement because a baby was dying of the hot spell. The house was in the most wretched part of the city, with crowding and squalor and poverty and disease going hand in hand. The thermometer at the time registered 104 degrees. That was the case in which the Board of Health in just such emergencies always found the source of supply. An [illegible] to relieve. Many [illegible] for at least a year, dead at a year. What little hope must be just for one to save such a little miserable life as that. Sometimes [illegible] this is about, with your [illegible] in the tenements? If you want to understand just what it means, come with me at the [illegible] July or August when [illegible] those mothers walking up and down the pavements with their little babes trying to stir some breath of God's air to cool the brow of the sick child and hear the [illegible] Then tell me [illegible] that they ought to be [illegible] a year ago that an Italian city [illegible] would [illegible] that he did not know what to do with these Italian children in the [illegible] "Let me come and help them." They [illegible] Such Good Christian charity [illegible] out.

One dingy neighborhood visited by our missionary workers was an alley off Bleecker street on the East-side. From some dilapidated rear buildings, a number of miserably clad children were picked out as candidates for the healthful breezes of Mont-Lawn. It is impossible to picture the delight of those little folks when they realized that they were to be taken, on the next afternoon, to the Children's Home. The day was wet and all the children had been kept indoors, so they made a playground of the gloomy lower hall of the tenement. Our artist has pictured them as they appeared when the visitors entered the place. A moment later, on hearing the news all was excitement: the youngsters scrambled up the broken stairway, to the imminent danger of bare legs and other limbs, and in a twinkling, the place swarmed with children, all clamoring to be placed on the list. Only eleven could be taken, although there were fully a score of really deserving ones; but the resources of the Fund impose a limit. Some of the others may go to Mont-Lawn, however, before the season closes.

"THE GLOOMY TENEMENT HALL WAS THEIR PLAY-GROUND."

Among a number of similar letters received during the week, forwarding contributions to the Children's Home, was the following:

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

By express, we send to-day, a barrel of dresses, hats, etc., for the "Fresh-Air Children." They are sent by Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Rich, Miss W. Brown, Miss Hutchinson, Mrs. Thayer, Miss Hogg a[illegible] Jackson, Marjii Thayer, Margaret Eng[illegible] Wykes who are members of "The Ready [illegible] and "Kind Thoughts" Circle. The children as the grown people, have taken great ple[illegible] preparing these little dresses. Yours "in His

MRS. JOSEPH S. THAYER, Leader of C[illegible]

This gift, sent by "Ready Han[illegible] cle," and "Kind Thoughts Circle [illegible] been used to make a number of ou[illegible] guests look presentable, in anticipa[illegible] their return from Mont-Lawn. Th[illegible] duly appreciative of the kindness.

"Friends in Guilford," Conn., ($3) [illegible] "We hope some little child will b[illegible] lastingly benefitted. Wish we cou[illegible] ten times the amount." Emma L. [illegible] Chillicothe, O., ($3): "This for a te[illegible] outing for some poor little girl, and [illegible] do her good, both body and soul. [illegible] that many precious souls may be l[illegible] to Christ through the good work [illegible] being done at Mont-Lawn." [illegible] Friends," Duluth, Minn., have re[illegible] account of the terrible suffering of [illegible] dren in the tenement houses," an[illegible] their contribution "to bring at leas[illegible] sunshine to some of the neglected [illegible] "I pray that before the summer is [illegible] writes "A Mother," Chicago Heigh[illegible] ($1), "that every child may be gl[illegible] by a taste of the blessings at Mont[illegible] When I read of their bitter lives, I c[illegible] own two darling boys and pray that, [illegible] we are very poor, God in his infinit[illegible] may ever protect them. Oh, tha[illegible] Lawn could be made a permanent h[illegible] the waifs."

Very touching is the note from an [illegible] mous donor in Knoxville, Ill., who [illegible] viding an outing for "some mo[illegible] child," adds, "I pray that the litt[illegible] may be turned to Jesus only in th[illegible] ness, and receive spiritual blessings [illegible] as pleasure and happiness." "For t[illegible] of my precious darling (Frank), an[illegible] name of Jesus whom he loved, I se[illegible] provide an outing for someone's d[illegible] writes Mrs. C. M. B., Ontario Ce[illegible] Y. "Perhaps having children of [illegible] has made me more tender-hearted, [illegible] M. C. J., Stamford, Ont., ($1). [illegible] C., Mass., writes: "Since God has [illegible] me with so many blessings, I f[illegible] what I have is not my own, but I [illegible] wish to give my mite ($1). It is [illegible] dollar I possess in the world, but [illegible] help some little suffering one to [illegible] One who loves children, and longs [illegible] trust to be placed in him. God t[illegible] work and save the little ones is my[illegible]

Previously Acknowledged	$2,499 76
Susan Judson	2 00
Sara "	1 00
[illegible] Alameda	1 00
P H Hough	1 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	3 00
Mrs J S Flitch	3 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	4 00
[illegible]	6 00
[illegible]	6 00
Laura Clough	3 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	3 00
Gladys M Lyman	6 00
[illegible]	5 00
[illegible]	5 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	2 00
[illegible]	6 00
[illegible]	10 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	6 00
[illegible]	2 00
[illegible]	5 00
A P, Cincinnati	5 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible] Antigo	3 00
[illegible]	2 00
[illegible] Xenia	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible] & wife	3 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	5 00
[illegible]	3 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1

CHRIST CAME TO THE CABIN.

w a Poor, Dying Missouri Farmer rusted in the Saviour—Our Missionary mong the New Sunday Schools.

EW more interesting letters appear in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD than those we print from time to time from the pen of our Sunday School missionary in the Southwest, Rev. Geo. W. Sharp. Sharp, who is now on his regular midmer tour through those districts where has planted new schools and churches, ds us this week some helpful ings of his experiences. In a ter dated at Browning, Lima unty, Mo., he says:

One day in my present tour as told of a very sick man ose house I would pass on road. When I had driven e distance, I met a young n with whom I conversed as ows: 'Can you tell me where R. C. (the sick man) lives?' s, sir, I am his son. He s in the next house you e to.' 'Was he raised in ton county?' 'Yes, sir.' as his father's name also R. 'I don't know much ut my grand-dad. Did you w my dad?' 'I am not . The name seems far.'

A short drive brought me he log cabin in which R. C. his family live. He has sick since March and is ected soon to die. I went the house and found him feeble, lying on his bed, unable to talk much. In wer to my questions he told of his trust in the blessed iour. We joined in prayer, before leaving I quoted the ds of our adorable Lord, t not your heart be troubled,' He answered in a calm, erate manner, 'Nothing bles me now.' Bidding him affectionate farewell I drove ly away, surveying everything with a full heart—the -daubed cabin, with its , worn roof; the unadornyard with its plain, rude ce;—everything indicating poverty. Amidst all this ard wretchedness and prod suffering, the grace of enabling him to say in swelling of Jordan, 'Nothroubles me now!' These ds of the dying man cheered m the heat of the day, as I e over steep hills and wound around ly ridges, in dim roads, through the , tangled, wild-wood.

Next day was Sunday and I planted a ol at Kent school house, on a poor, le, oak ridge where, I suppose, there r was one before. It ought to have an dance of at least sixty scholars. The bitants of the district are generally and little instructed.

I recently reorganized a school where I planted one several years ago. The erintendent said: 'Since you were here denominational school has been organin our school house, but it failed. None Union school, such as you organized, succeed in this mixed community,' or s to that purport.

I have attended service in another place e I organized a school years ago in a school house, and was surprised on ecent visit to see that they have a comous church house. I addressed a large regation. The superintendent spoke rsons who had been converted since I nized the school, who have died. He e tenderly of their conversion and death oof of the good the school had been mental in doing. It was painful to him relate that a convention of six or flourishing country schools was held , about two years ago, at which two chers spoke very unfavorably of Union ols. The poverty of the people induem to have Union schools, and the ness of the denominations has caused elical churches to build Union church es at which the denominations wor from Sunday to Sunday, each having nthly preaching in its turn.

"The addresses of the two preachers had a very discouraging effect upon the people of the several schools. Their schools were prosperous, souls were being converted, the churches were growing, and the brethren were dwelling 'together in unity.' The laborers of the six or seven schools felt that they needed and deserved help and encouragement, but instead met with opposition. Where they expected a fish they were given a stone. My visit, therefore, to that part of my field seemed to be very necessary. I was heartily thanked and invited to come again. I shall do what I can to lend them a helping hand. I can now count seven church houses in two townships, where, when I first organized schools in small school houses, there was not one church edifice.

"The last week has been the hottest of the summer, with frequent and heavy rains from which the streams are swollen, roads are muddy, and culverts are injured, impeding travel. I ask prayer for myself, and family and work. GEO. W. SHARP,

Christian Herald Missionary of the Am. S. S. Union.

SIMPLICITY IN RELIGION.

In this period of luxurious and æsthetic living one must not always and everywhere be comfortable. One may have stairs to climb to an audience-room, cold in winter and hot in summer, yet be repaid by a feast worth going for, in eloquent and scholarly preaching, in a spirituality which elevates and inspires. Soon after the war, a little band of God's people in West Virginia found themselves worshipping in a primitive schoolhouse, with rough planks, backless, for seats, the green turf under their feet, and chinks in walls and roof letting in air and sky. "Never," wrote a friend, have I been nearer to God, than in that dear, rude little church; never heard finer congregational praise; nor more fervent prayer, nor better preaching."

THE POTTER AND THE CLAY.

I WATCHED, and marveled at the skill
Of one who moulded potters' clay,
As soft and yielding to his will Within his hands it helpless lay,
A dark, unsightly mass, devoid
Of beauty or of form, yet he Thereon much cunning skill employed
To shape its future destiny.

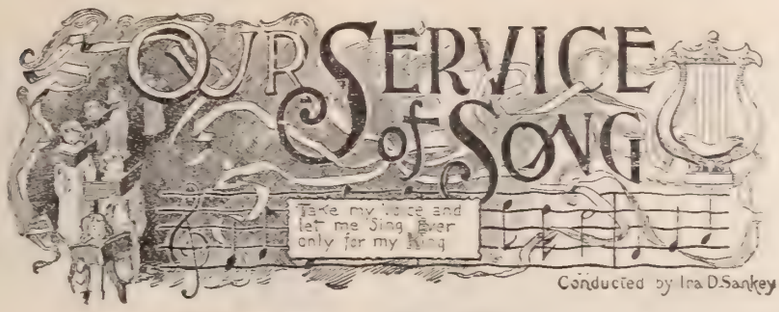
It suffered him in turn to knead,
To grind, to mould as should him please,
Or tear apart, if that indeed
The master workman fitting sees;
Experience taught him when to feel
The lump was pliable enough
For him to place it on the wheel
That was to plane its surface rough.

Most jealously I saw him toil
Long, weary hours with tireless hand;
He feared some ruthless touch might spoil
The work of art that he had planned.
He ne'er withdrew his watchful eye,
Nor dreamed of rest until he saw
The finished work before him lie,
A master-piece without a flaw.

"Oh, God," (this prayer rose to my heart),
"Teach me 'mid trials to be still,
Since thou the Heavenly Potter art,
Bend, break, or grind my stubborn will.
With clay thou knowest how to deal;
I dare not fret, however hard
My lot, lest on the potter's wheel
A vessel may be sadly marred.

New Brunswick, N. J. —MRS. MARY LUIZ.

OUR SERVICE of SONG



Conducted by Ira D. Sankey

BEARING THE CROSS.

EBEN E. REXFORD. W. A. OGDEN.

1. When I am worn and wea - ry, And read - y to de- spair; I think of Thee, my Sav- iour,
2. When I would murmur, Sav-iour, Be - neath my small-er load, And faint- ing, weak and wea - ry,
3. What is my small-est bur- den To that my Sav-iour bore! Be still my heart, and murmur
And what Thou hadst to bear. Thy cross, a - las! how heav - y; So steep the ston - y way;
Sink down be- side the road;—Give me, dear Lord, a vis - ion Of rug - ged Cal - va - ry,
Be - neath thy load no more. Bear pa - tient - ly thy cross- es In ways the Mas- ter trod, Chorus.
Dear Lord what is my bur- den, Compared with Thine, to- day.
And then Thine own cross bearing, To help, and strengthen me.
And fol - low in the foot-steps That lead thee up to God.
O Christ, Thou burden-bear - er.
Thy foot- prints still I see; Oh help me now to fol - low And bear my cross for Thee.

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From HIGHEST PRAISE for SABBATH SCHOOLS,
By Permission of the Publishers.

THE EXILES' TRIUMPH.

Glory and Power awaiting the Jews when they Recognize Christ as King.

BY REV. J. HUGHES GAMES, D.C.L.

IN that reign of Christ on earth which for nineteen centuries has been the hope of his people and was dimly foreshadowed by the prophets long before that, God's chosen people will play a prominent part. Israel has only been cast away for a season—a long and weary one it is true, but still a limited one. God will graft them—"the natural branches," which have been broken off—again "into their own olive tree" (Rom. 11:23,24). And under their Messiah King, they will dominate the earth, to the great benefit of the nations; for "if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness?" and "if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" (Rom. 11: 12, 15).

And is not this strong, and just, and beneficent rule of the coming King, who is to "reign in righteousness," what the nations of the earth have never had, but what they sorely need and are, all unconsciously, it may be, yearning for to-day? During the whole period of Gentile domination governments of all kinds have been a failure—never more conspicuously than to-day; while potentates of every description have shown, more or less their incapacity to rule. Read the history of any country; regard the condition of the nations to-day; consider the increasing immorality and the commercial dishonesty that are only too prevalent; contemplate the disputes between capital and labor which are so rife, and the growing discontent of the laboring classes; view the widely spread anarchism—under the various names of Socialism, Communism, Nihilism, and so on,—which is so rampant, threatening to subvert all governments, and destroy all civilized society, and only kept down by armed force; think of the millions under arms, with all the deadly appliances of modern warfare for national destruction, and ready at any moment to grapple with one another in deadly conflict, and deluge the earth with blood. Consider all this, and then say, Are not things ripe, and are not the times clamoring for, and are not the nations needing, indeed, the advent of the great King to set up his reign of righteousness, mercy, and peace in this suffering, struggling, sin-stricken, weary earth?

"When the Lord shall build up Zion he shall appear again in his glory;" and from what we see around us, who can doubt that the Lord has already begun to "build up Zion," or, in other words, that the restoration of the Jews has commenced? This is a warning note on the clock of God's providence, that the mystery of God is about to finish, and that we are nearing the time of the end, the close of this dispensation—"When ye see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24: 33). His appearing in power and great glory, then, cannot be very distant, and is, probably, very near. And so, while men's hearts are "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," ye, who are God's people, may "look up, and lift your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21: 26, 28). Soon—who can say how soon?—shall we be able to take up the triumph-notes of the song, written long centuries ago, with a view to the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, and for the express purpose of welcoming the inauguration of the rule of the great King, the Prince of the House of David:

O clap your hands, all ye peoples;
Shout unto God with the voice of triumph.
For the Lord Most High is terrible;
He is a great King over all the earth.
He shall subdue the peoples under us,
And the nations under our feet.—Ps. 47: 1-3 R.V.)

A KNOCK AT THE DOOR.

A Sermonette by Dr. Alexander Macleod.

Text: Rev. 3:20: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

ONE morning, many years ago, I had to leave home early. It was still dark. East and west, north and south, it was dark. Above me rose the night-sky covered with clouds, like some great cathedral roof, all dark—almost black with darkness—except one little chink of deep blue in the east.

On the lower edge of that chink of blue stood the morning star. I remember thinking it was a great sight, that solitary star, flaming there within that chink of blue. It looked to me like an angel standing behind the darkness, knocking at the dark clouds, and saying, "Break up, ye dark clouds, and let me through, that I may shed my light upon the earth."

While I was still admiring the great sight, the words flashed into my mind: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." And instantly I seemed to be walking under a still more solemn sky, and looking at a far greater sight. In the words which came into my mind I saw One greater than an angel—"the Bright and Morning Star" of God—standing at a door and knocking. In the morning stillness I seemed to hear a voice inviting me to look at this greater sight. "Behold,"—the voice said—"I stand at the door and knock." I remembered that these were Christ's own words. And I found myself thinking of Christ, the King of Glory, and thinking of him in the form of One who is standing knocking at a door. I want you to look with me for a little at this great sight of Christ at the door.

I ask myself—I hear you asking:—At what door we are to look for the blessed Jesus standing and knocking?

The answer is:—At all doors. At all kinds of doors. At house doors, and shop doors, and school doors, and church doors. At every door which has not been opened to let him in. At every door which shuts in a bad man, or naughty child. At the doors of houses where there is no love between father and mother, between brother and sister, between parent and child. At the doors of schools where the scholars are idle, or wicked, or thoughtless. At the doors of work-places where workers are unfaithful and masters are unkind. At the doors of churches where God is not truly worshipped. At the doors of courts of justice where men are unjustly judged. And at the doors of king's houses where nations are unjustly ruled. At all such doors the Lord Jesus stands and knocks. And, besides these, another door—a very little door, but a very, very precious door—the door that opens into the house within the heart.

When God made the world, he built in it many houses. "In my Father's house are many mansions." "The stars are mansions built by God." The deep sea, and the lofty mountains, and the leafy woods, are all mansions built by God. He made houses for beasts, and houses for birds, and houses for fishes. He made a house for the sea, and a house for the clouds; and for man he made the earth. But among all these houses there was one more precious than the rest,—one little, rich, unseen mansion, which he built for himself, for himself alone, and in which he desires to dwell. This unseen mansion—this rich, royal house of God—is the heart. It is your heart, my heart, every heart. It is at the door of this house that the Lord Jesus stands and knocks.

Think of it! It is worth thinking about. A house for the Great Creator in the heart of a little child! How fearfully and wonderfully we are made! When you look at the body of another child, you might think there is nothing more. The body is the house. Yet the body is only the outer wall, the mere outside, of the house. Within this fair outside, in you, in every one, stands the real house. "Eye hath not seen it." It lies far in, deep down,—where love [illegible] house. It is at the door of your heart that Jesus knocks. Behold, O child, the gentle Jesus! He stands at the door of your heart, and knocks. I have said that he made this house for himself. But I have also to say that, although he made it for himself, and desires to dwell in it, he does not always dwell in it. He is often kept standing without. "Behold," he says, "I stand at the door and knock." At the door! Outside of the door! He has not yet got in through the door! It is Jesus, at the outside of the heart-door, we have to look at. Jesus kept standing, and knocking there, to get in!

How is it with you? Have you heard Christ knocking? And if you have, have you opened and let him in?

People who have let Christ into their hearts are like the beautiful temple King Solomon built, which had its innermost best room set apart for God. Those who leave him outside are like the inn at Bethlehem, which had no room for the infant Jesus. But that is an unblessed state, to have no room for Jesus. To leave him—the best friend we have—the loving Saviour, outside, knocking at the door,—that would be such a sad thing for any child of man to do, and I desire so earnestly that you should not do it, that I will take up the rest of the time, which remains to-day, in stating some reasons why you should open your hearts and let him in.

One reason is, because he will bring heaven with him into your heart. Young people, and some old people as well, find a great difficulty in beginning to be good. They resolve to be good. They try to be good; but always their badness gets the better of them, and they are sad. If they would only admit Jesus into their hearts, this difficulty would disappear. He brings goodness with him into the heart.

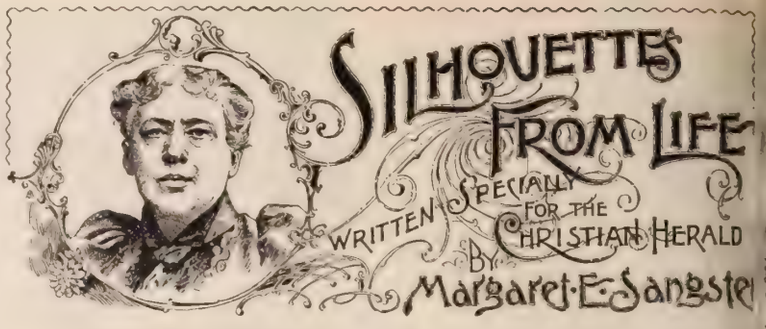
A second reason why you should let Jesus into the heart is, that he will cast out the bad things which are in the heart. And there are many bad things which need to be cast out—bad thoughts, bad wishes, bad feelings, lies, anger, malice, hatred, envy, selfishness, pride—these should all be cast out. We are told in the history of Jesus, that he cast out evil spirits from some Jewish children. There are evil spirits to be cast out from the children of this country, too. The Bible tells us about "plagues of the heart." The heart of a Christless child is full of plagues; plagues that will be plagues through all eternity if they are not cast out. Jesus is waiting at the door to come in and cast every one of them out. Lift up the door of your heart and let him in, that he may cast out every plague and evil thing in your life.

A third reason why you should let him in is, that it is easier to let him in when you are young than after. The door at which he stands knocking grows thicker and harder to open the longer he is kept outside. The knocking comes more faintly every day. Jesus is still there; but the spirit that should hear is growing deaf as it grows old. At last it does not hear at all.

I saw a sad story in the newspapers not long ago. A poor woman lived all alone in a dark cellar. She was very, very poor. But one day the neighbors missed her. They went to the door and listened, and there was no sound. They knocked and got no answer. They knocked again, and still there was no reply. Then they forced the door and went in. She was dead. She was seated on the floor, her body leaning against the wall. There was neither fire, nor furniture, nor bedclothes, nor food in the house. In a great rich city, she had died of want. Ah, sad though that was, the way many souls die is sadder still! They shut out Jesus in the days of youth. They keep him out when they grow old, and then when he comes knocking at the door of the heart with bread of truth, they cannot hear. Their bodies are living; their souls are dead. If you could break open the door of that inner house where the soul is, and see what God sees there, you would find a heart without truth, or love, or faith, or prayer; and in it a soul that has died of want.

Another reason why you should open to Jesus is, that he will not always knock. He will not knock after you die. He may even go away from the door before you die. Ephraim had idols and kept Jesus out, and Jesus said, "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone."

Some people are able to tell you when they first heard the knocks of Jesus. These are first knocks. Remember also there are last knocks. When the heart becomes hard and careless, then be afraid. Be afraid lest Christ should knock for the last time. Oh, you, at whose heart he is still knocking; you, whose hearts are still fresh and young; oh, children, in the days of youth, open the doors of your hearts and let the King of Glory in.



THE TRIBE OF REUBEN.

(Continued from page 528.)

II.

THE first time that Kate Rainsforth knocked at the door of Mrs. Shreves in the middle of a Monday morning, the door was shut in her face. She had chosen the wrong time for a visit. Mrs. Shreves was at the washtub. Her youngest baby was sprawling on the floor. Two older children were quarreling over bread and molasses. A boy of twelve was swinging on the gate, and on the post sat a girl of nine years, with untidy hair and a torn apron.

"Say, Missus," said the latter, "if you're after kids to go to Sunday School, this ain't your shop."

"I am not looking for kids to go to Sunday School," answered the young lady. "I am making friendly calls, and I will come again when your mother is not so busy."

She passed on, smiling back over her shoulder at the surprise in the faces by the gate. Lizze and Tommy stared after her and at each other, open-mouthed.

"She's nice!" said Lizzie gravely. "Wot a pretty dress she's got on, and that sunshade, oh! it's sweet!"

Lizzie's mind had received an impression. So had Tom's. He suddenly jumped from the gate and ran helter skelter after the lady.

"Say!" he shouted. "Say, lady! Won't yer gimme some new clothes; these is the best I've got. I ain't got no better pants than these. I'd go to Sunday School if I had decent clothes."

Kate stopped and looked at him. She saw a dirty boy, with a rough mop of black hair, and a pair of great black eyes. It was a keen intelligent face that returned her gaze without anything sly or covert.

Kate took a dainty card from her pocket-book. "I would't insult you by giving you a new suit," she said, a "but if you'll come to my house, and ask for me, I'll put you in the way of earning a fine suit. I'll let you work for me every morning, and you shall be well paid."

The boy's brow clouded. "I'd do it, and be glad to," he said, "but marm would take the money as fast as I earned it. I couldn't hide it from her, she 'd get it when I was asleep, and if pop found it out, he 'd take it and drink it up."

"You and I shall be partners," said the young lady holding out her hand. "The money you earn, I'll drop for you into a money pig in my room, or rather you shall drop it in yourself. When there is enough to pay for the clothes I'll go to the shop with you and we'll see about them togther."

"Honest Injun!" said the boy, eagerly.

"Honest Injun!" said the lady, solemnly.

It was a bargain. For the next fortnight Tommy Shreves spent several hours a day weeding flower borders and running errands for Kate Rainsforth, always finding a good breakfast waiting for him.

He gradually improved in cleanliness. Stepping into Miss Rainsforth's room, with its shining hard-wood floor, its soft rugs, its divan piled with cushions, its little teatable set with fairy cups and saucers, and its pictures on the walls, the boy felt as a pariah might if invited into a palace.

In due time he earned his new suit, gray cloth with gilt buttons, and found shoes and a cap added, for extra work, Miss Kate said, and then he asked to go to Sunday School with her.

One by one, the family was taken captive. Tommy reported his mother one morning as "awful sick," and Kate, first eating her luncheon, sallied forth to investigate for herself. She was able to soot the poor woman's pain, and to make her reviving cup of tea, and this kindne proved the entering wedge. Friendly lations having been established, Miss K by degrees allowed her visits to have certain regularity, and on Wednesd mornings the little Shreves were accusto to watch for the tall, graceful figure swi ing down the road at a great pace, and ways stopping at their door. Everybo in Dead Man's Flats knew who this visi was, and that she belonged in a special w to the Shreves. Once she came, a v ion of delight, riding a roan pony, a dressed in a dark green habit, with a hi hat on her tightly braided hair. She pic up the Shreve twins, first one and then other, and gave them a ride down the r to the end of the settlement and back, a which nothing would do, but that all small children clamored in turn to be tal up to the saddle, and finally when a do had been gratified, she alighted and let older ones lifted to her seat by the so what sullen, but quite obedient Engl groom, have the pleasure of feeling a hc move under their weight.

Henceforth Kate Rainsforth was queen of Dead Man's Flats. She had tal the hearts of everybody captive. Thus she had not said a directly religious wo she had simply lived religion before th Perhaps her sitting down in Mrs. Shre kitchen and showing the woman how mend her man's shirts and darn his st ings, doing part of the mending with own fingers, was as truly pious an act anything she might have offered in pra or song.

There came a day when Kate Rainsfo kneeling in the midst of a group, calle God audibly, from those forlorn flats. A had been hurt in the mill. He was brot home, the damp dews of death beading forehead. The doctor, hastily summo declared there was nothing he could do hurt was fatal. Beside the dying boy, mother and father bent, for once dumb anguish. He was Tommy Shreves' fr and playmate, and Tommy flew for lady," with some dim notion that she c save Jim. She came; she bent over couch with angelic pity. The face of th ing sought hers with imploring anx

"Pray—for—me—lady," the white lips gasped, and Kate prayed.

"Dear Jesus," she cried, "thou art l thou seest our sorrow. Take this dear home to heaven—forgive his sin. Not helped him to be good. He wants thy l now to lead him over the river and t the throne. Oh! dear Jesus, pitying viour, we all ask thy help in our l need. We ask, for Christ's sa "Amen!" cried the people of Dead M Flats, and the passing soul of Jimmy B went to the land of the living.

* * *

"Mary!"

"Well, John?"

Judge and Mrs. Rainsforth had list to Pet, who had played Chopin's st music and Mendelssohn's liquid fire their souls were flooded with melody. girl had just kissed them good night

"That daughter of ours is a very pre thing, my dear. She has brought the sonal element to bear on the Shr Shreves, Senior, called on me to-day forced on me a five-dollar bill. He s was conscience money, and I took it, have declined would have crushed bac awakening manhood: but that bill go into Pet's box, and be returned wit terest to Dead Man's Flats."

"I wish the flats had a more ch name."

"They probably will have some da am told that the people want to cal place, 'Miss Kate's Gardens.'"

MARGARET E. SANGST

Clever Chinese Girls.

...ure Taught all the Useful Domes-...tic Arts at an Early Age — Glimpses ...Chinese Home Life.

ALTHOUGH for the moment a dark cloud of sorrow and indignation, caused by the recent disaster to the missionaries in Fukien, obscures the interest of the Christian world in China's Gos...gress, that vast empire is, and will ...e to be, the grandest and most in...field for missionary effort on the ...lobe. Christianity's foothold in ...is one that cannot be shaken off ... philosophical society or political ... however numer...owerful, and the ... lives yielded up ... martyrs at Ku... will serve to ... stronger than ...fore. There are ...ds of homes in ...untry where the ... now prized and ...the true God ...en the place of ...s, that had been ... down through ...ons. Persecution ...tical sects has ...ved to multiply ...ny of native ...ns.

...hinese families, ...tion of mother ...gher is a pecu...se one, arising ... from the fact ... father usually ... very low esti... the daughter, ... lavishes love ...ensive training ... son. In many ... of the common ... — neither ... nor actual... —the girls, ... mere chil... taught to ...ting to the ...income by ... some one of ... trades that ... vast mul... poor wom... over the ... Kingdom. ... taught to make soles for Chi... s, by pasting rags on a wooden ... til half an inch in thickness is ...en when it is sun-dried and sent to the ...ers. Others make lanterns, fans, ...es for jewelers, or pleat silk for ...-makers, who use it in lengthening ... Many embroider in silk and linen, ... ll girls doing this work with re... delicacy and skill. Probably ... are employed in the manufacture ...noney to be used in the worship ...s, than in any other industry, but ...ow many native Christian homes ... h work is no longer taken.

...comes about that, in very many ...omes, the girls receive little or no ... of a purely intellectual character. ...ongol maxim asserts that it is not ... wife to be as clever as her hus..., proceeding upon this principle, ... se purposely keep their daughters ... Even in rich homes, it is the rare ... for a daughter to share the stu... son, or even to aspire to such a ... a favorite and pretty, she lives a doll's life, dressed, petted, caressed, being taught deportment or a few conventional accomplishments, and also embroidery and music; but of the head or the heart, there is not, in the higher sense of the word, any attempt at culture whatsoever.

Probably the most happily situated girls are the daughters of familes of the middle class. They are taught to do a great variety of domestic work and, in the main, they do it very skilfully. Economy is considered a prime virtue, and this is impressed upon the domestic pupil at the outset. The diet of the people is very simple. In his excellent book on "Chinese Characteristics," from which our illustration is taken, Rev. Arthur H. Smith gives these very interesting points regarding domestic life:

The vast bulk of the population seems to depend upon a few articles, such as rice, beans in various preparations, millet, garden vegetables, and fish. These, with a few other things, form the staple of countless millions, supplemented it may be on feast-days, or other special occasions, with a bit of meat. Even in famine times, thousands of persons have been kept alive for months on an allowance of not more than a cent and a half a day. There is very little waste in the preparation of Chinese food, and everything is made to do as much duty as possible. What there is left after a Chinese family have finished one of their meals would represent but a fraction of the net cost of the food. The populations of new countries are proverbially wasteful, and we have not the least doubt that it would be possible to support sixty millions of Asiatics in comparative luxury with the materials daily wasted in a land like the United States, where a living is easily to be had. Even the tea left in the Chinese cups is poured back into the teapot to be heated again.

Every Chinese housewife knows how to make the most of her materials. Her dress is not in its pattern or its construction wasteful like those of her sisters in Occidental countries, but all is planned to save time, strength, and material. The tiniest scrap of foreign stuff is always welcome to a Chinese woman, who will make it reappear in forms of utility if not of beauty. What cannot be employed in one place is sure to be just the thing for another, and a mere trifle of bias stuff is sufficient for the binding of a shoe. The Chinese have their bathing houses, but the greater part of the Chinese people never go near them, nor indeed never saw one. "Do you wash your child every day?" said an inquisitive foreign lady to a Chinese mother, who was seen throwing shovelfuls of dirt over her progeny, and then wiping it off with an old broom. "Wash him every day!" was the indignant response; "he was never washed since he was born!" Washing of clothes there certainly is, but it is on a very subdued scale, and in comparison with what we call cleanliness it might almost be left out of account.

It will thus be seen, from Mr. Smith's description, that while there are no doubt many points in which the Chinese might set a profitable example to less economical races, on the whole, it is economy run to a degree where it becomes miserliness and destructive of much of the joy and comfort of living.

A CHINESE KITCHEN, SHOWING METHOD OF BAKING AND PREPARING FOOD.

***

A Queen's Pet Donkeys.

Queen Victoria has a number of donkeys and ponies, of whom she makes special pets. One favorite is Skewbald, a Shetland pony, three and a half feet high, that draws the royal great-grandchildren in a two-wheeled cart. Then there is Jacquot, the brown donkey with the white nose, which draws the Queen's chair, and is usually taken with her Majesty on her foreign holidays. A grey donkey, whose sire was purchased at Cairo by Lord Wolseley, and by him presented to the Queen, has also drawn the royal carriage, and even carried some of her Majesty's grandchildren. Jenny, an old white donkey, born at Virginia Water, is another pet with the great-grandchildren.

***

The Summer Garden.

At this season, when gardens are looking their loveliest, it is like a breath of sweet perfume to read these lines by B. F. Leggett:

The honey-bees are droning in the pollen-dusted bells,
In quest of treasured sweetness for their hidden waxen cells:
The roses and the violets in beauty are ablow
Within the little garden where the scarlet poppies grow;
The sunflower and the marigold are lighting up the gloom—
The hollyhock is idling there—a very tramp of bloom,
While tulips lift their beakers up and pledge in ruddy wine,
The dear old home forever, where the morning-glories twine.

THE OLD HOUSE.

THE old house stands upon the hill,
Gloomy of face and grey:
The wind wails over it at will,
The lichen on the window sill
Hides fondly its decay.
The spiders build upon the wall,
And in the wainscot of the hall
The mice and crickets play.
The garden beds are over-run
With groundsel, green and gold;
Wind-sown and blessed by rain and sun,
And all unchecked by any one,
Grow dandelions bold.
The dust lies thick across the floor,
The ivy trails across the door,
The hearth is bleak and cold.
When last I saw this house, the light
Of living love was there;
The lawn was smooth, the garden bright,
And everything that met my sight
Was summer-like and fair.
Gay children played amongst the bloom,
Fond faces lit each sunny room
With light beyond compare.
The old house stands upon the hill
Just as it stood of yore,
The wind and rain can play at will
Around the moss-grown window-sill
And through the creaking door.
The gladsome laughter long is dead,
For all the light and life have fled
And wake to life no more.
They may be far, they may be near,
I know not where they be;
I only know a silent tear
Rises as ghosts of them appear
'Twixt the old house and me.
The moonlight floods the broken gate
And all is cold and desolate
Where once they used to be.

***

"Heart-Parties."

A new form of innocent amusement for the young folks, these summer evenings, is the "heart-party," which is really a pretty and attractive substitute for the old time "donkey-party." A large heart made of red flannel cloth is pinned to a sheet hung upon a door or wall. In the centre of the heart is sewed a small circle of white. Arrows of white cloth with pins placed therein are given to the guests, each arrow bearing a number, the number corresponding to a list whereon the names and numbers of the guests are placed. The point of the game, of course, is to see who will pin the arrow nearest to the central spot of white. Prizes are given — one each for the lady and gentleman coming the nearest to the centre, and one each to those coming the farthest from the bull's eye. The prizes may be bonbons, cake or any trifling souvenir.

***

The Good-night Kiss.

How glad a true child is to kneel by his mother's knee and say his evening prayer, or to have his father kneel with him as he prays! How he enjoys words of approval or encouragement when they precede the good-night kiss from either parent! With what warmth and grateful affection his young heart glows as he feels the tender impress of his mother's hand or lips upon his forehead before he drops asleep. How bright and dear does that home seem to him at such an hour! How sorry he is for every word or act of unkindness which he then recalls from his conduct of the day! How ready he then is to confess his specific acts of misdoing, and all his remembered failures, and to make new resolves and purposes of doing for the future! Whatever else a child is impatient to grow away from, he does not readily outgrow the enjoyment of his mother's good-night. As long as she is willing to visit his bedside, and gave him a kiss, with a loving word, just before he goes to sleep, he is sure to count that privilege of his home as something above price, and without which he would have a sense of sad lack. And at no time is he more sure than then to be ready to do whatever his mother would ask of him; at no time do gentle, tender words of loving counsel from her sink deeper into his heart, or make a stronger impression.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

THE GREAT TRAVELING CARRIAGE ON ITS WAY TO THE WAR.

CHAPTER VII.

Sergei's Ordeals.

SERGEI'S long return ride was none of the pleasantest. He felt somehow that his interview with the Countess had not been successful or well managed, that he had not said what he had wanted to say, that he had said more than he should have said, and, worse than all, he felt that she had not said all that she had on her mind.

And now he had to face the uncertain accidents of a long war before he could see her again. The possibility of winning military renown was never once in his thoughts. He loved his country indeed with a passion that he himself scarcely realized, and he was firmly convinced of the justice of the cause—the crusade, he believed it to be—on which the armies of the Czar were now embarked; but he could not help feeling that soldiering was not his "metier," and that his true vocation was in less exciting spheres, where he might work for his beloved peasantry, and help to lighten the temporal and spiritual burdens under which they groaned. He felt that his life hitherto had been all wrong, and that if he remained in the army it would be only warped and twisted beyond redemption. But war was now declared, a just war besides, and he would be a poltroon to desert the larger interests of the country in favor of his inclinations, however much these might be in accordance with his own individual notions of righteousness. And so through all the long hours back to Slavo his mind was troubled with great doubts. His position perplexed and worried him. He felt, moreover, that he had not a friend in the world to whom he might unburden himself.

And then he suddenly bethought himself of the young preacher, the friend of his boyhood, the man who had grown up through much affliction and the practice of infinite self-denial to be a rock of strength to his fellows. Mikhail Kulmenko was his friend still. He would go straight to him, and together they would seek counsel. Sergei had never forgotten the morning before he left Slavo for the military school, when young Mikhail took him to a grassy hollow in the steppe and asked him to kneel down [illegible] guide him amid the snares of the new life opening before him. This had been only the first of several such visits to the hollow, and Sergei thought that he would ask Mikhail to accompany him once more, and possibly for the last time, to the well-known spot where he would humble himself before God, and ask his guidance and blessing.

And there, just before him at the entrance to the village, stood Mikhail Kulmenko in his little garden facing the west, with his head [illegible] the last sun flaming low on the horizon, and gazing at the approaching horseman. Sergei dismounted, and [illegible] garden railings, went forward and clasped his friend's hand.

"Mikhail," he said, "I am come to speak with you. I could not go [illegible] seeing you. I'm leaving to-morrow, you know."

*Published in strip covers and bound in cloth by Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, and Toronto.

Mikhail said never a word, and led the way into the house, and when the old mother knew that the two men would be alone together, she slipped out to see a neighbor. Mikhail's face was pale as death save for the angry red mark on his forehead left by the "uriadnik."

"Sit down, Panitch," he said. "You are tired after your long ride. You have been to Kransnaya Balka. I heard them say you had ridden over there. Is the Countess well? She is a good woman, Panitch."

"Yes, Mikhail, she is well. Mikhail, you're an old friend of mine; you're my only friend, I think. It is about the Countess that I partly wish to speak to you. I'm going away, and may be away for a year, or I may never come back, God only knows. I want you to promise to go over there often and speak to her—to speak to her about what is holiest and best in life. She is a good woman, Mikhail, a noble woman, and she wants to do noble and good deeds. Go over and help her. She knows you and likes you. And then I want you to promise to write me every week a long letter about her, and what she is doing, and if she is well, and what she says. Mikhail, I'm speaking to you as to my brother, and I trust you with my secret. I love the Countess better than I love my life. Will you promise me this, Mikhail?"

Mikhail raised his eyes to his young master's face. "Panitch, dear brother, I cannot do this. I have something to tell you, and you will then decide if I am right. I must leave home, Panitch—I must leave home at once. If I stay here, God forgive me, I shall go mad. I have fought against it for months, and it is conquering me, and I grow more and more helpless. You don't know what is going on. You know Nadvejda Sozontieff. Perhaps, Panitch, you know how for years I have loved her, although I had so little hope of making her my wife. Even in those years when we used to go fishing together, and when she used to come out of her father's "izba" to watch us land the fish, I knew that I loved Nadya, and I believed that she loved me. We were often together, and it was I who taught her to read and write. I gave her my New Testament. Her father disliked me even then, for I was the son of Ivan Kulmenko, who had brought the light to the village, the light that he in his blindness could not see, the light that he still hates so fiercely. But we grew up together, Panitch, she and I, and although in time we saw one another less frequently, I got to love her more and more, and those were the only golden days in my life when I saw Nadya. Once returning from fishing by the river road—it was shortly after father's death—I overtook her and told her I was now nearly a man, and that she would soon be a woman. I opened all my heart to her, Panitch, and she put her arms around my neck and kissed me, and cried, and said she loved me, but said that she could not marry me, as her father hated me so. She wished to promise that she would never marry anyone else, but I would not hear of this. That happened just about a year before you went to Petersburg, a few days before the other Panitch went. And then all of a sudden I ceased to see her—it was as though she avoided me. She sent the New Testament back to me, with a few words written on a piece of paper, thanking me for the loan of it. And I had given it to her to keep. Well, it was a great wrench, but I began to see plainly that she could not love me any longer, so I strove hard, night and day, to forget her. I worked hard, and asked God to strengthen me for my work. I studied night and day—I was eager and hot after knowledge, and in time the thought of Nadya was no longer a sore place in my heart—still tender, Panitch, but not painful.

"But I got to hear after awhile that she was in great distress, and mother, who was on the other side of the river a week ago, saw her at the door and said she looked like a ghost, and that all her beauty had fled. Two days ago I was down by the river, and as I was coming home by a short cut through the sedge, I heard a sound of sobbing that frightened me, for it was a lonely place. I stopped and looked through an opening in the reeds, and there was Nadya crying as though her heart was breaking.

"I went up to her and asked what was the matter, but she only broke into fresh spasms of grief and would not be comforted. Panitch, I left her there, but her misery haunts me. I know she loves me no longer, but all my love for her has come back—indeed I now believe it never left me, and I must go away. I can think of nothing but Nadya. I am unfit for my work. Yes, I know I am weak, but I can't help it. I'll go away for awhile and struggle to be a man again."

"But where will you go, Misha? You can't go away and leave the brethren without any one. My poor brother, I am very sorry for you? How can I help you?"

"Take me with you to the war, Panitch. Keep me beside you, and we'll come back together after it is all over. And then you will go over to Kransnaya Balka, and you know what her answer will be. And I will return healed of my wound, and we'll be all happy together."

"But, Misha—you go to war! you, a Stundist preacher?"

"Yes, Panitch, why not? I think it is the very place for a preacher. I would not go to fight, but I thought you could take me as your servant. I'd serve you loyally, Panitch, and do everything for you, let me go with you. I'll do my best among the soldiers and try to win some of them to the light. I'll go to the hospitals and strive to lessen grief and pain there. Yes, Panitch, I'll go; you consent? Who'll take my place? Why, Vassily Pavlitch, of course. I told him that I thought of going away for some months, and he promises to relieve me."

So it was decided that when Sergei left on the following day, Mikhail Kulmenko, the Stundist preacher, should accompany him as his soldier servant. Sergei knew that he could arrange this with his Colonel and with the village elder at Slavo; and he felt happy that he would have a faithful friend at his side, and some one with whom he could draw aside at times and talk of higher and holier things than the world knows of.

Mikhail was satisfied to seek in the excitement of the front and in the fresh field of distracting work that would be opened up to him there, some consolation of his human grief about Nadyejda.

And they both looked forward to the happier days when the fight would be over. Both had a dim feeling that they did not

(Continued on page 565.

DISTRESSING DISEASES OF THE SKIN Instantly Relieved and Speedily Cured by Cuticura

SPEEDY CURE TREATMENT.—Warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, gentle applications of CUTICURA (ointment), and mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT (the new blood purifier)

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

For Building U

There is no medicine like Hood's Sarsap because it lays a solid foundation in n pure, rich blood.

"Weak lungs affected my health f years. The least cold troubled me grea read about Hood's Sarsaparilla in the paper and after one bottle I felt a grea better. Since taking six bottles I don' there is any building up medicine that Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has effected derful change in my health." MRS. A BRECHT, Franklin, N. Y

Hood's Sarsapari Is the Only True Blood Puri

Prominently in the public eye. $1; 6

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mil tive. All druggist

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

John H., Detroit.—I suffer much from d My food ferments, causing belching and comfortable full feeling. Am constipated help me.

Use Gastrine faithfully one month, ing instructions on circular around Take hot water as indicated, and spoonful Nathrolithic Salts in a half of water, before breakfast each day week.

G. L., Buffalo.—Am troubled with pains my kidneys; cannot stand long without gre Take Ovarine, in four-drop dose daily, for two months. Use hot bat cally, once or twice a week.

P. R. S., Phila.—Gastrine will cur taken according to directions faithfully

W. N. B., Brooklyn.—What can I take for

Take Thyroidine, extract of thyroi in three-drop does, three times daily tongue. Twice a week take two t fuls of Nathlorithic Salts in a tumbler a half-hour before breakfast.

Dr. J. S. B., Lancaster, Pa.—Give and Nathrolithic Salts. No.

W. T. PARKER, D

Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACT

CEREBRINE, From the Brain. MED From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE.

Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drac

GASTRINE.

A new and valuable remedy for dyspe

FEBRICIDE PILLS

For MALARIAL AFFECTIONS, NEURALGIA HEADACHE.

NATHROLITHIC SALTS

For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of t and Inaction of the Liver.

At all Druggists, or from

COLUMBIA CHEMICAL C

Send for Literature. (178) Washingt

MY HUSBAND

$60 kenwood Machine for $50 Arlington Machine f Standard Singers - $ $15.00, and 27 other attachments FREE. We pay fre where on 30 days free trial without asking one cent in from factory. Save agents Over 100,000 in use. Catal monials Free. Write at (in full), CASH BUYER

158-164 West Van Buren St., B 18, C

NO DIRT E

In clothes wash "BUSY BEE 100 pieces in on no hard work the recor WANTE sale. Wri

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St.,

EVERY WOM

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Traveling, etc. Invaluable and Indispen Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goo Stores. Send for Circulars; agents want cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WO 56 Broadway, N

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHA WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HO FOR $10.00 THE LARKIN SOA

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect w gold-filled, Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT S

CHILLS Malaria, Chills and fev Biliousness, Lafe QUAKER CHI A record of 50 yea Contains no quinine harmful drug. $1 a case. 5 cakes $5. Wri lars. Sold only by Quaker Remedy Co.,

eir troubles in a proper perspective, hat when they got away from them would sink to insignificance. But ll would come rushing in on them the thought of the home-coming, and as at there hour after hour in the hum- ttage, they began talking about the est plans for the future, about seeds peasants' gardens, and schoolrooms children, and a simple lathe for the the boys. And Mikhail again told that all would be well, and Sergei Mikhail look wistful and try to look when he assured him that there was time coming for him and Nadya.

r their long communion the two men ted, and until far into the night they their preparations for departure. morning came it was at once known ikhail was going to the front with Sergei, and his "izba" was soon ith little groups of his friends, not sts alone, but orthodox peasants as en who had learned to love the gen- patient man who never quarrelled, ver said a bitter word or a hard about any one, whose wise advice often sought in perplexity, whose ice was as much theirs as his. His ther and the other women shed tears, e men stood around and wondered singular resolution. They would nes take his hand in both theirs and wring it. Vassily Pavlitch was tell every one that he was going to cher during Mikhail's absence, and pained smile on his face he tried to hem believe what he did not wish to himself, that in the future, and when t used to him, they would not find t a difference after all between his s and Mikhail's. The old widow ko handed around glasses of weak little bits of sugar, and some "piroj- had baked for Mikhail to take away m to the war, were also handed nd silently eaten. And so the hours ng day passed.

ngth late in the afternoon, and he "izba" was full of people, Ser- down word that he and his brother ady, and that Mikhail was to join riage at the ferry. The last few at home had come, and the Stundist p in the midst of his people and is eyes and clasped his hands to- All around him followed his exam- there was a long silence, so pain- intense a silence that the people they heard their hearts beat. Then r another sighed, and Mikhail took undle and Vassily Pavlitch anoth- without a word they streamed out of age, Mikhail and his old mother in front, the others in a long lowing—all silent and sorrowful.

went slowly up the village to the From the brow of the hill they saw on why hardly a soul had come out izbas" to see them pass. The illage in a great crowd was down rry. The women in their scarlet ite, the men home from the fields an usual, the moist clay still cling- them. The Stundists slowly de- along the dusty road and past the 's cottage to where the others sembled. Old Sozontieff had his dy and every one was waiting for age to appear.

it comes, here it comes," shouted ren; and the great lumbering trav- riage with four horses came slow- , and behind it walked the old ery feeble, his nephews walking side. The villagers went up to m; the carriage stopped and the and the young officers bowed in to the low obeisance of the peas- hen the great crowd let the carri- a and slowly returned to the ferry. a word the young men, first in, and then his brother, fell on the s neck and kissed him on both nd he threw his frail arms over lders, and the villagers noted how white his hands were, and how he wore seemed too big for his bye," shouted Sergei from the od bless you all! God bless !"

ir said nothing, looking straight in across the stream. Mikhail's as rocking herself in her son's he tore himself away and sprang erry as Sozontieff was unloosen- ooring chains.

they floated across the great villagers remaining on the bank. Arrived on the other side the two dragoons entered their carriage, Mikhail sprang up beside the coachman and away they galloped towards the fading West. The crowd on the bank still watched them until there was only a thin trail of dust on the horizon, and then the women put their aprons up to their eyes. The general, his face pale and drawn, turned and left them without a word, and feebly walked up the hill to his empty home.

(To be continued.)

EDUCATING SOUTHERN NEGROES.

DURING the last ten years, a great educational movement has been in progress among the colored people in many parts of the South. Colleges, Institutes, and Normal Schools have sprung up in different States, and many of them, from small beginnings, have attained the proportions and importance of educational institutions of a very high order. In nearly every instance, they have followed the example of the Hampton Institute and the Edward Waters' College, in making religious instruction and the study of the Scriptures a prominent part of the training, and the result is shown in the large numbers of educated Christian young men and women who are graduated from such institutions every year.

PROF. J. J. HIGGS.

One of the latest projects of this character looks to the establishment of Central Normal and Industrial Schools at Waycross, Ga. Prof. J. J. Higgs, a Christian preacher who has been engaged in educational work for many years, has been the prime mover in the matter, and through his efforts mainly, the proposed schools were organized last summer. A building was secured and work begun, but it was quickly found that the facilities were altogether inadequate. An effort is now being made to interest the friends of colored education, North and South, in the project, and the people of Waycross have already set the example by starting a substantial subscription list in behalf of the schools. It is proposed to erect a frame school-house, to accommodate 400 scholars, and also a lecture hall, teachers' residence, and workshops for the mechanical and industrial departments. Plans for these buildings have been prepared, and the estimated cost will be in the neighborhood of $10,900. Two acres of land in the suburbs of Waycross have been purchased for the projected buildings, and the committee is now in treaty for a small farm in the immediate neighborhood. The committee consists of Rev. B. J. Greene, President; N. M'Millan, Vice-President: Dr. G. P. Washington, Secretary, and R. T. Anderson, Treasurer. Rev. A. A. J. Edgerton, of the Baptist Church, Weldon, N. C., is associated with Prof. Higgs, and will become a member of the faculty at Waycross. Any who are interested in this effort for the purpose of educating and elevating the colored race in the South, can obtain full information concerning the project by writing to Dr. Washington, Waycross, Ga.

A CONVERTED SHEPHERD.

Among the converts at Sheo-Hang, in North China is a remarkable man who holds the office of village shepherd. Mr. Pigott, who is laboring there, says the man, Li-pai by name, was formerly a wine-drinker and quarrelsome, but of a sturdy, independent character. "On my first visit in 1892, he stood among a large crowd to listen. At the close of the service he bought a copy of the Gospel of Luke. Two years passed as he fed his large flock of sheep, and found him often pondering over the wonderful Book, until those who knew him saw the wine and quarrelling given up, and his dislike to idols increasing. Meantime, we had settled here, but he was shy of coming, and his large flock kept him occupied, till one bright morning Mrs. Piggott and I started to visit the aunt of one of those who desired to own the Lord in baptism, a Mrs. Kong, lately restored to sight under my wife's treatment. A little lamb in Li-pai's flock had died, and he had to tramp five miles to report its death to its owner, Mrs. Kong. He came in just as we did, and recognizing me as the man of whom he bought the book, he soon told of his treasured Gospel and the wonderful Jesus of whom it told, adding that he had ceased to worship idols. Since then he has grown bold and earnest, bringing in his comrades to the services, preaching in the houses of his employers, and bearing many a hard word for his Lord."

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Consumption Cured.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE:
"As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies, and very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,
(Rev'd) C. H. Spurgeon.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

FOR

Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis,

Acts like a charm in ordinary Coughs, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough. Send 25 cents for Book on Consumption, containing accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, or the Book will be sent free with trial bottle for $1.00. Larger sizes, $1.75, $3.75. $7.

GEO. T. CONGREVE,
367 Canal St., New York,
and London, England.

How to Fry with Cottolene

Fry everything from potato chips to doughnuts in Cottolene. Put Cottolene in a cold pan—heat it slowly until it will delicately brown a bit of bread in half a minute. Then put in your food. It will pay you to try Cottolene just this way—see how delicious and wholesome it makes the food.

Get the genuine, sold everywhere in one, three, and five pound tins, with trade-marks —"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

A Healthy, Clear Skin

Is not only a great comfort, but is a recognized point of beauty. We have thousands of letters saying it can be

Secured, Retained, By

using Comfort Powder. When used often, pimples and other inflammations disappear. Tan, Sunburn and Roughness from exposure at once relieved by

Comfort Powder

The Comfort Powder Co., Hartford, Ct. 25c. and 50c. a box.

All Druggists Sell It.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

Send 25c. for 1 bottle, or $1 for 5, and if not entirely satisfactory we will refund the money.

They never fail. Read this testimonial

MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewith postal note for $1. Please send to my address five bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering from constipation 18 or 19 years, and they are the best remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R.I.

J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N.Y.

NEW YORK CHICAGO WHEELING ST. LOUIS

WHEELING CORRUGATING CO.

Steel Ceilings for Churches Write for Catalogue

SAGENDORPH'S PATENT SECTIONAL

STEEL CEILINGS and SIDE WALL FINISH. Splendidly Adapted for Churches.

Catalogue, prices, and estimates, on application.

THE PENN IRON ROOFING & COR. CO., (Ltd.)
22d and Hamilton Sts., Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia, Pa.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP

For the Skin, Scalp and Complexion, the result of 20 years experience treating the skin. A book on dermatology with every cake. Druggists sell it. John H. Woodbury, Dermatologist, 127 W. 42d St., N. Y. City. Send 10c. for sample soap and 150 page book.

THEIR EYES FIXED ON ZION.

A Great Jewish Movement Looking Toward the Re-occupation of Palestine by "The Chosen Race."

ONE of the distinctive signs of the times is the movement in progress among the Hebrew race in many parts of the world looking to their return at no distant date to their ancient land and to their rehabilitation as one of the great nations of the earth. It is estimated that of the 47,000 inhabitants of Jerusalem, fully 27,000 are Jews. This is an immense increase in recent years. In the "Nathanael" of Berlin, and the journal of the German Palestine Society, Rev. Dr. G. Dalman of Leipsic has recently given complete statistics of the Jewish agricultural colonies, which have in the last few years been established in the Holy Land, and shows that there are literally dozens of such establishments. But the most noteworthy agitation of this kind is the nationalistic movement found among sections of the Jews everywhere over the globe, looking to a return of Israel and re-introduction of the sacred language of the Old Testament. The protagonists of this movement are known as Zionites, and a review of their work is found in the "Frankfurter Zeitung" of recent date. That journal states that the agitation is the outcome of the persecution of Jews in Russia and Roumania since 1882. It is a reaction and counter-movement to the anti-Semitic crusade that has swept over Europe. The first regular Zionite Congress was held in November, 1884, in Kattowitz, Silicia, at which also representatives of England and France appeared. The present Russian Palestine Society has its headquarters in Odessa. An executive committee and an organ are found in Jaffa.

A part of the programme of the Zionites is the revival of Hebrew. In recent years a regular Hebrew literature has sprung up among Eastern Jews. Papers and magazines in Hebrew in great numbers are published, largely in the interests of the Zionite movement. Such journals as the weekly "Hamagid," of St. Petersburg, have an international reputation. In Russia the Jews publish two Hebrew dailies, and many weeklies and monthlies. Delitzch's Hebrew New Testament has been issued in more than 75,000 copies. In Palestine itself the organ of the Zionite movement is the "Hazibi," a monthly organ, edited by Ben-Jehuda.

While the movement of this project in Russia is chiefly the outcome of sympathy for the persecuted Israelites, the Zionites of the United States and England, in which latter country the agitation is especially strong, are actuated more by a sentimental interest. In England, the organ of these people is called "Palestine," and the higher circles of the English aristocracy take an interest in the work. The most pronounced advocate is Major Albert Goldsmith, who was commissioned by Queen Victoria to take charge of Baron Hirsch's project for the Jewish colonization of the Argentine Confederation, but soon returned to head the Zionites in England. In 1891, a petition was presented to the President of the United States, signed by Christian citizens of this land, asking the intervention of the Government in favor of a project of the organization in Palestine of a Jewish state. In England, "the Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews" has the Earl of Aberdeen for its president. In Edinburgh, the Zionites also have an active organization.

In Germany the movement stands in close connection with the work of the Jewish missionary societies, which have earnestly aided the project of the Jewish reformer, Joseph Rabinowitz, of Kishned, who has been attempting for ten years and more to organize a National Jewish Church acknowledging Jesus Christ as the promised Messiah. In Austria the agitation is in the hands of various types of the Jewish population, with a political tendency, however. A congress of Austrian friends of Palestine colonization has been held twice, the last time in September, 1894.

"Pearl glass" and "pearl top" are the best in the world, but good for nothing unless you get the right shape and size for your lamp. You want the "Index to Chimneys"—free.

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa, maker of tough glass.

Walter Baker & Co. Limited,

The Largest Manufacturers of
PURE, HIGH GRADE
COCOAS and CHOCOLATES
On this Continent, have received
HIGHEST AWARDS
from the great
Industrial and Food
EXPOSITIONS
IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Caution: In view of the many imitations of the labels and wrappers on our goods, consumers should make sure that our place of manufacture, namely, Dorchester, Mass. is printed on each package.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Noah's Ark

with animals, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of three 2-cent stamps. The animals are on cardboard—two and three inches high, naturally colored, and will stand alone. They can be arranged in line or groups, making an interesting object lesson in natural history. This offer is made solely for the purpose of acquainting mothers with the merits of

WILLIMANTIC
Star ★ Thread.

Send for a set for each of the children. Address
WILLIMANTIC THREAD CO.,
Willimantic, Conn.

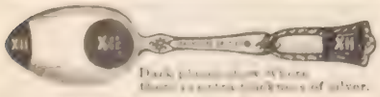
GALLOWAY STEAMSHIP LINES.
[illegible] A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY [illegible] to the Ports of FLORIDA, leaving [illegible] Sailings and Rates, to all points in Eastern Connecticut, Lake Asawaga, Calvary, Gen. Manning & Savannah and Florida. Write for our 64 page Pamphlet, sent free.
C. H. MALLORY & CO. Pier 20, E. R., New York

Do you Feel Depressed? Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

[illegible] nervous [illegible] stimulating ingredient and restorative for [illegible] depression. Especially valuable [illegible] nervous.

New Cure—Kidney & Bladder Diseases.

If you are a sufferer from kidney or bladder disease, pain in back or rheumatism you should [illegible] Alkavis, necessary. Alkavis, which [illegible] prepared by the Church Kidney Cure Company, 118 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and [illegible] you free.



Dark [illegible] where [illegible] thickness of silver.

"1847 Rogers Bros. XII" Silver Plate that Wears.

Especially suitable for [illegible], as the quality is so well known. "1847" is the [illegible] of original Rogers goods. "XII" [illegible] three times the thickness of silver where most needed. [illegible] of the right trade-mark.

Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.
208 Fifth Ave., New York.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY, Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY, New York.
BROOKLYN, New York.
COLLIER, St. Louis.
CORNELL, Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh.
JEWETT, New York.
KENTUCKY, Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, Cleveland.
MISSOURI, St. Louis.
RED SEAL, St. Louis.
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN, Chicago.
SOUTHERN, St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER, New York.
UNION, "

Good Judgment

is shown in buying genuine brands of I[illegible] White Lead (see list) from responsible c[illegible] ers, and in having your painting done by practical painters. Labor is three-fourths of the cost of painting, and satisfactory re[illegible] can only be secured by properly appli[illegible] the best materials—Pure White Lead [illegible] Pure Linseed Oil.

Any shade or color is easily made by using National Le[illegible] Pure White Lead tinting colors, especially prepared for this [illegible] For color-card and pamphlet—sent free—address

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New [illegible]

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Chin[illegible] Glassware, Furniture, House Furnishings, etc.

Shopping by Mail

Is a pleasure when you deal with a Reliable House. We Gu[illegible] Perfect Satisfaction to the Customer or refund the Money.

Send for our Catalogue.

We are now booking names for our Fall and Winter Illu[illegible] Catalogue, Mailed Free to out-of-town residents. We adv[illegible] to send your name now, as the demand always exceeds the su[illegible]

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YOR[illegible]

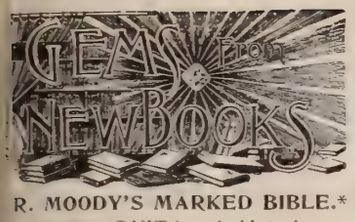
N.Y.U. Evening Law School Formerly Metropolis Law School) Opens Oct. 1, 1895. LL.B. after three years. Evening course. AUSTIN ABBOTT, Dean. Address for catalogue REGISTRAR, University, Washington Square, East, or Vice Dean, CLARENCE D. ASHLEY, 207 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Ideal Spring Beds [illegible] booklet. Write us [illegible] about sleep, mattresses and de[illegible] ing them [illegible] with an upholstered pocket map of your State, [illegible] free if [illegible] two cent stamps. Foster Bros. Mfg Co., Cor. St. Utica N. Y.

Improve your spare time. You can [illegible] successfully study at your home, under our direction. Freehand and Mechanical Drawing, Perspective, Lettering and Mathematics. Send for information. FREE. PENN CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE, Philadelphia, Pa. Box 1254

FEATHERBONE
FOR WAISTS, SLEEVES [illegible]
Instruction free. Call at Broadway New York; 1068 [illegible] go; 40 West 1st Boston; 109 [illegible] St. Baltimore; 1114 Chestnut [illegible] ia. Send 65c for 12-yard Sam[illegible] Warren Featherbone Co., [illegible]

WALL PAPE[illegible]
Samples free from largest Wall Paper [illegible]
KAYSER & ALLMAN 802 864 Mark[illegible] 418 Arch
BARLOW'S INDIG[illegible]
The Family Wash Blue. ALW[illegible]
For Sale by Groce[illegible]
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 S. [illegible]



R. MOODY'S MARKED BIBLE.*

DON'T be afraid to borrow and lend Bibles. Some time ago a man wanted to take my Bible home to get a few things out of it, and when it came back I found this noted in it:

Justification, a change ate, a new standing before God.
pentance, a change of mind, a new about God.
generation, a change of nature, a new from God.
nversion, a change of life, a new life
od.
option, a change of family, new relahip towards God.
ctification, a change of service, separunto God.
rification, a new state, a new condiith God.

the same hand-writing I found these us only; the light of heaven is the f Jesus.

joy of heaven is the presence of Jesus.
melody of heaven is the name of
.
theme of heaven is the work of Jesus.
employment of heaven is the service us.
fulness of heaven is Jesus himself.
duration of heaven is the eternity of e marking should be made the ser-f the memory. If properly done, it ens the memory, rather than blunts ause it gives prominence to certain that catch the eye, which by coneading you get to learn off by heart.

ve carried one Bible with me a great years. It is worth a good deal to me, will tell you why: because I have so passages marked in it, that if I am upon to speak at any time I am I have words marked in the margin, ey are a sermon to me. Whether I about Faith, Hope, Charity, Assur-r any subject whatever, it all comes me; and however unexpectedly I lled upon to preach, I am always Every child of God ought to be like r, and always hold himself in read-
If the Queen of England's army dered to India to-morrow, the soldier for the journey. But we cannot be f we do not study the Bible. So er you hear a good thing, just put , because if it is good for you it will for somebody else; and we should e coin of heaven around just as we coin of the realm.

marking makes the Bible a new
you. If there was a white birch hin a quarter of a mile of the home boyhood, you would remember it life. Mark your Bible, and instead eing dry and uninteresting, it will a beautiful book to you. What you kes a more lasting impression on mory than what you hear.

are many methods of marking.
se six or eight colored inks or pen-lack is used to mark texts that re-to in; red, all reference to the cross; references to heaven; and so on.
invent symbols. Where there is rence to the cross, they put "†" in rgin. Some write "G," meaning h is danger of overdoing this, and your marks more prominent than

Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study, by D. L. An excellent and valuable book for Bible eachers, and Christian workers generally. loth covers; price 50c. Fleming H. Revell York, Chicago, and Toronto, publishers.

Good News for Asthmatics.

rve that the Kola plant, found on the Con- Vest Africa, is now in reach of sufferers na. As before announced, this new dis- a positive cure for Asthma. You can of the Kola Compound free, by address- al card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 New York, who are sending out large ca free by mail, to sufferers.

ousands of women find their strength unequal nands of duty. By building up their sys- th rich purified blood, Hood's Sarsaparilla es st the medicine needed.

the Scripture itself. If the system is complicated, it becomes a burden, and you are likely to get confused. It is easier to remember the text than the meaning of your marks. Black ink is good enough for all purposes. I use no other, unless it be red ink to draw attention to "the blood."

The simplest way to mark is to underline the words or to make a stroke alongside the verse. Another good way is to go over the printed letters with your pen, and make them thicker. The word will then stand out like heavier type. Mark "only" in Psalm 62 in this way.

When any word or phrase is oft-repeated in a chapter or book, put consecutive numbers in the margin over against the text. Thus, in the second chapter of Habakkuk, we find five "woes" against five common sins; (1) verse 6, (2) verse 9, (3) verse 12, (4) verse 15, (5) verse 19. Number the ten plagues this way. When there is a succession of promises or charges in a verse, it is better to write the numbers small at the beginning of each separate promise. Thus, there is a seven-fold promise to Abraham in Gen. 12: 2, 3: "(1) I will make of thee a great nation, (2) and I will bless thee, (3) and make thy name great; (4) and thou shalt be a blessing; (5) and I will bless them that bless thee, (6) and curse him that curseth thee: (7) and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." In Prov. 1: 22, we have (1) simple ones, (2) scorners, (3) fools.

Put an "x" in the margin against things not generally observed: for example, the laws regarding women wearing men's clothes, and regarding bird-nesting, in Deut. 22: 5-6; the sleep of the poor man and of the rich man compared, Ecc. 5: 12.

When a preacher gives out a text, mark it; as he goes on preaching, put a few words in the margin, key-words that shall bring back the whole sermon again. By that plan of making a few marginal notes, I can remember sermons that I heard years and years ago. Every man ought to take down some of the preacher's words and ideas, and go into some lane or by-way and preach them again to others. We ought to have four ears—two for ourselves and two for other people. Then, if you are in a new town, and have nothing else to say, jump up and say: "I heard someone say so and so;" and men will always be glad to hear you if you give them heavenly food. The world is perishing for lack of it.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

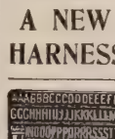
Formula on Every Bottle.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page Illustrated Catalogue of Custom Handmade Oak Leather Harness, sold direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middleman's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty. KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego, N.Y.



CARD PRINTER FREE

Sets any name in one minute; prints 500 cards an hour. YOU can make money with it. A font of pretty type, also Indelible Ink, Type Holder, Pads and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker worth $1.00. Sample mailed FREE for 10c. stamps for postage on outfit and large catalogue of 1000 Bargains.
E. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

Baby's Clothes

(as well as the baby) should be washed with pure soap for two reasons—First: for the sake of the baby's health; Second: for the sake of the clothes. You can safely wash them with the perfect soap. It will make them sweet and clean without doing any damage. It is really the only soap with which to wash fine fabrics or delicate laces. Sold by all dealers at the price of common soap. Made only by

COCO
TRADE MARK.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
CHICAGO, NEW YORK, ST. LOUIS.

Golden Sheaves. A Service of Song and Readings for Harvest Festivals and Thanksgiving. Price, 5 cents per copy.

Royal Organ Method. A new and very complete method for the parlor organ, prepared by a thoroughly competent organist. A large variety of the best music carefully arranged for the organ. Price, $2.00.

Branzoli's Mandolin Method. An elegant edition of this celebrated work, printed complete from the original Italian work. Other American editions are abridged. Price, $2.00.

Gospel Hymns, Nos. 1 to 6, Complete. Music edition, cloth, $1.18 by mail. Words only, small type, 12 cts by mail. Words only, large type, Boards, 30 cents by mail.

Model Music Course for Public Schools. The following books of the series are now ready: Primer (25 c.), First Reader (30c), Second Reader (30c), Third Reader (30c) Circulars and specimen pages Free.

The Musical Visitor commencing with September number, will contain Songs and Piano Music instead of Anthems and Organ Music. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK, CHICAGO

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
NO Cleaning. NO Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

NEW MUSIC.

COSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN, and STEBBINS. Now being used by MR. MOODY in Northfield Summer Conventions. Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts

HIGHEST PRAISE. For Sabbath Schools. By W. A. OGDEN. $30 per 100; Sample Copy, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S., London. D. G. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Every one should read this little book."—Athenæum

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,

45 Liberty st., New York, sells all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat. free

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,
F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

Busy Women should use— WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

YOU HAVE SEEN

POZZONI'S
POWDER

advertised for many years, but have you ever tried it?—If not,—you do not know what an IDEAL COMPLEXION POWDER IS.

POZZONI'S

besides being an acknowledged beautifier, has many refreshing uses. It prevents chafing, sun-burn, wind-tan, lessens perspiration, etc.; in fact it is a most delicate and desirable protection to the face during hot weather.

It is sold everywhere.

We guarantee
Heiskell's Ointment
to quickly and permanently cure Eczema, Scald-Head, Barber's Itch or Tetter without the aid of internal medicine.
50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO.,
531 Commerce St., PHILADELPHIA.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that retains, protects, relieves & CURES RUPTURE

No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. 1000's of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.
Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO.,
27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this adv. and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one-quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INCOMES—BIG PREMIUMS, &c.
C. H. The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

Delicate Cake

Easily removed without breaking. Perfect Lemons required for greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 50cts. Circulars Free.
Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6 St., Bath, N.Y.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Magnifying Lens Purse, Fancy Bottle, Pocket Compass, Latest Wire Puzzle, Stencil Plates, Metal Name &c. Sent Free with 1 dozen catalogue of 1000 Bargains for 10c. for postage.
INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

"Say aye 'no' and ye'll ne'er be married. Don't refuse all our advise to use SAPOLIO

Pears'

Pears' soap is as gentle as oil, but effectual; has no fat or alkali in it.

But it costs so little, you do not see how it possibly can be the finest soap in the world.

CATALOGUE FREE FROM ANY AGENT OR BY MAIL FOR TWO 2 CT. STAMPS

YOU SEE THEM EVERY-WHERE — $100 WISE ECONOMY IN EVERY DOLLAR — FOREMOST IN BEAUTY, GRACE, SPEED AND DURABILITY

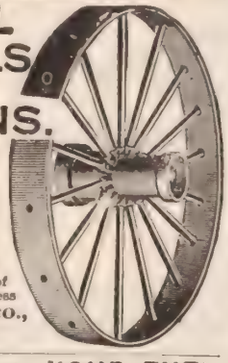
Columbia Bicycles

POPE MFG CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

HARTFORD BICYCLES $80 $60 $50.

BOSTON, NEW YORK, CHICAGO, SAN FRANCISCO, BUFFALO, PROVIDENCE

METAL WHEELS for your WAGONS.



Any size you want, 20 to 56 in. high. Tires 1 to 5 in. wide—hubs to fit any axle. Saves Cost many times in a season to have set of low wheels to fit your wagon for hauling grain, fodder, manure, hogs, &c. No resetting of tires. Cat'g free. Address EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

A Fob For You.

A heavy silk fob, with a warranted gold-plated buckle. We will mail it to you on receipt of ten cents, in order to make known to you, through a book that goes with the fob, The Harris Wire Buckle Suspenders, Harris Garter and other

WIRE BUCKLE SUSPENDER CO., Williamsport, Pa.

Harris Patent

6 SIZE

SAVE ½ YOUR FUEL

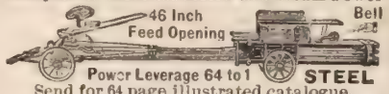
By using our (stove pipe) RADIATOR. With its 120 Cross Tubes, ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR, the first order from each neighborhood filled at WHOLESALE price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR COMPANY, 15 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power



Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money
IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

ONLY 99c

FORMERLY SOLD FOR $9

FOR ALL SIX

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD.

Quickly, we make this notice of SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS ... HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED ... GOLD PLATED BOWLS ... World's Fair City ... Landing of Columbus, and ... 1492-1892 ... World's Fair City ... works of art. ... Sold during the Fair for ... ONLY 99 CENTS. ... Send no money. Pay postman on delivery. ... Exchange. ... if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFC. CO., DEPT. A 5,152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S. YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

All leading teachers of cookery use it.

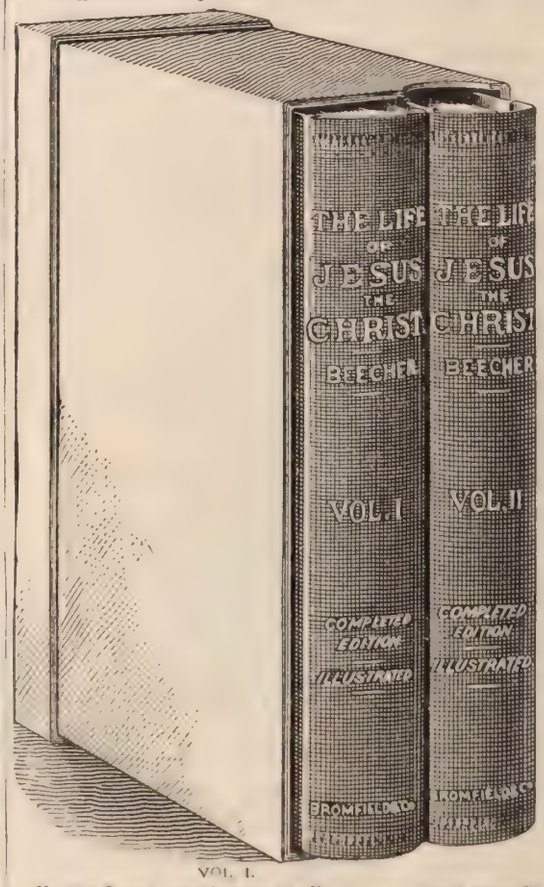
HENRY WARD BEECHER'S Life OF Christ

SHOULD BE IN EVERY

Christian Home.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

"It was while I was engaged in this work that Christ w... brought to my soul with a vividness and glory that for t... time transform... the heavens a... the earth to ... eyes."—Fro... Henry Wa... Beecher's Dia...



VOL. I.

HEAD OF CHRIST, AFTER LEONARDO DA VINCI.
TEMPLE OF HEROD, FROM OLIVET.
THE OVERTURE OF ANGELS.
BETHLEHEM, NEAR THE CONVENT.
NAZARETH.
THE WILDERNESS EAST OF OLIVET.
SWAMP OF LAVERES LEEDS.
FORD OF THE JORDAN.
PORTRAITS OF CHRIST.
SITE OF CAPERNAUM.
CHRIST CLEANSING THE TEMPLE.
PLAN OF THE TEMPLE.
JACOB'S WELL.

VOL. II.

CHRIST BEFORE PILATE. ... Front.
VIEW BETWEEN SAFED AND TEL JULIAS.
PETER'S FAITH TESTED.
THE LADDER OF TYRE.
MT. HERMON FROM THE HELEH.
COINS MENTIONED IN THE GOSPELS.
THE WOMAN TAKEN IN ADULTERY.
BETHANY FROM THE JERUSALEM ROAD.
SITE OF JERICHO.
JERUSALEM FROM THE BETHANY ROAD.
JERUSALEM FROM THE NORTHWEST.
GETHSEMANE.

Published... two Volum... beautifully bou... in cloth and pa... ed in a neat b...

The books ... printed in la... clear type, on ... book paper, ... contain a beau... color plate ... the famous M... kacsy's paint... "Christ bef... Pilate," toge... with the fol... ing Illustrati...

The books measure when closed ... x 6¼ inches. Vol. ... containing 448 pages, and Vol. 2, 370 pages; these ... have sold heretofore at $5.50 Per Set.

In order that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may obta... standard work, we make the following

Special Offer: Send us One-half of the above price and we ... send you the set of books ALL CHARGES PRE-PAID.

This offer will only last for a limited time, as we must withdraw it... the stock in hand is sold, in which case, however, we will return the money ...

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest express office.

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York ...

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH NUMBER 36.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 4, 1895. PRICE 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

MONT-LAWN'S NEW GUESTS.

Several Hundred Little Convalescents from the Tenements to go There Next Week. Interesting Slum Statistics—The Little Girl who Prayed at Home.

MONT-LAWN will present a somewhat new aspect, during the coming week, to those friends of our Fresh-Air work who visit there. Arrangements have been made to extend the benefits of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home to a large number of tenement children who have been sick and are now convalescent, and whose restoration to health will be practically assured by a ten days' sojourn in the pure, bracing air of the plateau on which the Home is situated. There are in New York thousands of such cases, where frail children have only to be shielded for days and sometimes weeks, and where many have succumbed, others have come out of the battle with disease, weakness and emaciation, but with a chance, under favorable auspices, of regaining strength. Although the summer months the city physicians have been attending multitudes of little sufferers; but the time has come when fresh air, pure milk and cool, sunny meadows are more needed even than drugs, and nature's tonics will be the best supplement of the doctors' skill. So several hundreds of these convalescents will now be our guests and everything needful will be arranged for their comfort, including medical attendance, should it be necessary. It will be much more delicate and serious responsibility than any hitherto undertaken. In a limited number of cases, the mothers will accompany their children to Mont-Lawn and remain with them during their stay.

There is a strong probability that the condition of the slums of our great cities, and particularly those of New York, which are many degrees worse than all others, may soon furnish a basis for remedial national legislation. The condition of their occupants, adults, and children alike, has attracted Congressional attention.

An official investigation of the slums of our leading cities, made by order of Congress, has just been completed by the Commissioner of Labor at Washington, and it confirms, in every essential point, all that has been stated in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning those unlovely and repulsive outgrowths of our civilization. The average number of occupants in a New York slum dwelling is thirty-six, although many have over one hundred; the average income is less than among the slum poor of Chicago and Philadelphia; and New York is worse off than any other large city in respect to opportunities for cleanliness. There is one saloon to every 129 persons. That the slums are a hotbed of vice and the worst place on the continent for the influence they exert on children, is proved by the startling fact that the annual average of arrests is one in six, involving almost every crime on the calendar. At the same time, the significant fact is elicited that the ratio of illiterates in at least two of the wards where the slum population abounds is forty-six per cent. and the others in proportion. It is clear, therefore, that until education and the Gospel penetrate to the darkest corners of the slums the great mass of their population must remain in their present wretched condition. Our Fresh-Air Fund and similar philanthropic agencies are doing pioneer work in bringing light into many of these benighted homes, for the moral and hygienic training of the young children is rarely without its influence upon the other members of the family. They bring back with them to the slums a breath of freshness and purity and a new sincerity in their childish prayers, which, although it may soon wane through contact with the old rough, godless life, will not be altogether effaced. "I say my prayers," writes one sweet little girl after her return, "just as I used to at Mont-Lawn, where the kind teacher taught us to kneel together beside our beds and say, 'Our Father.' They looked at me when I did it the first time, but I don't mind it now a bit, and I've got sister Mame so she says them, too."

Bed-time at Mont-Lawn! There could be no sweeter or more touching picture than that presented in the snowy dormitories, where row upon row of little heads, dark and brown and golden, bend low together across the white cots and the little lips utter in unison the simple supplication of childhood.. Even the roughest boy or girl at such a moment is hushed and fervent. All are taught to remember in their petitions the friends at home. Before the last syllable has been said, the bright eyes are ready to close in the deep and dreamless sleep of childhood—the sleep that gives strength and refreshment for the duties and pleasures of a new day. Our artist has given us a glimpse of a nook in one of the dormitories at bed-time; but art cannot convey to the ear the low, earnest murmur of child voices and the gentle pleading for God's watchful care to be over all during the silent watches of the night.

BED-TIME AT MONT-LAWN—A SCENE IN ONE OF THE DORMITORIES.

During the past week over one hundred and eighty children have been taken to Mont-Lawn, away from the sweltering city and the sickening surroundings of the tenements. Although the weather has been unusually torrid in town, at our Children's Home it has been delightfully cool and invigorating; indeed, the elevation upon which Mont-Lawn stands precludes the possibility of suffering from heat there, no matter how high the thermometer ranges below.

From the very large number of letters received during the week, we can only devote space to a few extracts. "If you know of any children who have prayed to God to let them go to the country," writes "A Disciple," Washington, D. C. ($6), "I would prefer this money to be used to answer their prayers." Mrs. Gerts, Irving Park, Ill. ($3), writes: "God bless these little ones, and my prayer is that you will sow precious seed in their young hearts." "It seems a terrible thing to me," remarks the letter of another patron, Mrs. M. G. Weld, Almena, Kan. ($3), "that there should be children dying for God's free fresh air." Mrs. Eunice Davidge, Newark Valley, N. Y., in sending a check for $30, says: "Kindly use it in sending ten of the poor tenement children to Mont-Lawn. Please send those who are most needy of God's pure sunlight." T. D. M., Greenwich, writes:

> Just before my dear mother died in June, she begged me to put a dollar in her pocket-book, and now I send it to you, hoping it will help to make some child happier and better. I would be glad to send some more, but my own child has very few luxuries besides fresh air and sunshine.

A Sunday School class of the Fifth Street M. E. Church, Philadelphia, sends $4.35, "with heartfelt wishes for the success of the work." The "Willing Helpers," of Lowell, Mass., forward $1.

Alice Lewis, Hillsdale, Mich., writes:

> I remember that even a "cup of cold water" given "in His name" is blessed, and I am glad to have even a small part in this good work. With all God's pure air and beautiful unoccupied country, it does not seem right that these poor people should be huddled together like sheep in a car.

"In memory of my dear mother who went to heaven just nine months ago, I send this ($3) for one little girl to be sent to

(Continued on page 571.)

THE CHIEFTAIN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Canticles 5: 10, "The chiefest among ten thousand."

THE most conspicuous character of history steps out upon the platform. The finger which, diamonded with light, pointed down to him from the Bethlehem sky, was only a ratification of the finger of prophecy, the finger of genealogy, the finger of chronology, the finger of events—all five fingers pointing in one direction. Christ is the overtopping figure of all time. He is the "vox humana" in all music, the graceful-est line in all sculpture, the most exquisite mingling of lights and shades in all painting, the acme of all climaxes, the dome of all cathedraled grandeur, and the peroration of all language.

The Greek alphabet is made up of twenty-four letters, and when Christ compared himself to the first letter and the last letter, the Alpha and the Omega, he appropriated to himself all the splendors that you can spell out either with those two letters or all the letters between them: "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end."

What does that Scripture mean which says of Christ, "He that cometh from above is above all?" It means after you have piled up all Alpine and Himalayan altitudes, the glory of Christ would have to spread its wings and descend a thousand leagues to touch those summits. Pelion, a high mountain of Thessaly; Ossa, a high mountain, and Olympus, a high mountain: but mythology tells us when the giants warred against the gods they piled up these three mountains, and from the top of them proposed to scale the heavens; but the height was not great enough, and there was a complete failure. And after all the giants—Isaiah and Paul, prophetic and apostolic giants; Raphael and Michael Angelo, artistic giants; cherubim and seraphim and archangel, celestial giants — have failed to climb to the top of Christ's glory they might all well unite in the words of Paul, and cry out: "Above all!" "Above all!" But Solomon in my text prefers to call Christ "The Chieftain," and so to-day I hail him.

First, Christ must be chief in our preaching. There are so many books on homiletics scattered through the country that all laymen, as well as all clergymen, have made up their minds what sermons ought to be. That sermon is the most effectual which most pointedly puts forth Christ as the pardon of all sin and the correction of all evil—individual, social, political, national. [illegible] There are those who think that if an exhortation or a discourse have frequent [illegible] covenant of works and covenant of grace, [illegible] while they are suspicious of a discourse which presents the same truth, but under different phraseology. Now, I say [illegible] anglo-Saxonism, of all the word treasures [illegible] Greek and the Indo-European, but we have a right to marshal it in religious discussion. Christ sets the example. His illustrations were from the grass, the flowers, the barnyard fowl, the crystals of salt, as well as from the seas and the stars; and we do not propose in our Sunday School teaching and in our pulpit address to be put on the limits.

I know that there is a great deal said in our day against words, as though they were nothing. They may be misused, but they have an imperial power. They are the bridge between soul and soul, between Almighty God and the human race. What did God write upon the tables of stone? Words. What did Christ utter on Mount Olivet? Words. Out of what did Christ strike the spark for the illumination of the universe! Out of words. "Let there be light," and light was. Of course, thought is the cargo, and words are only the ship; but how fast would your cargo get on without the ship? What you need, my friends, in all your work, in your Sabbath School class, in your reformatory institutions, and what we all need, is to enlarge our vocabulary when we come to speak about God and Christ and heaven. We ride a few old words to death, when there is such illimitable resource. Shakespeare employed fifteen thousand different words for dramatic purposes; Milton employed eight thousand different words for poetic purposes; Rufus Choate employed over eleven thousand different words for legal purposes; but the most of us have less than a thousand words that we can manage, and that makes us so stupid.

When we come to set forth the love of Christ we are going to take the tenderest phraseology wherever we find it, and if it has never been used in that direction before, all the more shall we use it. When we come to speak of the glory of Christ the Conqueror, we are going to draw our similes from triumphal arch and oratorio and everything grand and stupendous. The French navy have eighteen flags by which they give signal, but those eighteen flags they can put into sixty-six thousand different combinations. And I have to tell you that these standards of the cross may be lifted into combinations infinite and varieties everlasting. And let me say to these young men who come from the theological seminaries into our services, and are, after awhile, going to preach Jesus Christ: You will have the largest liberty and unlimited resource. You only have to present Christ in your own way.

Brighter than the light, fresher than the fountains, deeper than the seas, are all these Gospel themes. Song has no melody, flowers no sweetness, sunset sky no color compared with these glorious themes. These harvests of grace spring up quicker than we can sickle them. Kindling pulpits with their fire, and producing revolutions with their power, lighting up dying beds with their glory, they are the sweetest thought for the poet, and they are the most thrilling illustration for the orator, and they offer the most intense scene for the artist, and [illegible] the embassador of the skies all enthusiasm. Complete pardon for direst guilt. Sweetest comfort for ghastliest agony. Brightest hope for grimmest death. Grandest resurrection for darkest sepulchre. Oh, what a Gospel to preach! Christ the Chief. His birth, his suffering, his miracles, his parables, his sweat, his tears, his blood, his atonement, his intercession—what glorious themes! Do we exercise faith? Christ is its object. Do we have love? It fastens on Jesus. Have we a fondness for the church? It is because Christ died for it. Have we a hope of heaven? It is because Jesus went there, the herald and the forerunner. The royal robe of Demetrius was so costly, so beautiful, that after he had put it off no one ever dared to put it on; but this robe of Christ, richer than that, the poorest and the weakest and the worst may wear. "Where sin abounded, grace may much more abound."

"Oh, my sins, my sins!" said Martin Luther to Staupitz, "my sins, my sins!" The fact is that the brawny German student had found a Latin Bible that made him quake; and nothing else ever did make him quake; and when he found how, through Christ, he was pardoned and saved, he wrote to a friend, saying, "Come over and join us great and awful sinners saved by the grace of God. You seem to be only a slender sinner, and you don't much extol the mercy of God; but we that have been such very awful sinners praise his grace the more now that we have been redeemed." Can it be that you are so desperately egotistical that you feel yourself in first-rate spiritual trim, and that from the root of the hair to the tip of the toe you are scarless and immaculate? What you need is a looking-glass, and here it is in the Bible. Poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, full of wounds and putrifying sores. No health in us. And then take the fact that Christ gathered up all the notes against us and paid them, and then offered us the receipt! And how much we need him in our sorrows! We are independent of circumstances if we have his grace. Why, he made Paul sing in the dungeon, and under that grace St. John from desolate Patmos heard the blast of the apocalyptic trumpets. After all other candles have been snuffed out, this is the light that gets brighter and brighter unto the perfect day; and after, under the hard hoofs of calamity, all the pools of worldly enjoyment have been trampled into deep mire, at the foot of the eternal rock the Christian, from cups of granite lily-rimmed, puts out the thirst of his soul.

Again I remark, that Christ is chief in dying alleviations. I have not any sympathy with the morbidity abroad about our demise. The Emperor of Constantinople arranged that on the day of his coronation the stone mason should come and consult him about the tombstone that after awhile he would need. And there are men who are monomaniacal on the subject of departure from this life by death, and the more they think of it the less they are prepared to go. This is an unmanliness not worthy of you, not worthy of me.

Saladin, the greatest conqueror of his day, while dying, ordered that the tunic he had on him be carried after his death on his spear at the head of his army, and that then the soldier, ever and anon, should stop and say: "Behold all that is left of Saladin, the emperor and conqueror! Of all the states he conquered, of all the wealth he accumulated, nothing did he retain but this shroud." I have no sympathy with such behavior, or such absurd demonstration, or with much that we hear uttered in regard to departure from this life to the next. There is a commonsensical idea on this subject that you need to consider—there are only two styles of departure. A thousand feet underground, by light of torch, toiling in a miner's shaft, a ledge of rock may fall upon us, and we may die a miner's death. Far out at sea, falling from the slippery ratlines and broken on the halliards, we may die a sailor's death. On mission of mercy in hospital, amid broken bones and reeking leprosies and raging fevers, we may die a philanthropist's death. On the field of battle, serving God and our country, [illegible] through the heart, the gun-carriage [illegible] roll over us, and we may die a patriot's death. But, after all, there are only two styles of departure—the death of the righteous and the death of the wicked—and we all want to die the former.

God grant that when that hour comes you may be at home. You want the hand of your kindred in your hand. You want your children to surround you. You want the light on your pillow from eyes that have long reflected your love. You want your room still. You do not want any curious strangers standing around watching you. You want your kindred from afar to hear your last prayer. I think that is the wish of all of us. But is that all? Can earthly friends hold us up when the billows of death come up to the girdle? Can human voice charm open heaven's gate? Can human hand pilot us through the narrows of death into heaven's harbor? Can any earthly friendship shield us from the arrows of death, and in the hour when Satan shall practise upon us his infernal archery? No, no, no, no! Alas! poor soul, if that all. Better die in the widerness, far from tree shadow and from fountain, alone, vultures circling through the air waiting for our body, unknown to men, and to have no burial, if only Christ could say through the solitudes, "I will never leave thee, ... never forsake thee." From that pillow of stone a ladder would soar heavenward, angels coming and going; and across the solitude and the barrenness would come the sweet notes of heavenly minstrelsy.

Gordon Hall, far from home, dying, the door of a heathen temple, said: "Glory to thee, O God!" What did dying Wisner force say to his wife? "Come and beside me, and let us talk of heaven. I never knew what happiness was until I found Christ." What did dying Hannah More say? To go to heaven, think what that is! To go to Christ, who died that I might live! Oh, glorious grave! Oh, what a glorious thing it is to die! Oh, the love of Christ, the love of Christ!" What did Mr. Toplady, the great hymn-maker say in his last hour? "Who can measure the depths of the third heaven? Oh, the sunshine that fills my soul! I shall soon be gone, for surely no one can live after this world after such glories as God has manifested to my soul."

What did the dying Janeway say? "I can as easily die as close my eyes and turn my head in sleep. Before a few hours have passed I shall stand on Mount Zion with the one hundred and forty and four thousand, and with the just men made perfect, and we shall ascribe riches, and honor, and glory, and majesty, and dominion unto God and the Lamb." Dr. Taylor, condemned to burn at the stake, on hearing thither broke away from the guardsmen, and went bounding and leaping and limping toward the fire, glad to go to Jesus and to die for him. Sir Charles Hedley, in his last moments, had such rapture of vision that he cried: "Upward, upward, upward!" And so great was the pulse of one of Christ's disciples that he put his finger upon the pulse in his wrist and counted it and observed it; and so great was his placidity that after awhile he said: "Stopped!" and his life had ended to begin in heaven. But grander than that was the testimony of the worn-out first missionary, when, in the Mamertine dungeon, he cried: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand: I have fought the good fight, have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me in that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing!" Do you not see that Christ is chief in dying alleviations?

Toward the last hour of our earthly residence we are speeding. When I see the sunset, I say, "One day less to live." When I see the spring blossoms scattered, I say, "Another season gone forever."

…ren I close the Bible on Sabbath night, I …ay, "Another Sabbath departed." When …bury a friend, I say, "Another earthly at…action gone forever." What nimble feet …e years have! The roebucks and the …ghtnings run not so fast. From decade to …ecade, from sky to sky, they go at a …bund. There is a place for us, whether mark…l or not, where you and I will sleep the last …eep, and the men are now living who will, …ith solemn tread, carry us to our resting…ace. Aye, it is known in heaven wheth…our departure will be a coronation or a …nishment. Brighter than a banqueting…ll through which the light feet of the …ncers go up and down to the sound of …mpeters will be the sepulchre through …hose rifts the holy light of heaven stream…h. God will watch you. He will send …s angels to guard your slumbering dust, …til, at Christ's behest, they shall roll …vay the stone.

So, also, Christ is Chief in heaven. The …ble distinctly says that Christ is the …ief theme of the celestial ascription. all …e thrones facing his throne, all the palms …ed before his face. all the crowns down …his feet. Cherubim to cherubim, sera…m to seraphim, redeemed spirit to redeem…spirit, shall recite the Saviour's earthly …rifice.

…tand on some high hill of heaven, and …all the radiant sweep the most glorious …ject will be Jesus. Myriads gazing on the …ars of his suffering, in silence first, after…ard breaking forth into acclamation. The …artyrs. all the purer for the flame through …hich they passed, will say, "This is the …sus, for whom we died." The Apostles, …the happier for the shipwreck and the …ourging through which they went, will …y, "This is the Jesus whom we preached …Corinth, and at Cappadocia, and at An…ch, and at Jerusalem." Little children …ad in white will say: "This is the Jesus …ho took us in his arms and blessed us, …id, when the storms of the world were …cold and loud, brought us into this …eautiful place." The multitude of the be…ft will say, "This is the Jesus who com…rted us when our heart broke." Many …ho wandered clear off from God and …unged into vagabondism, but were saved …grace, will say: "This is the Jesus who …rdoned us. We were lost on the moun…ins, and he brought us home. We were …ilty, and he has made us white as snow." …ercy boundless. grace unparalleled. And …en, after each one has recited his peculiar …eliverances and peculiar mercies, recited …em as by solo, all the voices will come …gether into a great chorus, which will …ake the arches echo and re-echo with the …ernal reverberation of triumph.

Edward I. was so anxious to go to the …oly Land that when he was about to ex…re he bequeathed $160,000 to have his …art, after his decease, taken to the Holy …and in Asia Minor, and his request was …mplied with. But there are hundreds to…y whose hearts are already in the Holy …and of heaven. Where your treasures …e, there are your hearts also. Quaint …hn Bunyan caught a glimpse of that …ace, and in his quaint way he said: "And …heard in my dream, and, lo! the bells of …e city rang again for joy; and as they …ened the gates to let in the men I looked …after them, and lo! the city shone like …e sun, and there were streets of gold, and …en walked on them, harps in their hands, …ring praises withal; and after that they …ut up the gates, which when I had seen …wished myself among them!"

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the …wery Mission during the past week:

Mrs. Elizabeth Waugh, Irena, Mo.
Mrs C D Smith, Cedo.
G. H. S. D., Wakefield.
H. A. D., Clerk's Status, N. Y.
Mrs. I. R. So. Preston, N. Y.
Mrs. J. C. Keene, Wis.
L. H., Charleston, Pa.
A Christian Mother, Lind, Wis.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of …atrons, should send their names and ad…resses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

MONT-LAWN'S NEW GUESTS.

(Continued from first page.

Mont-Lawn," writes N. M. K., Williamsport, Pa. "I hope it may be the means of leading some little boy to Jesus," is the devout wish expressed by Mrs. W. T. B., of Orient, N. Y. ($3). Mr. J. E. B., Harpersville, N. Y. ($3), writes:

To help one child from the darkness and foulness of the tenement, to the light and purity of the country, and hoping and praying that the soul may find the light of life.

Sabrina, "a sad-hearted mother who has lost all her children," lovingly sends $1 to help some little lad to an outing. "To help the children through this uneven world is the grandest work anybody can be engaged in," writes Mrs. A. H. Vescelius, Newark, N. J. "If we can start them right before they have formed habits that must be broken up, the millennium would soon be here." A Subscriber, Princeton, N. J. (3), says, sympathetically, "Would that all the children could be taken out of the city, during this siege of most unbearable weather."

Mrs. H. A. R., Richmond, Ind., in forwarding $25, sends this most touching note:

I send in our dear Saviour's name, and in the name of a loving father, who left us for his home above, about one year ago, whose heart would be touched by the scene sketched on first page in CHRISTIAN HERALD of August 7th. $21 of it is to go to the Fresh Air Fund, and the remainder for its equivalent, to the "neediest boy of sixteen." If this boy can write, and feels inclined, I should be glad to hear from him.

Two dear little fellows, Norman G——, aged seven, and Charlie G——, aged four, of Leicester Junction, Vt., unitedly send $1 to help give a pleasant outing to some poor little tenement child. Two little boys and two girls at Cromwell, Conn., together earned $1 which they send to help a Fresh-Air Fund baby. A little Christian nobleman of six, Richmond B—— of Greenville, Pa., forwards $2.40 of his own money to send a poor boy to the country. O.C.D., Bradford, Ill., writes:

A subscriber of your paper became so much interested in the articles regarding the "Tenement House Children of New York City," that she had an article read at our little Home Mission Society: the ladies send $2.50 and wish it was more. You are doing a grand work.

"Accept it ($3) as a thank-offering for the health of our little Arita," writes "Free Lance," Strasburg, Va. "In the name of our darling little Birdie, who left us seventeen years ago for that bright world above," is the language in the letter of "A Friend" ($1), Caledonia, Mich. Aileen, Amerrette, and Arthur Weaver, three young people of Lawrence, Kan., send $1 each.

Contributions to the Work.

The following sums have been received during the week for the Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$3,390 95
Olive Macomber and sister	6 00
A Disciple, Wash	6 00
Mrs Mary Hayward	3 00
E H Newton	3 00
Friends, Colerain Forge	3 00
Mrs Gerts	3 00
Mrs W G Weld	3 00
Friend and Subr., N Y	3 00
Mrs Eunice Davidge	30 00
Mrs H B M, Hartford	1 00
R, Hennings Mills	1 00
Walter S Gardner	1 00
Husband and Wife, Manchester	2 00
T D M, Greenwich	1 00
S S Class 5th street M E Church, Pa	4 35
Willing Helper, Lowell	1 00
M A Batten	5 00
H S, Canada	3 00
Mrs Caroline Valentine	3 00
E M Moe	5 00
——, Pierce	6 00
A Mother, Orono	1 00
A friend, W Saugerties	1 00
Alice Lewis	1 00
Nina M Kavanaugh	3 00
D H Newell	6 00
B M Phillips	6 00
In His Name, Worcester	3 00
Hattie E Case	6 00
Friend, Plainfield	3 00
Mrs Wm T Brown	3 00
S V T, Gossville	2 00
Friend, Ct	2 00
Emma F. Kagey	6 00
J E Bristol	3 00
Sabrina, N H	1 00
C Strong	3 00
Mrs Lockwood	3 00
Mrs A F Williams	3 00
A Reader, Albany	1 00
——, Lottsburg	2 00
——, Cannonsburg	3 00
Mrs Robert Miller	3 00
Mrs C B Gough	3 00
E T, Brooklyn	1 00
A CHRISTIAN HERALD Subscriber, Princeton	3 00
Fred and Ernest, Boston	15 00
Frank Duryea	3 00
Alice R Walker	3 00
Mrs H A Rich	25 00
Norman 7 years, Vt	50
Charley 4 years, Vt	50
Two boys and Two Girls, Cromwell	1 00
J L Grant	1 00
Lover of Children, Jewett City	10 00
A Friend, Cincinnati	3 00
O L F, Crystal Lake	1 00
Mrs J M Isbester	1 00
Mr and Mrs H R Brown	3 00
D C Frank	1 66
Jos Robertson	3 00
Emma Dieter	1 00
J F G, Huntingdon	3 00
Zula L Case	1 50
Friends at New Boston	2 50
In Jesus' Name, Owen Sound	3 00
A Friend, Paris, Ont.	20 00
The Presby S S, Bath	10 00
In His Name, Mattoon	1 00
Mrs J McIntosh	12 00
Two Little Girls, King and Queen C H, Va	1 00
Friends in the cause, Bedford	6 00
E M, Harmony, Me	2 00
Eliza Foskett	2 00
Friend, Plymouth Mass	6 00
O F Burgess	2 00
Mrs C F Warrant	5 00
Mrs D Carpenter	10 00
Mrs Geo H B, Charlotte, N C	3 00
M E J and S W, Perry, Ia	6 00
L L P, New Haven, Ct	1 00
S P Middleton	3 00
Mrs David Simpson	1 00
Subscriber, Bar Harbor	50
Little Mission Society of Baptist Church, Ill	2 50
Emanuel Winter	5 00
Jno Cox	1 00
Benj Cox	1 00
Mrs Kate Bartlett	3 00
F L Provinton	1 00
Mrs R H Shelton	1 00
A Girl who loves Jesus, Mt Vernon	6 00
A Friend, Montclair, Fla	1 00
A Friend, Middletown, Mo	3 00
W A Hines	3 00
A Friend, East Orange	3 00
Mrs E M Colvin	3 00
Raymond Blackman	24
Mrs J E McAllister	50
H T, E Rockaway	1 00
Mamie H Paterson	2 00
Mary G F, Danbury	6 00
Mrs C D Jenney	5 00
"Reaping Circle," K D, N Y	3 00
Mrs S and J B, Peekskill	6 00
A New Brunswick	3 00
A friend, N Stonington	1 00
Mrs J A L'Hommedieu	6 00
Mrs F Whitmarsh	5 00
Clifford, Bridgeport	3 00
Theo J and Emily H Weeks	6 00
Dr. Mrs and daughter, Springtown	6 00
Little Sadie, Richmond Ind	1 00
Hattie M Miller	3 00
B I N, Sag Harbor	1 00
An old Sub'r, Nantucket	2 00
In His Name, Me	10 00
Mrs L M Moody	3 00
——, Avondale, Pa	6 00
Anna Simpson	3 00
Christian Endeavor Socy, Bath	3 00
I F Hopkins	3 00
Mr and Mrs Chas L Scott	3 00
S W Smith	3 00
E T, Beans, Ont	3 00
A E B, DuBois, Pa	3 00
Avoca Junior League, M E Church	1 00
Mrs S Wales	3 00
E Wales	3 00
Mr Munn	5 00
Frances Steele	2 75
Mr M Rosney	50
W Varndell	50
Mr Hayes	25
Mrs Hayes	25
Mr Hurley	25
R Gillespie	25
Mr Waldron	25
Mr Thompson	25
Mr Flanigan	25
Mr McFarrin	25
Mr Monson	25
Mrs Muller	25
Miss Caulfield	25
Miss Chambers	25
Mr Knell	25
C E Soc'y, Bapt Church, E Marion	5 37
Ferdinand Frantz	1 00
In Jesus' Name, Brentwood, Cal	3 00
In His Name, Cape Charles, Va	3 00
A T Ambler	5 00
Mrs Jas B Wilson	3 00
A Subr, Fresno	2 00
Ed C Pohlmeyer	3 00
M S T, Kingston	1 00
Junior C E Socy, Fairview	3 00
A friend, Marksboro	6 00
O S True	3 00
Hattie Wallum	2 00
Alice Ia Dow	2 00
——, So Durham	10 00
J A H, Sudbury	50
C D W, Portland	50
Jno J Rieker	6 50
Mrs F W, Springfield	3 00
Miss Lillie Blackburn	1 00
R J B, Glen Wilton	6 00
——, Cedarville	5 00
A Reader, Sharon	3 00
S E H, Troy	1 00
A S P, Mont Claire	6 00
For Christ's Sake, Penobscot Co, Me	6 00
Mrs E M Anderson	3 00
Junior C E Socy, Bapt Church, Pa	3 00
C E H, Middletown	1 00
Mrs M D, Northampton	3 00
A King's Daughter, Lebanon	50
——, Bloomington	1 50
J E D, Asbury Park	3 00
C P, Balto Co, Md	5 00
In His Name, Anita	6 00
Isabella P Runyon	3 00
Jean McKinney	3 00
In Christ's Name, Darmouth	1 00
A friend to children	50
Mary Geerlings	1 00
Red Hill Union S S	1 50
Henry J McCullough	50
A Widow, Carmen Creek	50
Friend, Truin	20
Katie, Robbie and Johnny, Bloomington	75
Mrs G B Rogers	5 00
"Unknown,"	5 00
H A Ball	3 00
A Maine Subr	3 00
L M Upham	3 00
Eliza R Winsley	3 00
Thomas C. Simpson	1 00
Mrs Beacham	50
A few friends, Saranac	1 50
In His Name, Decatur	3 00
A and F, Mystic	3 00
M E C, Brooklyn	1 00
Mrs Bigelow	2 00
Mrs H S L, Auburn	3 00
Emma Nice	50
Edith "	50
Anna "	50
In His Name, Salisbury	50
The Maria P Hedges Memorial Circle, K D	15 00
Mrs Fannie Van Houte	1 00
Ada Richards	3 00
Mrs A M Sanders	3 00
Two HERALD Readers, Sterling	6 00
Wm E Benedict	1 50
Union S S, Hudsondale	5 50
Mrs E P Chambers	1 00
Infant Class of 1st Reformed Church, Bayonne	5 00
Ball Ground School	1 00
——, Mignonette	2 00
Mrs Levi Smith	3 00
Miss Eva J Smith	6 00
Mrs E McMillen	3 00
Husband and Wife, Ohio	3 00
In His Name, Seneca	2 00
Mrs D C Witsey	6 00
Mrs E E Windsor	3 00
Mrs M A Bristol	3 00
C O Ewell	10 00
Mrs Hartshorn	3 00
Mrs J A Elliott	3 00
In His Name, Strathroy	6 00
Hamden	5 00
Friend, Wyom	6 00
Charles C Walker	20
Bertha A Roby and friend	3 20
Friend, Geneva	2 00
Kings Daughters, Pleasant Unity	2 00
Carrie Hawk	2 00
Mrs L B Strong	12 50
Ruth, Riverside	1 00
Friend, Natchez	3 00
Mrs Myra Shaw	2 00
Mrs A F Sawyer	3 00
W J T Whitlock Mine	2 00
E H Whitlock	3 00
Mrs C and B Cleburne	2 00
Bereaved, Phila	10 00
F L C, Cross River	6 00
E H, Merchantville	3 00
B F, Bridgton, Me	1 00
S W	5 00
Mrs L M L Swett	1 00
A Mother, Quebec	3 00
Friend to the children	2 00
Julia H Maclay	10 00
Total	$4,233.36
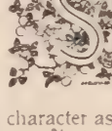
Mrs Vader,	1 pkg clothing

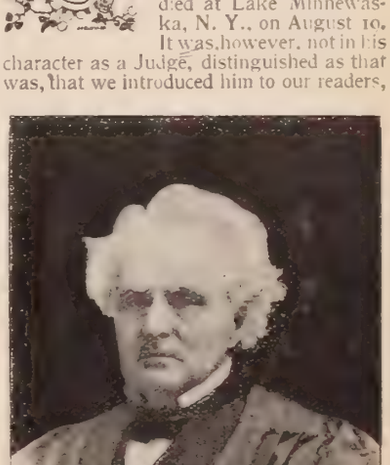
All contributions sent to this office in aid of the Children's Home will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE LATE EX-JUSTICE STRONG.

The Distinguished Jurist, Formerly of the United States Supreme Court, Peacefully Breathes his last.



SOME months ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published a portrait of the eminent ex-Justice of the Supreme Court, who died at Lake Minnewaska, N. Y., on August 10. It was, however, not in his character as a Judge, distinguished as that was, that we introduced him to our readers,



THE LATE EX-JUSTICE STRONG.

but as the President of the American Sunday School Union, which office this learned and able man was proud to fill. He was also President of the American Tract Society and an elder of the Presbyterian Church.

Justice Strong was in his eighty-eighth year when he died. He was born at Somers, Conn. His father was a Congregational minister famous in his day for his learning and eloquence. With no little difficulty and self-denial on the part of the minister and his wife, the young man was sent to Yale, where he graduated in 1828. He began his career in the world as a school-teacher, devoting all his leisure hours and his evenings to reading law. He settled by the advice of friends, at Reading, Pa., where he soon became known as an able, painstaking, absolutely honest lawyer. In 1847 he was elected to Congress, his popularity with all classes carrying him ahead of his ticket. After serving two terms, there was a movement to elect him to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He retired and was soon afterwards chosen for the bench. In 1870 President Grant offered him a seat on the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and Mr. Strong accepted the proffered honor. When he retired at the age of seventy-two, the Chief Justice said that the loss of the Court by his retirement could not be over-estimated, and that in making men, nature had never formed one better than he.

The SUNDAY SCHOOL

THE CITIES OF REFUGE.

S. S. Lesson for Sept. 15, Josh. 20 : 1-9. Golden Text, Heb. 6 : 18. By Mrs. Baxter.

OUR golden text brings before us the immutability of the counsel of God. Even in his promise to Abraham he "interposed with an oath : that by two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we may have a strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us." (R.V.) We have fled for refuge. In this the cities of refuge are a type. God's law of death for the murderer was given to man immediately after the Flood ; it was a law for all men, and not given in the first instance to Israel. (Gen. 9: 6). But God endorsed it afresh in the giving of the sixth commandment, and he reiterated it at the very time when he first spoke of "a city of refuge" for the unintentional man-slayer ; saying that the murderer should be taken even from his altar, that he may die! (Ex. 21: 14).

Four different times he speaks of this provision for the manslayer. (Ex. 21:13; Num. 35; Deut. 19: 2, 16; Josh. 20). He said to Joshua, "Assign you the cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses : that the manslayer that killeth any person unwittingly and unawares may flee thither : and they shall be unto you for a refuge from the avenger of blood." In the city of refuge the inhabitants were bound to make room for the refugee, if he had first declared his cause in the ears of the elders of that city, and they had reason to believe that his cause was just, and that he had not wilfully taken the life of his neighbor. The indignant relative who would pursue him, and seek to make him pay the penalty of the murderer, would be stopped at the gate of the city. Within the precincts of its walls the refugee was safe, and the avenger of blood was forbidden, when once the congregation had determined the cause of the manslayer. "The congregation shall judge between the smiter and the avenger of blood according to these judgments: and the congregation shall deliver the manslayer out of the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to his city of refuge, whither he was fled, and he shall dwell therein until the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil." (Num. 35: 24, 25, R. V.) The manslayer may be innocent of any intention to hurt, but he escapes with his life only : his land, his position, his family, all must be left behind him, he flees for refuge. If for family or for business matters he ventures outside the walls of his refuge city, and the avenger of blood meets him, he can be slain. Outside, he is a doomed man ; inside, the high priest and the congregation stand security for him. Wonderful, gracious provision for God's ancient people, yet a more wonderful type for us!

We too have a city of refuge, although we have slain the Lord ; our sins, my sins, [illegible] Jesus to the cross. But we whom [illegible] become our High Priest, and his life, his endless life guarantees ours. But only inside the city of our refuge.

What is "this Hope

[illegible] which we draw nigh unto God?" (Heb. 7 : 19). Let us, with a reverent spirit, draw nigh to God in this precious Epistle to the Hebrews, that we may understand to the full what our Lord would open up to us of this hope of his church.

When God gave his holy law on Mount Sinai, the people were warned that they [illegible] God commanded Moses to make the tabernacle, he commanded him to make a veil which should separate between the holy place where the priests ministered and the most holy place where the cloud of his holy presence rested between the cherubim. Only once a year might even the high priest enter and then only for a few moments, and "not without blood," that he might atone for his own sins and for those of the people. The flesh of man, his human nature, his self-life had become accursed and abominable in the sight of God because of sin. And Jesus, the Son of God, the Holy One, came down, "was made flesh" of our flesh, the reality of human flesh, "the likeness of sinful flesh," and when he on the cross offered up himself as the only Sacrifice which could really put away sin, the veil was rent. At the very moment that death rent his flesh, the veil of the temple was rent, not from the bottom upwards as though by man, but from the top downwards by the hand of God, that the way, the "new and living way" might be made by which we may, nay, we must, draw nigh unto God. So nigh as to come and to stay in the holiest, where the cherubim made of one piece with the mercy seat had their home, as the living creatures are in heaven "in the midst of the throne," after having mounted up from the earth. A wonderful figure of redeemed man, purified, conformed to the image of God, and caught up to be forever with the Lord.

Our refuge is "the hope set before us, which we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil," (Heb. 6: 19), the immediate presence of God, who dwells between the cherubim. What then is this hope? It depends upon him who is our great High Priest after the order of Melchisedek, who has been made, "not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life," and who as a Forerunner is for us "entered within the veil." (Heb. 7: 16, 17; 6: 20). He entered to make it possible for us to enter. But there is no way in except through the rent veil, his Rent Flesh.

We cannot carry uncrucified human flesh within the veil. "If we die with him we shall also live with him." Within the veil nothing can live which is not divine ; the corruptible is condemned there ; only that which has passed through death can live in the power of an endless life. But just because "he abideth forever," and "hath his priesthood unchangeable," "He is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." (Heb. 7: 24, 25 R.V.) We have not yet seen what this hope is, which entereth "into that which is within the veil." But first, are we willing to draw near, thus near to God and at such a cost? Are we willing to leave behind all which is of self as Jesus did, all the vain glory of the flesh, all our own will and choices? Are we willing to deny ourselves, to take up our cross, and to follow Jesus? Then he as our High Priest is engaged to intercede for us and to save us from our own life, which we renounce and deliver over to death in oneness with his death upon the cross. The cherubim within the veil were "made of the matter of the mercy seat." The purpose of God is to conform to the image of his Son those that love God, and he makes all things work together for good to this end. Is not this "the hope set before us,"—that [illegible] which the cherubim occupied in the tabernacle by way of figure, and which the living creatures occupy in heaven, may, by [illegible] be ours?

What then are we hoping for? "Inasmuch as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this cometh judgment ; so Christ also, having been once offered to bear the sins of many, shall appear a second time, apart from sin, to them that wait for him unto salvation." (Heb. 9: 28). Is not this "the better hope by which we draw nigh unto God?" Is it not this which gives us "boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus, by the way which he dedicated for us, a new and living way, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh?" But do we "hold fast the confession of this hope that it waver not," because he is faithful that promised ; and do we "consider one another to provoke unto love and good works ; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another," and so much the more, as we see the day drawing nigh?

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

A HOMICIDE'S FLIGHT.

OUR lesson takes us back to a primitive civilization. The vengeance for blood still rested with the relatives of the murdered man. The head of the family or the clan had the right and was expected to slay the man who had killed his kinsman. But the element of discrimination was introduced. The killing may have been inadvertent, unintentional. Motive must be considered. If there was no hate in the heart of the manslayer, if he bore the victim no ill-will, but slew him in ignorance or accidentally, a way of escape was provided for him. Six cities easy of access, were set apart to which the manslayer might go. He must stand in the gate and give his explanation. If he could satisfy the authorities that the killing had not been malicious he was admitted and protection was given to him. The was no protection for the malicious murderer, the man who deliberately or in anger took a life. The city of refuge gave no countenance and no protection to the criminal. The fugitive must prove beyond doubt that he had a prima facie case before he could be received, and afterward he must give more convincing proof at a trial in the presence of his accuser and the witnesses. If his crime was wilful he was then given up to the avenger of blood, but if it was accidental he was allowed to remain in the city and no harm could come to him. Thus the sanctity of life was taught. Even the inadvertent manslayer must suffer inconvenience, must be in exile from his home, be unable to continue his business and must begin life again among new surroundings. He was compelled to realize that it was no light thing to cause the death of any one, even by accident. It is comforting to know that God thus takes account of motive. We do so much harm inadvertently that otherwise we would be oppressed by remorse. A light word, an indiscreet act, a disastrous suggestion may cause long suffering to others for which we cannot atone. We cannot help reproaching ourselves and bemoaning our conduct, as the Apostle Paul deplored the persecution he waged in ignorance and unbelief, but we have the consolation of knowing that God, who commanded the appointment of Cities of Refuge has thereby shown that he is merciful to all such wrongdoers.

They shall not deliver the slayer up. The fugitive was safe in the city. The honor of the law was pledged to him. Indignation and swift judgment would fall on a[n] avenger who executed vengeance on manslayer in the city. His act would i[n]dicate that he did not respect the law a[nd] so became an outrageous public crim[e] Herodotus says that the ancient Athenia[ns] had so great a veneration for their temple[s] that even a bird who sought refuge und[er] their roofs was safe from molestation. [He] represents Aristodicus as being reprov[ed] by the gods when he disturbed the birds' nests in the temple at Cumac. "From t[he] recesses of the temple," he says, "a t[er]rible voice proceeded, saying : 'Most v[il]lainous of men! how darest thou dri[ve] away such as seek refuge in my temple[s]' And the Athenians were so enraged [at] Atarbes for killing a sparrow which h[ad] built a nest in the temple of Æsculapi[us] that they killed him." Plutarch says th[at] a place of refuge was opened in Rome so[on] after the foundations of the city were la[id]. They called it the temple of the Asylæ[an] God. There all who came were receive[d] and they would not give up the slave [to] his owner, nor the debtor to his credit[or]. Whoever entered was safe from molestati[on].

He that doth flee. When a man is [in] trouble he is likely to take any refuge th[at] is open to him. Sometimes, as in the ca[se] of a man, who flies to drink in his trouble[s] drown his sorrows, he is only making [his] worse and increasing his trouble. So [many] years ago the body of a man was found [in] a cave in the rocks on the east shore [of] Great Britain. It was identified as that [of] an escaped convict. He had fled there a[nd] he gained the safety and security he sou[ght] but not the sustenance he needed, and [he] had perished miserably of hunger.

The avenger of blood. It is strange th[at] this institution was allowed to survive, [but] it seems to be inherent in human natu[re] and has come down to our own times [in] spite of law and civilization. In some [of] our States the Vendetta has led to aw[ful] bloodshed. In Corsica it attained its m[ost] stupendous development. Lippi, the [Flo]rentian of the fifteenth century, says that [in] thirty years no less than 28,000 perso[ns] were killed in revenge by relatives of m[en] whom they had murdered. The same pr[ac]tice prevailed in Ireland down to rec[ent] times. Dr. Blaikie describes a feud wh[ich] continued for more than a century, [in] which an unknown number of lives w[ere] sacrificed. The county of Tipperary w[as] infested with men seeking the murderers [of] their fathers. These they killed on sig[ht] and were in their turn hunted by the s[ons] of the men they killed. The origin of [the] feud was ridiculous. It arose in a disp[ute] about the age of a colt. One man sai[d] was four years old, and the other sai[d] was only three. The dispute grew hot [and] ended in a fight, in which one of the d[is]putants was killed, and revenge began.

They shall be your refuge. A New Zeala[nd] missionary relates an instance, doubtl[ess] one of hosts that could be adduced of Ch[ris]proving a refuge from vengeance. [The] missionary was holding a communion s[er]vice to which men came from many villag[es]. He noticed one Maori whom he knew, [to] and leave the church in the early part of [the] service. After a time he returned and [re]ceived the sacrament with the others. [Af]er the service the missionary asked [the] Maori why he went out. He replied t[hat] he was horror stricken to find by his s[ide] the murderer of his father whose life [he] had sworn to take. He had taken a s[o]emn oath before his conversion to [love] him whenever they met. They had [not] met until that morning when they sat s[ide] by side at the table of the Lord. The n[at]ural man was too strong for repression [at] first, and the Maori had gone out to p[ray] for strength to forgive and recognize [the] enemy as his brother. Grace had [tri]umphed and he was able to come ba[ck] and in Christian love take his place by [the] side of the man whom but for the tra[ns]forming power of Christ he would ha[ve] killed without compunction.

He shall dwell in that city. The prea[ch]ing of Christ has proved a refuge to ma[ny] who have vainly sought relief in ot[her] ways. In India long pilgrimages, years [of] silence, bodily laceration and many ot[her] painful sufferings are voluntarily undert[aken] in the hope of atoning for sin. Nu[ns] and monks in Roman Catholic countr[ies] endure long nights of vigil, lash each ot[her] with whips and do other penances for s[in]. To all such, when once the Gospel messa[ge] is received, the assurance that the blood [of] Christ cleanses from all sin comes with [a] joy such as the manslayer felt as he [set] foot inside the City of Refuge.

A CHILD REPUBLIC IN TENTS.

e Unique Experiment of Educating Tenement Children — Mr. George's Plan of a Juvenile Republic, Civilized and Christian, and how it has Succeeded.

THE CAMPERS ON DRES-PARADE.

A VERY interesting and instructive experiment in the direction of reclaiming children taken from the lowest tenement sections of New York, and of educating them and otherwise equipping m for the duties of Christian citizenp, is now in progress in the town of eville, in the Northern part of New York te. It is called the George Industrial mp, and it is not only an evangelistic rk, but a most ingenious plan for the ctical education of neglected children. laims at a useful and original developnt of the child's mind and character. e years ago a small ss of boys and girls, m the lowest element New York City, was med. The first sumr camp was arranged the plans for conting it settled, and the rk begun. At that e the little band numbed only twenty-two. out two hundred boys in camp this sumr. The winter home is Eleventh street, where Boys' Club has been med and companies of s are drilled.

When the Camp work s started, the farmers the vicinity supplied provisions for the dren. They even furnis the bedding and cooking utensils. The ple from adjoining towns became greatly terested in the work, and accordingly, the second year, the people of all the Protsnt churches of Ithaca and Cortland and ining towns supplied the provisions for th children. A large portion of the time w passed in giving the children religious inuction, and there were many conversis as a result. The following year saw still further progress. There were more children to care for, and other towns came to help with provisions. The fourth year the churches of Auburn showed their sympathy with the work. Last year Elmira fell into line. The railroads bring the provisions to camp free of charge. This year the churches in Binghamton, Syracuse, Rochester, Waverley and other places helped.

Let us briefly outline the features of the work. It has several aspects—business, social, political and religious. It is farm, workshop, bank, legislature and evangelistic agency. Religious earnestness and tonic discipline rule from the start. No boy can become a member of this little republic without getting a useful preparation for the duties which will meet him when he becomes a citizen of the Greater Republic. Instruction is given so as to make the received impressions practical and abiding. In the first place, the conversion of the boys and girls is ardently sought and worked for. The novel features of the work are thus placed upon a right basis.

The boys' are instructed in farming, carpentry, landscape-gardening and other useful work. The girls are taught millinery, dressmaking, cooking, housekeeping and flower-gardening. Each child chooses a class and is expected to work in it. The work is paid for according to skill and value, and nothing is given until it is earned. Savings are deposited in a bank, which issues a coin current in the camp. If a boy does not work, he at once becomes a pauper, eating a pauper's meal and sleeping in the pauper's dormitory. Last summer Mr. George took three of the roughest specimens of the juvenile pauper in Paradise Park, the old Five Points. The result was good, inasmuch as the boys stood the ridicule as long as possible, and then had to go to work. After their return to New York they all engaged in work, and two of them are still working, though the third has gone back to his former idleness.

Again, if a boy commits a crime against the laws of the Kindergarten republic, he is imprisoned. At the beginning of the camp, temporary laws are made by which the children are governed until the Kindergarten legislature (a body elected by the campers themselves) ratifies them or makes new laws. This little community has its own public opinion and discussions. For example, boys and girls who have been thrifty and saving, and have money in the bank, are allowed the privilege of buying certain articles at wholesale prices and retailing them to the other children. Shall those few be thus favored or shall there be free trade? An issue of practical importance is raised, and this is discussed in the legislature. Very good reasons for and against are given. Shall the girls be allowed to vote? Not by the present constitution, but they will petition the legislature and see if they are to be deprived of what they may think are their just rights. The military drill greatly promotes order and soldierly bearing, and touches the youthful patriotism. The daily routine is well arranged. At six o'clock in the morning there is reveille; from 6.30 to 6.45 a military drill; at 6.45 hoisting of the colors and morning prayer around the flag-staff. Breakfast is at 7.30, after which the industrial work begins; dinner at 12 o'clock; afternoon recreation for all except the prisoners. Several boys have been saved from going to real prison by this. Before they came into the camp, they imagined that in committing a crime they were offending only the policeman; but now it has been explained to them and they understand it, that they are offending the commonwealth in general. At 5 o'clock there is assembly and concert; at 6 o'clock military drill and lowering of the colors; at 6.30 supper; at 7 o'clock prayer-meeting and Gospel service until 8 o'clock led by the children. The children take part in prayer and testimony. On Sundays there is a Sunday School in the forenoon. In the afternoon there is a talk on the Sunday School lesson, followed by a song service, which in turn is followed by a prayer service. At these meetings testimonies are given, and members who have visited the camp have expressed surprise at the convincing truths which fell from the lips of these youthful Christians.

A juvenile community of this kind, whose life and work have thus far been successful, deserves very careful consideration and cordial support. The remarkable thing about it which deserves repetition, is that the hearts and minds of the people are systematically brought into contact with feelings, facts, and principles which give them a foretaste of Christian citizenship. Their daily life is passed in experiences and obligations of mature citizens. They find themselves encouraged to do well by the pay which is given them for their work, and deterred from idleness and crime by the disgrace and penalty of pauperism and disobedience. They are taught that wickedness is not only bad in itself, but an injury to the republic. They thus acquire to a certain extent a reasonable view of their daily conduct. They work, buy, sell and deliberate for definite ends, and are made to feel that their individual well-being and honest effort are part of their community's progress. Think for a moment of the surroundings of such boys and girls in the streets and tenement houses from which they are taken. There vice, idleness, poverty and fear degrade their lives. Law to them is the policeman, and the policeman is an enemy. No wonder that ignorance and crime are bred in this gloom of the tenement. In the camp, however, the transformation is complete. Mr. George who is himself a thorough Christian and an able organizer, has been instrumental in bringing about a wonderful change in many of the children through his training system.

The work is supported by voluntary contributions. Last year it cost $4 a head for a season of six weeks, but this year it will cost more, as there will be a longer season and additional expenses have been incurred. All inquiries made by those who feel an interest in the work, if addressed to Mr. W. R. George, 129 E. 115th street, New York, will be promptly answered.

TRIAL BY JURY AT THE FREEVILLE CAMP.

THE GIRLS' COOKING CLASS AT WORK.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.00 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should be made in the safest manner possible. We recommend the remitter. Postoffice and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our risk.

Register letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals. Please have best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, for the many good reasons caused by

Change of Date.—If you wish to change the date on which your subscription commenced, Expiration of subscriptions. Due notice on the wrapper of each paper will be stopped unless we receive

Change of Address. Always give both your old and new address when you write us to change

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should be written with the greatest care. We cannot find your name on our books unless

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-Office of New York as Second-class Matter

AMERICA FOR GOD.

WHO shall have this hemisphere? Christ or Satan? Who shall have the shore of her inland seas, the silver of her Nevadas, the gold of her Colorados, the telescopes of her observatories, the brain of her universities, the wheat of her prairies, the rice of her savannas, the two great ocean beaches—the one reaching from Baffin's Bay to Terra del Fuego, and the other from Behring Straits to Cape Horn—and all the moral, and temporal, and spiritual, and everlasting interests of a population vast beyond all computation save by him, with whom a thousand years are as one day? Who shall have the hemisphere? You and I will decide that or help to decide it, by conscientious vote, by earnest prayer, by maintenance of Christian institutions, by support of great philanthropies, by putting body, mind, and soul on the right side of all moral, religious, and national movements.

Put his name in your pronunciamentoes, put his name on your ensigns, put his name on your city and State and national enterprises, put his name in your hearts. To most of us this country was the cradle, and to most of us it will be the grave. We want the same glorious privileges which we enjoy to go down to our children. We cannot sleep well the last sleep, nor will the pillow of dust be easy to our heads until we are assured that the God of our American institutions in the past will be the God of our American institutions in the days that are to come. Oh, when all the rivers which empty into the Atlantic and Pacific seas shall pull on factory bands, when all the great mines of gold, and silver, and iron, and coal shall be laid bare for the nation, when the last swamp shall be reclaimed, and the last jungle cleared, and the last American desert Edenized, and from sea to sea the continent shall be occupied by more than twelve hundred million souls, may it be found that moral and religious influences were multiplied in more rapid ratio than the population. And then there shall be four doxologies coming from north, and south, and east, and west—four doxologies rolling toward each other and meeting midcontinent with such dash of holy joy that they shall mount to the throne.

[illegible]

THE OPIUM CURSE.

THREE hundred years before Christ, we read of opium, but it was not until the seventh century that it took its place as a curative and medicinal, through smoking and [illegible] the opium habit. In 1861 there were imported into this country one hundred and seven thousand pounds of opium. In 1880, nineteen years after, there were imported five hundred and thirty thousand pounds of opium. In 1876 there were in this country two hundred and twenty-five thousand opium consumers. Now it is estimated that there are in the United States to-day seven hundred thousand victims of opium. It is appalling.

We do not know why some families do not get on. There is something mysterious about them. The opium habit is so stealthy, it is so deceitful, and it is so deathful you can cure a hundred men of strong drink where you can cure one opium-eater.

I have knelt down in the church by those who were elegant in apparel, and elegant in appearance, and from the depths of the soul we cried out for God's rescue. Somehow it did not come. In many a household only a physician and pastor know it—the physician called in for physical relief, the pastor called in for spiritual relief, and they both fail. The physician confesses his defeat, the minister of religion confesses his defeat, for somehow God does not seem to hear a prayer offered for an opium-eater. I say this not to wound the feelings of any one who may feel this awful grip, but to utter a potent warning that you stand back from that gate of hell. Oh man, oh woman, tampering with this great evil, have you fallen back on this as a permanent resource, because of some physical distress or mental anguish? Better stop. The ecstacies do not pay for the horrors. The paradise is followed too soon by the pandemonium. Morphia, a blessing of God for the relief of sudden pain and of acute dementia, misappropriated and never intended for permanent use.

It is not merely the barbaric fanatics that are taken down by it. Did you ever read De Quincey's confession of an opium-eater? He says that during the first ten years the habit handed to him all the keys of paradise, but it would take something as mighty as De Quincey's pen to describe the consequent horrors. There is nothing that I have ever read about the tortures of the damned that seemed more horrible than those which De Quincey says he suffered. Samuel Taylor Coleridge first conquered the world with his exquisite pen, and then was conquered by opium. The most brilliant and eloquent lawyer of the nineteenth century went down under its power, and there is a vast multitude of men and women—but more women than men—who are going into the dungeon of that awful incarceration.

DEFAMATION.

HAVE nothing to do, by pen, or type, or voice, in the malediction of public men. In the characterization of men in private life we exercise Christian principle, and we are, if we are good men, disposed to put the best phase and the best interpretation on conduct, and it is only a bad man who chooses always to think bad of his fellows. Charity thinketh well, if it is possible to think well.

Now let us in public life do as well as we do in private life, and the same charity we extend toward those in private life extend toward those who are in public life. Remember when we come to judge in regard to the character of men, we are Christian patriots and not scavengers. I abhor this defamation of public men. Just as soon as a man comes to the front and achieves anything by his eloquence, or by his brilliancy, or by his public services, all the hounds of earth and hell get after him. Calmly and deliberately judge of men in the fear and love of God, as you yourself would like to be judged. You yourself, perhaps, may not come to high political position, but your sons may be on the way to the honors of this government. Treat men now in public life with the same fairness and generosity that you would have your sons treated when they come to high position in life.

OPENING SERVICE.

THERE ought to be no preliminary exercises in public worship. There is a [illegible] admission in the churches of Jesus Christ on this subject. The very first word of the invocation is as important as anything that may come after. Scripture lesson, the voice of God to man, while a sermon may be only the voice of man to man. And happy is that church where all the worshippers are present at the beginning of the services. I know there is a difference in time—but a live church goes by railroad time, and everybody in every community knows what that is. No man goes to take the limited express train to Washington at five minutes past ten o'clock if the train started at ten. In many of the households of Christendom, every Sabbath morning the family might well sing that old hymn:

Early, my God, without delay,
I haste to seek thy face.

In every live church all the people take part in the exercises. A stranger can tell by the way the first hymn starts, whether it is a live church. It is a sad thing when the music comes down in a cold drizzle from the organ loft, and freezes on the heads of the silent people beneath. It is an awful thing for a hymn to start and then find itself lonely and unbefriended, wandering around about, after awhile lost amid the arches. That is not melody to the Lord. In heaven they all sing, although some sing not half so well as others.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

H. W. Fervier, Ringwood, Ont. Can you tell me the name of any book containing short stories suitable for explaining points in Scripture, stories for illustrating certain points which sometimes seem difficult to make clear to listeners?

Baxendale's Dictionary of Anecdotes published by Whittaker, New York; Page's Cyclopædia of Illustrations (an English publication) and Anecdotes illustrative of Bible Texts, published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.

J. A. P., Bristol, Conn. 1. Can any one be converted without the aid of the Holy Spirit? 2. Was the Holy Spirit in the world before Pentecost?

In his conversation with Nicodemus (John 3: 1-21), Jesus explicitly attributed conversion to the Holy Spirit. He operates on all, but some resist his influence. None come to God but through him. 2. He came with special gifts at Pentecost. Jesus speaks of these (John 16: 7-14) and of the offices he would fill. The life, work and teaching of Christ on earth would be the forces he would henceforth use for drawiug the world to God. But he had been in the world from the beginning. David knew of him and had felt his influence. He prayed (Ps. 51: 11), "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me."

Mrs. J. McL., Chattanooga, Tenn. The verses you ask for are as follows:

It was not on the field of battle,
It was not with a ship at sea,
But a fate far worse than either
That stole him away from me.
'Twas the death in a ruby wine cup,
That the reason and senses drown;
He drank the alluring poison,
And thus my boy went down.

Down from the heights of manhood
To the depths of disgrace and sin,
Down to a worthless being
From the hopes of what might have been;
For the brand of the beast besotted
He bartered his manhood's crown;
Through the gate of a sinful pleasure
My poor, weak boy went down.

Geo. Langden, Rainier, Wash. Was the ark destroyed with the Temple or may it be still in existence?

There has always been a mystery about the fate of the Ark. It disappears from mention after the destruction of the Temple by Nebuchadnezzar, yet it is not included in the list of the spoils that he carried to Babylon. It was so precious intrinsically and by association, that if it had been among the spoils taken it would probably have been mentioned. Yet it does not appear to have been in the second temple. It is stated that when the Roman soldiers forced their way into the Holy of Holies they found nothing but a stone marking the place where the Ark had stood. There is a tradition among the Jews that the priests hid the Ark when Nebuchadnezzar threatened the temple, and were killed without disclosing its place of concealment. The tradition goes on to say that when Messiah comes he will prove his identity by declaring the hiding-place in which the Ark will be found.

Henry Lee, Galva, Ill. Under what circumstances was the hymn "Blest be the tie that binds," composed and who was John Fawcett, the composer?

It was written by a Baptist pastor in an English village, Rev. John Fawcett, D.D., in 1772. After he had been a few years in the ministry, he thought it was his duty to accept a call to settle as pastor of a Baptist Church in London, to succeed the celebrated Dr. Gill. He preached his farewell sermon to his church in Yorkshire, and loaded six or seven wagons with his furniture, books, etc., to be carried to his new residence. The members of his poor church were almost broken-hearted; and, as the time for the departure arrived, they clung around him and his family. The last wagon was being loaded, when the pastor's devo wife said, "Oh, I cannot bear this! I kn not how to go!" "Nor I, either," said good man; "nor will we go. Unload the w ons and put everything in the place wher was before." The people cried for joy. renewed his labors on a salary of less t three hundred dollars a year. He wrote words:

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love, as expressive of the golden bond of union t knit pastor and people so closely and tend together.

J. E. Mabasse, Newton, N. J. and others. Are CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Suggestions on the Chris Endeavor Topics permanently discontinued

No; you will find them this week on page

Earnest Inquirer, Yardville, N. J. Is it wrong young lady to keep company Sunday eveni and would it be wrong to have a friend to c and take her out to church, when she ha other way of getting there Sunday evenings

Some other evening than Sunday shoul chosen for making or receiving social There can be no reasonable objection to acc ing the escort of an acquaintance to chu under the circumstances stated.

"Old Subscriber" writes as follows in rep the young man who asks if he ought to en himself without immediate prospects:

State the case frankly to the lady and ask h she cares enough for you to wait a little. really loves you she will willingly do so. you have paid her marked attentions and s accepted them, you refrain, she will think either were trifling, or no longer care for her, and in case will probably try to forget you as soon as sible.

C. W. Higgins, Oxford, Neb., writes t quire the authorship of these lines:

A scene in heaven, what a joyful thought,
As the poor man toils in his weary lot,
His heart oppressed and with anguish rive
From his home on earth to his home in hea

Possibly some reader may be able to su the desired information.

J. H. B., Gallipolis, O. When persons use pr language in the presence of a Christian, is duty to reprove the man on the spot, or wa a season of privacy and calmness?

It is incumbent on the Christian to show his disapproval, to let it be seen that he is sh by it, and this should be done at the time, b earnest remonstrance and appeal may be t until a more opportune time when the m less agitated than he usually is whe swears. It will do more good then. With t who garnish their ordinary conversation oaths and the irreverent use of the d name when they are not excited, a re strance on the spot may be effectual. A occurred in a railroad car some time a which a Christian conveyed a reproof to a casual acquaintance who used God's name fanely, by simply taking off his hat and qu remarking that he could never hear the name mentioned without showing his ve tion of it.

S. V. F., Flora, Ill. 1. What is the meaning of remark on the salvation of women in 1. T 2: 15? 2. Is it true that the Catholic was the one founded by the Apostles? 3. were the Apostles baptized and did they tize infants?

1. Several explanations of the passage been offered. The one generally accep the paraphrase that in spite of her suf she could be saved: or, that as Jesus was of woman, it was through child-bearing salvation would come to her. 2. Bein most ancient of Christian churches, it h apparent claim to that distinction. It however, of any weight, as the Apostles have promptly disowned it if they had see corruption that ate out its spirituality. L and the other reformers had just grou claiming Apostolic authority because the seminated Apostolic teaching which the olic church had discarded. 3. Some of were baptized by John the Baptist. C others there is no record. The question mode, whether immersion, pouring or s ling, has been disputed for centuries. S the question of infant baptism. The plea ally urged for the practice is that the A baptized "households" when the head house became a believer. (See Acts 16: 1

Edwin James, East Norwalk, Ct. Only a s ist can advise you.——Old Reader, Westbo Address is Irvington, N. Y.——S. D. H., Ki Write to S. Brainard's Sons, Chicago, Ill., for in sheet form, of the hymn you mention.—— McK., Rainsboro, O. The music only words—were by Philip Phillips. It is so sta on the printed page of music we believe. T is over 100 years old.——Wisdom Seeker, B ton, L. I. There can be no objection to a Ch taking part in any innocent games, but every in which the element of gambling enters. remotely, should be avoided.——Subscriber, Kan. Both are alive and well.——Mrs. Mar send, Bombay, N. Y. Write to Superintend dent's Home, Bath, N. Y., for full information Romeo, Mich. Write to Superintendent of New York, stating all the facts, and he may to help you.——Geo. F. Robb, Arcola, Ia. DeWitt Talmage.——F. O. Bergstrom, Hilde 1. There are no means of tracing the origi phrase. 2. From a Christian standpoint, he spot.——Constant Reader, Averett, Va. Your view rect.——C. H. McC., Sing Sing, N. Y. It wa lished a year ago in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Write to Superintendent Florence Mission, N. Y. a full history of the Mission.——Will Anxious send his address to T. E. Reed, M. D., Mid O.——Read it. Yes, the children frequent home from Mount Town tracts and a variety suitable religious literature.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE MARTYRED MISSIONARIES.

RECENT cable dispatches from China report the efforts now being made by Minister Denby, representing the United States, and Sir Nicholas R. O'Conor, the Ambassador of Great Britain, to compel an investigation of the awful atrocities at Whasang. It is evidently no easy task. Chinese officials are at all times slow to move and in this case there appears to be more reluctance than usual. Not only does the Chinese Government fail to appreciate the gravity of the outrage and the indignation it has aroused in England and the United States, but there is ground for suspecting that it has some sympathy with the miscreants who committed the crime. A report is circulated that the Chinese have appointed Liu Ping Chang as the chief of the investigating commission. If that report is true, it proves that the investigation will be a farce. Liu Ping Chang is notorious for his hatred of foreigners and has already been in trouble on that account. It is also reported that the Chinese Government refused to allow representatives of England and the United States to be present at the inquiry, obviously fearing that the evidence would implicate high officials whom it might be inconvenient to punish. It may be hoped that both from Washington and London such instructions will be given as will enable the two diplomats to act authoritatively, and to compel an honest and thorough inquiry to discover the real criminals, to whom such exemplary punishment shall be meted out as will prove a salutary warning for the future. Unless this is done, the lives of hundreds of missionaries will be in peril. If missionaries so blameless and so devoted as those at Ku-cheng can be murdered with impunity, there will be more outrages. For these martyrs were Christians of a singularly beautiful and beneficent life. The Rev. Robert Stewart, whose portrait is in the centre of the group on this page was a relative of Lord Plunket, the able and earnest Archbishop of Dublin. He had been educated for the Bar, but in 1870, abandoned the profession of law to become a missionary. His services were practically gratuitous, as he had an independent income. His intimate acquaintance with the Chinese language and his brilliant organizing faculty soon brought him to the front and led to his appointment as Principal of the Theological College at Foo Chow. After twelve years of successful labor there his health broke down and he took a brief vacation, visiting England, Canada and Australia, pleading the cause of mission work in China. In December of 1893, he returned to China and took charge of the Ku-cheng district in which many schools were established in isolated towns. The ladies who conducted them belonged to the Zenana Mission. Mrs. Stewart was their loving mother. She was an accomplished Chinese scholar and a lady of high Christian character. Her brother, Sir Philip C. Smyly of Dublin, is one of the Queen's physicians. She shared in all her husband's labors and now she has shared in his cruel death. Miss Newcombe, whose portrait also appears on this page, was killed at the same time. She had been nine years in missionary work in China and had once before suffered violence at the hands of a mob. Miss Gordon, another of the martyrs, was an Australian lady and had been several years a missionary in China. Miss Codrington is the only one of the group who survived the massacre. She was left for dead, and it is a marvel that she lived. She received a deep sword cut, seven inches long across her face, a severe wound on the head, and a terrible gash in the neck. Her life hung by a thread, but the latest reports indicate that there are now hopes of her recovery. She suffered terribly from shock, having witnessed the murder of her friends and having seen the flames of the Stewart house, in which Mr. and Mrs. Stewart and their two helpers were burned. The brave ladies with their noble leader were, it appears, fully aware of their danger. The letters they wrote shortly before their death describe the threats that had been made against them and their native converts. Already they had been once attacked, and had been saved only by the providential circumstance that some workmen had left a ladder in the compound, with which they climbed a high wall and escaped. Their work had been very successful, and they returned to it as soon as they were led to believe the excitement had abated, but they knew that they might be attacked again at any time. They are dead but they were in the service of him who said:

Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life (Rev. 2 : 10).

A Bridal Couple Separated.

An incident that caused some annoyance happened on a Long Island train on Aug. 22. There had been a wedding in Brooklyn and the bride, the bridegroom and the best man were on the train going to Babylon, L. I., where the bridegroom is a prosperous builder. The bridegroom is an inveterate smoker, and was longing for a cigar. Not long after the train started, he left his young wife in charge of the best man and went forward to the smoking-car to have a smoke. He forgot that the Long Island trains are broken up at Jamaica, and remained quietly smoking in the car while the change was made. The smoking-car was attached to a train going to Hempstead, and the car in which his wife and friend were, was attached to the Babylon train. When the young man had finished his cigar he went through the train to rejoin his wife. When he could not find her he made inquiries of the conductor, who told him that he was on his way to Hempstead. To make the vexation worse, it was the last train and there was no way of getting to Babylon that night. He sent a telegram to allay his wife's anxiety, and the next morning he was able to join her at his home. He could then assure her that his apparent desertion of her had not been intentional, but neither she nor he is likely to forget that the first separation of their married life came through his preferring self-indulgence to his wife's society. The Christian's separation from his Lord, in those sad times when the beloved face seems hidden from him, generally come from a similar cause. Some gratification of the flesh, some worldly pleasure is sought instead of spiritual communion, and the drift of worldly society carries the soul to a distance whence it is hard to get back into the old sense of oneness with Christ.

Your iniquities have separated between you and your God; your sins have hid his face from you. Isa. 59 : 2.

An Eagle Stops a Train.

Florida journals report a peculiar accident on the Atlantic Division of the Louisville & Nashville railroad. The mail train was late, and between Bonifay and Caryville the engineer was getting a little extra speed out of the locomotive. He was congratulating himself on making up his lost time, when some heavy object struck the headlight of the locomotive, shattering the glass. He shut off steam and reversed the engine so sharply as to throw it off the rails, and give every car on the train a severe shock. The passengers were thrown from their seats and many of them were hurt. Those who were uninjured hurried out of the cars and went forward to see what accident had occurred. They found the locomotive enveloped in flames from the burning oil. Firmly wedged in the broken glass of the headlight was a large buzzard partially consumed by the flames. It had struck the headlight with full force, probably breaking its neck by the blow. Traffic was delayed about five hours while word was sent to the nearest telegraph station and another locomotive was sent to the relief of the standing train. The cause of God in the world has in the course of its history suffered similar delays, as when the Huguenots were slaughtered in France; but like this delay of the train, they have only been temporary, and those who cause them find, as the King of France did, that their attack, like that of the eagle on the locomotive, has worked their own destruction.

Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken. Luke 20 : 18.

Alternate Light and Darkness.

An aged lady died at her home near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on August 18, who had a remarkable experience. Five years ago, her sight grew dim and she became totally blind. She was then eighty-one years old and she sorrowfully concluded that what remained of her life would be passed in total darkness. She was devotedly attached to one of her grand-children, a beautiful girl about ten years old. The child fell sick and died. The old lady grieved over her intensely and for several days wept inconsolably. To her astonishment her sight returned to her and became almost as clear as before her blindness. She was able to see her beloved little one in her casket. It continued to grow better and for several weeks she was able to go around as usual and to read and work. Then darkness settled down again around her, and once more she was blind. She continued so until about a month ago, when she was seized with her fatal illness. Then her sight was again restored. She could see and recognize her family and friends. She retained her sight until her eyes closed in death. The experience is unique as to physical eyesight, but it is common to the spiritual vision. In periods of sorrow and bereavement, and in the valley of the shadow of death, when the change from earth to heaven is near at hand, the Christian frequently gets gleams of light and clearer views of his Saviour's glory than he had in times of health and happiness.

It is good for me that I have been afflicted that I might learn thy statutes. Ps. 119 : 71.

VICTIMS OF THE KU-CHENG OUTRAGE.

1. REV. ROBERT STEWART. 2. MRS. STEWART. 3. MISS H. NEWCOMBE. 4. MISS GORDON. 5. MISS CODRINGTON.

BRIEF NOTES.

If you Wish to Earn, with Very Little Effort, the Gospel Hymns 1—6, Music Edition, singly or in quantities, address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for full particulars.

A Russian Hebrew has Devoted a large Sum to establishing a Jewish university in Jerusalem, in which special attention is to be paid to the Semitic languages and Hebrew literature.

Seven hundred and eleven Women Missionaries are at work in India. During the last two years these visited 40,513 heathen families, and instructed 62,414 heathen girls.

By a Vote of 220 to 140 the British Wesleyan General Conference has approved the principle of an extension of the term of ministerial service. The opposition of the elderly ministers was very pronounced.

The Union Seminary Settlement Society has opened a house in New York and is busily engaged in its work. Three students are located on East Ninty-sixth Street, and sixty-eight blocks have been carefully studied relative to institutions of all kinds in existence there.

The condition of the Armenian refugees who have returned to Talora, in the Sassoun district, is described as most deplorable, some of them being without clothes, and not having tasted bread for months; 5,000 of them are said to be hungry and destitute, are still harassed by nomad Kurds.

The Triennial Council of the Congregational Church is called for Oct. 9-14, at Syracuse, N. Y. Delegates will attend from Great Britain, Canada and Australia. Important business is to be transacted besides that of electing officers of the various boards of the Church. Among the special addresses to be given are one each by Dwight L. Moody, Dr. Lyman Abbott, and Dr. Francis E. Clark.

Rev. Archibald McLean, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the Church of the Disciples has started on a tour around the world to visit the missionary stations in Japan, China, India and Africa, returning through Italy, France and England. Mr. McLean expects to be away ten months.

In a Letter to the Author of a Book Dealing with the relations between science and religion, thanking him for a copy of his work, Mr. Gladstone expresses gratitude to science for all it has done and is doing, but says that Christianity does not need it, and is as able now as it ever was to hold its own ground.

We Regret to hear of the Death of Rev. James E. Sharp, of Marshall, Mo. He was an elder brother of Rev. Geo. W. Sharp, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary in the South-west. He had been a faithful and successful minister for more than forty years and his public life had been a benefaction to a large district. At his funeral there were many touching expressionn of sorrow from his church and fellow citizens.

Advices Received from American Missionaries in Armenia report with much sorrow the death of Garabed Agha, one of the ablest Christians in the country. He was chief of the Armenian community at Marsovan, and was exceedingly useful to the missionaries. He was killed by the revolutionary party for declining to take up arms against the Government.

Membership in the New World's Christian Endeavor Union will be open to all present Christian Endeavorers. Provision will also be made so that members of Evangelical churches, who may be prevented by circumstances from joining a society themselves, may obtain a certificate of membership in the union by the payment of one dollar to the treasurer, Mr. Wm. Shaw, Boston.

An Interesting Feature of the Proceedings of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church was the volunteering of five young men for the foreign mission field "at whatever salary the Church can afford." The Assembly could not afford the usual salary, but voted two-thirds of the usual rate, with the promise that when the treasury could bear it they would be paid full salaries.

The Following was the Pledge Taken by the Baltimore Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union at the great Consecration meeting: "I take God to be my Father; I take Christ to be my Saviour; I take the Holy Spirit to be my guide; I take the Bible to be the rule of my faith and action; I take God's people to be my people; and, God being my helper, I will strive to win one soul to Christ during the coming year."

During the Recent Parliamentary Election in England the saloons organized to resist the Local Veto Bill, which proposes to give a community the power to close all saloons in its border if it so voted. Many saloons exhibited a poster bearing these words, "If the Local Veto Bill is passed, this house will be closed." A couple of boys pulled down one of these placards and nailed it up on the outside of a workhouse, where its appropriateness was beyond question.

The Dream That an Angel Brought.

SHE was a fair young mother. She was very tired. Her hands and feet and back and head ached, and no wonder, with all she had to do.

It was ten o'clock in the morning and the house was for once quiet. Harry and Freddie, her little sons, five and three years old, were playing in the lane. Their shouts and laughter came floating to her in soft gusts: they were good little men, seldom quarrelsome or boisterous. Baby Ethel was fast asleep, after her bath. She was apt to take a long nap at this time, but sometimes she slept fitfully and cheated her mother of the morning time for work on which she counted, but usually Ethel slept two hours between ten and twelve. There would be that interval for working on the painted screen Mrs. Montgomery hoped to finish for the church fair, and perhaps she might sketch a design for a book cover, too. Those designs brought her ten dollars apiece, and that extra money counted for many comforts in the small household, John's salary being very inadequate for the maintenance of a family of five.

But Mary Montgomery could not paint or draw to-day. She was too utterly fagged out, what with the intolerable heat of August, and the loss of rest, four nights in succession, Ethel having so trying a time with her teeth, and Freddie suffering from fever, and Harry waking up and crying out for mamma to come and take away his naughty dream.

Mary did the only thing she could do. She threw herself on the lounge near Ethel's cradle, and immediately fell into a deep sleep

A sleep so hushed and quiet that it rested every sense. It soothed the weary brain and the aching limbs. It laid a cool, caressing touch on the nervousness which had made her feel as if she must fly. It drove away the the despairing sense of incompetence for the situation, which had driven her, before she lay down, to utter these words, solemnly, and aloud, though there was nobody near to hear them.

Nobody visible, I mean. To all our words there are throngs, no doubt, of unseen listeners; of all our acts there are multitudes of watchful, pitying, wrathful, or critical spectators. Else what meant that declaration of Scripture, "He giveth his angels charge concerning us," and "They are all ministering spirits," and how else should the wanderer with senses enlightened have beheld the forms of bright ones going to and fro between earth and heaven on the ladder reaching down its cloudy stair, or the prophet shown to his servant the chariot and horses of fire beside that gate of Samaria!

It is always God's world, and every generation from Abraham's down has been under God's minute supervision. Therefore no one of us is left out from the guardianship of our unseen watching angels.

"If girls knew what they were doing, none of them would ever marry. Think of the life I used to have, the ease, the leisure, the pleasant days, the long undisturbed nights. And see me now. I am [illegible] —growing old before I'm twenty-five." Then she had sighed and fallen asleep. And as she slept an angel gently fanned her cheek, and a dream stole softly in at the ear-portal, and behind the closed door of the eyes, and there came to her a revelation of herself as she, a young mother, with her fledglings yet in the home nest, [illegible]

First the [illegible] some house which stood where three roads met, at the top of a stony New England hill. The house, four-square to all the winds that blew, had points of view from its many windows, down all the winding paths which led from its sill to the great world. A tall, plain woman, old and hard of feature, sadness on her thin, weather-beaten face, endurance in her spare, erect figure, dwelt there alone. Children she had brought up, but they had left her, and among them one was an outlaw, another a man who had forsaken his childood's faith teaching, and a third a grubber among the rubbish of life, his solitary ambition the making of money. The old mother was forgotten and alone, and Mary had heard her say, in faint, muffled tones,

"Oh! that I were back in my happy days when I cuddled my children in my arms, and covered them up safely at night in their beds. I knew where they were then God help them now, and me!"

The scene changed. Mary was taken to a palace. A lady who looked queenly, though she wore no crown, sat by a table littered with papers. A courtly statesman bowed low before her, "I congratulate you, madam," he said, "on a proud and splendid reign."

"Yes," said the queen, "it has been in a grand era, this reign of mine, but my best times were when I was young with my babies, and my brave young husband was at my side. These last years have been desolate, unspeakably desolate." And the pale features quivered, and tears dimmed the aged eyes.

Again Mary Montgomery found herself drifting through space, and she paused in the library of one of her school-friends a great and successful author. This woman had never married. She had led an untrammelled life, with leisure for much cultivation of heart and brain; she had traveled, she had earned a fortune, her books were many, her fame secure. She was talking, Mary found, with a young aspirant to literary honors, and this was what she said,

"Choose the thorny path, dear, if you must, but don't anticipate joy. Look for hardness. If you would seek heartsease and true satisfaction accept a good man's love, live for home duties. The truly blessed woman is she whom little lips kiss, whom little children cling to and call mother, who cooks dinners, and sweeps floors, and mends stockings, and sews patches on torn trousers, and never has her picture in the papers, nor sees the curtain lifted from her life of happy obscurity. The most envied woman of my own acquaintance is a girl I once sat by in the school-room, dear Mary Paulding, now Mary Montgomery."

Ethel cried. A little tooth was piercing the tender gum, and it wakened the baby. Her mother woke, too, and nursed the baby, and kissed and sang to her. The little lads came in, and asked for a piece, and Mary gave them bread and butter, with a sprinkle of white sugar, and she did not scold them once the livelong day, nor once bemoan her fate, for was she not wiser and gladder, she, to whom God's angel had brought a dream that morning?

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

An Early, Unknown Race.

Prof. Petrie's Remarkable Excavations in the Nile Valley—A People who lived 3,000 Years Before Christ.

ONE of the most surprising of recent archæological discoveries has lately been made by Prof. Flinders Petrie, who is conducting a series of excavations in the valley of the Nile, between Ballas and Nagada and about thirty miles below ancient Thebes. On the border of the desert, about three miles from the river, is a plateau about 1400 feet above water mark, although it is surmised that at some very remote period, the Nile must have washed its base. In the gravel of this ancient river margin, there have been found traces of a race of men who are believed to have existed long before Egyptians had become a controlling power among the nations of the earth. The date of their probable occupation of this territory Prof. Petrie assumes to be about 3000 B.C. This was a time when, as Egyptian history shows, that nation encountered many troubles, and sustained serious reverses.

RELICS OF AN UNKNOWN RACE, FOUND IN EGYPT.
Carved Figure. Portion of Comb. Ivory Comb. Carved Pottery Foot Warmer. Skulls of New Race. Slate Palette or Jar. Handmade Porphyry Vase.

The remains, therefore, it is not unreasonably suggested, may be those of Libyans, or some other invading nation, who threatened to overwhelm Egypt and made the throne of the Pharaohs uncertain. In any event, whatever they were, they were totally different from the Egyptians in many respects. Their dead were not preserved as mummies but buried in a sitting position. Among them are found no amulets, scarabs, etc., such as are present in Egyptian tombs. They did not seem to have any system of writing, so hieroglyphics or characters of any kind do not exist. Their civilization had not reached the potter's wheel; the pottery found is all hand-made and very accurately formed. The power these people had of precision in their work is seen in a collection of small vases of alabaster, porphyry, breccia, and other hard stone, and the perfection of form that is produced is really wonderful. Although they had this capacity with the hand and eye, yet their art is of the rudest. Some specimens are shown in the group of illustrations on this page, for which we are indebted to the London "Illustrated News."

Prof. Petrie also found some skulls of this new-found race, which may perhaps throw light on the type they belong to. Although 3000 years old, some of them retain portions of hair, which they must have worn long: this is indicated by the length of the teeth on their combs. Many bones were found, and, from certain appearances, Prof. Flinders Petrie infers that they h[ad] funereal rites, which he describes as "co[m]monial cannibalism." They used gr[een] paint, made from malachite, for mark[ing] round their eyes, and the slate palettes [on] which this was ground were found in la[rge] numbers.

AN AFRICAN EXPLORER DEAD

Joseph Thomson, one of the most dis[tin]guished and successful African explo[rers]

THE LATE JOSEPH THOMPSON, Explo[rer]

since Stanley made his famous journe[y] in the Dark Continent, died in Europe recen[tly]. He was a native of Scotland, and was [born] in 1858 at Penpost in Dumfriesshire, [and] educated at Edinburgh University, [where] he chiefly devoted himself to the stu[dy] of geography. In 1878 the Royal Geogr[aph]ical Society sent an expedition to Cen[tral] Africa under the late Keith Johnston, [of] Mr. Thomson was chosen as an assist[ant].

When Mr. Johnson died in 1879, Mr. Thomson was made leader of the p[arty], and penetrated north as far as Ujiji and after visiting Lake Hekwa, reached the coast of Bagamoyo in 1880. In 1882 Thomson explored Masailand, and was the first European to visit Mount Kenia. He suffered greatly during this expedition, and probably weakened his strong constitution. In 1885 he went for the Royal Niger Company to Sokoto, and in 1888 explored Southern Morocco and the Atlas range. Then in 1891, on behalf of the British South Africa Company, he explored the country between Lake Nyasa and Bangweolo, and on this journey contracted the lung disease which finally caused his death. After nearly recovering his health, Thomson grew homesick and returned home last autumn. He spent the winter in the Mediterranean, where he had a fresh attack of pneumonia, of which he died.

In all his travels he never shed a drop of native blood! His provocations were endless, but his marvelous patience and Christian firmness always won him his point in the end. His principal work is "Through Masailand," but he also wrote other books on African travel and adventure.

FELLOW-LABORERS WITH PAUL

"Those women who labored with me in the Gospel, whose names are in the Book of life."

THEY lived and they were useful; that we know,
And naught beside;
No record of their names is left to show
How soon they died;
They did their work, and then they passed away—
An unknown hand—
And took their places with the greater host
In the higher land.

And were they young, or were they growing old,
Or ill or well;
Or lived in poverty, or had much gold,
No one can tell.
One only thing is known of them—they were Faithful and true
Disciples of the Lord, and strong, through prayer,
To save and do.

No glory clusters round their names on earth,
But in God's heaven
Is kept a book of names of greatest worth
And there is given
A place for all who did the Master please
Although unknown;
And their lost names shine forth in brightest rays
Before the throne.

—Home Mission

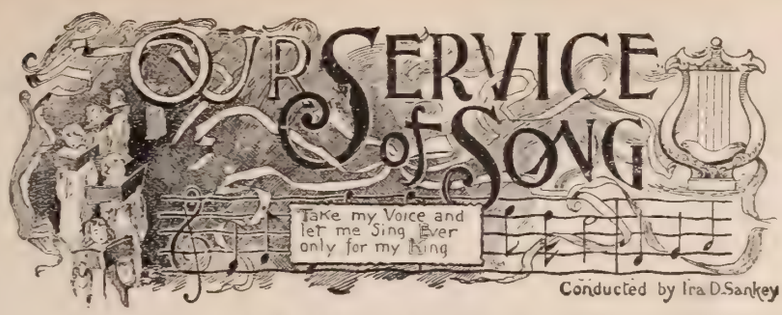
ELP IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

gestions on the Christian Endeavor opic for Week beginning Sept. 15th. hemiah 8: 1-12.

IF, in any given generation, the knowledge of the Gospel were kept back from children and imparted only to men and women, the church would saffer an appalling diminution of strength and nbers. When the cares of life and the a ieties of maturity have laid their iron g on the soul, the Gospel has s ll chance to enter. Always, i very generation, the hope is i he children. What a privil- e then is it to sow the seed in t soil that is not over-run with t world's rank weeds! To w the young soul for Christ, t re-empt the heart for its Sa- r is a mission to stir the g of every servant of the M ster. In that sphere he is n met by the cynical criticism, t distraught thoughts, the r , calculating attitude that he m ts with in dealing with men a women, but the warm, un- s sh enthusiasm of youth, w ch responds to the appeals h as to make. There is vir- g soil in the young hearts that a found in the Sunday School n the seed sown there brings r er fruit, as every minister w testify, than any sown in l r years. Nor is the reward o for which the toiler has to w t. The direct result may n come for years, but the in- d ct comes in the work. The w ker is blessed and his own s l is watered in watering oth- e . The very effort to make t Gospel message plain to the y thful mind impresses it on t heart of the teacher. He is c en, if he is conscientious, to e mine the foundations, to ex- p n first principles, to place t truth in so clear and forcible a manner that others may see a comprehend it and in doing s e gets a firmer grasp on it h self. The questions of the c ldren compel study, they sug- g t difficulties which never oc- c red to him and lead him into f ls of inquiry that are rich in t h. Many a teacher in the a empt to satisfy some inquir- i mind, has discovered beau- t in the Word of God that h had never found before. The m n who sat beside Ezra, as d scribed in the passage on w ich the topic is based, are an e mple for the teacher in his d de of work. The chronicler s s they gave the sense of the l as they read it and caused t people to understand the r ding. If the Sunday School t cher can do that, how much h accomplishes! After all, the c ld can get no better training, t can have his mind stored s well with that which will f tify it against temptation, as h a clear and practical knowl- d e of the Scriptures. To im- p t such knowledge, the teach- e must know them himself and t t knowledge enriches h is o n soul. Then, too, in ad- d ing his young friends in the d ficulties they will bring to him t hey count upon his sympathy, a acting as peacemaker in the quarrels that a se, in visiting them in sickness, he must g e advice and guidance which are found- e on principles applicable to his own life. T e influence of an intelligent class thus b comes salutary and bracing. It adds n more to the preserving and restraining i luences that bar the way to evil. "What w uld my class think if they saw me h ere?" is a thought that has kept many a y ung man from a place where he would h ve encountered peril. Thus the Sunday S hool is fruitful in blessed reciprocity.

ABANDONED HIS IDOLS.

Nothing in the world so satisfies the soul man as the Gospel. A missionary relates the experience of a Buddhist priest, who had given up his bishopric two years previously, and received a copy of the Gospels. A meeting was being held at Tanabe, in a hotel, and he was in bed in an adjoining room. He pushed back the sliding door and sat up in bed to listen to the sermon. At its close he asked for and received one of the Gospels. He told me afterwards, when giving me the idol (hotoke) he had formerly worshiped, that he had long felt that it was wrong for him to teach the people to worship idols, and he had at length given up his office and work on that account. He told also of the sadness that filled his soul as for the last time, according to his promise to himself, he bowed to worship the little idol which he had worshiped all his life, and which was given him by loving parents when he left his home to prepare for the Buddhist priesthood. "For two years," he added, "I had nothing to worship. I had given up the only object of worship I knew, and there was no other one before whom I could bow. During these two years no one can tell what a lonesome heart I had. But when I got the copy of the Gospels, and began to read of the Saviour, the aching void in my heart was filled. I now have a real God to worship." He walked up to Osaka, a distance of about ninety miles, in order to apply for baptism, which in time was duly administered.



ABIDE WITH ME.

"FOR THE DAY IS FAR SPENT."—Luke 24: 29.

JENNIE WILSON. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

1. O bless-ed Friend, a - bide with me, My wea - ry soul hath need of Thee;
2. A - bide with me when foes as - sail, And hu - man friend-ships faint and fail;
3. A - bide with me, be near my side, Till o'er the Jor - dan's roll - ing tide,

A - bide with me, no hand but Thine Can lead me home to rest di - vine.
O Changeless One, Thy help is sure, Thy love will ev - er more en - dure.
My ev - ery care and sor - row past, Be - fore Thy throne my crown I cast.

CHORUS.

A - bide with me,..... a - bide with me,..... O bless - ed
A - bide with me, a - bide with me, rit. a tempo.

Friend,..... a - bide with me;..... In joy or grief..... what-e'er it O bless-ed Friend, a-bide with me; In joy or grief rit.

be,..... O bless-ed Friend, a - bide with me..... what - e'er it be, a - bide with me.

Copyright, 1895, by James McGranahan.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2.
By Permission of the Publishers.

THE FIRST FRUITS.

Characteristics which must distinguish those who will Escape the Tribulation.

BY REV. CHARLES GRAHAM.

LONG has the question been asked, who are the first fruits of Rev. 14: 4? I believe the Word of God gives its own answer. In the chapter three distinct epochs are marked, and three distinct events connected with them. We have (ver. 1-5), the period of the first fruits and their gathering; we have (ver. 14-16), the period of the harvest and its reaping and ingatheing, and we have (ver. 17-20), the period of the vintage, the gathering of the grapes, and the pressing of them into the winepress. The order is natural, the harvest is the central point, it is the end of the age. The wheat gathered into the garner are the righteous gathered home to God. John the Bapist in Matt. 52: 3 speaks of Christ with his winnowing fan. We see Christ with the sickle in his hand reaping the harvest in Rev. 14. (See Matt. 13: 24-43.)

Just as there was the feast of the harvest (Exod. 24: 22), so also a feast of first fruits (Lev. 2: 14, &c.). The vintage, both in the Old and New Testament, is a destructive judgment which Christ in the end of the first age will inflict on the enemies of his people. The first fruits are a symbol of what is holy; a part and a pledge of the harvest (see Rom. 11: 16). Of the Church itself there is a first fruit to God and the Lamb (Rev. 14: 4). As the first sheaf of the harvest they are characterized by special sanctity, they have the name of the Lamb and of the Father written on their forehead (see also Rev. 22: 4). The first fruit was presented to God in the temple, so the first fruit of the Church is presented in heaven.

This one hundred and forty-four thousand are without blame, as followers of the Lamb they resemble him in whose mouth was found no guile. One of the highest encomiums ever passed on man was passed by the Lord Jesus on Nathanael, "Behold an Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile" (see also 1. Thess. 5: 23), of himself, Silas, and Timothy, Paul says the same thing. So what Paul and his choicest workers were, such are the first fruits unto God and unto the Lamb.

At some point between the commencement of the persecution of the great Antichrist and his destruction at the coming of the Lord, the Church will have been caught up to meet the Lord Jesus (Rev. 20: 4). But before that period this first fruit will have been gathered from the earth. Among them there will be no risen from the dead. They are simply the first ripe sheaf from the harvest field. As we know, the Church will no longer be on earth during the entire period of the persecution (Rev. 9: 14). So I believe the first fruits may now be removed at any moment.

While there shall be faithful ones martyred under the beast it is equally clear that some will escape entirely, being preserved from the tribulation (Luke 21: 31). This is a very solemn and deeply important subject. If there is to be such a removal God grant we may be ready! Remember that on the ground of moral fitness, entire separation to God, purity of life and walk, may rest the question whether we shall soon form part of this blessed first fruit unto God and to the Lamb. Remember there is a quaternion of marks: Freedom from sacramentarianism, indicated by separation from the harlotry of Babylon, the name of Father and Son written on their foreheads, having no guile on their lips, and following the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE.

A Sermon Preached in the First Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D.D. Text: John 8: 12: "I am the light of the world;" Matt. 5: 14: "Ye are the light of the world."

HE religious economy of the Jews was symbolic from beginning to end. Every conception of things supernatural or divine was expressed by something material and visible. Everything included in the furniture or equipment of the Temple and Synagogue was symbolic.

Jesus spoke the words of our first text while he was standing in what was known as the treasury hall of the Temple. Here were the chests into which the people dropped their money for the support of their public worship. In the centre of this hall stood two enormous candle-sticks with many massive and elaborately ornamented branches. These great lamps were lighted at sun-down, and through all the night their exceeding brilliancy illuminated the whole city. These lights, like the ancient Pillar of Fire, and the luminous Shechinah that hovered over the Mercy Seat, were reminders and tokens of the presence of God. In the early morning, on the last day of the Great Feast of the Jews, Christ stood beneath those huge candle-sticks, and as the lights upon them were waning and expiring, he exclaimed, "I am the light of the world."

The Sun of Righteousness.

There was another and a grander object at that early morning hour which rendered these words more peculiarly appropriate and impressive. That object was the rising sun. I can see the Master in imagination as he stood there, pointing the people to the flickering dying light of those great Temple lamps, and next to the rising orb of day, and then pointing to himself and saying, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. The old prophets of Israel foresaw Christ and the magnificent results which should follow his coming into the world, and they called him "The Sun of Righteousness." How justly and appropriately he named himself "Light!" What light is to the material world, he is to the moral universe.

But in what sense and to what extent is he the light of the world? Is he simply a teacher of men? Is his mission limited to the removal of human ignorance. I find it no easy task to be as patient as I ought to be with the shallowness and blindness of men who think and speak of Christ as only a great pedagogue, making men better by simply making them wiser. This view is not a denial of his real character and mission, but it is fatal to the spiritual welfare of those who are weak and foolish enough to cherish it. In such a conception of him the actual necessities of redemption are ignored. It is a conception based on the unwarranted assumption that human sin is not a very serious matter. That it is born solely of ignorance, and is lodged only in the intellect, and that the easy and certain cure for it is education.

Such a theory of sin cannot stand the [illegible], and therefore any conception [illegible] based upon it is radically false. [illegible] and learned men of the past were as much distinguished for their wickedness as for their wisdom. Their minds were luminous [illegible] flowing fountains of iniquity. Knowledge alone cannot make us better men. Knowledge is as often an instrument of evil as an instrument of good. Benedict Arnold was [illegible] ton, but one betrayed his country and the other saved it. Robert Ingersoll is as well informed in some departments of learning as William E. Gladstone, but in character there is an immeasurable distance between them.

We all know that knowledge and righteousness are not convertible terms. We have some men in our legislative halls whose uncleanness is as profound as their statesmanship. They can engineer a gambler's scheme as successfully as they can work a bill through Congress. There are bank cashiers who have shown themselves wise enough to enlighten a nation upon any of its financial problems, and base enough to embezzle every dollar committed to their keeping. Some of the ablest expounders of moral law have openly and shamefully violated almost every principle of the decalogue. The blackest villainies in the world's history were planned by men who had received diplomas from colleges and universities. Sin is a very serious matter. It goes deeper than intellect. It is a loathsome disease that covers man's whole moral being. It is inherent depravity. It is a natural enmity towards God and his righteousness. It is wilful, positive rebellion against the Almighty. Sin means guilt, and guilt means Divine condemnation, and Divine condemnation means wrath and separation from God.

This being man's condition, he needs more than an instructor in the path of duty. He needs a deliverer from the condemnation and destroying power of sin. He needs a Saviour who has in himself transforming and creating power. In other words he needs God — he needs the same Divine Being who made him and breathed into him the breath of life. Christ answers this need when he says, "I am the light of the world." In this declaration he asserts his divinity, or his oneness with God.

God is light. It is his essential property. All through the world's history, and through the Bible, he is associated with light. The burning bush before which Moses stood, the "Pillar of Fire" in the Wilderness, and the luminous cloud in the Tabernacle and Temple, were of the invisible Jehovah. "Thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment." "The Lord is my light, and my salvation." "The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light." The Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and forever."

Visible Manifestations

Now when Christ says, "I am the light of the world," he declares his absolute oneness with God. It is substantially what he had previously said to Philip: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Christ was God manifest in the flesh. "The word was with God, and the word was God, and the word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Though he has passed into the spirit world, and is no longer discernible by our mortal senses, he is still the God-man, one in being and sympathy with God, and one in nature and sympathy with man. In the person and life of this divine man is the light of the world, and nothing but personal contact with the personal life of this divine being can emancipate man from sin and satanic power and lift him into sympathy and fellowship with God.

Salvation is to know God. It is not to know something about him, but to know him. I can learn something about God from his creative works. "The heavens declare his glory." But I can know all that the earth and heavens reveal of his wisdom and power without knowing him. Man [illegible] God only through the mediation of the Godman. "No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." What men need [illegible] the knowledge of God. This knowledge will not only make them wise unto salvation and fit them for heaven, but it will develop in them God-like virtues, and prepare them to make the most of the present life and the present world. This knowledge can be gained only by personal contact and intercourse with the Man, Christ Jesus.

But what will you do with our second text? "Ye are the light of the world." The same being who says, "I am the light of the world," declares that his followers are the light of the world. Paul in writing to Christians at Philippi says, "In the midst of a crooked and perverse generation among whom ye shine as lights in the world." There is no contradiction here. Both doctrines are true. Christ is the light of the world, and his people are the light of the world.

Reflected Light.

The light of the Christian is a light derived from Christ. Christ the Son of Righteousness shines into him and he shines upon the world. In other words, Christ works through those whom he has enlightened and redeemed to bring lost men to a saving knowledge of his truth. Christians are witnesses for Christ. They show the world by their own redeemed lives that Christ is a deliverer from sin. They demonstrate by their own conduct that a union with him by faith transforms human nature, changes the currents of its thoughts, affections and aspirations, and makes it in every way richer, nobler and diviner. They reveal Christ as Christ reveals God. They reproduce his virtues. Men take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus and learned of him. They see the character of Christ in the characters of his people. They are drawn to Christ by the attractive power of his people.

Having this light of life, Christians are required by their divine Master to let it shine before men. Dr. Broadus says that the meaning of this is that we must show our Christian virtues in the presence of men. When we are isolated from the world and its temptations, it is comparatively easy for us to refrain from sinning, and to preserve a Christ-like temper. For this reason many people become hermits. They desert the ranks of men, and hide themselves in caves and mountain fastnesses. These are they who put their light under a bushel. Christ gets no true service and the world no real blessings from such Christians. Put your light upon a candlestick that it may give light to all that are in the house. Shine in the presence of men that they may see your works and be inspired by them to glorify God. Stand before the world and prove by the grace you have received you can withstand its temptations. Go into the markets and show men that you can buy and sell and get gain from day to day, and from year to year, without doing one dishonest thing. Go to the bar of justice and show that you can practice law successfully without reverting to any of the tricks of the profession. Go into the councils of the nation, and show the country that you can perform all the functions of a legislator without confederating with demagogues and political jobbers, or without swerving one hair-breadth from the line of Christian rectitude. Go into the social gathering and show that you can be a cultured gentleman, and can make yourself agreeable and meet every reasonable requirement of social life without playing progressive euchre or drenching yourself with strong drink, or without doing anything else that would be contrary to your Christian principles, and hurtful to your Christian influence. Wherever you come before the eyes of men let your first thought and supreme purpose be to show yourself a man redeemed by his grace, and to make an impression that will silence scepticism, and to inspire men to covet Christian virtue and happiness.

To Shine for God,

But shining for God means more than an exhibition of moral purity. It means labor—earnest, diligent faithful labor in teaching men Christian truth, and persuading them to submit to Christ that they may know God, and experience the freedom and glory of his salvation. It means the use of every available and legitimate means of making the world acquainted with the Gospel of Christ, and of urging men to accept the mercy and wisdom which it reveals.

What a brilliant luminary in the moral world is the well-equipped and consecrated preacher of the Gospel. What an ineffable lumination the world has received from the ministry of such men as John the Baptis Peter, Paul, Chrysostom, Augustin, Luthe Knox, Whitefield, Wesley, Carey, Judso Spurgeon and Moody. Not only such these but every true minister of Christ a every faithful Sunday School teacher is divinely commissioned torch-bearer, carr ing to human souls shrouded in the dar ness of sin and unbelief the light of life.

Every dollar, too, cast into the Lord treasury for the support of these agencie is a means which God will use to turn t world's darkness into day.

I desire to give special emphasis to t importance of religious books as a means advancing the world in the knowledge God. There are some things that need to written as well as spoken. What God s to the patriarchs, prophets and apostl would not have accomplished his purpos if it had been simply repeated by them public discourses. Hence he chose and spired men to write down what he h spoken to his servants. What Matthe Mark, Luke and John did for the world preaching the Gospel was almost an ins nificant service, in comparison with the fallible and enduring record which th made of the sayings and doings of Jes Paul's grandest contribution to manki was not what his lips uttered, but what hand wrote.

A man can interpret to others only wh he knows and feels. He can reproduce o such pictures as are photographed on soul. He can communicate to his fello only the inspirations which he has ceived by heartfelt communion with gr scenes, great events, and great minds.

I have seen an art critic go into a gr gallery of paintings, and without one th of true emotion, point out to his compani how this painter, and that, had conform to one canon and violated another, and h too much prominence had been given some things and too little to others; a then I have seen a peasant boy, who ne saw a studio, or an artist's brush, st before the same pictures for hours, drink in their beauty as the flower takes moisture from the mist. Blessed is t artist who can paint a picture that will only merit the approval of just critics, delight the eyes and feast the souls of common people. More blessed still is man who can write a book which will offend true literary taste, while it imp life, strength, and joy to the unlette multitude.

The Only Safe Light.

This country is grappling with cert great social and economic problems w almost the energy of desperation. I rei ate no pulpit platitude or pious cant whe say that the only solvent of these proble is the knowledge of God in Jesus Chr To know God is to love him. To l him is to love all humanity, and such l will everywhere dethrone the wrong diadem the right. If the labor questi the suffrage question and the racial qu tion are ever settled upon a wise, just enduring basis, it will be done not by politicians but by the churches of God.

By some method we must reach the pressors and the oppressed, the disturb and the disturbed with truth as it is in Jes In the light of that truth they will see only the causes underlying our unhap social condition, but the remedy as w Under the softening influence of that tr as applied by the power of the Holy Spi there will be relentings, concessions righteous and brotherly readjustments.

The classes of our population which most responsible for our present disastr social strifes are but thinly represented our Sabbath day gatherings for Christ instruction and worship. They do not h the Gospel preached. They have no de to hear it, because they shrink from a public rebuke of sin. How to reach th people is the great problem before us. what means and methods can we penetr their darkness with the light of life?

My own experience has demonstra that a man will read what he will not and hear in a public discourse. It requi but little urging to get men to read a bo that deals directly, intelligently, earnes with their condition, with their proble and with their needs. Let some one wr a book backed with gospel thought t employers of American labor. Let anoth write one and dedicate it to American lab ers. Let another be written for the gr army of the unemployed. I am confident such books would be read and re-read, a that their influence would be useful in pre-eminent degree.

LAPLANDERS AT HOME.

The People who Dwell in "The Land of the Midnight Sun"—Their Rude Habits and Simple Lives.

FEW of the races of Northern Europe have made less progress in the arts of civilization than the Laplanders. Perhaps this is largely due to their Arctic climate, with its unequal distribution of light and darkness, their short summer and the numerous difficulties that afford little scope for husbandry or the following of any but a few industries. Great, lonely, snow-topped mountains, and vast reaches of bog, river, and swamp, drive a very large part of the population to the lakes, and the sea for a subsistence. Thus hunting, hunting and fishing are the three principal industries of the people. There are no towns of consequence, Hammerfest, which enjoys the distinction of being the northernmost town of Europe, having a population of less than 2700. Even the villages are few, for a considerable proportion of the Lapps are nomads, being compelled to migrate at the change of the seasons, to find fodder and fuel. In August, which is with us probably the most tropical month of the year, the Lapplander has his harvest, but the end of the month brings strong frosts and even in the daytime the thermometer rarely goes higher than fifty-six degrees.

Our illustration shows a group of Lapp fishermen of the North Cape district. There are several settlements there that are objects of great curiosity to visitors. Few, however, seem to excite admiration, for the Lapp fishermen and their wives are not always attractive in appearance. They are usually short in stature, the men being about five feet in height and the women four. both have prominent cheekbones, with odd-looking, parchment-like skin, flat noses and small, almond-shaped eyes. The ordinary clothing is made of reindeer skin with the wool turned inside, and it not infrequently happens that a deerskin coat is handed down as an heirloom from father to son and even to grandson. Their lower limbs are swathed in worsted, covered with close-fitting leggings of whale-skin. Their houses—at least those of the poor fisher-folk—are wooden huts or sometimes huts of turf and straw, which, when lined with reindeer hide, are as warm as need be. It frequently happens that several families dwell under the same roof. Almost all the natives are hardy and apparently impervious to weather.

But, despite all drawbacks, these simple people have some excellent traits. They are honest, faithful, and capable of deep religious feeling. They love their native land intensely. The Bible has been translated into their language and Christian missions have done much to enlighten them spiritually. Lapland was nominally Christianized in 1157, but not until the present century has any practical religious work been industriously prosecuted. Every passing year now shows marks of religious progress.

The Swedish Missionary Union, British and Foreign Bible Society and several other European evangelical bodies, are doing active mission work there. Over seventy years ago, the Lapps began a missionary work of their own, with native pastors. The Danish-Finland Missionary Society was the first organization to aid them. One of the leading agencies in spreading the Gospel in Lapland has been a Society founded by the Swedish Missionary Union and known as The Lapps' Mission Friends, which extended its work into Russia. It should be stated that the country in which the Lapps live has no longer any separate geographical existence, being included in the dominions of Norway, Sweden, and Russia,—the Russian part of Lapland being embraced in the Grand Duchy of Finland. As early as 1648 portions of the Bible were published in Lapp. The first portion of the Lapp New Testament were published in 1755, and in 1811 the entire Old Testament—both by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Besides a translation into Lapp proper, versions for the Laplanders of Sweden, Norway, and Russia were prepared and have a wide circulation.

LAPP FISHERMEN OF THE NORTH CAPE DISTRICT.

***

A Mother's Unselfish Love.

We are told, says Dean Farrar, of the Chinese sage, Meng-tsen, that when he was a child, his mother's home was near a slaughter-house, and she instantly left her home when she saw the child watching with indifference the pain inflicted upon animals. Her second home was near a grave-yard, and again she left when she saw the boy imitating, at his play, the rites of superstition. That is what a pagan mother did. Would we do the same? Would we at once give up a freehold in an eligible neighborhood if we saw it was tending to make our daughter worldly? Would we give up the chance of a good living, what the world calls success for our son, if it were in some work that would not make him a better man? How should we think we had done best for our children?

***

Fixing Character in Youth.

Character is often fixed and destiny sealed before the age of twenty-one is reached. But it is not desirable that young people should prematurely develop into sedate men and women without any capacity for the enjoyment of life. There is a time in which it is natural for mortals to grow, run, jump, shout, and indulge in agreeable sports and pastimes. To deprive them of all opportunity for such innocent merriment is neither wise nor kind. The mature man who cannot look back upon the season in which he fairly reveled in the mere joy of existence is to be pitied. But innocent sports are a very different matter from what is called "sowing wild oats." The latter phrase suggests the idea of dedicating one's brightest and holiest days to the service of the devil, a thing which is not to be tolerated for one moment. A strong, healthy, alert boy, running over with life and spirits, may still be a God-fearing Christian, an obedient son, a diligent student, and an honest worker at all his tasks.

***

A Word About Hesitancy.

Hesitancy and indecision, rather than absolute laziness, is an evil that besets many young people. Dickens used to say that one of the secrets of his success, was that he never started anything until he felt sure that it was something into which he could throw his whole energies—and he worked at it persistently till finished. It is a good rule when you have anything to do, to do it at once. Don't sit down in the rocking chair and lose three-quarters of an hour in dreading the job. Be sure that it will seem ten times harder than it did at first. Keep this motto: Be on time, in small things as well as great. Habit is everything. The boy who is behind time at breakfast and school will get "left" in the important things of life. If you have a chronic habit of dreading and putting off things, make a great effort to cure yourself. Depend upon it, that life is very much as you make it. The first thing to decide is, what are you going to make it. The next thing is to take off your coat and go to work. Make yourself necessary somewhere. Be a power in your own little world, and then, the big world will soon hear from you.

***

"Four Feet on the Fender."

Passion, disappointment, crosses and mystery may be more dramatic than quiet love, contentment, and "four feet on the fender," as Oliver Wendell Holmes beautifully expressed the delight of homely coziness, but they do not make half so much of the staple of life. Next to that happiness that comes of living a spiritual life, the only permanent realization of happiness—so far as anything human can be permanent—comes with the love that is also friendship. But in a marriage that is well made, there is for the first time perfect confidence, for you know that you will never lack one to stand by your side to share whatever fortune may bring you. We want and need the amiabilities of life, the welcoming eye, the reassuring hand, the uplifting presence, and nowhere can they be so certainly found as in a true marriage. One of the forms which married blessedness takes is that it provides the most delightful of all companionships; that is a phase of married life that men and women value more the older they grow. The best enjoyments are confirmed and doubled when they are shared, and with whom can they be so fruitfully shared as with a wife or husband? So much is gained by viewing the world side by side with a congenial companion with whom impressions may be compared as they appear, and then stored as in common memory. And who can so faithfully fulfill these conditions of mutual helpfulness as the husband and wife whose natures are complementary to one another? Other companionship can only be occasional, but the true assorted companionship of man and wife has almost as great a continuity as the self-consciousness of each.

***

Two Famous Women.

Two illustrious Christian women, who celebrate this year the seventy-fifth anniversary of their birth, are Florence Nightingale and Jean Ingelow. The heroine of the Crimea is a tall, gray-haired woman, with a fine, open face that has a nun-like serenity. She is inclined to be stout, while Miss Ingelow is smaller and less robust of physique. Both these ladies live in London, where each is the object of much attention, though, from the nature of her career, Miss Nightingale has been the recipient of more public honors. Perhaps the most remarkable event of her life, from a worldly point of view, was her refusal of the testimonial of $25,000 offered her after the Crimean War. To serve Christ and humanity was reward enough.

***

A Child's "Rights."

Your little one has a right to a happy, healthful mother, one not exhausted by overwork, writes a Chicago pastor. He has a right to your first care and thought — baby first, self last. He has a right to be kept sweet and clean, that he may not be repellent to those about him. He has a right to be "mothered" every day of his little life, not turned over to the mercies of the average hired nurse. He has a right to your deepest love and to your keenest sympathies, that you may, during his developing, enter largely into his joys and griefs. He has a right to wise discipline, since, if undisciplined and uncontrolled in his infancy and childhood, his future may be hampered by faults his mother should have corrected. He has a right to a good, general education, that life's best gifts may be fully appreciated.

***

Evils of Home Extravagance.

No other thing in this world so nerves a true man's soul with energy and strengthens his heart for the conflicts of life as the devoted, unselfish love of a true wife. For such a wife he can toil night and day, and never weary. On the other hand, there is nothing that so completely disheartens a man and causes him to despair amid life's toils as the cold, selfish, unsatisfied, perpetual fault-finding of a woman who, although legally a wife, only seeks the gratification of her own selfish whims, regardless of the ease and comfort of her husband. Where fashion must be lived up to regardless of the excess of expenditure over income; where the faithful, hard-working husband has to be overburdened with debt and worry that the wife can make as much display and live in the same pretentious style as her more wealthy neighbors, there is no true love for the husband; and the fact, so often impressed upon his mind, wounds his soul and drives him to the verge of despair.

***

In His Footsteps.

He liveth long who liveth well!
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

Be what thou seemest! live thy creed!
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

...NADJA:...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

"SHE IMPLORED HIM NOT TO FORSAKE HER."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Ferryman's Home.

KUZMA SOZONTIEFF'S cottage was hard by the river on the village side, just below a long rippled sand-dune over which somehow the wind was always sweeping. On the coarse grass that grew all around, his few sheep and cattle gained a scanty subsistence, herded by Grisha, the half-witted servant lad. The outside of the little "izba" bore no marks of taste or even of care. The blowing sand from the dune lay in little wavelets thick on the roof, the door hung badly on its hinges, the walls were not white-washed, there was no railed-in space like that in front of the Stundists' cottages, where flowers might grow. It was a cheerless, forlorn-looking place.

Nor was the interior a bit more homelike. Sozontieff gave no heed to such matters. The floor was of earth beaten hard, and the ceiling formed of thin branches of bushes with the dry leaves still clinging to them. There was a long settle, half bed and half coffer, along one side of the outer room. A heavy table stood in the centre, with a straw bed under it for Grisha, and a high-backed arm-chair, coarsely carved, the work of Sozontieff's youth, was pushed into a corner close to the huge stove. On the walls hung some old clothes, and the window-ledge was occupied with a loaf of rye bread wrapped up in a fringed napkin, a large earthenware jug of water, and a few simple cooking utensils.

A doorway, but without any door, led to the little chamber occupied by Nadyejda. Here everything was scrupulously clean and white. The girl had worked a great white counterpane for her low bed, and had hung on the walls long white strips of linen with ends embroidered in black, red and blue designs of flowers and figures. There was a clean matting of straw on the floor which she and Grisha had made; and scattered about were the inevitable little nick-nacks which every woman, no matter how humble her circumstances, manages to gather into her room. They were mostly her mother's.

But Sozontieff's cottage possessed one treasure that the owner of it would not have exchanged for wealth untold. It hung high in the left hand corner of the room as you entered—a large glittering square frame of burnished silver enclosing a picture of St. Nicholas, The Wonder Worker, painted on wood. Only the face and hands of the saint were visible, and they were brown and discolored with age and the pressure of the lips of four generations of Sozontieffs. The rest of it was covered with a thin plaque of polished silver. This was the ferryman's [illegible] with his whole soul. Before the picture, and suspended by a silver chain from the ceiling, hung a lampada of silver and glass full of sacred oil, in which floated a tiny burning wick that lighted up a thousand glittering reflections on the broad front of wrought silver behind it.

On the ground below the icon was a wooden stand about as high as a man's waist, on the top of which were little receptacles where Sozontieff on great occasions placed lighted candles before the Wonder-Worker.

Sozontieff was not an Orthodox Russian. If the Stundists held the ritual of the Orthodox Church in contempt, if they utterly denied the use and value of its ceremonies, they never lost their feeling of love and veneration for all that is best and noblest in the wonderful church of their land, the church that has been such an anchor of hope and comfort to the Russian people in the most terrible episodes and the most crushing disasters of their history. But Sozontieff hated the church and all her ways with the consuming and unthinking passion of the fanatic. He was a member of the sect of Old Believers, a descendant of the men who held to the ancient ritual and the ancient books and rubrics of the church as they were before the days of the Patriarch Nikon, the great reformer of the Greek Orthodox Church. It was he, he claimed, who was orthodox; it was the so-called orthodox who were dissenters and the slaves of blasphemous innovators.

Sozontieff all his life had brooded over these things. His father had been a priest of the Old Believers somewhere among the Cossacks of the Ural, and he remembered how the old man had been forced one night to fly before the Orthodox Cossacks when they attacked him in his "izba" and set fire to the thatch. His youth had been spent in wandering over the steppe in company with his father. He had come to Kief when the old man was dying to seek some help and a final resting-place for him. Here he fell in love with some members of his own sect; and, taught to read and write by his father, and brought up in the strictest ideas of the Old Believers, he was appointed their priest, and married to a girl selected for him by the little community. But he was unable to settle down. The unrest and desire to wander so characteristic of the Russian in his natural phases took firm possession of the young priest, and with his wife and infant daughter he began to roam, he knew not and cared not whither. They came on to Slavo, and the village elder, treating them as vagrants, hauled them up before the general for punishment. The general, far from punishing Sozontieff, was so struck with the noble exterior of the man and with his independent bearing, that he begged him to remain in Slavo, offering him the cottage down by the river and the position of ferryman. It was a home and an occupation that seemed exactly to suit the Old Believer, and he readily accepted the general's offer.

That was nearly twenty years before our story opens. Ten years of comparative contentment and happiness, and then his wife, whom he dearly loved, died and left Sozontieff alone with little Nadja.

There comes a shock in the lives of all of us, and after it there is always a difference. The loss of his wife was the blow from which the ferryman never recovered. He became a recluse and a misanthrope. The duties of the ferry became irksome and were usually performed by the hired man, Sozontieff himself sitting alone in his room reading prayers before the icon, or everlastingly polishing its silver covering. And as month followed month the lonely man, always brooding and silent, began to see visions and hear voices, and would sit for hours communing with the supernatural beings whom he fancied he had called up around him. In his wilder moments he constituted himself the priest on earth of untold numbers of the souls of departed Old Believers, and poor Nadja, shivering in her cot, would listen terror-stricken to his ravings.

It was before the shining St. Nicholas that most of his conferences with supernatural powers took place. He would address the icon in his natural tones, and after a pause would answer himself in the solemn deep bass that the priest employs when he says the liturgy. For hours at a time he would gravely go through these services with only Nadja listening in her little room, and the half-witted Grisha crouching under the table. These two dreaded the sight of the terrible shining thing that spoke such strange messages from an unseen world, and Grisha, when he was alone in the house, would hang a cloth in front of it to hide it from his eyes until the returning steps of his master warned him to uncover it again. It was a terrible home for young Nadja to grow up in, her only companions the silly shepherd youth and the dark-browed taciturn fanatic with his mysticism, his superstition, his incipient madness.

Her father's occasional absences from home were always a welcome relief to Nadja. At such times she could leave the house for awhile and wander along the river bank to talk to other girls, or watch the village lads at their fishing. Even in those early days of her life every one recognized her beauty, and the tall fair-haired girl—"White Nadja" they called her—occupied much of the thoughts of the village youths. She was most attracted by young Mikhail Kulmenko, and we know already how the Stundist lad tried to guide her and fill her life with interests and thoughts which she must have welcomed

Continued on page 581.

THE SECRET OF A BEAUTIFUL SKIN IS FOUND IN CUTICURA SOAP

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

Heart Disease Kills Suddenly,

but never without fair warning. By an occasional fluttering a perceptible palpitation shortness of breath, etc; in many ways is the victim fully notified. But his friends are ignorant, and the warning is disregarded, until loving associates are shocked and dazed by another sudden death.

"My wife suffered years with heart trouble which the doctors called incurable valvular coagulation of the heart. She took 3 bottles of Dr Miles' Heart Cure six months ago, and has not suffered since. She sleeps well, and is like a new person altogether, and says Dr. Miles' Remedies are gold to her."—F. B. JACKSON, 701 S. 27th St., Omaha, Neb.

For sale by druggists on guarantee that first bottle will benefit, or money refunded.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure Restores Health

Scrofula Bunche

Formed on my neck and humor broke out my face. Sores came on my forehead a caused me much suffering. I took my docto prescriptions for the blood and other troubl without much benefit. The scrofula not i proving I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla u the recommendation of my friends, and it l effected a permanent cure. Hood's Sarsa rilla has also given me strength and renev health. I gladly recommend it as an effect blood medicine." MISS CARRIE M. WEI Sanbornton, N. H. P. O. address, Laconia

Hood's Sarsaparill

Is the Only True Blood Purifier prominentl the public eye. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mild, effec All druggists. 25c.

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

J. J. E., Chicago.—My husband suffers from r cular rheumatism. Is very hoarse whenever he t cold. Please state a remedy.

Give him Febricide Pills, one three ti daily, for a week; then give him Thyroid extract of the thyroid gland, in three- doses, three times daily. Regulate the bo with Nathrolithic Salts.

J. P.—The fingers of my left hand seem to hav strength. I cannot close my hand, and suffer a g deal of pain.

Take Medulline, extract of the spinal c in five-drop doses, three times daily, on tongue.

Buffalo.—My face has a very oily appeara Kindly give me some remedy.

Take two teaspoonfuls of Nathrolithic S in a tumbler of hot water, a half hour be breakfast, once or twice a week. Avoid s when washing the face and take a cold sp bath all over every morning.

M. A. X.—Have been annoyed for over a year large pimples on my back. Can you suggest a c

Take Thyroidine, extract of the thy gland, in three-drop doses, three times d on the tongue. Twice each week take a of Nathrolithic Salts. Report in a month

Laura S., Memphis.—No; Yes; Take trine, a teaspoonful after each meal. You get better at once. Your nervousness co from a disordered stomach.

W. T. PARKER, M. D.
Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACTS.

CEREBRINE. From the Brain. MEDULL From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, From Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE.
Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drachms,

GASTRINE.
A new and valuable remedy for dyspepsia,

FEBRICIDE PILLS
For MALARIAL AFFECTIONS, NEURALGIA and HEADACHE, 50 c.

NATHROLITHIC SALTS
For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of the B and Inaction of the Liver, 50 c.

At all Druggists, or from

COLUMBIA CHEMICAL CO.,
Send for Literature. (179) Washington, D.

CONSTIPATION CURED BY SMITH'S BILE BEANS.

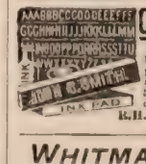
Send 25c. for 1 bottle, o $1 for 5, and if not en tirely satisfactory w will refund the money

They never fail. Read this testimonial
MESSRS. J. F. SMITH & CO.—I transmit herewit postal note for $1. Please send to my address fiv bottles Bile Beans. I have been suffering fro constipation 18 or 19 years, and these are the bes remedy I have found yet. H. CLAY WOOD, Paymaster U. S. Steamer "Yantic," Newport, R. J. F. SMITH & CO., 255 Greenwich St., N. Y.

DEAFNES and Head Noises relieved by Wilson's Common Sense Ear Dr New scientific invention, diffe from all other devices. The only simple, comfortable and invi Ear Drum in the world. Helps medical skill fails. No wire or attachment. Write for pamph

THE DRUM IN POSITION

WILSON EAR DRUM CO
Offices: 1223 Trust Bldg., Louisville 1122 Broadway, New York.



CARD PRINTER FRE

Sets any name in one minute; prints 60 to hour. YOU can make money with it. A pretty type. Also Indelible Ink, Type Holde and Tweezers. Best Linen Marker made. Sample mailed FREE for 2c stamp for post outfit and large catalogue. Over 1000 bargains.

R. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y.

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

Pure, Delicious Fla Mix with boiling mil water, and it is made Stephen F. Whitman & Philadelphia.

s relations of a better world, of a more eaceful and loving world, than any she ad hitherto known. And then came her cquaintance with Vladimir Alekhin. To ee him sit in her father's cottage as the old man poured out his tales of the persecu- ion of the Old Believers and his denunci- tion of innovators was perhaps a pleasure o he but it was a pleasure not unmingled with dread and misgiving, and her wo- man's instinct warned her that Vladimir was not there for any good purpose.

But these feelings soon vanished, and he came under the influence of the young man's bold dark eyes and silver tongue. She took no comparing his fine clothes, his cultured accent, his perfect manners with the coarse homespun and simple language of the Swedish peasant, and although at first his talk, when he met her apart from her father seemed bold and wrong, she got used to it, ending by believing in and stor- ing in her memory every word he spoke. At last Vladimir obtained ascendancy over her, the waning influence of Kulmenko vanished and died. She put faith in Vlad- imir's false promises, and in her girlish heart she built gorgeous castles in which he and Vladimir were the lord and lady of the village and the whole countryside was do- ing them honor.

For the first year or two of Vladimir's absence he sent her an occasional message through the hands of Haim Rosenberg, but as these notes gradually ceased. During his infrequent visits to the village she saw him each time for a few fleeting hours, but soon as he joined his regiment his visits to the village became rarer still and the fleeting hours became fleeting minutes.

How so hard to kill, was at last gradu- ally dying down in her heart, and only the dull spark of it remained when news reach- ed her that Vladimir had arrived in Slavo on his way to the war. She plucked up courage to write him a few simple words, asking him to meet her if only for a mo- ment at the old trysting-place. At the ap- pointed hour she waited for him, and he never came. She implored him not to forsake her, to take her away with him whither—to the ends of the earth if need be. She told him she believed she was dying, and her pale cheeks and sunken eyes added their testimony to her words. Life would be miserable without him. She would follow him in the humblest ser- vice. But Vladimir was not moved—he looked coldly from her upturned, pleading face, and harshly tore her hands from his neck. His cutting tones he told her that she was no longer anything to him, that he had no other interests than to be the husband of a peasant's daughter. He advised her to be- lieve and live there, and forget all about him. Producing his pocket-book, he threw down a few roubles to defray the expenses of her journey home. Natasha, however, had not sunk so low that her eyes blazed, she flung back his money, and the roubles went fluttering about the room. Then in simple and gentle tones, but the stranger was only for a moment, she asked him to leave her.

The cultured and polished officer bent down to gather up his money, and without another word of comfort or farewell, left her. She watched him until he was out of sight, and then threw herself on the grass in an ago- ny of grief and despair, and sobbed with- out ceasing. She knew not how long she remained there, but she was dimly con- scious that the kind voice of the young peasant said something soothing to her, and stroked her hair and tried to raise her; but she would not be comforted.

It was dark, and the air was cold and damp when she returned home. Her fath- er was kneeling in front of the shining icon, and lighted tapers were placed in a row before it. Grisha was lying on his straw bed, his face table with his back to the icon, which was so terrible a thing in his eyes. Natasha slipped into her room, her father never lifting his head; but Grisha noticed her, and brought her a glass of tea and some rye bread, and after mutely look- ing into her troubled eyes for a moment, he touched her fair hair with his stained hands, and went again to lie down on his straw.

For more than an hour after Nadya's re- turn the Old Believer kept up an incessant prayer to the icon. Sometimes his voice rose almost to a scream, sometimes it sank to a whisper.

"Nadya," he called.

"Yes, father."

"Where have you been?"

"Along the river bank."

"Come here, child, and kneel down. Come here, I say."

Nadya rose and knelt beside her father, but he never once looked at her. A long silence followed. Sozontieff at last rose.

"Girl," he said, "I know everything. You know who told me." He pointed to the icon. "Remain on your knees here till midnight. The Wonder-Worker will not speak to-night, but he has something to say to both of us. At midnight you will go to your room, and you will not leave it un- til Panitch Vladimir departs.

(To be continued.)

A LIFE SPENT FOR CHRIST.

The following poetical tribute was addressed to Mr. J. C. Lanphier, founder of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting, on Sept. 3, the 86th anniversary of his birth:

ALL hail to thee! thou vet'ran saint,
Whose years roll on without restraint,
And mind serene and clear,
With heart aglow in Christian love,
And faith long fixed on things above.
Still standing firm, sincere.

Thy visage noble and sublime,
Still beautiful, unmarked by time
God makes it thus endure.
Though snowy locks adorn thy brow,
No care is written on it now;
For all thy life was pure.

Yea! God gives health and years to thee
That sceptic minds may learn and see—
What godlinesss will do:
In filling "ripe old age" with joy,
Nor letting ills of life annoy
Those who to him are true.

Life's path in noble work for God,
Far down a century thou hast trod,
And faithful pilgrim been:
Proclaiming blest Salvation's sound,
Diffusing heavenly light around,
Which thousands glad have seen.

"Old Fulton Street's" dear place of prayer,
Was formed by thee, God led thee there;
And yet that altar stands,
Blessings to thousands it has brought,
And through it, God has wonders wrought
O'er this and other lands.

Though six and eighty years have gone,
God's gracious hand has filled each one
With blessings unto thee.
He cheers thee now, in "Beulah's land,"
With sweet prospective visions, grand
Of faith's eternity.

At last—when mortal life has run
Joyous! thou'lt hear the glad "well done,"
And in blest triumph go.
To dwell with him thou'st served so long,
'Mid heaven's rapturous bliss and song,
Immortal life to know.

N. Y. City, Aug. '95. W. HARRISON HORNER.

Beecham's pills 10r constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

C L S C ✳✳✳✳✳ C L S C

L S C CHAUTAUQUA L S C

(Literary and Scientific) Reading Circle

THE AMERICAN YEAR

✳ C L S C ✳

A systematic course in American politics, industry, and literature illustrating the Development of National Life.

Why not supplement your desultory read- ing by a well defined course for the coming winter? Chautauqua offers a practical, comprehensive plan.

JOHN H. VINCENT, Dept. 25. BUFFALO, N. Y.

C L S C ✳✳✳✳✳ C L S C

The Leading Conservatory of America

CARL FAELTEN, Director.

Founded in 1853 by E. Tourjée.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. BOSTON, MASS.

FRANKLIN Sq. Send for Prospectus giving full information.

FRANK W. HALE, General Manager.

For a Nerve Tonic Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. M. HARLOW, Augusta, Me., says: "I re- gard it as one of the best remedies in all cases where the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

New Discovery for Kidney and Bladder. We give sufferers from kidney and bladder disease pain in back and rheumatism good advice, and offer to send for free treatment of Alkavis to the Buffalo Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is a wonderful remedy, and will be sent to you free and postpaid, if you send your name and address.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Spencerian Steel Pens.

For THIRTY-FIVE YEARS have maintained their superiority for

Quality of Metal, Workmanship, Uniformity, Durability.

Sample card, 12 PENS, different numbers, for all styles of writing, sent on receipt of 4 CENTS in postage stamps.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
450 Broome St., New York.

Golden Sheaves. A Service of Song and Readings for Harvest Festivals and Thanksgiving. Price, 5 cents per copy.

Royal Organ Method. A new and very complete method for the parlor organ, prepared by a thoroughly competent organist. A large variety of the best music carefully arranged for the organ. Price, $2.00.

Branzoli's Mandolin Method. An elegant edition of this celebrated work, printed complete from the original Italian work. Other Amer- ican editions are abridged. Price, $2.00.

Gospel Hymns, Nos. 1 to 6, Complete. Music edition, cloth, $1.18 by mail. Words only, small type, 12 cts by mail. Words only, large type, Boards, 30 cents by mail.

Model Music Course for Public Schools. The following books of the series are now ready: Primer (25 c.), First Reader (30c), Second Reader (30c), Third Reader (30c) Circulars and specimen pages Free.

The Musical Visitor commencing with September num- ber, will contain Songs and Piano Music instead of Anthems and Organ Music. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
CINCINNATI, NEW YORK, CHICAGO.

NEW MUSIC.

COSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN, and STEBBINS. Now being used by MR. MOODY in Northfield Summer Conventions. Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts

HIGHEST PRAISE. For Sabbath Schools. By W. A. OGDEN. $30 per 100; Sample Copy, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Seven Gables FOR GIRLS of all ages. Looks to their physical as well as higher mental culture. Boating, stately trees, handsomely appointed building, Gymnasium. A thoroughly modern school. Native French and Ger- man Teachers: 20th year. Certificate admits to Smith. Direct trains from New York. Address for Catalogue Mrs. Sarah S. Westcott, Principal, Bridgeton, N. J.

Improve your spare time. You can success- fully study at your home, under our direction. Freehand and Mechanical Drawing, Perspective, Lettering and Mathematics. Send for information. FREE. PENNA CORRESPOND- ENCE INSTITUTE, Philadelphia, Pa. Box 1234.

COCO TRADE MARK. BATHSOAP

represents the top notch of soap perfect- ion. Its remark- able purity and wonderful cleaning qualities have raised it to the highest notch in the esteem of dis- criminating people. Soap-wise folks say it's a decade in advance of soap-making pro- gress. Have you tried it? Five cents per cake everywhere.

Made only by
The N. K. Fairbank Company,
Chicago, New York, St. Louis.

ELI BROWN.

FREE.

The following remark- able statement to which we direct special atten- tion, is from a Tenn. farmer.

My age is 63. I suf- fered intensely from ca- tarrh 10 yrs., dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually, dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense head- ache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing, and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and contin- ually grew worse. Every thing I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

Medicine for Three Months' Treatment Free.

To introduce the treatment and prove be- yond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deaf- ness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address,

J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,

F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE DARKIN SOAP MFG CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

TRUSS The BEST is none too good Send for 100-page illustrated book, and learn Which is BEST—and WHY.

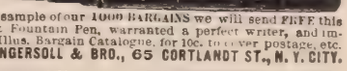
L. B. SEELEY & CO., 258 S. 11th St., Philada., Pa.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free in- information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and re- move scalp diseases. Address,

Altenheim Medical Dispensary,
127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

FREE



As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and im- mense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, etc.

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

WATCHES. Best line, lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., 62 Fulton street, New York.

GUNS. Mention The Christian Herald.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED as by INVISIBLE Tubular Cushions. Have helped more to good HEARing than all other de- vices combined. Whispers heard. Helps even the worst deafness. F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, N.Y. Book of proofs FREE.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

At the Conference Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered, August 25, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends: Mrs. T. D. [illegible] Reader." for her husband and sister. —"Subscriber," for a young man who is dissipated and expresses a desire to know how to get rid of his sin and be saved; also for the restoration of a brother who is a backslider. —"Interested," for her son. —J. A. M., Prospect Ferry, Me., that a man and his wife who feel the need of God's grace may be led into the light. —Reader, Ann Arbor, Mich., that a man who does not care to go to church, may with his wife be converted and enabled to train up their son and daughter in the right way. —An Aunt, Attleboro, Mass., for a young man, the child of many prayers and his wife that they may become Christians. —Wife, Stamford, Vt., that a man, a professing Christian who neglects the means of grace may be quickened and helped in the divine life, and that home life may become more consistent with the Christ life. —"Very Anxious Mother," Allegheny City, Pa., for her youngest son, who has given way to intemperance, that God would save him and give him strength to resist temptation. —"A Mother," Janesville, O., that her son may experience a deeper work of grace in his heart and be better prepared to work for Christ. —Believer in Prayer, Emporium, Pa., that an aged father who is near the end of life may obtain evidence of acceptance before he dies. —Anxious One, Brooklyn, N. Y., on behalf of a beloved one whose reason is now impaired, that she may be restored and find peace and rest in believing. —Subscriber, Littleton, N. H., that a man and his son and daughter and son-in-law may all be born again. —J. S. P., San Diego, Cal., for a young man in Mexico, a stranger in a strange land, that God would be with him and make him his own. —[illegible] Omaha, Neb., That God would save [illegible] relatives now in Texas. —"Anxious Wife," that her husband may be brought to Christ and be enabled to overcome his wrathful and profane [illegible] —Reader," Flemington, N. J., that a physician and his wife who are not in Christ may be saved.

For the Restoration of Health. "Believer," Parkensville, Vt., for recovery and new strength to work for Christ. —"Brother in Christ," Baltimore, Md., for relief from a physical infirmity from which he has suffered for two years—Sister in Christ, Parker's Landing, Pa. That God would raise from beds of sickness a dear friend and mother for whom many prayers have been offered. —K. Seabrook, Md., who has been a lifelong sufferer from disease which has involved the expenditure of large sums of money that were [illegible] their purposes, that God would [illegible] health and strength. —"Afflicted One," Richmond, Va., who has little children needing attention, that the affliction which has continued [illegible] two months may be removed, that duties necessarily neglected may be performed as in days past.

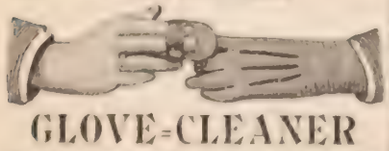
For Special Blessings. Anon. Friends, Colo. That the [illegible] begun in answer to the prayers for which a request was made some weeks ago in this journal may go on until completion. That thanksgiving be rendered for this beginning which is full of hope. —N. E. C., Potoniac, Md. That a physician who has been ruined by a calamity may find a new opening in which he may be able to support himself and his wife. —T. K. S., Orrville, O., that the persecution of enemies may cease and all misunderstanding may be set at rest. —Young Girl, Pleasantville, Pa., for more faith and for confidence that God hears and answers prayer. —A Friend, who is engaged in Home Mission work that wisdom and power be given to develop the work and to overcome the barriers to its progress. —H. O. W., Louisville, Ky., for grace to overcome timidity, bashfulness and nervousness which now hinder his usefulness in Christ's service. —"Believer in Prayer," that calamities apparently impending may be averted and that a [illegible] now rendered necessary may be that would prove spiritually helpful to those concerned. —A. F., Nevada, O., who has recently been bereaved of his wife and in those [illegible] and grow from the light of his [illegible] age. —"Believer," Johnstown, N. Y., for God's help in an effort to make a home for a beloved mother before the cold weather comes. —"Subscriber," Mansfield, Pa. That God would lead one who is now wealthy and prosperous to see the duty of making restitution to some needy people [illegible] and that a [illegible] may [illegible] and [illegible] that a beloved one [illegible] may once more have the light of [illegible] —Reader," Rondout, N. Y., that a wife whose love has been alienated by a wealthy [illegible] may [illegible] recognize the good qualities [illegible] and love [illegible] and be again united when [illegible] —Subscriber," that God would give a young lady the wisdom to decide [illegible] a matter which will affect her future happiness.

A New Cure for Asthma

[illegible] a positive cure for Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever and Consumption. Write [illegible] and I will gladly send you a trial bottle of my new treatment. [illegible] Dr. H. G. Root, 186 Pearl St., New York.

[illegible] offer no food [illegible] disease, possess the power of the great evil [illegible] [illegible] to cure the worst and [illegible]

BAILEY'S RUBBER



GLOVE-CLEANER

[illegible] 10 Cents.

C. J. BAILEY & CO., 23 Boylston St., Boston.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY, New York.
BROOKLYN, New York.
COLLIER, St. Louis.
CORNELL, Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh.
JEWETT, New York.
KENTUCKY, Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, Cleveland.
MISSOURI, St. Louis.
RED SEAL, St. Louis.
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN, Chicago.
SOUTHERN, St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER, New York.
UNION, "

You May

not want to paint your house white, but that is no reason why you should not use Pure White Lead, which makes the best paint, and can be easily tinted to the color desired by using the National Lead Co.'s tinting colors, prepared expressly for this purpose. To be sure that you get Pure White Lead, examine the brands. Those in the margin are genuine.

For color-card and pamphlet—sent free—address

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

MONEY SAVED
—AND—SATISFACTION OBTAINED
—IN—
Buying the Shawknit Half-Hose.

It is conceded that they are the best, and cheapest in the end. Send for a Descriptive Price-List and learn how these half-hose are constructed so as to FIT SO NICELY AND WEAR SO LONG.

Sold by the trade generally and obtainable direct from the makers.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Don't Buy Dry Goods

UNTIL YOU SEE OUR ILLUSTRATED
FASHION CATALOGUE
(For Fall and Winter, '95-'96).

Get all the others you please, but before purchasing get ours; it is yours for the asking,

FREE OF POSTAGE.

WE OFFER:

Only reliable goods at bottom prices. Your money back for any goods not satisfactory. Goods delivered FREE OF CHARGE to all parts of the U. S. when orders amount to stated sums.

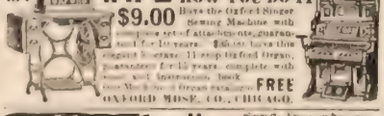
$500 IN PREMIUMS given semi-annually to the purchasers through our catalogue.

Watch for the Bargain Sheet in our catalogue. Goods offered at 25 per cent below regular prices.

Send postal for our Catalogue C, containing over 100 illustrated pages with special bargain offers.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.
West 125th St. bet. Lenox and 7th Avenues New York.

MY WIFE CAN NOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT



$9.00 Buys the Oxford Singer Sewing Machine with complete set of attachments, guaranteed for 10 years. Makes the regular lock stitch; drop head; drawer; guaranteed for 10 years; complete with all attachments; look over the machine at your nearest depot before you buy. FREE OXFORD MDSE. CO., CHICAGO.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this ad. and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one quarter lb. Sample of Best 'T Imported. Any kind you may order. Good Inducements. Etc. PREMIUMS &c.

The Great American Tea Co.
31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.

[illegible] to all [illegible] by Steam to Ports of TEXAS, GEORGIA, FLORIDA, [illegible] Rockport, Corpus Christi, Brownsville, Texas, Brunswick, Ga., Jacksonville, Fla., Charleston, S. C., Savannah, Ga., Fernandina, Fla., Arizona, Mexico and Florida. Write for our 64 page [illegible]

C. H. Mallory & Co. Pier 20, E. R. New York.

To the Young Face

POZZONI'S COMPLEXION POWDER gives fresher charms to the old, renewed youth. Try it.

THE WONDERFUL Coca Leaf of the Incas

[illegible] A rapid cure for [illegible] Exhaustion, Sleeplessness, [illegible] by the Indians of the Andes. [illegible] 25 cts. Postpaid. Sample bottle [illegible] Rockwell Apartado, 481 Bogota, Columbia, South America.

Leaders of Fashion

Endorse Fibre Chamois as the best support for puffed sleeves and flare skirts in the market.

CAUTION—Beware of imitations. The genuine article is plainly stamped .....

Fibre Chamois

All dry goods stores. Three weights.

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use. Preventive and Indispensable; Soft, Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant and sold at less than cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Drug Stores. Send for Circulars, Agents wanted; sample 6 cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO., 56 Broadway, New York.

Ideal Spring Beds Our booklet, "Wide awake facts about sleep," illustrating and describing [illegible] with an up-to-date pocket map of your State sent on receipt of two 2c. stamps. Foster Bros. Mfg. Co., Elm St., Utica, N. Y.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

TRADE MARK. +AMOLIN the only Odorless Antiseptic Dress Shield. PAT. JAN. 15 1895.

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

A new coal tar product.

The Only A New Remedy

odorless, healthful, healing and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.

soothing, healing, antiseptic for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St.

Pins

The pin that won't rust isn't the Puritan Pin—sold by all who sell pins.

If you can't buy them at your store, send five 2 cent stamps to American Pin Co., Waterbury, Conn.

Do You Knit, or do other Fancy Work?

Crochet

If so, ask your dealer for Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread or send ten cents in stamps and receive a sample spool, 500 yards, by mail. You will pronounce it better than thousands of other Linen Threads you have, the best you have ever used. Try it.

Glasgo Lace Thread Co., Glasgo, Conn.

Buy Comfort Powder What for?

For Chafing, Nettle rash, Smarting feet, Itching, Sunburn, Fetid sweating, Eczema, Insect bites and all Inflammation.

Comfort Powder is a quick cure. It is the summer medicine box.

THE COMFORT POWDER CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

Send four cents in stamps for sample.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for illustrated Catalogue of Custom made Oak Leather Harness, direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from headquarters and save the middleman's profit. You can buy as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty. KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., N. Y.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Your Face Free. Send 4c. for Wee Portfolio, Sport Pictures, Tennis Face Free with [illegible] Agents wanted for 10c., for postage. INGERSOLL & CO., 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

"Forbid a fool a thing and that he will do." Don't use SAPOLIO

NAAMAN'S BATHING-PLACE.

Writing from Palestine, Rev. J. F. Floyd thus describes the scene at the traditional bathing-place of Naaman the Syrian, in the Jordan: "Every year thousands of pilgrims bathe in the river at this place, many of them being immersed by the Greek priests. Immediately after the Easter ceremonies at Jerusalem the great caravan starts for this ford, and their encampment on the bank of the river, lighted with pine torches, presents a curious and interesting spectacle. Early in the morning, at a given signal, the pilgrims leave their resting place, and proceed to the river, when old and young, plunge into a promiscuous throng. The scene has been variously described by many travelers, who affirm that the Greeks attach deep religious significance to the ceremony. The Latins have a bathing-place further to the south. The priests wade into the water breast-high and dip into the stream the men, women and children as they approach in their white garments. Some of the pilgrims fill bottles from the river to be used for baptisms at home. Of course we followed the example of the pilgrims, taking a bath. The fat lady pilgrim of our party donned a white dress, waded in and dipped herself seven times, in imitation of Naaman's washing, probably at this place. As the lady was about to enter the water the dragoman, sheikh and the muleteer all joined in persuading him to hold onto a long pole which they had provided. To allay their fears he did so, but soon said: 'We don't need to look after him, he swims.'"

What chimney to use for your burner or lamp?

The "Index to Chimneys" tells.

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa, for it.

No burner or lamp burns well with wrong-shape chimneys.

Pearl glass, pearl top, tough glass.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

WALL PAPER.

Samples free from largest Wall Paper concern in U.S.

KAYSER & ALLMAN 922-924 Market St. 418 Arch St. Philada.

When Your CAKE Is All Dough

When your cake is heavy, soggy, indigestible, it's a pretty sure sign that you didn't shorten it with COTTOLENE. When this great shortening is rightly used, the result will surely satisfy the most fastidious. Always remember that the quality of COTTOLENE makes a little of it go a long way. It's willful waste to use more than two-thirds as much as you would of lard or butter. Always use COTTOLENE this way, and your cake and pastry will always be light, wholesome, delicious.

Genuine COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in tins, with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

YOU WOULD BUY A SET

Of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember we Refund your Money

IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED.

ORDER TO-DAY. SEND IN YOUR ORDER FOR A SET OR MORE AT ONCE AS THOUSANDS WILL AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

'FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED.'

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These Spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD, and were left on their hands. In order to dispose of them Quickly, we make this unheard of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00: we now offer the balance of the stock at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant plush lined case, properly packed, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange. Individual checks not accepted, Postal Note or currency. Money cheerfully refended if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., DEPT. A 5, 152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S.—YOU KNOW THIS ADVERTISEMENT WOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER IF IT WAS NOT GENUINE.

Get Samples!

ALFRED PEATS

PRIZE

WALL PAPERS

If you will send us a description of the different rooms you have to paper, their height, what they are used for and color effect desired, we will send you samples of the newest papers, with borders and ceilings to match within the price you wish to pay, specially selected by our experienced decorators, for each room. Or, if we have an agent near you, we will have him call and show you our full line of samples from large sample books. We will also send you our "Guide How To Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," all free with no obligation or expense on your part.

We sell more paper direct to consumers than any other five dealers in the United States, and it is new styles and low prices that does it.

We have high-priced Leather Papers, Hand Made Papers, Pressed Papers, Varnished Relief Papers, Imported English and French Papers, etc., but it is our $1000 Prize Design Papers that are most often selected. They are Exclusive Patterns and can be obtained only of us or our agents.

In addition to the Prize Designs, we have over one million rolls of other patterns to select from. No one can compete with us in quality and price.

PRICES:

Prize Design Patterns,	-	15 to 30 cts. per roll.
Ingrain Paper,	-	12½ to 14 " "
Beautiful Embossed Gold paper,		10 to 25 " "
Beautiful Color and Gold Paper,		6 to 15 " "
Good Gold Paper,	-	5 " "
Good Kitchen Paper,	-	3 " "

MORE AGENTS WANTED.

We want some one in each town, of taste and ability, to solicit orders for our wall papers on good commission. We charge $1.00 for large sample books. Good references are always required.

Send to nearest address.

433 W. 14TH ST. NEW YORK ALFRED PEATS 143-145 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO

A CATALOGUE

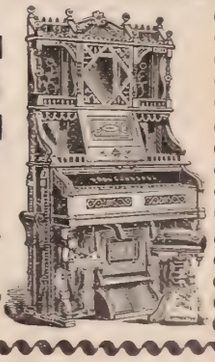
FREE

Pianos or Organs.

$169.00 $25.00

And Upwards. :: Warranted 25 Years.

Shipped on 30 days' trial. Sold on instalments. Easy terms.



Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,

P. O. Box 741, Washington, N. J.

The New York Weekly Recorder, America's best family newspaper, will be sent from now to after election, November, 1896, for only $1 and posted from start to finish. THE WEEKLY RECORDER has all the news and opinions every deserving cause, whether Republicans or Democrats be the gainers. Its Department for Women, edited and illustrated by women, containing latest New York and Paris fashions

ONLY $1 FROM NOW UNTIL AFTER ELECTION, November, 1896.

12 Beautiful Colored Pictures per for repairs of famous oil paintings, size 16 1-2 by 8 3-4 inches, will be presented free to all who accept this offer. FREE is impossible unless your wringer has well made rolls. When you buy a wringer insist on having the WARRANTED ROLLS of the AMERICAN WRINGER CO., the largest manufacturers of Wringers and Rolls in the world. $2,500,000 capital. See our name and warrant stamped on rolls. Books of useful wringer information FREE. Address 99 Chambers Street, New York.

WRINGING DRY

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

Reject any soap or washing compound that will cleanse without an expenditure of time and labor. "What is well done is done soon enough," and Ivory Soap will do the work as quickly as it can be done with safety.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

CATALOGUE FREE FROM ANY AGENT OR BY MAIL FOR TWO 2 CT. STAMPS

YOU SEE THEM EVERYWHERE — $100 WISE ECONOMY IN EVERY DOLLAR — FOREMOST IN BEAUTY, CHOICE SPEED AND DURABILITY

Columbia Bicycles

POPE MFG. CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

HARTFORD BICYCLES $80 $60 $50. BOSTON, NEW YORK, CHICAGO, SAN FRANCISCO, BUFFALO, PROVIDENCE.

"HARTMAN" STEEL PICKET LAWN FENCE

STRONGER THAN IRON CHEAPER THAN WOOD ORNAMENTAL THAN EITHER

PROTECTS lawn without CONCEALING it

Posts driven deep AND ANCHORED

Get Prices for your Garden or Church, or—?

HARTMAN MFG. CO. CHICAGO, ILL. NEW YORK. FACTORIES ALL WOOD CITY, Penna.

For Beautiful Booklet send 4 cts. in stamps

$6 for a Puritan Oil Heater No 44

—freight prepaid—5c. a day to run. You don't believe it? Wait—Don't take our word—but our guarantee to satisfy, or money back if you want it—Fair, isn't it?

A perfect oil heater, no smoke, smell, ashes, dust—Is safe, clean, carried anywhere—starts in a moment—Also sold by the trade—Larger and smaller sizes. Catalogue free.

The Cleveland Foundry Co. 81st St., Cleveland, O.

FENCING DURABLE LIGHT STRONG

Costs LEAST, Lasts LONGEST, Looks BEST.

—FOR THE—

Farm, Garden, Lawn, Cemetery & Railroad.

Catalogue Free. CLEAVELAND FENCE CO., 46 Biddle Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking. NO Cleaning. NO Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 7-9 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power

Power Leverage 64 to 1 STEEL

Send for 64 page illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS

so helpful a friend and unerring pressure that CURES RUPTURE

No other like it. A painless and permanent remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guaranteed. Hundreds of testimonials and physicians endorsements. Used by the government for pensioners.

Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO., 27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

BERKSHIRE, Chester White, Jersey Red & Poland China Pigs. Jersey, Guernsey & Holstein Cattle. Thoroughbred Sheep, Fancy Poultry, Hunting and House Dogs. Catalogue.

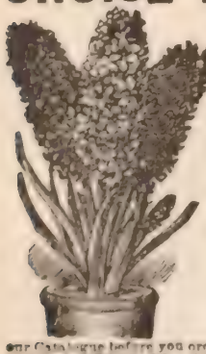
S. W. SMITH, Cochranville, Chester Co., Pa.

CRIPPLES, Ladies and girls, if you want air or exercise, buy a FAIRY hand or foot power. TRICYCLE CHEAP FOR ALL.

FAY MFG. CO., 1 Pine St., Elyria, O.

CHOICE HYACINTHS AT 5 Cts.

OUR CHAMPION COLLECTION OF 20 HYACINTHS FOR $1. PREPAID BY MAIL.



This offer has never been equalled, the varieties are the best, the colors are unsurpassed, embracing all colors of this charming flower. We send instructions with each order how to grow and care for them. WE GUARANTEE THEM TO BE THE BEST DOLLAR'S WORTH OF HYACINTHS YOU EVER PURCHASED. WILL COST $2 FROM OTHER FLORISTS.

THE LIST—Prince of Waterloo, pure white, large compact spike. Rosea Maxima, fine pink, very large. Boquet de Orange, rich deep golden yellow. Princess Royal, deep scarlet, extra large. Jenny Lind, bluish white, with violet eye. La Tour de Auvergne, pure snow white. Blokaberg, finest of all light blue Hyacinths. Sans Souci, the finest pink Hyacinth in cultivation. Monarch, bright crimson, very large spike. Ne Plus Ultra, pure waxy white, very large bells. Lord Wellington, deep porcelain with blue stripe. Grand Monarque de France, beautiful creamy white. Charles Dickens finest bright pink extra large. Czar Peter, finest porcelain blue. Gertrude, large, compact spike, bright red. King of the Blues, dark blue, very large spike. Queen of Holland, pure white, elegant. La Citroneirre, citron yellow, rich and popular. Baron Von Thuyll pure white, none better. Gen'l. Pelissier, deep rich scarlet, none better.

We send 25 Tulips for 50 cts., 50 Crocus for 50 cts., 15 Narcissus for 50 cts. Get our Catalogue before you order, it is sent Free. WE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY on all flowers. Try us.

GOOD & REESE CO., BOX 41 CHAMPION CITY GREENHOUSES, SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

Have You Yet Heard of Cupid?

The Floral Wonder of the Age!

White as snow. It is an improved DWARF SWEET PEA, that grows only five inches high. It carpets the ground with a glorious mass of bloom for months and can now be secured in full flower at Fordhook Farm. It is worth ten times the price of packet to see. BUT your address on a postal card, sent now, will secure you an introductory 10c. packet of BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1896—a handsome book showing 1000 OF THE BEST novelties and specialties from photographs. Next season you can then have this little wonder in your own garden or window box. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philada., Pa.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

Once try it, always buy it.

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S

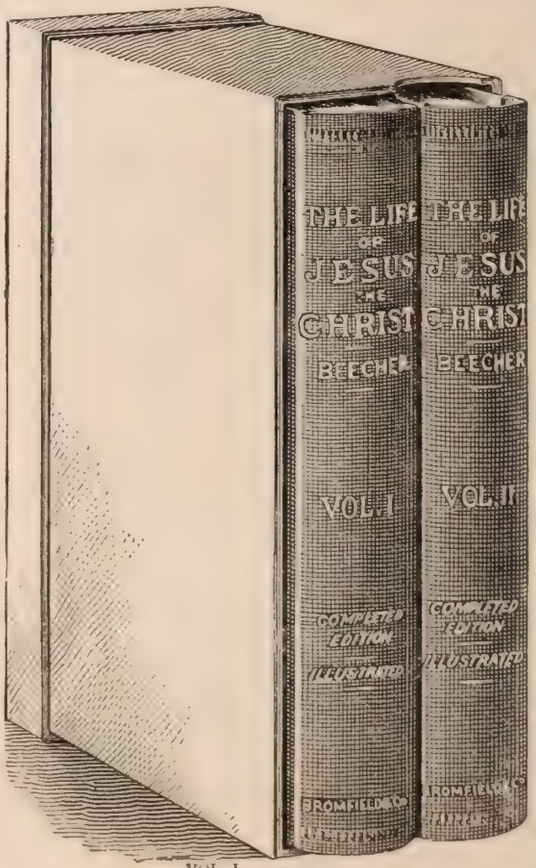
Life of Christ

SHOULD BE IN EVERY

Christian Home.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

"It was while I was engaged in this work that Christ was brought to my soul with a vividness and glory that for a time transformed the heavens and the earth to my eyes."—From Henry Ward Beecher's Diary.



VOL. I.

HEAD OF CHRIST, AFTER LEONARDO DA VINCI.
TEMPLE OF BLOOD, FROM OLIVET
THE OVERTURE OF ANGELS.
BETHLEHEM, NEAR THE CONVENT.
NAZARETH
THE WILDERNESS, EAST OF OLIVET
SWAMP OF PAPYRUS REEDS.
FORD ON THE JORDAN
PORTRAITS OF CHRIST.
SITE OF CAPERNAUM.
CHRIST CLEARING THE TEMPLE.
PLAIN OF THE TEMPLE.
JACOB'S WELL

VOL. II.

CHRIST BEFORE PILATE. . . . Frontis.
VIEW BETWEEN SALEM AND TEL JULIAS.
PILATE'S PALACE TESTED.
THE LADDER OF TYRE.
MT. HERMON FROM THE PLAIN.
COINS MENTIONED IN THE GOSPELS.
THE WOMAN TAKEN IN ADULTERY.
BETHANY FROM THE JERUSALEM ROAD.
SITE OF JERICHO
JERUSALEM FROM THE BETHANY ROAD.
JERUSALEM FROM THE NORTHWEST.
GETHSEMANE.

Published in two Volumes, beautifully bound in cloth and packed in a neat box.

The books are printed in large, clear type, on fine book paper, and contain a beautiful color plate after the famous Munkacsy's painting, "Christ before Pilate," together with the following Illustrations:

The books measure when closed 9 x 6¾ inches. Vol. 1 containing 448 pages, and Vol. 2, 370 pages; these books have sold heretofore at $5.50 Per Set.

In order that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may obtain this standard work, we make the following

Special Offer: Send us One-half of the above price and we will send you the set of books ALL CHARGES PRE-PAID.

This offer will only last for a limited time, as we must withdraw it as soon as the stock in hand is sold, in which case, however, we will return the money at once.

When you order state distinctly your name and nearest express office.

BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH. NUMBER 37.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 11, 1895. PRICE 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

WHERE NAAMAN ONCE DWELT.

The Site of the Great Syrian Commander's Home now Appropriately Occupied by a Lepers' Hospital—Contrasts in the Orient—The Joy over the Kedron's flowing.

If two extremes of scenery were desired by a traveler in the East, he could select no better examples for his purpose than those presented in the illustrations on this page. From the beautiful Kedron Valley on the western slope of Jerusalem, to the bare, bleak aspect in the vicinity of the Lepers' Hospital in Damascus, is a long journey; but the contrast is a remarkably striking one; indeed, quite as striking in its way as would be that between the snowy ridge of Hermon and the flower-studded plains below.

SYRIAN PEASANT-MOTHER AND DAUGHTER.

Kedron, in reality, is a storm-brook or winter torrent, and in the summer season is frequently dry for many months. It flows through a ravine south and west of the Holy City, irrigating part of the suburbs which otherwise would be dreary and sterile. It is frequently mentioned in Scripture history. David crossed its stream, bare-foot and weeping, when fleeing from his rebellious son; Jesus must have often crossed it on his way to the Mount of Olives and Bethany. Its sloping banks were, in olden times, the scene of many executions and of the abomination of idol-worship in the days when Jerusalem forsook the true God. The valley through which it flowed was a burial-place during many generations, and monuments still existing there, long antedate the Christian era. While in some places, the ravine is rocky and mountainous, in others the banks have an open slope, and much of the contiguous land is capable of cultivation. Although the dry season is usually a long one, and the valley looks parched and withered with the killing drought, the heavy rains in the mountains around Jerusalem there does a change which is hailed with genuine delight by the natives. From the mountain ridge of Judea to the northwest where the Kedron rises the stream gradually increases in volume and accelerates in speed as it follows the depression toward the Holy City. It is shallow and broad, in places where it passes through sections dotted with corn-fields and sprinkled with dark olive trees. Through chasms, under bridges, over rocky terraces, it rushes and tumbles, until it reaches its rocky bed with Mount Moriah on the right and Olivet on the left. Lower down it expands, affording a level tract for cultivation, which in the "season of flowing" is covered with beds of cucumbers, melons and other vegetables, and with an infinite variety of beautiful flowers; and so it runs in a winding course, east by west, threading the wilderness of Judea, until it loses itself in the Dead Sea.

REJOICING OVER THE "FLOWING OF THE KEDRON."

Sometimes a whole year passes away without any water appearing in the Kedron, but as soon as the stream begins to flow, the news spreads over the city, and men, women and children flock to see it. It is an occasion of rejoicing, and little groups of Jews gather under the olive trees along the banks and there pass the day with their families, many of them sometimes uniting in a holiday outing to celebrate the event.

The Kedron is no longer known as "the brook that ran through in the midst of the land" (2. Chron. 32:4), for, since the time when its course was diverted by the primitive Jewish engineers, in order to provide for the wants of the city, and cut off the supply of its besiegers, it has never held as large a volume of water or been of as much service as formerly, in irrigating the territory through which it passes. The Valley of Jehoshaphat, through which the Kedron flows, will, according to Jewish, Christian and Moslem belief, be the scene of the final judgment.

THE LEPERS' HOSPITAL, DAMASCUS, ON THE TRADITIONAL SITE OF NAAMAN'S HOUSE.

(From a photograph brought from the East by the Proprietor of The Christian Herald.)

On the traditional site in Damascus of the house of Naaman, the great Syrian captain, whose leprosy was miraculously cured by his seven-fold bath in the Jordan, there stands an old building which for many years has been used as a Leper Hospital. It has fallen into much disrepair, and there seems to

(Continued on page 592.)

OPEN WINDOWS.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Daniel 6: 10, "His windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem."

THE scoundrelly princes of Persia, urged on by political jealousy against Daniel, have succeeded in getting a law passed that whosoever prays to God shall be put under the paws and teeth of the lions, who are lashing themselves in rage and hunger up and down the stone cage, or putting their lower jaws on the ground, bellowing till the earth trembles. But the leonine threat did not hinder the devotions of Daniel, the Cœur-de-Lion of the ages. His enemies might as well have a law that the sun should not draw water, or that the south wind should not sweep across a garden of magnolias or that God should be abolished. They could not scare him with the red-hot furnaces, and they can not now scare him with the lions. As soon as Daniel hears of this enactment he leaves his office of Secretary of State, with its upholstery of crimson and gold, and comes down the white marble steps and goes to his own house. He opens his window and puts the shutters back and pulls the curtain aside so that he can look toward the sacred city of Jerusalem, and then prays.

I suppose the people in the street gathered under and before his window, and said: "Just see that man defying the law: he ought to be arrested." And the constabulary of the city rush to the police headquarters and report that Daniel is on his knees at the wide-open window. "You are my prisoner," says the officer of the law, dropping a heavy hand on the shoulder of the kneeling Daniel. As the constables open the door of the cavern to thrust in their prisoner, they see the glaring eyes of the monsters. But Daniel becomes the first lion-tamer, and they lick his hand and fawn at his feet, and that night he sleeps with the shaggy mane of a wild beast for his pillow, while the king that night, sleepless in the palace, has on him the paw and teeth of a lion he cannot tame—the lion of a remorseful conscience.

What a picture it would be for some artist: Darius, in the early dusk of morning, not waiting for footmen or chariot, hastening to the den, all flushed and nervous and in dishabille, and looking through the crevices of the cage to see what had become of his prime minister! "What, no sound!" he says. "Daniel is surely devoured, and the lions are sleeping after their horrid meal, the bones of the poor man scattered across the floor of the cavern." With trembling voice Darius said out, "Daniel!" No answer, for the prophet is yet in profound slumber. But a lion, more easily awakened, advances, and, with hot breath blown through the crevice, seems angrily to demand the cause of this interruption, and then another wild beast lifts his mane from under Daniel's head, and the prophet waking up, comes forth to report himself all unhurt and well.

But our text stands us at Daniel's window, and toward Jerusalem. Why is that direction open? Jerusalem was his native land, and all the pomp of his Babylonish successes could not make him forget it. He came there from Jerusalem at eighteen years of age, and he never visited it, though he lived to be eighty-five years. Yet, when he wanted to arouse the deepest emotions and grandest aspirations of his heart, he had his window open toward his native Jerusalem. There are many of you to-day who understand that without any exposition. This is getting to be a nation of foreigners. They have come into all occupations and professions. They sit in all churches. It may be twenty years ago since you got your naturalization papers, and you may be thoroughly Americanized, but you can't forget the land of your birth, and your warmest sympathies go out toward it. Your windows are open toward Jerusalem. Your father and mother are buried there. It may have been a very humble home in which you were born, but your memory often plays around it, and you hope some day to go and see it—the hill, the tree, the brook, the house, the place so sacred, the door from which you started off with parental blessing to make your own way in the world; and God only knows how sometimes you have longed to see the familiar places of your childhood, and how in awful crises of life you would like to have caught a glimpse of the old, wrinkled face that bent over you as you lay on the gentle lap twenty or forty or fifty years ago. You may have on this side of the sea risen in fortune, and, like Daniel, have become great, and may have come into prosperities which you never could have reached if you had stayed there, and you may have many windows to your house—bay-windows, and skylight-windows, and windows of conservatory, and windows on all sides—but you have at least one window open toward Jerusalem.

When the foreign steamer comes to the wharf, you see the long line of sailors, with shouldered mail-bags, coming down the planks, carrying as many letters as you might suppose to be enough for a years' correspondence, and this repeated again and again during the week. Multitudes of them are letters from home, and at all the post-offices of the land people will go to the window and anxiously ask for them, hundreds of thousands of persons finding that window of foreign mails the open window toward Jerusalem.

Yes, yes; in all these cities, and amid the flowering western prairies, and on the slopes of the Pacific, and amid the Sierras, and on the banks of the lagoon, and on the ranches of Texas there is an uncounted multitude who, this hour, stand and sit and kneel with their windows open toward Jerusalem. Some of these people played on the heather of the Scottish hills. Some of them were driven out by Irish famine. Some chased the chamois among the Alpine precipices. Some plucked the ripe clusters from Italian vineyard. Some lifted their faces under the midnight sun of Norway. It is no dishonor to our land that they remember the place of their nativity. Miscreants would they be if, while they have some of their windows open to take in the free air of America and the sunlight of an atmosphere which no kingly despot has ever breathed, they forgot sometimes to open the window toward Jerusalem.

No wonder that the son of the Swiss, when far away from home, hearing the national air of his country sung, the malady of homesickness comes on him so powerfully as to cause his death. You have the example of heroic Daniel of my text for keeping early memories fresh. Forget not the old folks at home. Write often; and, if you have surplus of means and they are poor, make practical contribution, and rejoice that America is bound to all the world by ties of sanguinity as in no other nation. Who can doubt but it is appointed for the evangelization of other lands? What a stirring, melting, gospelizing theory that all the doors of other nations are open toward us, while our windows are open toward them!

But Daniel, in the text, kept this porthole of his domestic fortress unclosed because Jerusalem was the capital of sacred influences. There had smoked the sacrifice. There was the Holy of Holies. There was the Ark of the Covenant. There stood the temple. We are all tempted to keep our windows open on the opposite side, toward the world, that we may see and hear and appropriate its advantages. What does the world say? What does the world think? What does the world do? Worshipers of the world instead of worshipers of God. Windows open toward Babylon. Windows open toward Corinth. Windows open toward Athens. Windows open toward Sodom. Windows open toward the flats, instead of windows open toward the hills.

The dominion of this world over multitudes is illustrated by the names of coins of many countries. They have their pieces of money which they call sovereigns and half sovereigns, crowns and half crowns, Napoleons and half Napoleons, Fredericks and double Fredericks, and ducats, and Isabellinos, all of which names mean not so much usefulness as dominion. The most of our windows open toward the exchange, toward the salon of fashion, toward the god of this world. In olden times the length of the English yard was fixed by the length of the arm of King Henry I., and we are apt to measure things by a variable standard and by the human arm that in the great crises of life can give us no help. We need, like Daniel, to open our windows toward God and religion.

But, mark you, that good lion-tamer is not standing at the window, but kneeling, while he looks out. Most photographs are taken of those in standing or sitting posture. I now remember but one picture of a man kneeling, and that was David Livingstone, who in the cause of God and civilization sacrificed himself; and in the heart of Africa his servant, Majwara, found him in the tent by the light of a candle, stuck on the top of a box, his head in his hands upon the pillow, and dead on his knees. But here is a great lion-tamer, living under the dash of the light, and his hair dishevelled of the breeze, praying. The fact is, that a man can see further on his knees than standing on tiptoe. Jerusalem was about five hundred and fifty statute miles from Babylon, and the vast Arabian Desert shifted its sands between them. Yet through that open window Daniel saw Jerusalem, saw all between it, saw beyond, saw time, saw eternity, saw earth, and saw heaven. Would you like to see the way through your sins to pardon, through your troubles to comfort, through temptation to rescue, through dire sickness to immortal health, through night to day, through things terrestrial to things celestial, you will not see them till you take Daniel's posture. No cap of bone to the joints of the fingers, no cap of bone to the joints of the elbow, but cap of bone to the knees, made so because the God of the body was the God of the soul, and especial provision for those who want to pray, and physiological structure joins with spiritual necessity in bidding us pray, and pray, and pray.

In olden time the Earl of Westmoreland said he had no need to pray, because he had enough pious tenants on his estate to pray for him; but all the prayers of the church universal amount to nothing unless, like Daniel, we pray for ourselves. Oh, men and women, bounded on one side by Shadrach's red-hot furnace, and the other side by devouring lions, learn the secret of courage and deliverance by looking at that Babylonish window open toward the southwest! "Oh," you say, "that is the direction of the Arabian Desert!" Yes; but on the other side of the desert is God, is Christ, is Jerusalem, is heaven.

The Brussels lace is superior to all other lace, so beautiful, so multiform, so expensive—four hundred francs a pound. All the world seeks it. Do you know how it is made? The spinning is done in a dark room, the only light admitted through a small aperture, and that light falling directly on the pattern. And the finest specimens of Christian character I have ever seen or ever expect to see are those to be found in lives all of whose windows have been darkened by bereavement and misfortune save one, but under that one window of light over the interlacing of divine workmanship went on until it was fit to deck a throne, a celestial embroidery which angels admire and God approved.

But it is another Jerusalem toward which we now need to open our windows. The exiled evangelist of Ephesus saw one day as the surf of the Icarian sea foamed and splashed over the boulders at his feet, and his vision reminded me of a wedding day when the bride by sister and maid was having garlands twisted for her hair and jewels strung for her neck just before she puts her betrothed hand into the hand of her affianced: "I, John, saw the holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Toward that bridal Jerusalem are our windows opened.

We would do well to think more of heaven. It is not a mere annex of earth. It is not a desolate outpost. As Jerusalem was the capital of Judea, and Babylon the capital of the Babylonian monarch, and London is the capital of Great Britain, and Washington is the capital of our own republic, and the New Jerusalem is the capital of the universe. The King lives there, and the royal family of the redeemed have their palaces there, and there is a congress of many nations and the parliament of the world. Yea, as Daniel had kindred in Jerusalem of whom he often thought, though he left home when a very young man, perhaps father and mother and brothers and sisters still living, and was homesick to see them, and they belonged to the highest circles of royalty, Daniel himself having royal blood in his veins, so we have in the New Jerusalem a great many kindred, and we are sometimes homesick to see them, and they are all princes and princesses, for in them the blood imperial, and we do well to keep our windows open toward the eternal residence.

It is a joy for us to believe that while we are interested in them they are interested in us. Much thought of heaven makes one heavenly. The airs that blow through that open window are charged with life and sweep up to us aromas from gardens that never wither, under skies that never cloud, in a spring-tide that never terminates. Compared with it all other heavens are dead failures.

Homer's heaven was an elysium which he describes as a plain at the end of the earth or beneath, with no snow nor rain-fall, and the sun never goes down, and Rhadamanthus, the justest of men, rules. Hesiod's heaven is what he calls the Islands of the blessed, in the midst of the ocean, three times a year blooming with most exquisite flowers, and the air is tinted with purple, while games and music and horse-races occupy the time. The Scandinavian's heaven was the hall of Walhalla, where the God Odin gave unending wine-suppers to earthly heroes and heroines. The Mohammedan's heaven passes its disciples over the bridge Al-Sirat, which is finer than air and shaper than a sword, and then y are let loose into a riot of everlasting sicality.

The American aborigines look forward a heaven of illimitable hunting-ground, tridge, and deer, and wild duck more n plentiful, and the hounds never off the nt, and the guns never missing fire.
t the geographer has followed the earth ind, and found no Homer's elysium.
oyagers have traversed the deep in all ections, and found no Hesiod's islands the blessed. The Mohammedan's celes-l debauchery and the Indian's eternal nting-ground for vast multitudes have r charm. But here rolls in the Bible aven. No more sea — that is, no wide paration. No more night — that is, no omnia. No more tears — that is, no art-break. No more pain — that is, disssal of lancet and bitter draught and asma, and banishment of neuralgias, d catalepsies, and consumptions. All ors in the wall except gloomy black; all music in the major-key, because celeative and jubilant. River crystalline, te crystalline, and skies crystalline, be-use everything is clear and without doubt.
nite robes, and that means sinlessness.
als full of odors, and that means pure galement of the senses.
inbow, and that means e storm is over. Marge supper, and that ans gladdest festivity.
velve manner of fruits,
d that means luscious
d unending variety.
Day and night keep your ndow open toward that rusalem. Sing about Pray about it. Think out it. Talk about it. ream about it. Do not inconsolable about ur friends who have ne into it. Do not orry if something in ur heart indicates that u are not far off from its stasies. Do not think at when a Christian es he stops, for he goes
. An ingenious man has ken the heavenly furngs as mentioned in Rev-ation, and has calculated at there will be in aven one hundred rooms xteen feet square for ch ascending soul,
ough this world
ould lose a hundred millions yearly. But l the rooms of heaven will be ours, for ey are family rooms; and as no room in ur house is too good for your children, so l the rooms of all the palaces of the heav-nly Jerusalem will be free to God's chilen and even the throne-room will not be nied, and you may run up the steps of e throne, and put your hand on the side the throne, and sit down beside the king cording to the promise: "To him that vercometh will I grant to sit with me in y throne."

But you cannot go in except as conquer-
s. Many years ago the Turks and Chris-ans were in battle, and the Christians ere defeated, and with their commander tephen fled toward a fortress where the other of this commander was staying.
When she saw her son and his army in sgraceful retreat, she had the gates of the rtress rolled shut, and then from the top f the battlement cried out to her son,
You cannot enter here except as conquer-r!" Then Stephen rallied his forces and sumed the battle and gained the day, venty thousand driving back two hundred housand. For those who are defeated in attle with sin and death and hell, nothing ut shame and contempt; but for those who ain the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ the gates of the New Jerusalem will oist, and there shall be an abundant en-rance into the everlasting kingdom of our .ord, toward which you do well to keep our windows open.

LITTLE "MISS TWO THOUSAND."

Six-year-old Freda F—— has a Rousing Welcome From our Guests at Mont-Lawn—Golden September Days at the Children's Home.

WHEN the Hudson River steamer, "Chrystenah," made its trip to New York, one forenoon lately, she brought with her, as she does almost daily, a number of our Fresh-Air children whose ten-day's sojourn at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn had expired. On this particular trip, however, there was one little guest who was the centre of attraction and, as far as the other children were concerned, of admiration also. She was a sweet-faced, wee maiden of six—Freda F—— by name—and she had just concluded an experience that is very likely to linger in her memory long after childhood's days have passed over her sunny head. Freda is an only child and lives with her father on the top floor of a small tenement in East Fourth street in New York. They are very poor, but the father has striven, amid many difficulties, to give his darling the few advantages that lay within his reach, and Freda goes to school week-days and to Sunday School at Hope Chapel Sabbath afternoons. When she was told that she was to be taken to Mont-Lawn her eyes fairly danced with delight.

"Oh, I never was in the country," she exclaimed; "but I know some girls that's been, an' oh! they do say its nice." It was found that she had never been much more than outside of the ward of her birth. Her surprise and pleasure on sailing to the Home in the swift-moving "Chrystenah." were expressed unreservedly, for she had never been on a steamer in her life. On reaching Mont-Lawn, she was greeted by the two hundred or more assembled children, and conducted to the supper table, a big bouquet of golden-rod beside her plate marked her as a guest of consequence. It was only after a dainty and enjoyable meal that she learned that all this special attention and welcome arose from the fact that she was the two thousandth guest at the Home this season. "Little Miss Two Thousand" henceforth she was dubbed by boys and girls alike. So the new name clung to her, and now it was all over and she was going home. Ten happy, glorious, golden days; days such as she not even dreamed could ever come to her lot. And the wee red lips trembled at the thought of returning to the little top-floor room in the hot city, but the smile returned as she remember the pleasant days she had passed and which she longed to tell her father all about. Freda is naturally a good child, amiable in temper and with a gentle, affectionate way about her that is very winning.

Very different are the antecedents of some children who have been guests at Mont-Lawn. One little girl was the daughter of a butcher, the mother doing laundry work to help the general support. This family never went to church and their lives apparently took no account of religion. There was no sign in the house of any knowledge of God whatever. When the little daughter returned from Nyack, at every meal in the house she fervently repeated the simple "grace before meat" which she had learned at Mont-Lawn. "It is the only prayer ever offered in our house," explained the father afterward. Who knows whether, in the near future, that household might not be led to the true Fountain of all blessing by means of a little child? There are many tenement children, who, after returning from Mont-Lawn have a similar experience to that of this daughter of a godless family?

Nearly two hundred children went up to the Home during the past week, a considerable portion of the number being convalescents whose health has already been very greatly benefited by their stay in the salubrious and beautiful highland overlooking the Hudson.

CONVALESCENT TENEMENT CHILDREN PICNICKING IN THE WOODS AT MONT-LAWN.

During the week the following sums have been received in aid of our Children's Home:

Previously Acknowledged	$4,233 36
Mrs T H Somerville	3 00
Thos H Somerville	3 00
A Mother, St Joe	1 00
T J Hathaway	3 00
W W Davis	3 00
Mrs A W C Williams	5 00
M, Conn	1 00
Mother and Son, Bellefonte	6 00
Mrs J H Spicer	3 00
Mrs Geo E Blackman	1 00
J Louis Simpson	3 00
R D Evans Simpson	3 00
Mrs D Oliver	6 00
Mrs Francis I Gay	5 00
Sarah B Williams	3 00
C W Hinman	3 00
A friend of the cause	3 00
——, Tyler, Tex	3 00
A L A, Washington	16 60
J O R, Eureka Mills	3 00
Preceeds of an entertainment given by nine guests, Belmont, N J	7 00
A friend, Newark, N J	7 00
John H Botdorf	6 00
Mr and Mrs T N Boggess	3 00
A Sub'r, Clintondale	3 00
——, Armstrong, Ia	1 00
P S, Napeville	1 00
F T, Greenview	3 00
Mrs G Fox	3 00
A S Pratt	3 00
Mrs Ann Criswell	1 00
M, Curry, N Y	50
Mary Home	1 00
L & M Murmann	3 00
Little Ray & Frank Tomlin	1 00
E J Wickham	1 00
——, Santa Cruz	1 00
Mrs S H Day	3 00
In His Name, Newman Grove	3 00
A Canada Girl	1 00
R W, Kennebunkport	1 00
Martha C Osborne	3 00
In His Name, Seattle	3 00
One who loves children, Fort Wayne	1 00
Reader, Maytown	5 00
"Inasmuch Circle," K D, Newark	3 00
A A Jagnow	1 00
Joel W Skilton	3 00
A D & E G Worthington	6 00
E W Burleigh	1 00
Hattie M Elordorn	1 00
Minnie M	1 00
Mrs U H Walker	1 00
S H B, Camden	3 00
One who loves children, Cosmopolis	3 00
A Subr, New York	1 00
Bowie Sta Sunday School	7 45
Birthday Box of Jr C E of Ref'd Ch, Kinderhook	3 04
Anna H Ruggles	50
N L, New York	3 00
Mrs John Cattin	3 00
S S Class, Mt Pleasant	3 00
D I, Brooklyn	4 00
E A A, Woodbourne	6 00
In His Name, Haverhill	2 00
M E P, Ivy Depot	1 00
L G Blanch	1 50
——, Pompey	1 00
Conant St S S, Danvers	1 00
Whatsoever K D, Canandaigua	3 00
Jr C E S, First Bapt Ch, Batavia	3 00
An Old Subr, Loudonn Co	1 00
C W, Peterboro	2 00
A Subr, Delaware Co	1 00
For Jesus' Sake, Allentown	1 00
Mrs L C James	3 00
Mrs Clarissa Smith	1 00
Mrs C H Zerby	3 00
Mrs Jane Gregory	3 00
M E H McKys	3 00
M C Elliot	1 00
M H Barker	1 00
Sarah L Newcome	3 00
M M M, Eaton	3 00
Mrs A M Phelps	3 00
E St Croix Oliver	3 00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Reader, Balto	3 00
W D Brelsford	3 00
Martha Greaves	10 00
I C, Kingston	50
Margaret, Honeybrook	3 50
D I Wagar	1 00
Proceeds of a fair given by four little cousins	5 00
Fifth Ward Chapel, Sunbury	3 00
Friend of the cause, Los Angeles	1 00
B F Borden	3 00
M E C, Asbury Park	6 00
E W McPherson	25 00
H & W, Tuscarora	6 00
Capt D A Nesbitt	25 00
A Friend, Cedar Rapids	5 00
Chas L C Reeve	3 00
A Subr, Flint	2 00
Proceeds of a fair held by 3 little girls, Keyport	6 00
Edith Fern and Maud Bemis	50
S L K, Kelly	1 00
Ludwig Sylander	1 00
Mrs R J Bradley	1 00
Mrs David Daniels	1 00
Mrs Georgia Daniels	1 00
From a lover of little boys	6 00
Mrs M D Harding	3 00
Boys' S S Class, W Dayton	1 00
Two Subrs, Fall River	3 00
Mrs H A Webster	1 00
A King's D, Lawrence	3 00
F, Newton, N H	1 00
Mrs Timeline B Long	3 00
——, Princeton	50 00
M B, Northfield	1 00
——, Acoaxet	3 00
Miss Georgia Baird	3 00
Mattie Ressler	3 00
——, Anaheim	6 00
Frank B. Hutchinson	1 00
A Friend, No Scituate	1 00
Raised by Florence Cass	3 00
A Subr, Anagua	3 00
Only a little, New York	1 00
A teacher and S S Class of 1st Pres Ch Plainfield	3 00
Two Sisters, Madelia	3 20
Mrs C J Carrick	3 00
——, Chester	3 00
F C, Walnut Hill	2 00
Mrs J E E, Cambridge	1 00
Widow, Lake Side	1 00
John D Stryker	3 00
Master & Miss Williams	6 00
Ada Werry	5 00
Thos Bridgford	5 00
Mrs H M W, Mankato	1 25
Myra & Walter, San Jose	1 25
S L Carter	50
Nellie & John, Wash. Hts	1 30
In His Name, Champoeg	15 00
Charley	10
Elysian Y P S C E	3 28
I E G, Mich	25
——, Clyde	50
Friend, Bridgeport	1 00
M S, Bloomingdale	3 00
An Old Subr, Indianapolis	3 00
Emily J McCool	3 00
In Memoriam, Clyde	6 00
C S Hanna	5 00
B B Lawrence	1 00
F M H, Shelburne Falls	2 00
Annie & Elsie Coe	3 00
Jas Offutt	5 00
Inasmuch, Linglestown	2 00
Mrs A W Joy	3 00
In Jesus' Name Sis-ham	3 00
Mrs T W Gerrard	3 00
Children of Westwood	20 00
P, Newark	8 00
Mr ank Mrs Wm McGill	3 00
Help a little, N Guilford	1 00
Ethe M Bickford	50
Infant Class of Cong Ch, Mass	1 50
F Newton	1 00
——, New York City	1 00
A child's friend, Chesaning	3 00
The Lord's Tenth, San Angelo	3 00
Dorothy, Wash	4 30
L C Crosby	3 00
A friend of the children, Oxford	2 00
Martha Mullica	1 00
Wm C Bradbury	3 00
F P Lefferts	50
A Wehrman	3 00
Mrs L C H, Chateaugay	1 00
Mrs H Welboon	1 00
——, Fonthill	3 00
——, Paterson	3 00
E R N F, ——, Wis	3 00
J S, Brandford	1 00
Edith May, Scranton	2 00
——, Ridgeway	1 00
A friend of the children, La Prairie Centre	1 00
From a friend, Nokesville	1 00
Mrs H Ecroyd	3 00
Mrs Mary M Prentice	1 00
Friends, Hartford	1 00
Lila N Irwin	50
In His Name, Amory	50
T U V, Conn	1 00
In His Name, Elwell	2 00
A Friend, Providence	6 00
A Friend, New Haven	3 00
Mrs L E Wheeler	2 00
A Well Wisher, Ottumwa	3 00
C A Hagaman	3 00
Mr. Percy	1 00
Mrs Milo Cowan	3 00
Total	$4,893 28

RENEWING THE COVENANT.

S.S. Lesson for Sept. 22. Josh. 24: 14-25. Golden Text: Josh. 24: 25. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

FROM his early youth Joshua had served his God and his people. He was a companion of and minister to Moses when God called him with Aaron and his two eldest sons, and seventy of the elders of Israel into the mountain, where Moses abode forty days and forty nights alone with his God (Ex. 24: 18); and when the elders had grown weary of waiting for Moses, Joshua had remained in the mount, and he came down only when Moses did. He had been faithful, and had followed the Lord fully when the ten spies had failed, he had carried out the commands of God as Moses had done before him, and he had, under the guidance of the invisible "Captain of the host of the Lord," led the people from victory to victory over the inhabitants of Canaan whom God had delivered into his hand. Faith and obedience had characterized his service, and he had divided the land among the tribes of Israel.

Now his time of service on earth was

Drawing to a Close and he knew it. What should we expect to be the last days of such a man? It has come to be the practice in our days when death approaches to let every other concern be set aside that every attention may be concentrated on the poor doomed body, to lengthen out by a few days or a few hours an existence which has ceased to be either a profit or a pleasure. There is a holy dignity in the picture of the grey-headed veteran Joshua, when he gathered up his remaining strength in view of his approaching departure from the world, and summoned together the elders and the representatives of the people, that he might give to them his last commands and exhortations, delivering over in the hands of him who had charged him with the leadership of them, the people whom he was about to leave.

"I am old and well stricken in years," he says (Josh. 23: 2), and then immediately leads their thoughts from himself to God.

Just as Moses before him (Deut. 31: 2), just as Peter (II. Pet. 1:14), and Paul (II. Tim. 4: 6-8), he prepared his people for his departure by calling them into a greater nearness to their God. They could well dispense with him if they learned to know God better. Joshua's bodily weakness and failing strength was not that which had occupied him; the burden of his soul was that his people should serve the Lord who had proved himself so holy, so true, so faithful to them. All that he claimed to have done for them was the simple allotment of the nations which remained in Canaan; all else the Lord had done.

Joshua passed on to the people the charge which God had given to him in the beginning of his leadership: "Be ye very cour-

All that is Written

[illegible] or to the left." (Compare chap. 1:6-8; 23:6.) Joshua must have been a Bible student as the Bible was then written, and he knew [illegible] Word of God. He had proved the written word, and gave as his last testimony concerning it: "Behold this day I am going the way of all the earth: and ye know in your hearts and in all your souls that not one hath failed of all the good things which [illegible] hath failed thereof." But he added, and the [illegible] come to pass that as all the good things are come upon you of which the Lord your God spake unto you, so shall the Lord bring upon you all the evil things, until he have destroyed you from off this good land which the Lord your God hath given you." And it has been so; the execution of this judgment upon Israel is known to the whole world!

But are there not many Christians who expect of God that God will faithfully keep to them all his promises of blessing, but who cast on one side all the solemn warnings of the Word of God, as though our God were too weak to keep his word? As surely as he stands to one of his eternal words, so surely will he stand to all else which he has said; he will not alter the word which has gone out of his mouth. The Lord is not only a God of mercy, but also the Lord is a God of judgment: blessed are all they that wait for him. (Isa. 30:18).

Like Moses before him, Joshua summarized the history of his people, and reminded them before his departure of the way by which the Lord had led them and kept them from the call of Abraham their father. But instead of speaking from himself, as did Moses (Deut. 1: 2-3), Joshua spoke only by God's commandment with the preface: "Thus saith the Lord." (Josh. 24: 2-15.) And having reminded the people of his promise fulfilled in having brought them into the land, Joshua sets before them, as Paul afterwards did to the Romans (chapter 13: 1, 2), what was but their "Reasonable Service."

Now therefore, fear the Lord and serve him in sincerity and in truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served beyond the River and in Egypt: and serve ye the Lord. And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose ye this day whom ye will serve, whether the gods which your fathers served beyond the River or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

Serve the Lord! What does this involve? Surely to be at the disposal of the Lord, at his bidding, directed by him; this is service. It is not serving God simply to believe in him so as to be delivered from future punishment and present unhappiness, and then to pray to him in times of sorrow or need, with some little daily acknowledgment of him in family and in private prayers! This is only to make God serve us. Alas, the majority of such as reckon themselves to be children of God,

Serve Themselves

in their religion as in their daily life. They do not set God always before them (Ps. 16: 8); they do not do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God and the Father through him. (Col. 3: 17.) Much of what they do is done in their own name, by their own efforts, giving thanks to their own zeal, their own talent, their own forethought, etc., etc.

Joshua knew what hindered the people from the true service of God. There were to be found among them other gods: the gods of their fathers, and the gods of the pagan people among whom they dwelt. The vain conversation received by tradition [illegible] and old habits, and the influence of our surroundings—what others say and do—[illegible] precedence of the service of our true and only [illegible] Christians. But Joshua's house was a cleansed house, no other Gods were to be found there. God was first with him, and he could say, "As [illegible] and my house, we will serve the Lord." He was the head of his own house, and its master. Joshua, like Abraham, [illegible] and his command after him" (Gen. 18: 19), and in any case his house should be a witness for God. If his children ever should go astray, they should have the remembrance of God in their homes to look back to. God wants such homes, where his children have courage to bear witness for him: where it does not make people nervous when prayer is proposed, because it is a house of prayer; where people do not look at one another, and blush and simper, if the Word of God is spoken of; because it is the most welcome theme of conversa- this is a house which serves the Lord. In the present day it is often the case that the children rule the house. Impatience of authority, and the prevalent idea that parents are behind the times, prevails often even in the houses of God's children.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

A MEMORIAL STONE.

ABOUT eighteen years appear to be covered by the phrase "a long time after" in the first verse of Joshua 23. In the interval only one event of national importance had occurred. This was the horror and general consternation which passed through the land west of the Jordan when some traveler brought word that he had seen an altar on the east of the river. The people were amazed and in their dread, lest God should be offended and take vengeance on the whole nation for the affront, sent a deputation to the two and a half tribes on the east of Jordan to remonstrate with them. But it proved to be a false alarm. The structure was not an altar, but a memorial. Realizing that the Jordan valley was so clear and conspicuous a line of physical demarkation, the eastern tribes were afraid that at some future time their brethren on the other side might come to regard it as a frontier, and treat them as a foreign people and not as an integral part of the nation. So they followed the custom of the times and set up a pillar, or mound, as a visible evidence and reminder of their brotherhood. Good feeling was re-established by the explanation, and the people settled down in peace to an orderly agricultural life. The next event of importance was a summons to all the tribes to send representative men to Shechem for a national council. It came from Joshua, who was then spending a serene old age at the ancient town. He had attained the patriarchal age of one hundred and ten years, and in the natural course of things could not expect to live much longer. He knew the people well, their weaknesses and their propensities. He knew their dangers, too, and was aware how liable they were to be led away from their God, to worship the gods of the Canaanites who still held strong positions in the land. He wanted to get from them, before he died, a public solemn promise and pledge that they would be faithful to Jehovah. The council was to be a personal farewell, but it was to be more than that. It was to be a renewal of the Covenant. The place was well chosen. Its physical features have not changed and the traveler sees at this day what a magnificent natural amphitheatre there is there. The sides of Ebal and Gerizim gently sloping away from the plain, afford a vantage ground from which all could hear and see. The venerable leader, standing there, with the representatives of the nation around him, uttered his solemn and dignified farewell. The preceding chapter contains a similar address which may have been delivered at another time, but is more likely to have been another report of the same address. Recalling to the memory of the people God's dealings with them from the days of their fathers, reminding them that his promises had been faithfully kept, he asks them what th propose to do. There are three courses fore them: They could revert to the worship of the Chaldæans from whi Abraham had been called; they could ser the gods of Palestine; or they might se Jehovah. If he had lived in our day Jos ua would have had to mention another ternative—that of serving no God at a but that was a course that in that age a to a Hebrew, would have been inconceiv ble and it was not even mentioned. T people naturally declared their purpose serve Jehovah and then Joshua tells th what their decision involves. God will be satisfied with divided allegiance, nor w mere formal outward worship. He wo require purity of character and would prompt to punish wrongdoing. The peo gave the pledge Joshua required, and a n memorial stone was set up as a witn and reminder of the solemn pledge.

Choose you this day whom ye will ser Joshua was anxious that there should no half-hearted men among the lead after his death. He wanted them to ma a deliberate choice as rational men and up to it. Prescott describes a crisis o like kind in his story of Pizarro's conqu of Peru. The men were disposed to ab don the enterprise and were contemplati embarking on their return, when Piz harangued them. He drew a line with point of his sword on the sand. "Frie and comrades," he said, "on that side toil, hunger, nakedness, the drenchi storm, desertion and death; on this s ease and pleasure. There lies Peru w all its riches; here Panama and its pover Choose each man as becomes a brave C tilian. For my part I go to the south." saying he stepped across the line in sand and one by one his men follow him. That was the crisis of Pizarro's l

Now therefore fear the Lord. That is slavish dread, but give him the revere that is due and be careful to do nothing t would offend him. In Washington's fa well address, he laid stress on the fact t Religion and Morality are indispensa supports of the habits which lead to pol cal prosperity. "Let us," he said, "w caution indulge the supposition that mor ty can be maintained without religi Whatever may be conceded to the influe of refined education on minds of pecul structure, reason and experience both for us to expect that national morality can p vail in exclusion of religious principle."

We will serve the Lord. A decision that involves momentous consequences. is the parting of ways that reach far out to eternity beyond our ken. There is m experience and knowledge to be gained when the man's face is steadily set in direction the current of his life goes t way. We cannot doubt that if death con soon after the decision the education is c tinued in the next world and if it comes er many years it is continued in this wo The decision determines the trend and destination. A popular preacher says t in the State of Ohio, there is a court ho which is such a turning-point as to dr of rain. The rain that falls on the no side goes into Lake Ontario and the G of St. Lawrence, while that which fails the south side goes into the Mississippi a the Gulf of St. Lawrence. A puff of wi may make a wide change in the destinat of the drops of rain and a very slight ca may change the destiny of a soul.

He will not forgive your transgressi Joshua did not mean that God was placable, but that he would not toler wrongdoing or pass it by as if it was venial thing. "He is such a severe ma said a mother who was very fond of boy, when the husband proposed p the lad into a certain man's employ to lea his trade. "I am afraid John would not happy." The husband said: "That is right. There is no place where the b would get such good training. He wo be allowed to loaf or get into bad Nothing like a strict master for boys. John does his duty, as I believe he w there'll be no trouble and he will learn."

He will turn upon you and rend Arguing with an infidel who [illegible] that the Christian doctrine of the love God was inconsistent with his wrath, clergyman said: Nature and experience both against you. The combination beneficence and destructiveness is eve where. The fire that warms you will b you; the electricity that carries your m sage will kill you; and it is proverbial th there is no wrath so fierce as that of a mot er in defence of her young.

ALL CHRISTENDOM STIRRED.

The Sufferings of the Christian Natives of Armenia Appall the Civilized World—Mr. Gladstone's Appeal for Redress—A Letter which Presents a Frightful Picture of Kurdish Savagery—Fugitives from Sassoun Tell a Tale of Unheard-of Cruelty.

ALTHOUGH nearly a year has elapsed since the civilized world was thrilled with horror over the intelligence that several thousand Christians in Armenia had been butchered by savage and bloodthirsty Kurds, the real story of that awful occurrence is only coming to light. Russia England and France have each at different times within a year endeavored to penetrate the mystery that enveloped the dark tragedy of Sassoun. Organized governments, statesmen, and even the leading press of Europe and America were slow to believe in the terrible charges against the Mohammedan power, and in the possibility of such a hideous event as that at Sassoun having actually occurred to mar the record of a century's progress in religious freedom. But, by the report of the Special Committee of inquiry, no less than from the numerous reports of individual investigators, and the stories of victims and others, it would seem that the original statements of the Kurdish atrocities were not overdrawn. In England, Mr. Gladstone has made an appeal for redress which has stirred up the whole of Europe.

ARMENIAN CHILDREN BEGGING.

As a result of the long-continued sufferings the condition of the people of Sassoun and Dalvorig, two districts in Armenia, is indeed a pitiful one. Thousands are in want and many are almost naked. Missionaries writing from Van and Erzeroom, declare that the coming winter will be one of the severest ever known in Armenia, unless homes and the people get employment and shelter.

A letter from a resident of the Sassoun district, received by friends in this country, has been sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It recounts in realistic language some of the sufferings of the native Christians, who met death bravely rather than purchase life by denying their Saviour. The following extracts are given:

"One cold, rainy day in April, 1895, two poorly dressed men came to our door begging an opportunity to get warm. On talking with them I found that they were both from the Province of Sassoun. One of them stated that he came from Central Dalvorig itself, and named twenty-five near villages which were situated at distances varying from half an hour to three hours from Central Dalvorig. I say were, for he affirmed that tract of country fully twenty hours in length is now in utter ruin. Gave the following account: His family numbered seven; of these six had been killed. His wife, a son six years of age, and a little girl brother, a daughter five years old, and a son aged ten. These children tried to sleep out being greatly reduced by hunger, were unable to escape from the soldiers pursuing them. A brother, Shemo, still survives, and with his wife and children found refuge in a monastery. He saw a group of three brothers, while hidden behind some trees, surprised by soldiers and cruelly murdered. They were boys about three seven, and ten years of age. Their anguished mother, from Hodwink, utterly powerless to rescue her children, witnessed the awful deed from her place of concealment and after the soldiers had gone, went and buried them. The same writer repeatedly heard women say, "We will be a sacrifice for our nation, but we cannot deny our faith."

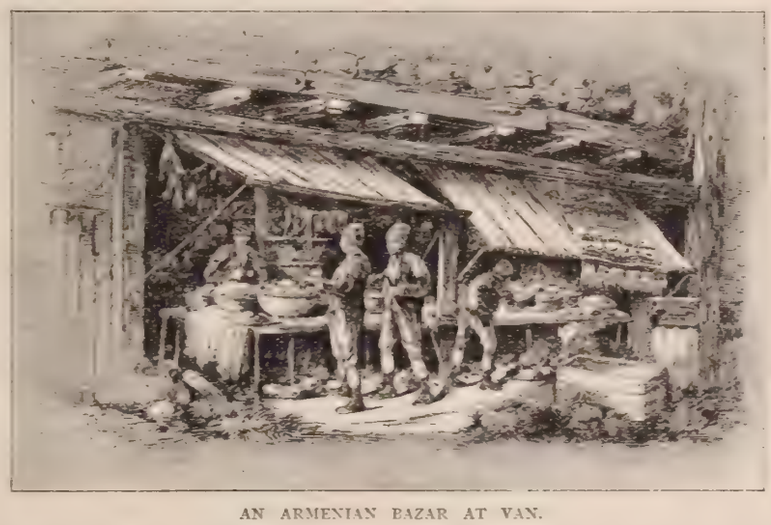
A man from Galigozan said that he had an uncle and three cousins killed in the massacre—all were shot and one was mutilated with the sword. Another nephew, thirty-five years of age, was burned in a house from which he could not escape. His wife and two children remained for five weeks in the covert afforded by the rocks and holes of a mountain side. On seeing soldiers approach one day, Azone nearly strangled his little daughter, four years of age, to suppress her cries for food. She died a few days afterward from the effects of his treatment. The niece was betrothed to a young man from Semel who, with three others from the same house, came to Galigozan when the soldier called to them to surrender, promising safety. But on appearing there the whole company were told that they must either embrace Islam or meet instant death. The four men above referred to with forty others, were there pitilessly slaughtered, and thrown into the pit which had been dug.

From Spughawk, a village near Dalvorig, a man gave account of the fate of his family. A Kurdish Sheik with fifteen hundred followers came and the terrified people fled to the mountain. In the attempt to escape many were killed. Afterwards soldiers came and with the Kurds surrounded the village, plundered and burned it. Its fine church built of hewn stone laid in lime and having an arched roof, was razed to the ground. This man's brother Arakil was shot and then pierced with twelve bayonet wounds. His nephew was killed with the bayonet and a niece who was about to be married was decapitated.

A woman and her two sons (thirty and seven years of age), were discovered by soldiers. They first attacked the woman, inflicting dangerous, though as it proved, not fatal wounds, and then killed her two sons. After the departure of the soldiers the mother with one hand, (the fingers of the other had been mangled), scraped shallow holes in the ground using sharp stones and then dragging the bodies of her sons thither covered them with earth and stones. One man said that his family consisted of twelve persons. His brother was one of the chief men of the place, conspicuous at all times for his ability and courage. The soldiers had heard of this man and were anxious to find him. Finally they discovered his hiding-place and attacked him fiercely saying: "At last we have found you, infidel!" With cursing and dreadful language they literally hacked him to pieces, his son and his brother's wife hidden among rocks near by, paralyzed with terror, saw the awful deed. His son Sarkis was afterward slain, as also his nephews.

A woman from Dalvorig said: Of the twelve in my family, three were killed in the massacre, my husband (forty years), daughter (ten years), and Hukhit, my infant son. A brother-in-law was taken captive, and after suffering much from cruel treatment, died in Moosh Prison. When we saw the smoke of the burning villages we hastily fled. We had buried our most valuable household goods some days previous, but the Kurds found and carried off everything. While concealed among the rocks and thickets we heard the sound of trumpets, and fearing lest we should be hunted down by the soldiery, about one hundred refugees got together and we then decided to go to the Hinatsee tribe of Kurds; (they were the aghas of our province), and implore their protection. We set out early in the morning and soon met five Kurds who said to us: "Come to the camp, to the surrender; there is peace." Thus saying, one of them seized a mule, the only animal we had with us, and rode away to betray us as it afterward proved. We followed the four Kurds till we came near a river. Then we saw two large companies of Kurds approaching us, one some distance below us, the other on the opposite side of the river. These soon surrounded us. They were led by a mollah, one of the followers of the noted Sheikh of Zeelon. They drove us into a ravine. One of our company attempted to escape, but was instantly cut down with the sword. The Kurds gave us the alternative of accepting the Moslem faith or death. With one accord we all said, "We cannot deny our Christ." Immediately they seized the men, there were only eleven in our company, bound their arms with cords, and then took from us women and children all clothing worth removing. Many were left with a single garment. One aged woman near us was left stark naked. After this the mollah sent a letter to the Turkish camp, which was about half an hour distant from Dalvorig village, inquiring as to what should be done with us. I heard them talk about the letter. Soon after this I heard the Kurds plotting to take the young women and send the others away to the mountains.

They did not unite in this plan, and as the darkness came on they counted us and set a watch and lay down to rest on the ground about the ravine. The next day toward noon they decided to take us to the Turkish camp and ordered us to set out. Our husbands and brothers who had been bound the night before were in a pitiable condition,—their arms and hands badly swollen. Shortly after this the Kurds dispersed and we made our escape to the mountains. One day while hiding among the rocks I saw my husband, and son-in-law, Kevork, bound by cords and cruelly murdered. My husband was cut limb from limb—literally hacked to pieces. Too terrified to move I stood gazing at the awful sight, when suddenly five Kurds sprung upon me. They did not harm me but wanted my child. I threw myself upon the ground to shield him, but they dragged me to one side and stabbed him with a dagger. (Her twelve-year old daughter was not far away. She was greatly terrified, having witnessed the murder of her father and brother.) I ran to her and tried to pull her along as we fled, but she soon stopped and exclaiming, "mother, I am dying," fell dead at my feet. I did not dare to linger and fled over the rocks until I found my other children, one of whom was the wife of Kevork, my son-in-law, who had just been murdered. The next day we turned back to bury the body of my daughter. We did not dare to go further then, as there were many soldiers and Kurds around. Twenty days later I returned and buried the remains of my husband and son-in-law. While I was hiding among the rocks I saw soldiers barbarously kill a woman, removing the yet unborn child and thrusting it through with a bayonet."



AN ARMENIAN BAZAR AT VAN.

What she saw and endured during those weary days of wandering would fill many pages. At length all the surviving members of the family reached Shadald, a district near Moosh.

A KURDISH SOLDIER.

One woman's husband disappeared at the time of the massacre. She, with her husband, brother, and his son, were hiding in the mountains when soldiers murdered her brother-in-law, and his son-in-law, and his son in a most brutal manner. She was very near them, hidden behind some rocks, but they did not discover her, and the next day she joined a company of seven villagers, two women, three girls, and two boys, with whom she remained hiding among rocks and thickets. They were soon discovered by Kurds. Two soldiers took her away from her companions and told her she must adopt the Mohammedan faith, and that if she refused they would take her life then and there. She finally replied, "If you wish to kill me I am helpless, but I cannot commit the awful sin of denying Christ." They took her with them for several miles, sometimes persuading, sometimes threatening her, till they were met by a company of Kurds, among whom was a woman who begged the soldiers to let the young woman go. This they did.

A woman from Somal said: "I am a member of a priest's family; my husband was his brother's son; I went with the family to surrender at Galigozan; the priest, my husband, and his two brothers were all cruelly murdered and thrown into the death-pit at Galigozan which the soldiers had dug. We were separated from our husbands and brothers, and soldiers took us to a church about half an hour away from the camp. There we were kept all night. In the morning soldiers came to us and said: 'Come to camp and give your word that you will accept Islam.' We cried out, 'Never! We cannot do that great sin.' They replied, 'If you do not, we will do to you as we did to your husbands and sons last night.' This was the first intimation we had of the awful massacre that had taken place the night before.

Such are some of the causes that have impelled these people to appeal to the Christian world for protection and redress. The incidents mentioned in the letter quoted are only a few among thousands of similar experiences, which show how loyally the Christian peasants of Armenia have laid down their lives rather than betray their Master by accepting the faith of Islam. It is surely a melancholy picture to contemplate at the close of the nineteenth century.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. Its subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals.—It is always best to remit two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

SAVE THE BOYS.

HERE come 20,000 shoeless, hatless, homeless children of the street, in this cluster of cities. They are the reserve corps of this great army of wretchedness and crime that are dropping down into the Morgue, the East River, the Potter's Field, the prison. A philanthropist has estimated that if these children were placed in a great procession, double-file, three feet apart, they would make a procession eleven miles long. Oh! what a pale, coughing, hunger-bitten, sin-cursed, opthalmic throng—the tigers, the adders, the scorpions ready to bite and sting society, which they take to be their natural enemy. Bowery Mission has saved many. Children's Aid Society has saved many. Industrial Schools have saved many. One of these societies transported 30,000 children from the streets of our cities, to farms at the West, by a stratagem of charity, turning them from vagrancy into useful citizenship, and out of 21,000 children thus transported from the cities to farms, only twelve children turned out badly. But still the reserve corps of sin and wretchedness marches on. There is the regiment of bootblacks. They seem jolly, but they have more sorrow than many an old man has had. All kinds of temptation. Working on, making two or three dollars a week. At fifteen years of age sixty years old in sin. Pitching pennies at the street corners. Smoking fragments of castaway cigars. Tempted by the gamblers. Destroyed by the top gallery in the low play-house. Blacking shoes their regular business. Between times blackening the morals. "Shine your boots, sir!" they call out with merry voices, but there is a tremor in their accentuation. Who cares for them? You put your foot thoughtlessly on their stand, and you whistled or smoked, when God knows you might have given them one kind word. They never had one. Whoever prayed for a bootblack? Who, finding the wind blowing under the short jacket, or reddening his bare neck, ever asked him to come in and get warm? Who, when he is wronged out of his five cents, demands justice for him? God loves [illegible] the bootblacks. The [illegible] the smartest boys in all the city. At work at four o'clock in the morning. At half-past three, by unnatural vigilance, awake themselves, or [illegible] the day standing before the folding-rooms of the great newspapers, taking the wet, damp sheets over their arms, and against their chests already shivering with the cold. Around the bleak ferries, and up and down the streets on cold days, singing as merrily as though it were a Christmas carol: making half a cent on each paper, some of them working fourteen hours for fifty cents!

We turned down the street until we came to the sign, "Newsboys' Lodging-house," and we went in. Now, if there is anything I like it is boys. Not those brought up by registers, with the house heated by furnaces, and lads manipulated by some over-indulgent aunt, until their hair has been curled and they have got to be girls; but I mean genuine boys, such as God makes, with extra romp and hilarity, so that after they have been pounded by the world they shall have some exuberance left. Boys, genuine boys, who cannot keep quiet five minutes. Boys who can skate, and swim, and row, and fly kites, and strike balls, and defend sickly playmates when they are imposed on, and get hungry in half an hour after they have dined, and who keep things stirred up and lively. Matthew Arnold's boys.

We entered the Newsboys' Lodging-house and there we found them. I knew them right away, and they knew me, by a sort of instinct of friendliness. Their coats off; for, although outside it was biting cold, inside the room Christian charity had flooded everything with glorious summer. Over the doorway were written the words: "No boys that have homes can stop here." "What," I said, "can it be possible that all these bright and happy lads have been swept up from the street?" First, they are plunged into the bath, and then they pass under the manipulations of the barber, and then they are taken to the wardrobe, and in the name of him who said, "I was naked and ye clothed me," they are arrayed in appropriate attire, each one paying, if he can, so there shall be no sense of pauperism; some of them paying one penny for all the privileges of a bountiful table, and the most extravagant paying only six cents. Gymnasium to straighten and invigorate the pinched bodies. Books for the mind. Religion for the soul. I said "Can these boys sing?" and the answer came back in an anthem that shook the room:

Ring the bells of Heaven,
For there's joy to-day.

I said, "What is this long, broad box with so many numbers nailed by a great many openings?" "Oh," they said, "this is the savings bank; the boys put their money here, and each one has a bank-book, and he gets his money at the beginning of the month."

VICTORY AHEAD.

I SING a world redeemed. In the rush of the winds that set the forest in motion, like giants wrestling on the hills, I see the tossing up of the triumphal branches that shall wave all along the line of our King as he comes to take empire. In the stormy diapason of the ocean's organ, and the more gentle strains that in the calm come sounding up from the crystal and jasper keys at the beach, I hear the prophecy: "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea." The Gospel morning will come like the natural morning. At first it seems only like another hue of the night. Then a pallor strikes through the sky, as though a company of ministering spirits, pale with tedious watching through the night, had turned in their flight upward to look back upon the earth. Then a faint glow of fire, as though on a barren beach a wrecked mariner was kindling a flickering flame. Then chariots and horses of fire racing up and down the heavens; then perfect day: "Who is she that cometh forth in the morning?" Come in, black Hottentot and snow-white Caucasian, come in mitered official and diseased beggar; let all the world come in.

COUNTERFEIT PROFESSORS.

WE admit some of the charges against those who profess religion. Some of the most gigantic swindles of the present day have been carried on by members of the Church. There are men standing in the front rank in the Churches who would not be trusted for five dollars without good collateral security. They leave their business dishonesties in the vestibule of the church as they go in and sit at the communion. Having concluded the sacrament, they get up, wipe the wine from their lips, go out, and take up their sins where they left off. To serve the devil is their regular work; to serve God a sort of play-spell. With a Sunday sponge they expect to wipe off from their business slate all the past week's inconsistencies. You have no more right to take such a man's life as a specimen of religion, than you have to take the twisted irons and split timbers that lie on the beach as a specimen of an American ship. It is time that we drew a line between religion and the frailties of those who profess it.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

W. G. McC., Buchanan, Mich., writes:

In THE MAIL-BAG of Aug. 21st you answer a question concerning the Christadelphians. We revere A. Campbell, but we are simply Christians and disciples of Christ. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ."

H. B. F., Sioux City, Ia. Do you consider the prophecy of Jer. 31: 22, as fulfilled by the present movement of women toward masculine attire and pursuits?

The prophecy is usually regarded as having been fulfilled in Christ being born of a virgin. Maurer, however, held that it referred to a time when the world would be so peaceful that a woman might be the protector of a man, such dangers as there would be, would be so slight and shadowy.

Mrs. L. A. McBride, Trenton, N. J. Who made the first American flag?

Mrs. Betsey Ross, a widow, of Philadelphia. Her husband was killed during the Colonial wars while guarding some military stores. In May, 1776, Gen. Washington met a committee of Congress in Philadelphia and immediately afterward gave Mrs. Ross an order to make a simple flag with fifteen stars upon it. She did so and it was adopted as the national flag, displacing the "Grand Union" flag, which was of British origin.

Regular Reader, Pana, Ill. The rainbow being the effect of the sun shining through water, would there not have been a rainbow before the covenant with Noah?

Possibly, but that would not affect the fact that the Almighty designated it as his sign in the heavens that there would be no more flood, just as he might have designated any other object in nature as a sign for the same purpose—a perpetual reminder of a covenant. Some eminent scientists, however, hold that there was no rainbow visible before the flood; that the whole earth was veiled in a mist through which, indeed, the sun's light might dimly penetrate, but which practically obscured the heavens. At the flood, by the fiat of Omnipotence, this vast volume of moisture in suspense was precipitated upon the earth and thereafter the blue skies became visible, and the sign was also seen as the seal of God's promise to the sons of men.

Nettie B., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., sends this anecdote by way of reply to "New Disciple:"

A young lady said to an older one: "I should like very much to become a Christian, but if I do, I can't dance, can I?" The older lady replied, "Yes, if you want to." "Can I go to the theatre?" "Yes, if you want to." "And can I play cards, and read silly stories?" "Yes, if you want to." "Well, if you're not the queerest! Everybody else tells me I must give up all those things, and you tell me I can do them if I want to." "You misunderstand me, my dear. If you give yourself entirely to the blessed Master you won't want to do any of those things, for he will fill your heart so full of love that you will want to fill every minute with loving service for your Lord. You will find your precious Saviour so 'altogether lovely' that you will scarcely give those things a thought; and if you do, it will be only to wonder why you ever took pleasure in them."

Reader, Hebron, O. What caused Jerusalem and other places in Palestine to be covered with earth? What caused some Egyptian cities to be buried also?

Wars, earthquakes, conflagrations, and gradual changes on the earth's surface have covered up many ancient cities. Jerusalem has repeatedly been rebuilt, having suffered from many devastating sieges and earthquakes, which have laid much of it in ruins. The greatest destruction, however, was that committed by the Romans in 70 A.D., when the order was given to raze the entire city, and this was done, only a single tower being left standing to mark more strongly the general demolition. Similar causes have operated, obliterating great cities in Greece, Asia Minor, Babylonia, and Persia. In Egypt the shifting of desert sands and the changes of the bed of the Nile, added to the causes already mentioned, have resulted in the covering up of many once-famous cities.

Inquirer, Gouldsboro, Pa. Who were the parents of the Virgin Mary?

Many scholars are of opinion that she was the daughter of the Heli mentioned Luke 3: 23. The genealogies of Christ given by Matthew and Luke differ so widely, that there is good ground for believing that Matthew's genealogy is that of Joseph and Luke's that of Mary. As the Jews reckoned their genealogy by the male side only, it was customary to se[t] man's son-in-law down as his son. This wo[uld] account for Joseph being described by [the] evangelist as the son of Jacob and by [Luke] other as the son of Heli. Apart from t[his] theory there are no data for ascertaining [the] parentage of Mary.

L. R., Crossville, Ill. What is meant in Rev. 13 [18] by the number of the Beast being six hund[red] and sixty-six?

At the time that the Apocalypse was writ[ten] numbers were indicated by letters instea[d] by the Arabic figures now in use. We still [fol]low the custom in some instances, as on [the] dial of a watch. Every name, consequen[tly] had a numerical value which could be as[cer]tained by adding together the value of its [let]ters. Thus the number of the beast m[eans] that the sum of the numbers represented [by] the letters of his name would be 666.

E. E. P., Rathbun, Wis. 1. How many miracles [did] Christ perform and how many were miracl[es of] healing? 2. In what year was Paul born [and] how old was he when called to Macedonia [and] when he died?

1. Thirty-six miracles in all, of which twe[lve] two were miracles of healing and three of [them] were life given to the dead: the widow's s[on] of Nain, Lazarus and the daughter of Jairus. [The] complete list in order of their working you [will] find on page 154 of the Teachers' Bible, [given] as a premium with THE CHRISTIAN HER[ALD]. 2. Paul's birth is generally believed to [have] been in the year 2 A.D.; his conversion 36 A.D.; his call to Macedonia 52 A.D.; his death 66 A.D. These dates, of course, are only approxi[mate], as they are based on calculations, the abs[olute] accuracy of which cannot now be verified.

C. Clarke, Brooklyn, N. Y. What is the cause [of the] divergence of dates as to the Bible historie[s]? I notice that the dates in the margins of the Bible are not accepted by many writers.

The divergence is not great as to e[vents] subsequent to the accession of Saul. [Much] profane history facts have been collected w[hich] have led the majority of scholars to be[lieve] that he became king about the year B.C. 3[0]. Prior to that event the reckoning is backw[ards] and there is a dispute about the period [occ]upied by the time of the Judges extending [from] the death of Joshua. One school calculates [that] between that event and the accession of Saul there was a period of 500 years; another holds that some of the judges were contempor[ary] and so shortens the period to 334 years. [This] divergence affects the date of all events [back] to the creation of Adam, which one s[chool] places at B. C. 4004 and the other at B.C. 72[00].

J. Leeson, Hoboken, N. J. What is the meaning of laying aside every weight in Heb 12: 1?

The figure is that of a contestant in the athletic games, a runner anxious to win the prize. The writer of the Epistle urges Christians to follow his example in getting rid of anything superfluous that would hinder him in his effort. Every man has some special proclivity to evil. If he knows himself he knows what that is and is on his guard against it. There are other things that are not wrong in themselves but may be a hindrance to one who is striving after spiritual attainment. For instance is given of a man who was passionately fond of music. One day he was simply unable to lay down his violin at a time when he had promised to meet a number of boys in his Sunday School class who were to meet for prayer. He was afterwards so grieved over his weakness that he locked up his violin and said he never play it again. He knew there was no sin in playing, but to him it was a hindrance—one of the weights to be laid aside.

H. M. Marsh, West Orchard, N. Y. 1. Was Judas present when the Lord's Supper was instituted? 2. Did our Lord rise with the same body he had when he died?

1. The evangelists are not explicit on the subject. We can only form an opinion by inference. It is evident that Judas left the table when Christ revealed the fact that he knew of his negotiation with the priests. Matthew and Mark mention the exposure before they describe the institution; Luke mentions it afterward. John's account is more circumstantial. He relates the incident of the sop accompanying the exposure (John 13: 23-30), and adds that after receiving the sop Judas went out "immediately." It is almost certain that the sop belonged to the early part of the feast, and we have, therefore, good reason for believing that Judas went out before the Lord's Supper was instituted. 2. The scene of Thomas (John 20: 24-29) put that matter beyond doubt. The marks of the nails and the wound in the side identified it as the same body. Yet death had worked some change in it, or else, Christ after his resurrection employed his miraculous powers as he had not before his death. He suddenly vanished out of sight; in entering the room when the door was shut and in appearing at short intervals at places distant from each other, Christ showed that his body was not like what it had previously been.

W. P. Keeler, Chicago. 1. We should [do] best of existing circumstances, and probably [that] what the Association you mentioned endeavors to do. 2. The word "luck" is a relic of superstition. R. V. McLellan, Tipton, Ia. 1. Dancing is not sinful, but it leads to evil associations and should be avoided. 2. In ancient times it was a [sign] of [illegible]. C. Chown. She is not in any way related to the Canadian Sangsters, although they [may] have come from the same stock and family as the husband in Aberdeen, Scotland.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A SCENE OF MARTYRDOM.

WHASANG will be a name that will live in history associated with Smithfield, Cawnpore and other names of places where men have laid down their lives in the noblest and grandest of all causes. Rather than battle-fields where armies contend for mastery, such places are hallowed by more heroic spirit, that could suffer and die in the service of the meek and lowly King who gave his life for the world. The scene of the latest martyrdom is a village perched on a hill, rising about two thousand feet above the plain on which Kucheng is built, and about six miles distant from that city. There is a little cottage at the place, to which, in the broiling months of July and August, the missionaries at Kucheng pay occasional visits To the devoted men and women exhausted by labor in the hospitals, schools, and mission stations in and around Kucheng, this quiet retreat at Wisang is a haven of rest and recuperation. There the cool mountain breezes restore the mental and physical energies which have been depleted by labor in unhealthy surroundings and evil associations. The Mr. Stewart and his wife and family, with some of the ladies of the Zenana mission had gone at the end of last July. Some mutterings of the coming storm had reached their ears. Not long before, their lives had been saved only by precipitate flight from Kucheng; but they hoped that quiet was restored. Their converts loved them ardently and the people of the province were well disposed toward them; but as they knew, they had bitter and implacable enemies. The governor of the province was a violent, bigoted man, whose antipathy to all foreigners had been manifested on several occasions. But their most dangerous foes were the Vegetarians, a fanatical band who have taken on themselves the mission of enthusing the people in the extreme Buddhist doctrines and bracing up their waning loyalty to the Buddhist standard of faith and conduct. Everywhere they go proclaiming the first injunction of Buddhism: "Kill not any living thing even for food." Coupled with this command was always denunciation of the missionaries, whom they charged with alienating the people from Buddhism and by their example in eating meat, encouraging the people in disobedience. Their fanaticism reached the culminating point in July, and an expedition of vengeance to Wisang, where the missionaries were, entered eager adherents. The result we all now. The bloodthirsty madness was filled with sacrifice, and precious lives overflowing with beneficence were ruthlessly taken. A great cry has arisen for vengeance, but the Missionary Society, under wise auspices the victims went forth, is now uttering it. Its Board of managers piteously begs that "no measures may be taken savoring of retaliation." They realize that the remedy is not in vengeance, but in more light. The cause of the massacre was as Christ said it would be when he warned his followers that they would be killed:

these things will they do unto you because they have not known the Father nor me. (John 16: 3.)

THE TOWN OF WHASANG, CHINA—THE SCENE OF THE RECENT MASSACRES.

A New Continent.

An extraordinary discovery has been made by a Norwegian explorer named Borchgrevinck. At the recent meeting of the International Geographical Congress, he astonished the scientists assembled by the statement that he had found a great continent nearly twice the size of Europe in the Antarctic circle. He was the leader of an expedition which sailed south of Possession Island, and penetrated the South Polar Circle. In the seventy-fourth degree of south latitude he sighted a new promontory and made a landing. To his surprise, he found that the cold was far less severe than at a corresponding degree of north latitude. The minimum temperature was twenty-five degrees and the maximum forty-six. It was, he said, quite feasible for a ship to winter at Cape Adair. An extensive north-going warm current existed and broke up the ice fields, so that it might be much more easy to reach the South Pole than the North. He is anxious to lead an expedition to Cape Adair, to winter there, and thence proceed with dogs and sleighs to the South Pole. Mr. Borchgrevinck exhibited specimens of rock which he had brought from the new continent, and which encouraged the expectation that minerals of great value might be found there. He believes that a thorough exploration will reveal novelties in plants and animals hitherto undreamed of. There is little doubt that the means will be provided for such an expedition, as there seem to be treasures there for the capitalist as well as for men of science. It is a pity that the descriptions we have of the glories and delights of heaven, for which we have the guarantee of God's own Word, do not have a like effect. In spite of all that is revealed about it, comparatively few make an effort to secure an entrance to it.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (1. Cor. 2: 9.)

A Startled Congregation.

A panic was narrowly averted in a Brooklyn church on August 18. The evening service in Greenwood Protestant Church was approaching its conclusion and the rector had reached an impressive part of his sermon, when without the slightest warning the chandelier fell from the ceiling to the floor. Providentially no one was sitting under it, otherwise they must have been killed. Almost instantly there was a blaze. The spilled kerosene oil was ignited and it set fire to the matting. The noise and flame startled the congregation and there was a general rush for the doors. The rector, however, spoke a few words in a firm voice, assuring the people that there was no danger. Some of the officers went to the burning seat and in a few moments extinguished the fire. Most of the people resumed their seats and the service was closed without further disorder. The church was but recently built and it is supposed that by some oversight the chandelier had not been securely fastened. Thus the arrangement for giving light to the people became a menace to life. We may hope that none of them will ever find that the spiritual light of the Church—the Gospel proclaimed there—will ever prove such a calamity to them. There are, as we are warned, some people whose doom would be less awful if they had never heard the Gospel.

To the one we are a savor of death unto death; and to the other of life unto life. II. Cor. 2: 16.

A Burial Service by Phonograph.

An extraordinary funeral service was witnessed at Coney Island last week. A child died and its mother tried in vain to find a minister to read the burial service at the funeral. All the ministers were away from home but the funeral could not be postponed. The friends urged the mother to dispense with a religious service, but she was so much distressed at the idea, that another effort was made. At last the undertaker came to the rescue. He had been caught in the same way before and had adopted a mechanical substitute for a clergyman. He had a complete burial service on a series of phonographic cylinders, including, besides the prayers and passages of Scripture, some hymns sung by a choir. It was decided to make use of this arrangement. A large party assembled in the undertaker's parlor to hear the service. The coffin was placed in front of the instrument and over it projected the large trumpet of the phonograph. The service went through without a hitch and every word was distinctly heard through the room. If a blind person had been present, he would have supposed that clergyman and choir were there and that there was nothing unusual in the service. Probably this is the first instance in a Christian land of a purely mechanical service. There is in it a suggestion of resemblance to the prayer-wheels of Thibet, but as those who were present could follow the service it had more spiritual meaning in it. Indeed, the phonograph may really have been better than the Roman Catholic service, which, being in Latin, would not have been intelligible to many who were there, for they could all understand the words uttered by the phonograph; and, as the Apostle says, that is the main consideration.

Even things without life giving sound, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1. Cor. 14: 7.)

Niagara in Harness.

Complete success has at last rewarded the effort to obtain power from Niagara Falls. On August 26th, the Pittsburg Reduction Company received notice that the work was complete, and power would be supplied from that day forward. A few hours later, the motors were connected and were found to work satisfactorily. The company is engaged in the manufacture of aluminium, and has four transformers, requiring a force of twenty-one hundred horse power each. The Cataract Construction Company, some time ago, undertook to supply this power which it expected to obtain from the Falls. Gigantic motors of five thousand horse power were constructed, and a copper cable was laid in a conduit to convey the power from the works at the Falls to the Pittsburg Reduction Company's works. It has required five years steady application and experiment and the expenditure of three million dollars to perfect the enterprise. There is consequently great jubilation over the triumph achieved. The Construction Company expects now to be able to supply power to many other manufactories and illuminating companies. Our forefathers would be amazed if they could know how this gigantic power is being utilized. They would feel some chagrin at realizing how much labor and wealth had been spent in obtaining power when, near them all the time, was this power lying unused. There is reason to believe that there is the same blindness in spiritual concerns. In the clearer light that will come in the presence of God men will learn how much might have been accomplished had they known what forces were within their reach, in faith, that they had never put to the test.

If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place: and it shall remove: and nothing shall be impossible to you. (Matt. 17: 20.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions will be held in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Oct. 15-16

It is Gratifying to Learn that the investigation into the theological standing of Prof W. H. Ryder, of Andover, has removed the doubts entertained as to his orthodoxy, and he will continue his very valuable and successful labors in the Seminary.

The Charge Made in a Contemporary against Mr. Herman Warszawiak of misrepresenting the value of tickets given away for a stereopticon entertainment proves to have been a misapprehension. He wished to limit the attendance to those who attended his services, and fixed a price on the tickets to keep away persons who would be likely to come to make a disturbance. A considerable number of tickets were, however, sold at fifty cents, and the purchasers were well pleased with their investment.

The Prediction that Eventually the monopolists would restrict the use of air has often been uttered. It seemed that it had been realized on Aug 20 when a tramp was charged in a New York police court with stealing air. The explanation was that it being an extremely hot day, he had gone into a bicycle factory and put down his back the tube with which the pneumatic tires are filled. Then he had turned on the stop-cock and enjoyed a cold air bath of compressed air.

A Trappist Monastery is to be founded on Long Island. A prominent Roman Catholic has given a house and twenty-seven acres of land at Hicksville, Queens County, for the purpose. This will be the third in this country, the other two being in Kentucky and Iowa.

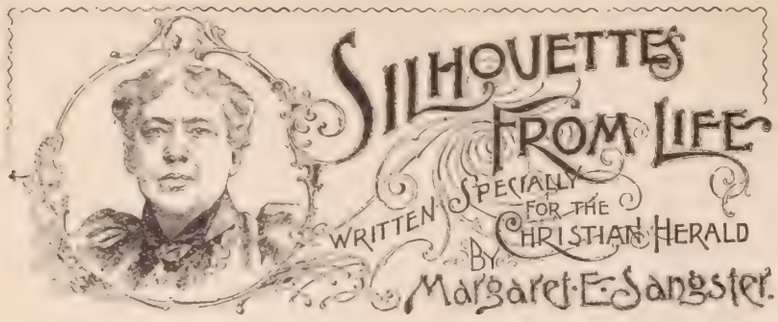
Mr. C. H. Yatman is About to take an evangelistic tour around the world. He leaves Ocean Grove, N. J., on Sept. 9, holding meetings on his way across the continent at Seattle, San Francisco, and other cities. He expects to be at Honolulu by Sept. 30. Thence he goes to Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, where he will make an extended stay before resuming his world-circling journey.

Of the 11,621,530 Square Miles that Africa comprises, England now holds 2,194,880, according to the latest figures compiled by Mr. Ravenstein of the Geographical Society. France has 3,326,700 square miles, including Algeria, Tunis, and a large part of the Sahara; Germany 884,810, the greater part acquired since 1884; Portugal, which at one time had almost a monopoly of Africa, now owns only 826,730 square miles.

The French Protestants who have so far forgotten their principles as to pray for the success of the cowardly invasion of Madagascar, are taken to task by the "Chambre Haute" as follows: "A religious service is taken place in all the Protestant Reformed churches in Paris to pray for a blessing on our French soldiers and marines of the expedition against Madagascar—wretched expedition, of which the promoter is Jesuitism under the veil of patriotism. Poor France!"

The Rev. A. J. Kerr, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Princeton, Ind., has accepted a call to the Broome Street Tabernacle, New York City. When the matter came before the congregation they declined to consent to Mr. Kerr's resignation, and so strongly represented their cause to the presbytery that it was with extreme reluctance, and only because the needs of the large mission church to which Mr. Kerr desired to go were placed before it, that this body voted to dissolve the pastoral relation which had so happily existed between him and the church.

The Building of Grace Church, Brooklyn, to which we called attention some weeks ago, still goes on. No application for funds is made and no indebtedness is incurred. When the funds spontaneously contributed are exhausted the work stops, and is resumed when there is money in the treasury. The corner-stone was donated by a mason; the large columns were set by the carpenter free of expense, the furnace was a present; and now a new organ comes as a gift from a member who has removed to Newark, N. J. The pastor claims that "every stone, every brick, every window and door, and every stroke of work, has come in answer to prayer."



WHEN MILLY LED THE MEETING.

THEY were old-fashioned people in Clover Dale, and not fond of new ideas. You would hardly believe that there was a place not fifty miles from New York, where Christian Endeavor Societies found themselves seriously handicapped by the popular feeling that it was not quite proper for girls and young women to take part in public exercises of devotion. They might sing, of course, and play the melodeon, but when it came to speaking and praying out loud before folks, their mothers drew the line; such doings were not modest in their opinion; they thought them forward. And the good matrons of Clover Dale were not going to allow them; they set down their feet solidly about this.

As it happened that Clover Dale was rather badly off for young men, who generally sought business opportunities elsewhere, the minister, an up-to-date man for all his white hair and his sixty years, was much troubled to get his Christian Endeavor Society well started, and to keep it going fairly in its course. By courtesy and of necessity, though it was styled a Young People's Society, a good many of the members were persons somewhat past youth, staid bachelors with heads growing bald, and gentle-mannered maiden ladies, who resembled outwardly fruit just menaced, hardly nipped by the frost, but inwardly they were sweet to the core. Even these ladies, far outnumbering the gentlemen, and, it must be confessed, surpassing them greatly by superior breeding and culture in some cases, were condemned by the sentiment of the community to silence in meeting.

"I am not pleased with the stiff sort of meetings we have here, father," said Milly Sunderland, the minister's youngest daughter, one evening on her return from church. "You just ought to have been with us in Boston last week." Milly had been away on a visit to some cousins, and had absorbed the spirit of the city, the best spirit, enthusiastic, cheerful, strong, and she was ready to impress some of her new convictions upon society in the place.

"Chester Fowler led this evening," she went on. "He was frightened at his own voice and blushed furiously when he had to read the chapter. John Pollock made remarks. Elbridge Wheeler prayed. Rufus Alexander recited a piece of poetry, and we sang two hymns and came home."

"Four young men," said her father, "and how many young ladies?"

"Twenty-four," promptly answered Milly.

"Why, where were the boys?" asked Milly's mother.

"The boys," said Milly, "were present. We have no more. Of the older young men, Mr. Campbell had a Township meeting on hand, Mr. Wells is away traveling, and Dr. Osborn was probably with a patient. Mother, if you could have attended one of the live, wide-awake meetings they have in Dr. Townsend's church, you would withdraw your opposition to girls speaking in public."

"For my part," the minister said hastily, forestalling the words he fancied he saw on his wife's lips, "I do not see the point of your and the other ladies' opposition. I can't see where it comes in myself. Here are our girls, Violet, Marie and Milly; they all talk eloquently in the parlor and at the table; it is only in a devotional meeting that they must be debarred from their natural birthright, conversation."

"Well," answered the good mother, in a quiet way peculiarly her own, "I begin to think that the world is moving pretty fast. Here is Milly begging me to let her ride a bicycle; she's been riding one in Boston, and her Uncle Tom wants to send her one to surprise the Clover Dale people and frighten the cows, and here you are, coaxing me to let her be your assistant pastor. Milly, my dear, I consent to everything. You may lead every meeting that you wish to, and I will be pleased."

"You mean it, mother? This is not a thinly veiled sarcasm, is it?"

"Certainly not, Milly, I have for some time thought that the parish needed a little stirring up."

So it came to pass that Milly led a meeting one Sunday evening before the regular service. She had planned for her meeting as a general for his campaign. Selecting the hymns with much care, she had gathered a few of the best singers at her house, and practiced the tunes till they knew them so well that the performance would be crisp, bright and full of emotion; not slovenly and dragging, as so much church singing is. She chose her chapter with reference to the topic of the evening, and asked five girls to speak in succession, just their own thoughts in the way they would put them if talking to one another.

Not to ignore the masculine contingent, Milly asked each of them to offer prayer, and, to be brief, she went to her meeting reasonably sure that there would be no pauses, no dead silence, when you could hear a pin fall, or listen to the beating of your own heart; no interval when furtive glances scanned the clock.

So far as these preparations were concerned, they were all very well. Anybody who fancies that a prayer-meeting, or any other meeting or enterprise can be carried on successfully without intelligent arrangement beforehand is much mistaken. Once get your meeting fairly started, and one soul kindling another, and it will go, but you must see that the machinery is ready first.

But Milly did not depend wholly on methods. Before she went to her meeting that Sunday night, she sought a private interview in her closet with the great Master of assemblies, and there, by herself, with reverent and earnest pleading, she asked for help and guidance. He prayer was heard; all prayer made in faith is heard, and never fails of an answer, though we cannot always read the answers, nor understand them.

Clover Dale had heard that Milly of the Manse, pretty little Milly Sunderland would appear in a new role, and that was enough to insure a good attendance. In fact, no such attendance had ever been dreamed of for a C. E. Meeting there. The deacons all came, the old ladies turned out in force, several farmers drove from remote portions of the township to the centre, and the Young People's Society found itself the object of great interest.

Now Milly was glad that she had not omitted that last half-hour alone.

She began with a little flush of shyness, a vibration in her voice that trembled in spite of itself, but almost immediately self-consciousness passed and she was aware that she was equal to the occasion. The first few moments over, there came to her a sense of quiet power. She had the meeting well in hand.

As the hour reached its conclusion the tall form of the old minister was seen at far end of the room. He came forward and stood beside Milly's chair. They were just rising to sing, "Blest be the tie that binds," and as they finished, Mr. Sunderland said, "Let us pray," and finally dismissed them with the benediction.

To you, girls, who are accustomed to this kind of work, it may not mean very much, this thing that Milly did. But there came a genuine revival to Clover Dale soon after this event, and many who came into the kingdom dated their first dawning desire, ever after, to that night when Milly led the meeting.

MARGARET E SANGSTER.

Where Naaman Once Dwelt.

(Continued from first page.)

be no desire on the part of the authorities of Damascus to renovate it. It is claimed that it stands on the very spot whereon the Syrian commander deposited the sacred soil which he brought with him on his return from Palestine after his cure, but like many similar places in the East, the identification is regarded as somewhat doubtful. Leprosy—the most loathsome of all human afflictions—is one that appeals to the pity of a traveler, even while it repels him. Jews, Syrians, Moslems, and Druses are alike admitted to these hospitals, where all creeds and nationalities sink to the common level of suffering.

A brighter picture is afforded by the photographs of two Syrian peasant women of Palestine. Humble housewives they are, in their white cotton veils and homely dresses, and they present a fair type of the peasant women of the country, whose simple, unambitious lives are passed uneventfully. In the East, and particularly in villages and throughout the rural districts, there are only three events that disturb the even current of domestic life—a birth, a wedding, or a funeral. Of social functions or gayeties apart from these, the peasant mothers and daughters know nothing. They are almost wholly uneducated, as Mrs. Jamal has demonstrated by her efforts in behalf of the Syrian girls of Jerusalem; but their status to-day is far better than that of their predecessors fifty years ago. All over Syria, a higher position and increased advantages have opened up to women. Their social and intellectual progress has followed the advance of Christianity, which has many true disciples in the homes of Syria.

TRANSFORMED BY THE GOSPEL.

IN a recent book on Samoa, Rev. Chas. Phillips of the London Missionary Society describes the results of mission work on some of the Coral Islands, such as Tokelan, Ellice and the Gilbert group. Unlike the Samoan, which are exceedingly productive, these are markedly barren. But every time the Mission ship goes its rounds the Captain takes with him a number of plants which are planted on the islands.

Already owing to the introduction of Christianity, a wonderful change has been wrought even in the physical appearance of these islands. Some have been literally changed from a wilderness into a garden, and the words of the prophet have been fulfilled: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."

No language can fittingly describe the fearful degradation into which the people had sunk. There was a difference in the degrees of darkness that had overshadowed them, but generally it may be described as the night of the darkest gloom, a darkness which could be felt. In the Gilbert Islands especially, heathenism existed in its grossest form. Satan seemed to reign supreme and hold the people in a tenacious grasp. Superstition, immorality, cruelty, mutual hostility, utter lawlessness, and disgusting idolatry prevailed. In some of the islands the people lived in a state of complete nudity and were "given over to a reprobate mind working all uncleanness with greediness." Animalism and all the baser and most degrading passions held dominion over them. The marriage tie was almost entirely unknown; war and interfamily strife were incessant. The natives had been accustomed to an intoxicating drink. They were without God and without hope; without conscience and without honor. A missionary writes:

"We know that God had not left them, for in many of the islands the Spirit of God had been preparing them for the reception of the Gospel. In one they had abandoned their heathen worship, and from, as it were, a prophetic intimation of something better approaching them, were eagerly awaiting for the new religion.

"Weary of their past superstitions the people were seeking something better. They were groping in the darkness for the unknown God, and the missionary found a ready response when he stood in their midst, and said, 'Whom, therefore, ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.' This will account for the very great success which so speedily followed the labors of the native missionaries.

"The Gospel was only introduced into the Tokelan group in 1861, into five of the Ellice Islands in 1865, in all the rest in or subsequent to that. In no one of islands were there any heathen left years after the Gospel had been known to them. The success, indeed, has followed the efforts put forth is probably unsurpassed on a small scale, the apostolic age. Old things have lit ly passed away, all things have bec new. In no one of the sixteen island any heathen remain. All now are the influence of the Church of Christ.

A TALENTED HINDU CHILD

LITTLE Miss Khorshed Pes Eduljee Boyce is three yea age, the daughter of a wea Parsee gentleman of Belgaun dia. Her parents are fame their hospitality to Christian sionaries, and also for their liberal opi on all matters concerning religion.

KHORSHED, THE PARSEE CHILD

rank among the finest families in I and trace their ancestry back for centuries.

Little Khorshed (which means "the s is really a tiny phenomenon, being a tal linguist, and possessing many g and accomplishments that are rare among girls approaching womanhood he can speak Gujarati (which is her m tongue), Hindustani, and English; H stani she employs when addressing ervants, English when speaking to her issionary friends and English or Ame visitors, and Gujarati to her parent brothers and sisters. She has a very voice, and sings Gospel Hymns in the lish language with hardly a trace of fo accent. The dress Khorshed wear modern Parsee costume, and not to bo founded with the ordinary dress of Hi children; indeed, the Parsees are a wholly Europeanized. All Parsee fa of good social position—and the ma of them are well-to do—employ E girls as waitresses and nurses, an children are brought up in English One of the ladies who took a pro part in the recent Parliament of Reli in Chicago is a Parsee, formerly a Sorabji. Her ability as a speaker an fine reasoning powers give evidence a very liberal education. Her sister, Sorabji, is a law-lecturer in Bombay. sisters are converts to the Christian re

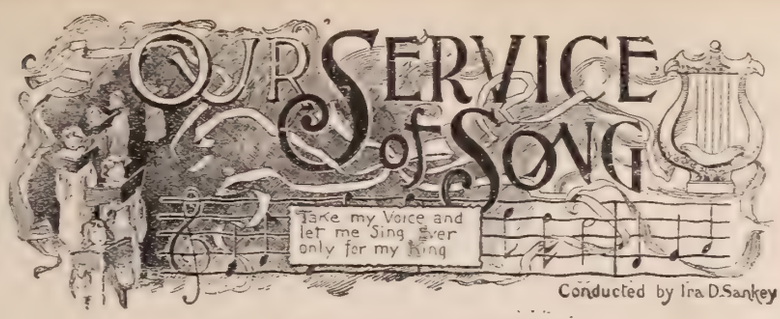
It has been decided to found a Missi Settlement for University Women at bay. That city contains a Parsee po tion of 60,000, as yet almost untouch missionary effort, and it is believe among the women of this enlightened unhampered by Mohammedan and H restrictions, excellent missionary wor be done on educational lines. Parsee verts would become a powerful instr for the evangelization of races around Then in the districts of Nasik and gaun, about one hundred miles from bay, there is pressing need for lady among 2,000,000 native women, a medical mission would find the fullest

The prayers of the readers of this are requested for the blessing of God u proprietor, and also upon those who mons, articles, or labors for Christ printed in it; and that its circulation be used by the Holy Spirit for the con of sinners and the quickening of God's

THE C. E. PLEDGE.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the week Beginning September 22. Eccles. 5: 1-7.

PLEDGES, vows, obligations of any kind are irksome to human nature. It is the consciousness of the fact that has frequently led people to assume them. Under the shadow of some impending calamity—on a steamer that seems destined to come a wreck, by the bedside of some beloved one whom death seems to have marked for his own, or in the midst of some fatal epidemic, there is a tendency in many minds to make a solemn vow that if deliverance comes, if the calamity be averted, some great thing shall be done. The spirit is of no modern origin, but extends back to the most ancient times. Jacob vowed at Bethel that he would surely give a tenth of his income to God if God would bless him as he had promised. Jephthah's vow is another instance and there is an incidental reference in Acts 18: 18 to Paul having made a vow. The underlying principle is not altogether of a satisfactory nature. It is practically offering a bargain to the Almighty that if he will do for us what we want, we will do something that will please him. It is as if he would be pleased to be pleased with something that is disagreeable to us. But there are pledges of a very different character—pledges that we give willingly and gladly, knowing well that they are due from us, and which we shall find it a pleasure to fulfil. The pledge that the bride and bridegroom give at the altar is a necessary one for the welfare of society, but where love is, it is given gladly by each side and each is conscious that it will be fulfilled with delight. The pledge given by the conscientious officeholder that he will be honest and faithful in the discharge of his duties, is never irksome to him. It makes no difference to his conduct, and his actions would be the same if he had entered his office without taking the oath. But the public has a right to require it of him, that there may be an explicit recognition of his obligations. It is the same with a soldier, with a juryman and with a witness. It is a pledge of this kind that the Christian Endeavor Society asks of its members. There is nothing irksome about it; nothing in the nature of a bargain. It only urges the member to do something for himself if he be a conscientious Christian, he would do without taking the pledge. Then what utility is it? Of precisely the same utility as in the case of the juryman and the soldier—it places him on record. And after all, the record is of more importance than we often recognize. Christ demands that in some way such a record should be made. His follower must confess him before men, otherwise he was not worthy to be called a follower. It was an example, a declaration of position that has proved of the greatest value in the propagation of Christianity. It is also of value to the member himself. It prevents laxity, prescribes a specific duty and calls to the aid of fidelity the lower elements of human nature, which are always allies worth having in our Christian life. Such allies are the sense of honor which holds a man to the performance of an obligation; the force of habit and the stimulus which comes of association with others in the same pursuit. The pledge, too, brings with it a joy which satisfies the soul without satiety. In its fulfilment the soul is brought into daily communion with God, and in that communion receives new life, new spiritual energy, and increased protection against the assaults of temptation and the benumbing influence of the sordid life. The man who has taken the pledge is an enlisted man who has declared his attitude in the world and who stands for Christ and his principles against all that is evil and degrading.



ONLY WAIT A LITTLE WHILE.

IDA SCOTT TAYLOR. FRANK M. DAVIS.

1. Christ's delays are not de-ni-als, Wait on Him a lit-tle while; Nev-er mind your cares and tri-als
2. He requires your best employment, Wait on Him a lit-tle while; He will give you pure en-joy-ment,
3. Christ's delays are not de-ni-als, Wait on Him a lit-tle while; Stand by Him and bear your trials,
On-ly wait a lit-tle while: Soon your pathway He will brighten, Soon your burden He will light-en,
On-ly wait a lit-tle while: Then go on, His name confess-ing, And the throne of grace ad-dress-ing,
On-ly wait a lit-tle while: Bide His time and trust Him, knowing He will bless the seed thou'rt sowing,
Chorus.
Soon your rap-ture He will hight-en, On-ly wait a lit-tle while.
He will send His promised bless-ing, On-ly wait a lit-tle while.
In thy com-ing, or thy go-ing, On-ly wait a lit-tle while.
On His bless-ed word rely, He will answer by and by, Trust a-lone in Christ your Saviour, Watch and wait a little while.

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From HIGHEST PRAISE for SABBATH SCHOOLS,
By Permission of the Publishers

A FORGER'S CONVERSION.

Mr. S. H. Hadley, the well-known evangelist and rescue worker, relates the following remarkable case of conversion:

"There was a man came into our meeting one afternoon with 1,000 forged railway tickets in his pockets, and he had the plate with him with which he did the work. He was on his way to the Roosevelt street ferry, intending to meet an accomplice over in Brooklyn, but he happened to stop in at our place.

"As he sat there listening to the testimony of ignorant, redeemed men, the spirit of God took hold of his soul. He went out, but he didn't go over to Brooklyn. He came again in the evening, and the Lord troubled him mightily. He went out and got on the ferry boat, and when the boat reached the middle of the river, he dumped the railway tickets, plate and everything overboard into the river. Then he came back to the meeting and knelt down for prayers. Jesus met him there and forgave his sins and gave him the witness of the Spirit that he was born again. He made a confession right there before us all. He was a Swede, a fine-looking man; he had never drank in his life.

"But the next question was, how he should get a living. So he knelt down and asked the Lord to send him a job. He got a job digging holes for the railroad piers. They had to be dug ten or eleven feet deep, and it was hard, dirty work; his hands got dreadfully blistered. He took his wife to the top floor of a tenement house,—they had never lived in such a place before; but praise the Lord! he was saved, and every $1.50 a day that he earned was clean money. Finally one of his former acquaintances heard where he was and found him at work and said to him, 'Why, John, are you crazy?' 'No,' said John, 'I never was so sane in my life.' 'Well, what's the matter?' 'I have found Jesus,' said John, 'and given my heart to God.' 'But, John, look here! We never had such a good thing on our hands as we have now. There's $10,000 in it if you will come and join us.' 'No sir, no more of that for me.' 'Well, John, you're in hard luck; let me help you,' and he pulled out a roll of money and offered it to John. 'No sir,' said John, 'I won't take it.' 'Well, come along with me to my hotel.'

"John went with him to the Fifth Avenue Hotel, but he wouldn't agree to go into any counterfeiting scheme. After he got home he put his hand into his pocket and found there $300 in bills which the man had put into his pocket without his knowledge. He thought about it for a moment. The devil said, 'Oh, come, now; keep it; he gave it to you. Just think how many holes that will fill up!' But the struggle was short. He just said, 'Lord Jesus, if you ever stood by me, stand by me now,' and he went back to the hotel and gave back the money.

"The man was greatly surprised and said, with tears in his eyes, 'John, if I could have what you have got I would give up everything I own in the world.'

"This man has helped to save hundreds of others. He has maintained his integrity and is trusted by some of the wealthiest and most respected business men in New York City."

PROPHETIC STUDY.

Why the Prophecies Have Failed to Give the Light to the Church they were Designed.

BY GEO. H. PEMBER, M. A.*

IN regard to Prophecy, the Bible presents two phenomena, absolutely peculiar to itself, of grave import, and which cannot be explained away, unless, indeed, all human records and experiences are also to be rejected. It contains a series of predictions—far too numerous, varied, and detailed to admit of the suggestion of chance in their accomplishment—which run down the long centuries to the end of the present order of things, and each of which has now been literally and strikingly fulfilled almost to exhaustion. And thus it indicates, with an authority towering high above any other to which reference can be made on earth, that we are now in the closing days of the age.

Yet again, it exhibits a second series of predictions, revealing features and movements which, according to its statements, must characterize the same closing days of the age. And, lo, these very characteristics have been gradually developing and coming into prominence during the past century, and are thus presentiug themselves at the exact crisis marked out for them from two thousand five hundred to eighteen hundred years ago!

In the case of Divine prophecy, the process of corrupting has been complex and varied, to prevent men from receiving the predictions of God in their plain and natural sense, and so to deprive those predictions of their spiritual power. To this result Prætorist and Post-millennialist, Historicist and Mystic, have all contributed, and dire has been the confusion.

But we need not despair. Let us rather ponder the words of the Lord Jesus to the disciples who were journeying toward Emmaus, and we shall both perceive the cause of all error, and be enabled to discern the narrow way of truth lying strait before us. "O foolish men," he said, "and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken!" Slow of heart, not to understand, but to believe! For there has never been any difficulties in understanding the prophecies, if men could but have believed them: it is in that point that they have failed.

God's revelation of things to come predicts unwonted and supernatural events, the catastrophe of the present order of the world; and his ways of effecting his purpose are often perplexingly diverse from our ideas. Hence there is but one course open to us, to believe with the confidence of children whatever he has spoken, and to know that, however impossible it may seem to men, he will cause his counsel to stand and his pleasure to be done. But the majority, even of Christians, seem to lack faith for this; and, consequently, they fritter away the supernatural in his revelation, and do not scruple to alter its arrangements, or to transfer its application, and so to bring it into accord with their own notions of congruity.

God has not given his marvelous revelations in vain. And the perilous days in which we live, the decline of faith, the ominous appearance of all the signs of the end, and the consequent nearness of the time in which we must see our Lord face to face, combine to urge upon us a more dilligent and unbiased study of those prophetic records, from which we may, perchance, at last bring forth what God has laid in store for such a time as this.

To be continued.

*From his new edition of his famous work "The Great Prophecies of the Centuries." Dr. Pember has made so many additions and so thoroughly revised his book to bring it down to present date, that it is practically a new volume. Pp. 504; price $2.50. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, Fifth Ave., New York.

A YOUTH'S TEMPTATIONS.

A Sermon by Rev. Alexander Macleod, D.D. Text: Matthew 4: 1-11: "Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness, etc."

A YOUNG man might have been seen one day, faint and weary, in a wild desert and among wild beasts in an eastern land. He was exhausted with hunger, and the marks of it were on his face. Poor and haggard and hungry though he looked, he was the son of a king, and was on the way to his kingdom.

The wonderful thing was, that it was his father who sent him into the desert, and suffered him to be without food for many days. A still more wonderful thing was, that when he was suffering the sharpest pangs of hunger and ready to perish, he did not doubt his father's love, nor that his father's way of bringing him to his kingdom was the best.

But one day a stranger came up to him, and said, "You are the son of that king of whom everybody has heard, and to whom this wilderness belongs. If you be his son, why should you remain hungry? Bid the wilderness provide a table for you. Turn these stones into bread."

Now, this young man could actually have turned the stones into bread. That would have satisfied his hunger. That might save his life. That was a way which at the moment might have seemed right. But he knew that it was not right. His father had sent him into the wilderness; his father had sent him hunger instead of bread; and he knew his father to be wise and good and loving. "No," he said to the stranger, "I will follow my father to the end — trust him to the end — trust him through hunger and faintness—trust him even to death. My father's love is Better to me than Bread.

This stranger was a very deceitful man; but he saw at a glance, that the king's son was resolved to go forward on the path of trust. So he followed the young man until they came to the capital town of the kingdom, and by-and-by they went up to the high towers of the temple.

"It is a great thing," said the stranger once more, "to be a king's son, and especially the king's son you are. Your father cares for you every moment, and would not suffer a hair of your head to be hurt. His servants follow you, watch over you, care for you. Suppose—since you are cared for in this way, and the king's son—you cast yourself down to the court below. See, there is a whole army ready to receive you in their arms!"

The young man simply said, "To trust my father's care when I am in the way of obedience and duty, is one thing; to put it to the test in the way you propose, as if I disbelieved it, is another. It would be tempting my father. And it is written, Thou shalt not tempt the king."

So the stranger saw how noble this youth was, and how kingly and well fitted to reign. And he took him to a high mountain, and showed him all its glory, and the glory of all the kingdoms on the earth, and said, "All these will I give unto thee, if thou wilt love me and trust me as thou lovest and trustest thy Father."

But the young man turned round upon him in anger, and said, "Get thee behind me! for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt [illegible]."

Then the stranger left him. And the heavens opened, and "angels came and ministered unto him;" and the smile of the Father shone round about him like a great light; and far up in the depths of heaven there were songs of victory. For this was none other than the Son of God, and the stranger was the devil who sought to lead him out of the right way.

That is an old story; but it is also new. It is the story of our daily and hourly temptations. It is the story of the attempt made by the Evil One to win us over to his side. In a thousand different forms in this country, and just now, that is taking place which took place eighteen hundred years ago, in the wilderness of Judea. I could not hope, if I tried it, to give you any idea of the countless variety of forms in which those three temptations come to us; but I will take you along one or two of the many lines of life in which they are to be found, and mention their names.

The first is the temptation of hunger:—If you think a little, you will see that everybody has to toil for bread. Now the devil often comes to people who have to toil, and says, "Bread is everything. Turn everything into bread—turn your skill, and your time, and your talent, the ships, and the docks, and the railways, and the banks, and the Sunday Schools, and the churches, into bread. If you are Christians, and Christ is in the sky, he will help you to do that. You are pinching yourselves, and spending time on religion and churches and missions and such things, which your more sensible neighbors spend in enjoying life." Many are deceived by these words, and turn aside from a religious life, and give all their soul, and strength, and life, and power just to labor for bread. A good table, with plenty to eat and drink on it. That is the one grand aim of life for them. And they forget God, and the Bible, and heaven, and go blindly on, laboring and toiling, and working for only the fine dinners, and forgetting that they cannot live on bread alone.

After that comes the Temptation to Presumption.

There are thousands of Christians—men and women—who nobly fight against the first temptation, and resolve not to spend all their soul and strength for bread; but, on the contrary, even when bread is not to be had, to keep the desire for God and truth and right above the desire for bread in their hearts. And again and again people of this stamp will say, "Although God should take all our bread from us, we will put our trust in him."

The devil sees that people who act in this way are full of trust in God; and in a very cunning way he tries to get round them by the very strength of this trust. He puts this thought into their minds: "Trust is a good thing—one of the best of things. One cannot have too much of it, especially if he is a Christian. Christians are God's children, and are free to trust him in everything. God has promised to bring them all right at last. May they not trust him then in perilous things,—in risks, in daring ventures, in dangerous enterprises, even in leaps in the dark?"

Many are wise, and cast out such thoughts, and shut their eyes on these dangerous ventures. But others are caught by the temptation, and lose themselves. And what they find in the end is only bitterness and remorse and shame.

There is still another temptation beyond this one. Even those who resist the temptation to presumption are often taken, as the Lord was, to where they can see the grand things of earth, and tempted with of reaching grandeur and influence by one evil step. The temptation works in many ways; but sometimes it comes in the form of an advice from one who pretends to be a friend, to go into an evil trade.

The Temptation of Pride,

"Don't you see how life is slipping past, and you are losing your chances?" this evil counsellor will say. "You want to be in a higher position: you think if you were you would have more influence for good. That's the very thing I say about you every day. Why are you so slack, then, to ascend to this position? Did you see that mansion we passed? It is owned by a rich friend of mine. Everybody speaks of him as 'the eminent tradesman.' He will be a millionaire some day, and he will leave, by the profits of his trade, a pile of money to his children. Do as he is doing. Give up strictness and sentiment. Go in for money-making in his way. You cannot help it, if the way be evil, or if the trade be evil. Somebody must be in that trade. Other people follow that way. And by that way and that trade, sooner than otherwise, you shall have the means of doing good."

Counsels like these fall dead on the hearts of God's children. But sometimes they are addressed to those who are only his children by name. And ah, there are many, under such advice, who break off from Christ's way, and follow the devil's, and are ruined for ever! They see splendor of social position, and fine living, and fashionable society, and carriages and grand mansions and fine entertainments—all passing like a panorama before them, and offering to become theirs—if only they will fall down and worship the devil to the extent of following an evil trade, or trading in an evil way.

Once upon a time there were two brothers, and one was rich and the other neither rich nor poor. The rich brother had made his riches in an evil way and by an evil trade. But the brother who was neither rich nor poor said: "It is better to be poor than rich, if the riches come by evil means." It happened that this brother had three sons, but the rich brother had no children at all.

It came to pass, in course of time, that the brother who was neither rich nor poor was about to die. And he called his three sons to his bedside and said: "I have spent all I had to spare in giving you education, and I have nothing to leave you except my mill. Be good and honest, and God will not suffer you to want. I leave my mill in equal shares among you. But the eldest shall be master, so long as he lives, and then the next eldest, and after him the youngest."

When the good man was dead and the funeral over, the eldest son stepped into his father's place, and the other two continued to serve as before. And time went on, and trade increased. And all things would have gone well if the one who was master had not gone on a visit to his rich uncle. But he was so feasted there and had such plenty of rich food to eat, that he could not look on the simple fare at the mill without disgust. So he said to himself, "What is the use of our increasing profits and of our toils, if we are not to have fine food like my uncle. Why still live on barley bread and milk as our father did? Then he put the old ways of the house aside, and had fine dinners and wine to drink. And he gave and accepted invitations to parties. And by-and-by, hardly a day passed in which he was not dining out, or having a dinner party. But

All this came to an End, and an end that was not good. At one of those feasts, in a neighbor's house, the poor man drank so much wine that he did not know what he was about when coming home. And instead of coming down from his horse at the doorstep, he came down at the mill-pond and was drowned.

So there had to be a second funeral. And after that the second son became master. He was different from his brother in some things. He was no drunkard, and he did not spend his time in feasting. But he was a little impatient. And it was a trouble to him to go round the right way, if he could get a shorter cut across. What troubled him most was the slow growth of the money at the bank. Although the mill was prospering, the profits were small. And this was a cross to him. It happened to him also to be the worse for a visit to his rich uncle. When he was at his uncle's he saw heaps of bank notes which had been got in a single day. And he came home thinking sorrowfully that the toil of a mill was a slow toil. One day a stranger came up to him at the mill and said: "We have found lead in the hills out there, and only want a little money to dig it out, and make thousands upon thousands in a single year." It was the very chance the miller wanted. He could not sleep for thinking of it. He saw the thousands coming in like a flood. And he would have bank notes as many and as soon as his uncle. Now this poor fellow was a very good miller, and was doing well with the mill. And his brother and himself were slowly getting to be well-to-do; but he was as ignorant as a baby about lead and lead hills, and the expense of working lead mines. To give out his savings would be a risk—he saw that clearly enough. To risk his brother's means would be wrong—he saw that, too. But on the other hand, if the mine succeeded he would be as rich as his uncle, and he would get to that riches in a single year. So he got out of his bed very early next morning, and took his Bible and began to search it to see if it said anything about a case like his. He found in one place that God would make everything work together for good to those that loved him, and in another that God would suffer no evil to befall his children. He said to himself, "I hope I love God and am one of his children." Then he knelt down and committed his way, as he thought, to God, and then he felt stronger and happier. It was a gre risk—he saw that very clearly. But thought God would take care of him. A he would put all his trust in him. So wrote to the stranger, and told him to b as many shares in the lead-mines as t mill was worth.

Everything seemed very bright for week or two—but only for a week or tw A letter came from a lawyer to say that t expenses of working the mines were gre er than had been expected, and that mo money would be needed. And after that, second letter, demanding more still, a saying: "It would be a pity to have pa out so much and not pay out a little mo to get it back."

And a year went past. And one day letter came to him to say that the lead-l had been searched and only a little le found, and the expenses were far beyo the payments, and he would have to se twice the sum he had already paid. He not answer this letter, but simply gave to his brother to read. "Then he sai

"I Have Risked Everything and lost—lost all—yours as well as mine forgive me—I thought I was doing it for t best." Then he rose, went up to his be and died of a broken heart.

In a short while there was another fu eral, and then a sale. The mill, and t house, and the horses, and the cows, a the fields were all sold, and the money ta en for the wretched mines. And the youn est brother was left without a penny, o home, or a friend, in the whole world.

But when the sale was quite over, a he was about to leave the house in whi he had been born, a man came up on hor back and gave him a letter to read. It w from his rich uncle. And it was full kind words. The uncle was old, and h no children to inherit his riches. This th nephew had always been a favorite w him. He had offered to adopt him wh the father was living. He renewed the fer now. He would make him his son a heir, if only he would come into the tra and promise to carry it on when the un was dead. I told you before that it was evil trade, and one on which God's ble ing could not rest. But the young m was touched by his uncle's kindness.

So he went back into the empty hou and sat down on the trunk in which clothes were packed. There was no fire the hearth, but it was there he sat, wh he had so often seated himself in happ days.—It was not every day such an of came to a man. All that would be his he accepted it, came before his mind:—t splendid seat in the country, the fine hou in town, the multitude of servants. this, and visions of a future in which this had place, floated before him and ca round about him. And voices seemed speak from the depth of his soul and sa "All this will be yours if you accept yo uncle's offer."

But he must also accept the evil tra He thought of his dear father's honora life—of his father's

Refusal to Accept the same offer on this condition—and of father's spirit as perhaps watching ov him at that very moment. Then he rais his thoughts to his Father in heaven a cried for strength. Then, when a lo forenoon had been spent in the cheerle empty house, he rose up and trudged a lo way, till he came to his uncle's, and than ed him for his kindness, but declined offer because of the evil trade.

I do not know what became of the un nor what he did with his riches. But young man who refused the splendid of came back to the village in which he h spent his boyhood, and went into a nei bor's mill to serve. And after a while married his master's daughter. And though he never got to be very rich. was very happy, and had a clean he and clean hands, and lived in favor b with God and man.

May God help you to resist temptati as this younger brother did—as our bless Lord did. And always remember th that in business, in home, in life, in lo in everything, it is just With Christ. Without Christ. That makes all the d ference in the world, at the journey's en

May the Holy Spirit give you the gra to believe that he is speaking truth, a help you to follow him along all his way May he open your eyes to see, and yo hearts to understand his love! Your wa after that, are sure to be ways of pleasa ness, and all your paths, paths of peace

Georgia Mountain Homes.

mble Log Cabins, but some have been the Birthplaces of Famous Men.

TRAVELERS in the mountain districts of Georgia are familiar with the cabin homes of that State. The old log-cabin is an attractive and picturesque sight, vine-wreathed and not infrequently swing signs of great antiquity. Others, of somewhat different type are of shingles or clap-boards, and though exposed to the wild storms that sweep over those rugged hills, they stand impervious to all weathers. Winds may blow and the rain may patter drearily upon the roof, but the mountain cabin stands firm and secure in its forest shelter well protected from the gales.

Cabin homes, such as that shown in the illustration, though homely, time-battered and affording few of the comforts that are enjoyed in dwellings in town or village communities, are yet interwoven with the story of the nation's rise and progress. Within their humble walls, greatness has often found its birthplace, and many men and women who have attained to fame and position, look back with love and longing to the old cabin home. They recall the free, sweet, childlife in the woods and mountains, the pure air, the bubbling springs, the wealth of wild flower and fern, the clinging vines and the cows drowsing in the pasture, and there are moments when, beside these, the advantages the world offers seem hollow and trivial indeed.

In the mountains of Kentucky, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, there are hundreds of such simple dwellings, stanchly built but unpretentious, which shelter happy households. In all, the social conditions are practically the same. But the ignorant mountaineer of twenty years ago is fast giving place to an intelligent and educated class, who have benefited by the introduction of schools even in remote districts, and the day is not far off when all the sons and daughters of the hill will belong to this category. In not a few cases there have come forth from those mountain cabins young men who have become gloriously successful preachers and teachers of the Gospel.

The latest public school enrollment of children of school age in Georgia gave the total number as 494,411. Of these, 322,- were enrolled as belonging to the public and private schools, and the number in actual daily average attendance was 188,-. Of those enrolled for the public schools, 175,668 were white and 111,743 colored. About 35,000 were in private schools. The whole number of public schools was 6560, there were about 960 private schools. The whole number of public school teachers was a little more than 6600, and of private school teachers 5-. The negroes pay, directly or indirectly, about one-half of the school tax. No county is entitled to a share of the fund unless its schools are in operation at least three months of the year.

***

Busybody Families.

Are there not many families that never spend a quiet evening together without embittering it by raking up every unpleasant subject in their lot and history? There are folks, who, both in their own case and that of others, seem to find a strange satisfaction in sticking the thorn in the hand further in; even in twisting the dagger in the heart. Their lot has its innumerable blessings, but they will not look at these. Let the view around in a hundred directions be ever so charming, they cannot be got to turn their mental view in one of these. Let vexatious gossip go and look to the sunny side of life. If we cannot or will not help others, it does not mend matters to criticize them.

***

Parental Courtesy.

Courtesy in parents is of untold worth. The father and the mother serve as models for the boy and the girl, upon whom no later precept in regard to word or act can make as lasting an impression as the early home example makes. "Company manners" are easily recognized as assumed and it is almost impossible to make strangers think them natural. Hence the child or youth who goes forth from a home in which politeness toward the children and before the children has been the invariable rule possesses an advantage over him who has been trained to think that acts of consideration, expressions of gratitude, deference toward women, attention to the ones nearing the end of life's journey, may be reserved for those outside the home-circle. It is they who are nearest to us, and whose affection for us is the greatest, who are rendered happy by the daily courtesies. Graciousness of manners is of great worth in the world of strangers. It is of greater worth in the world of home.

A TYPICAL MOUNTAIN HOME IN GEORGIA.

***

A Very Ceremonial Tea.

The Japanese are extremely fond of ceremony—more so than any other oriental or occidental race. This peculiar national instinct has brought about the unique ceremonial institution of tea drinking called "cha-no-yu," which must be strictly distinguished from the ordinary tea drinking. Again, the notion of such a vulgar way of drinking tea as with sugar or cream must be banished from the reader's mind. There are different kinds of tea, ranging in price from five cents up to ten dollars a pound These qualities are used daily, according to the means of the person. The tea every day used in respectable houses for guests costs from twenty-five cents to two dollars a pound. But the ceremony of tea drinking requires a special article made for that purpose, and costing generally from five to ten dollars a pound.

The knowledge of the cha-no-yu is important to high-bred Japanese ladies and gentlemen. The etiquette is extremely strict. The tea is made and served in a slow and formal manner; each action, each gesture, and even the manner of articulation, is determined by an elaborate code of laws. Every article connected with the ceremony, such as the tea canister, the incense burner, the hanging scroll, and the bouquet of flowers in the alcove, is either handled or else admired in ways and with phrases which unalterable usage prescribes. There are two ways of serving the tea—kio-cha, the thick tea, and usha-cha, the thin tea. The rules that regulate the former ceremony are more complicated, and the tea is served in the regular tea party fashion; that is, the host or hostess serves a single cup of tea for all the guests invited, each sips and passes the cup to his neighbor, who hands it to the next, and so on around the party. The rules and ceremonies of the thin tea are simpler. The host serves a cup of tea to each guest in turn. During the entire process of the tea ceremony silence is kept.

Placing all the necessary tea sets before you, you commence to serve the tea, upon which all the party will praise and admire your exquisite manner and beautiful tea instruments. Now, holding up the bags and creasing the silken napkin, you will wipe the teacup and then put a few spoonsfuls of fragrant powdered tea into it and pour a dipper half full of hot water out of the kettle into the cup. Then you will twice stir it about with a bamboo stirrer, a process requiring great care and skill. Thus making tea, you will turn, facing the seat of the principal guest, who will in the politest manner proceed one step forward on his knee to receive the teacup from your hands, and, returning to his seat, salute his neighbors and drink three sips. Praising its excellent taste and flavor, he passes the cup to his neighbor, who in the same manner passes it to the next person, and so on till the cup has gone the round of the party. The tea in the cup will be just finished when the turn of the last one completes his part of the ceremony. The cup will be returned to the principal guest, who with a polite bow returns it to you. Soon after all the guests bow together.

In the tea ceremony the host must do everything without the help of servants or waiters, although he may be the head of a very rich or noble family. Such a way of entertainment is regarded as the greatest honor and hospitality to the guest.

***

A Home Angel.

She doeth little kindnesses
Which most leave undone or despised:
For naught which sets the heart at ease,
Or giveth happiness or peace,
Is low esteemed in her eyes.

* * *

Blessing she is! God made her so:
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow;
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless.

ONLY A WORD.

IT was only a kind word spoken to a weeping little child,
But the thread of its grief was broken, and the little one sweetly smiled.
And no one stayed to notice so tiny an act of love,
Save the angels keeping the record in the wonderful book above.

And she who had spoken kindly went on her quiet way,
Nor dreamt such a simple action should count at the last great day;
But the pitying words of comfort were heard with a song of joy,
And the listening angels blessed her from their beautiful home on high.

It isn't the world praised wonders that are best in our Father's sight,
Nor the wreaths of fading laurel that garnish fame's dizzy height;
But the pitying love and kindness, the work of the warm caress,
The beautiful hope and patience and self-forgetfulness.

***

A CHILD'S VISION OF HEAVEN

MR. MOODY relates a very touching story of a father who was out late one evening with his little daughter. The night was dark and they had passed through thick woods to the brink of a river. Far away on the opposite shore a light twinkled here and there in a few scattered houses, and farther off still blazed the bright lamps of the great city to which they were going. The little child was weary and sleepy, and the father held her in his arms while he waited for the ferryman, who was on the other side. At length they saw a little light; nearer and nearer came the sound of the oars, and soon they were safe in the boat. "Father," said the little girl, "it's very dark, and I can't see the shore. Where are we going?" "The ferryman knows the way, little one; we will soon be over." Soon in her home, love welcomed her, and all her fears were gone. Some months passed by, and this same child stands on the brink of a river that is darker and more terrible still. It is the river of death! The same loving father is near her, distressed that his child must cross this river and he not be able to go with her. Forty days and nights he and her mother have watched over her, praying for the life of the precious one. For hours she has been slumbering; but just before the morning watch she suddenly awakens, with the eye bright and every faculty alive. "Father," she says, "I have come again to the river-side, and am waiting for the ferryman to come and take me across." "Does it seem as dark and cold as when we crossed the other river, my child?" "Oh, no! there is no darkness here; the river is covered with floating silver. The boat coming toward me seems made of solid light, and I am not afraid of the ferryman." "Can you see over the river, my darling?" "Oh, yes! there is a great and beautiful city there, all filled with light; and I hear music such as angels make." "Do you see anyone on the other side?" "Why, yes, yes; I see the most beautiful form, and he beckons me now to come. Oh, ferryman, make haste! I know who it is—it is—it is Jesus, my own blessed Jesus." And thus she passed over the river of death, made like a silver stream by the presence of the Redeemer.

***

A Boy's Devotion to his Mother.

Of all the love affairs in the world none can surpass the true love of a big boy for his mother. It is pure and noble, honorable to the highest degree in both,—a love that makes a boy gallant and courteous to his mother, saying to everybody plainly that he is fairly in love with her. Next to the love of a husband, nothing so crowns a woman's life with honor as this second love, this devotion of a son to her. We never yet knew a boy to turn out bad who began by falling in love with his mother. The boy who is a lover of his mother in her middle age is a true knight, who will love his wife as much in her sere-leaved autumn as he did in the daisied spring-time.

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

CHAPTER IX.

Grisha Tchaika.

THE PEASANT SHEPHERD.

IN nearly every Russian village of any size there is generally to be found some one of feeble mind, on whom the peasants look with compassion and pity mingled with respect, as one sent by God to remind them of the vanity of things, of the weaknesses of the human mind, of the thin dividing line between mind and matter. A Russian peasant would not perhaps express himself in these words, but when he sees the village fool these are the notions that fill his mind, and he is kind to the fool in consequence, and thinks very humbly of himself.

In Slavo, Grisha Tchaika was the simpleton of the village. But although every one knew him he was seen but seldom. Unlike most of his afflicted fraternity, he kept himself remote from the haunts of men, never courting observation, avoiding conversation. This was in part owing to the ferryman's management. Sozontieff knew how inquisitive the villagers were, and with simple Grisha to cross-examine they could soon discover, if they wished, every detail of his and his daughter's life. He might have sent his few cattle and sheep to the communal pasture-land, but he preferred not to do so, lest Grisha might get talking. He kept his little flock to the bitter herbage of the sand-dunes by the river where Grisha could herd them unmolested and unquestioned.

It was just eighteen years before our story opens that Sozontieff's wife, who had not then been very long in Slavo, was out on the dunes towards evening. Her work for the day was over, and with her baby girl in her arms she was out looking for some wild flowers, that she knew grew on the river bank below the sand. She had already gone some little distance from her cottage, and was running down towards the river when she was startled by a cry from the water's edge as from an infant.

She approached the spot, and looking into a thicket of sedge growing close to the river she saw a child of a few months, almost naked, laid beside the stream, the water almost touching it. It was April, the river was rising daily, indeed hourly, and knowing this, the woman's first impulse was to snatch the child from its precarious position and place it higher on the bank. The terrible thought rushed in on her that it was placed so near the water on purpose, but as this was too cruel a suspicion she banished it from her mind, and stilled the crying of the child until its careless mother might come to fetch it. Her mind was busy as she waited there. Whose child was it? The little shirt it wore was of far finer texture than anything in a peasant baby's wardrobe; besides, the poor thing was hunchbacked terribly so, and if any of the villagers had had a hunchbacked child she would surely have heard of it. It was all inexplicable. She waited until it was almost dark, and then as no one came she fed it together with her own baby and took it home, wrapping the two children in her warm shawl.

The ferryman loved his wife, and anything she did he was willing to approve of, but in his own heart he wished she had let the child perish, and he was perfectly certain that it had been placed on the water's edge to perish, and he saw no reason [illegible] the river. Visiting the spot next morning he found a strong current sweeping over the spot and the water a foot deep. He accepted, however, the care of the child, that is to say, he did not interfere with his wife's care of it. All that he did was to baptize it an Old Believer, calling it Grigori or Grisha, as it had been found on the day when he made a vow to St. Grigori, and Tchaika, from a word in use among the Cossacks of the Ural, signifying a river.

Grisha grew and developed so slowly that he remained a puny weakling beside the strong well-grown daughter of the ferryman. It was also soon apparent that the weak body of the foundling contained a still feebler mind, shattered and diseased. His foster-mother sought by persevering kindness to awaken some sparks of intellect, some ideas of order, in the mind of the boy, but it was all terribly up-hill work, and poorly rewarded. Nadja, as she grew up, treated him gently and considerately, for Grisha was sensitive to ridicule, and when laughed at would mope in a corner for hours by himself.

Once when the children were about five years old they were playing together on the river bank. The General, who had been out alone shooting, passed them on his way home. He had been absent nearly five years from Slavo, and this was his first visit after his return to this part of his property. The contrast presented by the two children, one so beautiful and strong and active, the other deformed, dull, slow, must have struck him, for he stopped to speak to them; but after a nearer examination of Grisha's features he altered his intention, passing hurriedly away. Nadja, when she told her father about it, said that the General grew pale and stared at Grisha as though he were frightened.

Sozontieff, however, thought little of the incident until after the lapse of a few days when the General visited him, and asked to see him alone. His first inquiry was about Grisha—who he was and where he came from. Sozontieff narrated all the circumstances connected with the finding of him, and the eagerness and deep attention of his listener struck him as more than remarkable. Then a sudden thought flashed through his mind. Is there not something under all this inquisitiveness that is not disinterested? Why should the General desire information about this misshapen idiot boy? Why had his somewhat frequent visits to Slavo ceased just about the time that Grisha was found? Indeed Sozontieff suddenly remembered that he had left that very day, for it was after ferrying him across the river on his way to Kief that he returned to his cottage to find his wife with the foundling. He said nothing of all this to the General, nor when he was gone did he speak to his own wife on the subject; he pondered it much, however, in his own mind. And when the General once or twice afterwards sent him some gifts of his nephew's cast-off clothes the ferryman was more than ever puzzled.

Year followed year until the children were nine years old, and then the great shock of his life, the death of his wife, the blow that changed him, prostrated Sozontieff for months. Nadja and Grisha no longer formed part of his life and interest.

But the loss of her parents' care, although keenly felt by Nadja, never made the difference to her that the loss of his foster-mother made to Grisha. The poor fellow now shunned the house except as a shelter in bad weather. He sought the open air always, and after a while seemed to take delight in it. In winter on fine days he would race over the frozen river and along the snow-covered dunes, taking an infantile delight in rolling the snow into fantastic shapes that he thought resembled men and birds and beasts and houses. He would tell Nadja, who was often his sympathizing companion, that some misshapen mound of snow he had raised represented a certain beast he had seen in one of her father's books. But his chief delight was to think he had fashioned an image of the dragon in the ferryman's picture of St. George the Victor.

Sozontieff had now grown indifferent to the poor fellow's happiness, even to his comfort. As soon as he saw he was gaining strength he set him to herd the cows and sheep, and to labor about the house at odd jobs of work which his feeble capacity could grasp the meaning of.

But it was in the late spring and summer that Grisha showed most signs of understanding and enjoying life. His actions and words at those seasons had meaning and coherence—warped and twisted perhaps, but with a definiteness and sometimes with a beauty that was peculiarly suggestive, and with a pathetic character all their own. It was young Kulmenko who, once when they were out together, drew Sergei's attention to the beautiful summer picture of Grisha leaning on his shepherd's staff, with the sheep resting around him in the noontide heat and stillness—Grisha looking far away over the river across the illimitable steepe.

The summer river had peculiar charms for the poor hunchback. He often told Nadja that he heard a song in the river that pleased him and made him laugh. He used to tell her that each side of the river had its own song, and through shallow waters he would often wade deep in butterburrs over to a little eyot of sand where he could hear the two songs sung in harmony. He felt the charm of voice and expression of musical sounds in an extraordinary degree. He could not give his feelings and states of mind their proper names, he could seldom find words to explain them any more than he could many another sensation of his derived from his communings with nature. Perhaps they had no names, they were so shifting, fugitive, baffling.

It was only Nadja who fully understood the poor fellow's broken ideas, and who sought to teach him to express them, though ever so imperfectly. He rewarded her gentle consideration with a devotion that was almost painful in its intensity. If she admired a flower, he would travel for miles to obtain bunches of them big enough to deck her room with. Once the beautiful plumage of a bird that flew past them drew forth an expression of her admiration. She did not know until he brought her the dead body of its fellow long afterwards that it had been his constant labor for days to devise some way of snaring it alive, and that failing in this he had killed one with a stone. They had their own language these two, a dialect that no one else fully understood. The girl had quickly learnt his disjointed syllables, the harsh grating cries that did him service for speech.

Besides Nadja, Grisha had no friend but Mikhail Kulmenko. From the first the Stundist felt that it was his duty to strive to lighten the poor hunchback's darkness; and attracted by the strong personality of his friend, Grisha used to follow him on his fishing and other expeditions, and sit or walk beside him, eagerly watching and listening. It was with the utmost difficulty that Mikhail could gather the broken remnants of Grisha's speech into an expression of an idea, but in time he learned to do so, though not nearly so completely as Nadja. Mikhail, however, seemed to be able to impart an idea to Grisha better than Nadja could.

It more than once happened that Grisha was with him as he sat reading his New Testament down by the river, and curious to see the effect of its message on one so imperfect and immature, he told him about God and about his love for the world; about Christ, his work and his death.

Continued on page 597.

*Copyrighted by the author, and used with the consent of Messrs. H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, and Toronto.

Cuticura

FOR THE HAIR

and

SKIN

A warm shampoo with Cuticura Soap, and a single application of Cuticura (ointment), the great Skin Cure, clear the scalp and hair of crusts, scales, and dandruff allay itching, soothe irritation, stimulate the hair follicles, and nourish the roots, thus producing Luxuriant Hair, with a clean, wholesome scalp.

Sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Proprietors, Boston, U. S. A.

To Build Up

The system, I have found Hood's Sarsapar a splendid tonic. I had the grip four tin and the prostration combined with sev headaches, stomach troubles and dyspep made me a very great sufferer. I was very Weak and Run Down.

I have used six bottles of Hood's Sarsapar and cannot praise it and Hood's Pills enou for the wonderful benefit they have been me." MRS. LIZZIE JACKSON, Scituate C tre, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparil Is the Only True Blood Purifi

Prominently in the public eye. $1. 6 for $

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with H Sarsaparilla. 25c.

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

H. C. D., New York.—My left leg is larger in cumference by one inch than right, caused tack of acute rheumatism. Will your remedi anything for me?

Take one Febricide Pill, three times d Regulate the bowels with Nathrolithic S Avoid elastic stockings. Report in six w

G. Jasper, St. Louis.—What is good for a co tongue; also a remedy to gain flesh?

For the former take Nathrolithic S twice a week, a teaspoonful in a half tum of water, a half hour before breakfast. ond, take Cardine, extract of the heart three-drop doses, on the tongue, twice a

E. L. D., Kansas City.—I feel languid and tire the time. No energy, and very nervous. Have ples on my face. What shall I take?

Take Cerebrine, extract of the brain five-drop doses, three times daily. Twi week take a dose of Nathrolithic Salts.

Alex. C. New York.—What is a good reme gout?

Febricide; one pill three times daily. dose of Nathrolithic Salts twice a week.

Mrs. H. B., Phila.—For the nervous de ty take Cerebrine, extract of the brain, in drop doses, on the tongue, three times d For the catarrh, use Witch Hazel ointn snuffed up the nose; also take a teaspoo of Nathrolithic Salts in a half tumbler o water, a half hour before breakfast, twi week.

W. T. PARKER, M. D

Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACTS.

CEREBRINE, From the Brain. MEDULL From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, From Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE.

Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drachms.

GASTRINE.

A new and valuable remedy for dyspepsia.

FEBRICIDE PILLS

For MALARIAL AFFECTIONS, NEURALGIA and HEADACHE.

NATHROLITHIC SALTS

For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of the Bo and Inaction of the Liver.

At all Druggists, or from

COLUMBIA CHEMICAL CO.,

Send for Literature. (180) Washington, D

3 LOVELY EASTER LI
For Only 15 Cents

3 lovely Bermuda Easter as shown in cut, whic trumpet-shaped flow snowy whiteness, of grea ty and of unsurpasse grance; as a winter bloo nothing can surpass i impossible to describe charming beauty of this a pot plant. 3 bulbs for onl

J. ROSCOE FULLER & Floral Park, N. Y.

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for splendi trated Catalogue of Custom M made Oak Leather Harness direct to consumers at whol prices. Why not buy from hands and save the middle's profit. You can buy by m as well as though here in p Making to order a specialty. KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owe

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTE

45 Liberty st., New York, sells all makes under half Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for sale Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first-class. Largest in the world. Dealers supplied.

CHILLS Malaria, Chills and Fever, Biliousness, La Grippe cu QUAKER CHILL CU A record of 50 years behi Contains no quinine, arsen harmful drug. $1 a case, or cakes $5. Write for pa lars. Sold only by Quaker Remedy Co., Lansdown

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CU by INVISIBLE Tubular Ear Cushions. Has more to good than all ear drums and vices combined. Whispers HEARD. Helps ears as does eyes. F. HISCOX, 853d Bdway, N.Y. Book of proofs f

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SO For the Skin, Scalp and Complexion, the r 20 years experience treating the skin. A dermatology with every cake. Druggists John H. Woodbury, Dermatologist, 125 W. 4 N. Y. City. Send 10c. for sample soap and 150 page Mth of this was utterly incomprehensible to oor Grisha, but he understood love, ar stranger still, he understood sacrifice. Wen Mikhail strove to discover if he had ar notion of God, he said that God must beke Nadja who cared for him and loved hi just because she wished to, and not beuse she must, or because he deserved to be ved. He thought that Christ must be lik him in some ways, for he was ready to ase living if Nadja only wished it. If sh old him to go into the river he would go here and drowned. If she told him to bu his hand in the oven he would do it.

came into Mikhail's head once or twi to take Grisha to a Stundist meeting tha was sometimes held in summer out on the teppe, and so attracted and affected wa he by the music and the solemn crowd of brshippers that he always begged Mik ha when he met him to take him to anoth- e. e hunchback would wait evening af- er ening in the hollow of the steppe, if by chace he should happen on another meet- ing and it had become quite a common thi to see Grisha at the steppe meetings. Of urse Sozontieff never knew of this or it uld have gone hard with the boy. Wh chiefly attracted Grisha at these meings was the singing. For the sake of the nging he used to go up to the village an sank outside Mikhail's cottage when meings were being held there. As these meings were usually held at night, Grisha had ot much fear of being detected. He ... never quite reconcile what he heard in ...ail's cottage or at the steppe meetings ... e religious exercises which he saw ... eryman go through.

... sha felt that in both cases there was ...ip, but the one was so attractive, so ... , so full of love and gentleness, so ... sweet sounds that lingered with him, ... e other so stern and forbidding, so ... and fantastic and remote even to his ... that he once told Nadja if Mikhail ... d and Christ as his masters, the ... an has the devil and St. Nicholas.

... icon of the Wonder-Worker was an ... of dread to the poor natural. The ... of it was part of the texture of his ... d even in those moments when he ... st a sentient-thinking being, most ... munion with what he knew of na- ... e icon with its dim brown face and ... sed drooping eyes, its aspect of ... ing decaying, before which candles ... be lighted and incense burnt, made ... nk of death. He had seen a dead ... ce in his childhood, and the sight of ... ined a terror to him for years. He ... have done anything to get rid of the ... e thing that his master had such ... mmunion with; but as this was im- ... he bore its presence with mute ... g, sometimes crooning a snatch of ... list hymn before it, so that if it were ... ll One, or had any connection with ... hymn might serve as some sort of ... on from the wicked influences which ... believed it was always exercising. ... risha's religion was a formless and ... le thing.

... s Nadja's bright presence in the ... n's house that kept Grisha some- ... within the outside limits of sanity ... son. But for her his hard life, So- ... 's cruel neglect, and above all the ... abiding terror of the icon would ... g ago deprived his warped mind of ... flickers of reason and humanity. ... ed to feel this dimly at times. She ... his gentleness and tractability were ... her watchful and continuous care ... She dreaded the thought of what ... have been without her, of what ... become without her.

To be continued.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

... Years of Missions, or the Story of Pro- ... Carey's Beginning. by Rev. Delavan L. ... with an introduction by Rev. A. T. Pier- ... pp. 439. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, ...

... oon-Keeper's Ledger: a series of temper- ... sses, by Louis Albert Banks, D.D. Pp. ... cents. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, ... York, London and Toronto.

For Sick Headache

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

... es the cause by stimulating the action of ... promoting digestion and quieting the ...

An Asthma Cure at Last.

... ph, sicians and medical journals report ... are for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found ... Niger River, West Africa. The Kola Im- ... 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending ... ses of the Kola Compound by mail to all ... from Asthma, who send name and address ... card. A trial costs you nothing.

HEAVEN.

"So shall we ever be with the Lord."

IN rapturous thought, I have seen the bright home,
Which Jesus has gone himself to prepare;
When all things are ready he surely will come
And gather his loved ones, to dwell with him there.
Oh, what joy to be with him there!

'Twere pleasure untold, our loves ones to meet,
Where sorrowful partings are never more known;
United, to hold communion most sweet;
United to worship the King on his throne,
Oh, what joy to be with him there!

In that home of the heart are no blighted hopes,
There life's deepest mysteries will all be made clear;
No tear-bedimmed eyes, no pain, and no death;
When shall I awaken and find myself there?
Oh, the joy of a home over there!

There Jesus unveils his adorable face
With the light of his countenance, all shall be blest.
The weary and worn, the sorrowing and sad,
Find rest and refreshment on his loving breast.
Oh, what joy to be with him there!

Boston, Mass. MARY GORDON BURPEE.

LED BY BOWERY CONVERTS.

The town of Babylon, L. I., is enjoying a spiritual revival and the circumstances that led to it are peculiar. Mr. E. Post, a Christian dentist of New York, who had occasion to visit Babylon, L. I., met Mr. Johnson of Babylon, and the course of the conversation disclosed that the town was spiritually dead. Mr. Post at once conceived the idea of starting a camp-meeting at Babylon, and to this end purchased a large and commodious tent, invaded the town single-handed, and telegraphed to the Bowery Mission to send some of its convert workers. This request was promptly complied with, and on the 22d of August the work was begun.

The first evening, the people gathered on the outskirts of the tent, few—not more than a dozen—daring to enter. On the second night, more gained courage and the tent was partially filled, but without any conversions taking place. On the third night, the power of the Lord began to be manifested and the remarkable testimonies given by the Bowery Mission converts, telling the sad story of their lives and their marvelous deliverance through the acceptance of the risen Saviour, broke down the stony barrier and fifteen persons gave their hearts to the Lord.

On the fourth night this number was increased by adding twenty-five, among whom was an aged lady who had been a church member all her life, but realized at this late day that the requirement for salvation was no less than that the Spirit of the Lord should come in and abide in her life. And now the work goes bravely on and the tent is thronged nightly. The services which were at first conducted only in the evenings, are now extended to day services as well. As the Bowery workers leave, only to be replaced by others, many a prayerful exclamation of "God bless the Bowery Mission" greets their ears.

Mr. Post and wife are earnest, consecrated Christians who take a deep interest in all Christian work and when at home give much of their time and encouragement to the Bowery Mission.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

Robert A. Denison, Connersville, Ind.
Mrs. A. A. Caverly, N. H.
A family being led by Jesus.
Mrs. George Phillips, N. J.
A Subscriber, Williamstown, Ky.
I. H. N., Pleasantville, Pa.
Friend, Littleton, Mass.
Mrs. S. M. Davis, Mass.
W. C. T. U. Smithtown Branch, L. I.
Mrs. A. Williams, N. Y. City.
Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Peck, Colo.
F. A. Dutton, Mich.
Clara Higbie, Minn.
——, Ashtabula, O.
A Christian Worker.
J. C. Pierce, Va.
Anna Yound, Mich.
Miss M. A. Mader, Neb.
A friend, Beverly, N. J.
Mrs Elizabeth Slater, Ohio.
George H. Lefever, N. Y.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

"Father, this Copco Soap is the best I ever used, I wish you would get a whole box of it."

COPCO
TRADE MARK.

Makes the same impression on every one who tries it. Will you try a cake? Price 5 cents, at the grocer's. Made only by
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, - CHICAGO, NEW YORK, ST. LOUIS.

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

A Healthy, Clear Skin

Is not only a great comfort, but is a recognized point of beauty. We have thousands of letters saying it can be

Secured, Retained, By

using Comfort Powder. When used often, pimples and other inflammations disappear. Tan, Sunburn and Roughness from exposure at once relieved by

Comfort Powder

The Comfort Powder Co., Hartford, Ct. 25c. and 50c. a box.

All Druggists Sell It.

Golden Sheaves. A Service of Song and Readings for Harvest Festivals and Thanksgiving. Price, 5 cents per copy.

Royal Organ Method. A new and very complete method for the parlor organ, prepared by a thoroughly competent organist. A large variety of the best music carefully arranged for the organ. Price, $2.00.

Branzoli's Mandolin Method. An elegant edition of this celebrated work, printed complete from the original Italian work. Other American editions are abridged. Price, $2.00.

Gospel Hymns, Nos. 1 to 6, Complete. Music edition, cloth, $1.18 by mail. Words only, small type, 12 cts by mail. Words only, large type, Boards, 30 cents by mail.

Model Music Course for Public Schools. The following books of the series are now ready: Primer 25 cts. First Reader (30c). Second Reader (30c). Third Reader (30c) Circulars and specimen pages Free.

The Musical Visitor commencing with September number, will contain Songs and Piano Music instead of Anthems and Organ Music. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK, CHICAGO.

University Law School Sixty-first year begins Oct 1, 1895, confers LL. B., also (for graduates) courses) LL.M.
AUSTIN ABBOTT, Dean and Senior Professor.
Address for catalogue, REGISTRAR, University, Washington Square, East, or Professor I. F. RUSSELL,
120 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

FEATHERBONING
FOR WAISTS, SLEEVES AND SKIRTS
Instruction free. Call at our parlors, 843 Broadway, New York; 185 Wabash-av., Chicago; 40 West-st., Boston; 102 North Charles-st, Baltimore; 1113 Chestnut-st, Philadelphia. Send 65c for 12-yard Sample Skirt Bone
Warren Feather Bone Co., Three Oaks, Mich.

NEW MUSIC.

COSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By SANKEY, MCGRANAHAN, and STEBBINS. Now being used by Mr. Moody in Northfield Summer Conventions. Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts
HIGHEST PRAISE. For Sabbath Schools. By W. A. OGDEN. $30 per 100; Sample Copy, 25 cts.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)
THE HUMAN HAIR,
Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy.
By Prof. HARLEY PARKER F. R. A. S. London.
D. G. LONG & CO., 1613 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
"Every one should read this little book."—Athenæum

Improve your spare time. You can successfully study at your home under our direction. Freehand and Mechanical Drawing, Perspective, Lettering and Mathematics. Send for information. FREE. PENNA CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE, Philadelphia, Pa. Box 1234.

THE ANTIQUITY OF CHINA.*

THE name China is derived from the house of Tsin or Ch'in, a powerful family in Northwest China. The Chow dynasty under which Confucius flourished (b. B.C. 551: died 478), lasted from B. C. 1100 to 250. In its period of decadence, during which the great Chinese sages, Confucius and Mencius lived, and in the period of the "warring states" which succeeded, the great house of Tsin was dreaded by the rest of China. In B. C. 220, the prince of this house, Shin Hwang, made himself Emperor of China, and made the empire one. He destroyed the ancient books to blot out all remembrance of former sovereigns, and built the Great Wall, 1250 miles long, to keep out the Tartar tribes on the North. From this family the Western name for China was derived. It was known as Sin, Chin, Sinae, China and Sinim. The latter term is found in Is. 49: 12. The best commentators are agreed that it refers to China, lying to the east of Palestine; the other points of the compass are mentioned, the south ("from afar") the north and the west. Though not yet masters of the empire in Isaiah's time (unless we admit the late date of the latter part of the prophecies of Isaiah), still Tsin was the most powerful lordly house, and was in that part of China which would naturally have the most intercourse with Western Asia. The Chinese were also known as Seres (the "silk men"), a name derived from the Chinese name for silk. Hence Serica or Seric garments became the Latin term for silk. In the Middle Ages, China was known as Cathay. This is derived from the Ki-Tans, or Khi-Tai, another tribe which ruled in China. Ki-Tai is the name by which the Chinese are known at the present day among the Russians, and the people of Central Asia. It will be remembered in connection with our own country, that Columbus set out for Cathay and Zipanga (Japan) when he discovered America. The Chinese usually call themselves men of Han, the dynasty which succeeded Tsin; or men of Tang (A. D. 620).

Semi-historical China goes back as far as B. C. 2249, at which date astronomical observations recorded in Chinese annals have been verified by modern calculations. It has been governed by different families of Chinese, as well as by different Tartar tribes, as the Mongols in 1269 under Kublai Khan and the Manchus (1618) under the present reigning family. Foreign intercourse has extended through many centuries with many interruptions. Traders from the west visited Canton by sea in the thirteenth century, as recorded by Arabian historians, so that foreign influence has made itself felt there for 1600 years.

Just as there is a unity in Christendom based on the fact that our civilization is founded on a common respect for the Bible and the acceptance of certain principles of international law, so there is a unity among the Chinese founded on the fact that for centuries they have accepted the Confucian classics as their standard of morality and civil government, and have been for 2000 years, theoretically at least, under the sway of a common Emperor.

* * *

Protestant missionaries, have been accused of being too ready to have recourse to "the inevitable gun-boat." Of course missionaries are subjects and citizens just as much as merchants and travelers are; and if protection for them and their interests were withdrawn, the Chinese authorities would soon find an excuse for expelling them altogether. If all the native mandarins would only consent to deal fairly and honorably with missionaries and their converts, as some of them are inclined to do, there would be little need for gun-boats; but as long as they foment mobs and try to curry favor with the heathen by treating native Christians as rebels, and missionaries as pests, they render the protection of foreign Powers necessary to preserve the lives and property of those who are under their care. Let Chinese mandarins but treat us as fairly as our judges do the Chinese and there would be no trouble.

The solidarity of foreigners in China is such, and the effrontery of the ruling class is such, that one cannot separate himself from the mass without involving the cause which is dearer than life. Let the Chinese authorities but show themselves worthy of confidence and determined to do what is right, and missionaries will not object to put themselves in their power, but as long as men like Chang Chi Tung are high in authority, we must rely on our rights as citizens, as Paul did. With the Sung Po massacre and the subsequent treatment of all concerned in it fresh in their minds, men will be slow to desire to commit themselves to the tender mercies of plausible but malignant Chinese mandarins. While the Chinese have themselves to blame almost entirely for any appeal to force on the part of Western governments, still missionaries who go forth as ambassadors of the Prince of Peace should be slow to avail themselves of any appeal to the force of arms. There is no doubt whatever that, with the assumption of rank and the appeal to force out of the way, the Chinese authorities would be inclined to look more favorably on missionary enterprise.

* From Forty Years in China, or China in Transition.

What's the use of having a first-rate lamp if you put a wrong chimney on it?

The "Index to Chimneys" tells what chimney belongs to every lamp and burner.

Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa, will send it free.

Pearl glass, pearl top, tough glass.

Walter Baker & Co. Limited,

The Largest Manufacturers of
PURE, HIGH GRADE
COCOAS and CHOCOLATES
On this Continent, have received
HIGHEST AWARDS
from the great
Industrial and Food
EXPOSITIONS
IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Caution: In view of the many imitations of the labels and wrappers on our goods, consumers should make sure that our place of manufacture, namely, Dorchester, Mass. is printed on each package.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD. DORCHESTER, MASS.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send Name and Address and we will mail you one quarter of a Sample Package of Last Importation. Any kind you may order. Good Inducements to Agents. Address
The Great American Tea Co.
P. O. Box 31 & 33 Vesey St. New York

WATCHES, Best line lowest prices. Catalogue free. KIRTLAND BROS & CO 62 Fulton street New York.

GUNS. Marlin Fire Arms Record

GET Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate Pure, wholesome, convenient, made in a jiffy — NO BOILING.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY, New York.
BROOKLYN, New York.
COLLIER, St. Louis.
CORNELL, Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh.
JEWETT, New York.
KENTUCKY, Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY, Cleveland.
MISSOURI, St. Louis.
RED SEAL, St. Louis.
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN, Chicago.
SOUTHERN, St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER, New York.
UNION, "

The Leading.

One of the leading and best know painters in this country says, "I cannot affor to use anything but Pure White Lead" (se list of brands). Every practical painte knows this. It is only those who haven any reputation to lose who don't know it, c will use misleading brands of White Lea or unknown worthless mixtures. Althoug low-priced, they are not cheap. Pure Whit Lead is the cheapest, because it is the bes

If colors are required they are easily made by using the Nati Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead tinting colors. Pamphlet and color-c sent free.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New Yorl

Fall 1895.

Opening of Carpets & Oriental Rugs.

With our opening of new designs and colorings, we shall offer past season's patterns,

Best quality of
Wilton, $1.50; formerly $2.25.
Axminster, $1.00; formerly $1.50.
Velvet, 90c.; formerly $1.25.
Moquette, 80c.; formerly $1.00.
and a variety of Rugs,
all sizes made of remnants of fine Carpets, at about 70 cts. per yd.

This sale at both Stores.

Lord & Taylor

UP-TOWN STORE:
Broadway & 20th St.
DOWN-TOWN STORE:
Grand & Chrystie Sts.

WALL PAPER

SAMPLES FREE from the factories not controlled by the Wall Paper Trust, at prices fully 30 per cent. lower than others.

White Blanks that retail at 10c., 4c. a roll.
New Lustres " " 15c., 7c. " "
Embossed Golds " " 30c., 15c. " "
Other grades and borders as low.

DEALERS write for large books by express and TRADE DISCOUNT
KAYSER & ALLMAN,
The Largest Wall Paper Concern in the U. S.
932-934 Market Street, PHILADELPHIA.
418 Arch Street.

Ideal Spring Beds Our booklet, "Wide awake in a silent sleep," explaining and describing them together with an up-to-date pocket map of your State, sent on receipt of three 2-cent stamps.
Foster Bros. M'f'g Co., Cuy St., Utica N Y

Turkish TOWELS

A big Turkish Towel—not too harsh—a is the most refreshing rub after the bath. We have just the right kind, they are 22 inches in size and are made of undr double yarn. Shrewd buying enables to sell them at the remarkably low price of 18 Cents Eacl, or Two for 35 Cents.

We pay the postage.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIE
Dry Goods, PHILADELPHIA

Corticelli Color Car

It sho more than 200 which we Corticelli Darn Wash, Silks, different sizes and Kinds, inclu Roman Cr Keepe St Ed Embroider Stitches Lace Stit Silk, Pl Crochet S and Knitting

Four Gold Me have been added to Cortic Silk for Sm We ma of these cards 12 cents.

"Florence Home Needlework" f is now ready. Subjects: Lace Embroidery Embroidery (new designs), Crochet, and Colors for Flowers. Send 6 cents, mentioning and we will mail you the book, 96 pages, 66 illustrations.

NONOTUCK SILK CO., Florence, Mass.

A FEW OF T STRONG POINTS OF THE B&H LAMPS

Bradley & Hubbard Mfg. Co., New York, Boston, Chicago, Pi

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, mouse Flies, Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. (to cover cost of mailing, etc.)
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. City.

GOD'S CHARIOTS.

Everything that comes to us becomes a chariot the moment we treat it as such; and on the other hand, the greatest trials may be a juggernaut car to crush us into misery and despair if we so consider them. It lies with each of us to choose which they shall be. It all depends, not upon what these events are but upon how we take them. If we lie down under them, let them roll over us and crush us, they become juggernaut cars, but if we climb up into them, as into a car of victory, and make them carry us triumphantly onward and upward, they become chariots of God. HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

THOUGH I must meet with trials,
Though fear my heart must know,
Though grief should pour its vials,
And pain its touch bestow,
I'll trust in God above me,
Who knows the way I take,
Who will not cease to love me,
And never will forsake.

My trials are God's chariots,
In which my soul may climb,
And ride to heights of faith and joy,
Above the storms of time.
My trials are God's chariots—
Who would not gladly ride
Far, far above all anxious care,
And in God's peace abide?

When Satan's wiles would vex me,
When foes would try to harm,
When doubts would fain perplex me,
Or dread and care alarm,
I know what God has told me,
So on his strength I lean,
That never fails to hold me,
And keep my soul serene.

Then in all tribulation,
O let my soul rejoice,
And sing of God's salvation
With glad, triumphant voice.
Welcome all he chooses,
Though tears mine eyes shall dim,
For everything he uses
Can bring me near to him.

Wand, N. Y. MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

KOREA'S TRANSFORMATION.

In a letter from Pyeng Yang, Korea, Rev. S. A. Moffat, a missionary, gives this interesting account of a significant event in the country: "The Yen Cho Gate has been taken down. Its two large stone pillars are now all that was left of the gate which for years has stood as a monument of Korea's dependence upon China. Under this gate the Korean King and the Imperial Chinese Messenger met, the former prostrating himself three times, with three knocks of the head to the ground. Each time he bowed before the imperial inscription thus humbly acknowledging his dependence upon the 'August Ruler.' As long as this gate stood it was a perpetual reminder to the people not only that Korea was but a dependency, but also that they owed to the 'Great Nation' their deliverance from the Japanese invasion 300 years ago. The gate is said to have been built before that invasion and called the Yen Cho Gate, or the 'Gate for the Reception of the Imperial Message.' After the Mings had driven the Japanese out of Pyeng Yang and out of Korea 300 years ago, the gate was called the Yeng Eun Gate, or the 'Gate for the Reception of Grace,' this in acknowledgment of Korea's great indebtedness to China.

"Its removal was significant. China has forfeited her claim to Korea's gratitude, and the removal of the gate set the seal upon Korea's 'Declaration of Independence.' The effect upon the people has been most marked. The Koreans acknowledge China's defeat, although they are thunderstruck and at a loss to account for the fact that the once despised Japanese were able effectually to overcome the long revered Chinese."

SLAVERY IN ZANZIBAR.

Zanzibar is a British Protectorate, and the slave trade is forbidden by treaties. The difference between legality and reality is shown by Mr. Donald Mackenzie in a report of a visit to Zanzibar and Pemba Island as special commissioner of the Anti-Slavery Society. He found slaves everywhere, and a flourishing import and export trade in slaves. The Sultan of Zanzibar himself owns 30,000 slaves, and out of a population of 400,000 souls no fewer than 260,000 are slaves. The serious feature is that the trade is financed by British Indians resident in Zanzibar, who have heavy mortgages on the slave-cultivated clove plantations. Even the porters used by merchants and missionaries between the coast and the interior of Africa are slaves, for though they are paid directly, they have to pay over a portion of the money they receive regularly to their owners.

HE CALLETH THEE.

Be of good comfort, rise. He calleth thee.—Mark 10:49.

WHEN billows of sorrow sweep over thy soul,
And storms of adversity over thee roll;
When with tear-blinded eye, and agonized heart—
Thou seest the joys of the present depart;
When no rift in the clouds thy dulled vision may see—
Then be of good comfort, for He calleth thee.

When shadows enfold thee, obscuring thy way,
And the night seems to linger far into the day;
When the cross laid upon thee seems bearing thee down,
And thou fain would'st exchange for a glorified crown;
When friends whom thou lovest forsake thee and flee—
Then be of good comfort, for He calleth thee.

And when at thy feet the dark Jordan shall roll,
When anxiously waiting the flight of the soul;
And when at thy side, the grim Reaper shall stand,
And thou feelest the chill of his withering hand,
Then look unto Jesus, who setteth thee free,
And "be of good comfort, rise, He calleth thee."

Housatonic, Mass. FLORA E. W. TORREY

Consumption Cured.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE:
"As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies, and very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,

(Rev'd) C. H. Spurgeon.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

FOR

Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis,

Acts like a charm in ordinary Coughs, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough. Send 25 cents for Book on Consumption, containing accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, or the Book will be sent free with trial bottle for $1.00. Larger sizes, $1.75, $3.75, $7.

GEO. T. CONGREVE,
367 Canal St., New York,
and London, England.

A Mountain of Dishes confronts the average housewife after all the family have dined. They are greasy dishes, too, and hard to get perfectly clean with ordinary soap and water. A good many thoughtful wives have discovered that the best, easiest and quickest way to wash dishes is to use in the dish water. It acts like magic—cuts the grease and makes the dishes clean. All cleaning is made easier by this great cleanser. It is cheap, too—that's the best of it. 25c. for a large package. Sold by all grocers.

GOLD DUST
Washing Powder

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

BIG BARGAINS IN FLOWERS

What You Can Buy for 50 Cents.

Set A-10 Best Double Hyacinths, 10 kinds,	50cts	Set J-60 Crocus, all colors, handsome, -	50cts
" B-10 Best single Hyacinths, 10 kinds, - -	50cts	" K- 4 Chinese Sacred Lilies, - - - -	50cts
" C- 5 Single and 5 Double Hyacinths, 10 kinds.	50cts	" L-10 Choice Winter Blooming Roses, -	50cts
" D-12 Ass't. Hyacinths, Double Single & Roman,	50cts	" M-10 Choice Geraniums, all different, -	50cts
" E-15 Choicest Varieties Narcissus, -	50cts	" O- 6 Carnations, ready to bloom, - -	50cts
" F-35 Best Double Tulips, all different, - -	50cts	" P-12 Choice Prize Winning Chrysanthemums	50cts
" G-35 Best Single Tulips, all different, -	50cts	" S- 4 Elegant Decorative Palms, - - -	50cts
" H-40 Ass't. Tulips, Double, Single and Parrot,	50cts

You may select half of any two sets for 50 cents, or 3 complete sets for $1.25, any 5 sets for $2.00, the entire 15 sets for $5.00; or half of each set for $2.50. Get your neighbor to club with you and get yours FREE. Our catalogue free. ORDER TO-DAY. THE GREAT WESTERN PLANT CO., Springfield, Ohio.

SAVE ½ your FUEL

By using our (stove pipe)
RADIATOR with its 120 Cross Tubes,
ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO.
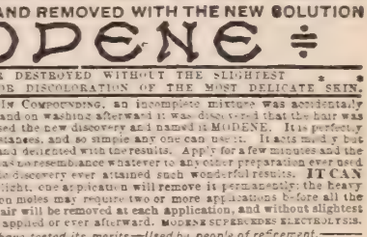
Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

To Introduce our Radiator
the first order from each neighborhood filled at wholesale price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

Rochester Radiator Company,
15 Furnace Street, ROCHESTER, N. Y.



HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON

QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

÷ MODENE ÷

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied as per directions. MODENE SUPERSEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

—Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.—

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety packing cases, postage paid, securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED.

MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A.
Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations.
You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.

We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!
A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that it will cure any form of Dyspepsia or indigestion, that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by all druggists at 50 cts. Address,
F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE
WITH A COMBINATION BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP
FOR $10.00 THE LARKIN SOAP MFG CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.
We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address,
Altenheim Medical Dispensary,
127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

All Skin Disorders

from simple Pimples to obstinate Eczema and Tetter can be quickly and permanently cured by the simple application of

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

It makes the skin soft, smooth and healthy, producing a clear and brilliant complexion.
50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO.,
531 Commerce St., Philadelphia.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.
The Family Wash Blue. ALWAYS RELIABLE.
For Sale by Grocers.
D. S. WILTBERGER, 233 N. 2d St., Phila. Pa.

WONDER CABINET FREE, Mammoth Premium Fancy Trinket Pocket Cabinet, Lacquered, with Mirror, Stamp Photos, Total Value 60c., sent Free with immense catalogue of 1000 Bargains for 10c. for postage.
INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

"Thoughtless folks have the hardest work, but quick witted people use SAPOLIO

Pears'

Can I afford to use it?

Yes; you can't afford not to; but that is not the reason for using it.

You See Them Everywhere

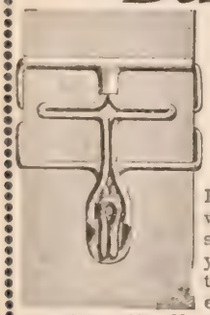
Satisfaction and Speed in

Columbia Bicycles

The famous Hartford Single-Tube Tires with which Columbia Bicycles are equipped add much to the pleasure Columbia riders have in bicycling. Even the dreaded puncture loses its terrors with Hartford Single-Tubes. Repaired in a minute. Anyone can do it. Dunlop tires, best of double tubes, if you prefer.

POPE MFG. CO.

The Buckle that Holds



The Harris Wire Buckle holds the web firmly—never slips, stays where you put it. Easiest to adjust, strongest, nearly indestructible. The Harris Wire Buckle Suspenders (25 cts.) have other advantages, which we want you to know about.

Send 2 cents for Sick Fob with gold plated buckle and book about Wire Buckle Suspender Co., Williamsport, Pa.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes

THE EGAN TRUSS CURES RUPTURE

A painless and permanent

Fully Guaranteed

Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO.,
27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MICH.

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Use. Trade Mark Registered. Sold by Leading Dry Goods Dealers. Send for Booklet.

HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL CO.,
36 Broadway, New York.

"LINCOLN" Ben Butterlock, Automatic Action, Price $1.00
"JACKSON" 3-Lever Padlock, Brass, Price $1.00

MILLER LOCK CO.,
Box F 25, Philadelphia, Pa.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.

Pier [illegible] N. R. New York.

What do You Think of This!

TIME speeds on—before you realize it Christmas is at hand and the worry of selecting gifts begins. An inexpensive gift that will give pleasure and be of utility and at the same time suggest appropriateness is one of the most difficult problems that confronts us at holiday times. The trouble is we put it off too long. Nothing seems to suggest itself as "just the thing" and thus the important duty of selecting our gifts is left till the last minute and one must then "take what is left." The readers of The Christian Herald should not be of the dilly-dally sort. The World's Fair souvenir spoons are just the thing. And as bridal or birthday gifts it would be a hard matter to find another gift so pleasing to the donor, at such a small price. One lady writes:

STAUNTON, VA., June 27, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I received the spoons O. K and am more than pleased with them. I am delighted.

I presented one set as a bridal present and they attracted more attention and admiration than any of the other presents.

Enclosed please find postoffice order for the amount $6.00 for which you will please forward six sets of your "World's Fair souvenir spoons and the cake basket which you offer as premium for same. Yours truly,

(Signed) LILLIE V. CROFT,
318 Fayette St.

TOM'S CREEK, P. O., MCDOWELL CO.,
July 2, 1895.

Gentlemen:—The half dozen souvenir spoons came safely and I am pleased with them. Respectfully (Signed) JAS. HARVEY GREENLEE.

Dear Sirs:—My spoons are beauties. I am very proud of them. There are not more than 25 people here but I will try to get up that club, I want some more so much.

(Signed) MRS. FLORA G. WILLIAMS,
Inter Lachen, Fla.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., July 15, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Dear Sirs:—Your prompt delivery is appreciated. The spoons received and were very much pleased with them. They are very pretty I think you will get another order from here, from a party who has seen mine.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) MISS M. L. BARTLETT,
1330 St. Mary's Ave.

STUART, NEB., July 2, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:—Enclosed find postoffice money order for $11.88 which please send me the 12 sets of souvenir spoons and premium.

The set I received yesterday are pronounced excellent.

DESCRIPTION OF SOUVENIR SPOONS.

They are standard after-dinner coffee size, heavily coin silver plated, with gold plated bowls, each spoon has a different World's Fair building exquisitely engraved in the bowl, and the handle are finely chased, showing a raised head of Christopher Columbus with the dates 1492-1893, and the World's Fair City. The set is packed in an elegant plush lined case. The entire set is sent prepaid for 99 cents, and if not perfectly satisfactory your money will be refunded.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Below will be found a few of the many thousands of cordial letters we are receiving from delighted purchasers. These are not old letters but new ones as may be seen from their dating. They are all letters from subscribers of religious papers.

BALTIMORE, July 2, 1895.
To the Messrs. Leonard Mfg. Co.

I received the spoons and berry dish in good condition. Many thanks for your kindness. Please find money order for six more sets with which you will also send the spoons as premium. By so doing you will oblige

MRS. DR. AUGUST HOESS, 732 W. Mulberry St.

MERIDEN, MISS., Aug. 6, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co.

Gentlemen:—I send enclosed postoffice order for $7.50 for which please send to my address the same set of your souvenir spoons containing tablespoons, teaspoons and butter plates six of each and berry bowl and cream spoon. Also one set of World's Fair [illegible]. Please send a cake basket as premium for the souvenir spoons. I think I can get orders for several sets through whom I have one to show the ladies, also butter dishes. This is the tenth set of spoons that I have ordered of you. All are pleased with them. Please address

MRS. FRANK MEYERS, 343 41st Ave.

Trusting to hear from you promptly as I did on my last order, I am, Yours truly,

S. L. ANDERSON.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., July 3, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I enclose a money order for $5.94 for six sets of your souvenir spoons at 99c. for each set.

Would say I am very much pleased with my set of souvenir spoons and they are admired by every one. Very respectfully,

(Signed) MISS MARY VASSIE HARTMAN,
1511 Rock St.

5 Mansfield St., ALSTON, MASS.

Dear Sirs:—I feel very much pleased with my spoons, and will endeavor to send you six orders soon. Yours respectfully, (Signed) MISS PARKER.

FORT MORGAN, COLO., July 8, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I received your card this morning in regard to the spoons sent us. The spoons came all right and we were well pleased with them. Mrs. Seckner showed them to a few of her lady friends, and all wanted them but all did not feel as though they could take them.

Yours truly,
REV. H. D. SECKNER

SUMMARY.

If the reader will glance over the "Description of the Souvenir Spoons" there can be no doubt of the genuine bargain that is offered.

The six spoons in plush lined case will be sent prepaid on receipt of 99 cents by P. O. or express money order. Do not send individual checks. If you are not satisfied with them the money will be refunded. No goods sent C. O. D. Address order plainly. LEONARD MFG. CO.,
152-153 Michigan Ave., G. B. Chicago.

METAL WHEELS for your WAGONS.

Any size you want, 20 to 56 in. high. Tires 1 to 5 in. wide—hubs to fit any axle. Saves Cost many times in a season to have set of low wheels to fit your wagon for hauling grain, fodder, manure, logs, &c. No resetting of tires. Cat'g free. Address EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

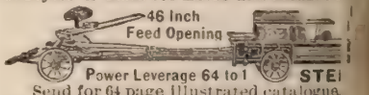
NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking. Cleaning. Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

"Eli" Baling Press

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power



Send for 64 page Illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

MY HUSBAND Cut this out and send to us

$60 Kenwood Machine for $ 0
$50 Arlington Machine for $ 0
Standard Singers $8.00, $15.00, and 27 other styles at proportionately low prices. We pay freight on all machines we ship. Ship on 30 days free trials in any state without asking one cent in advance. Buy direct from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue free. Many medals Free. Write at once. Mention this paper. Cash in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., Dept. 18, Chicago, Ill.

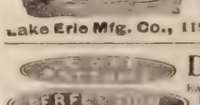
NO DIRT LET

In clothes washed with "BUSY BEE WASH" 100 pieces in one hour, no hard work, 100 per cent. the record. AGENTS WANTED. Sample sale. Write for terms.

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.



Delicate Cake

Easily removed without injuring Perfection Tins. Square and oblong tins by mail 40 cts. Circulars free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

MY WIFE CAN NOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT $9.00

Rotary Motion Sewing Machine with improved Automatic Tension and Self-Threading Shuttle, guaranteed for 10 years, complete with all attachments and instruction book. FREE on 30 days' trial. OXFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO.

CARD PRINTER FREE

Sets of rubber type and holder. Type like this. Ink and Tweezers. Best home novelty ever invented. Samples and full particulars for 2c. stamp.

R. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. NUMBER 38.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor. Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 18, 1895.

PRICE 5 CENTS. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

COPYRIGHT 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

ONE GODLY WOMAN'S WORK.

Dr. Grace N. Kimball's Heroic Effort to Succor the Starving Armenians—Hundreds of Families Employed and Fed for Weeks, but her Means are now Exhausted—Thousands Naked and Hungry, and Living in Mountain Caves.

AMONG the multitude of correspondence received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the past week was the following letter from a Western lady:

AN ARMENIAN CARRIAGE.

PRAIRIE CITY, Ill., Sept. 12, 1895.

Dr. Louis Klopsch:

DEAR SIR: — Enclosed please find draft for $——, which I wish you to remit to the missionary in most need of relief, as part of my yearly contribution. I would be pleased to know through your columns where this contribution is given.

J. ——.

Of course in connection with this generous gift I have been requested by Dr. Grace N. Kimball, an American missionary, laboring in Turkish Armenia, and the intelligence received from that unfortunate land be confirmed by inquiries now being made, the contribution will in all likelihood prove to be the first of many others which will follow from thousands of Christian men and women throughout the United States, who seek out every opportunity to relieve human suffering, wherever found.

Civil war in that portion of Kurdistan occupied by the Armenians has left the country in a most deplorable plight. After the troubles of a year ago, when the atrocities of the half savage Kurds decimated the population of many villages in the districts of Sassoun and Dalvorig, the returning fugitives had neither the means nor the opportunity to cultivate the soil which their forefathers had possessed for many generations. Their homes had been wrecked, their farms destroyed, and their implements and cattle seized by the bandit mountaineers, and they were compelled to seek such shelter as the woods and caves afforded. In a recent letter, Miss Kimball states that in the two districts mentioned, at least 5000 were living in the mountains in this pitiful way, and faring little better than wild beasts. They were sustaining life on roots and berries and were almost naked—many wholly so. It is not surprising that this terrible privation should have bred disease, and, when she wrote, fever and other physical troubles were carrying the wretched people off in large numbers. She described the condition of the women and little children as miserable beyond anything she had ever heard of.

A KURDISH HOUSE AND ITS INMATES

This brave Christian woman did not spend the time in lamenting the wretchedness of the people among whom she labored, but set about to find out some practical way of helping them. Food, clothing, and shelter were the three prime necessities. She gathered the adults in about one hundred of the fugitive families, and soon had them employed at making cotton cloth—an industry with which they were already familiar. She supplied the material, and paid the workers for their labor, expending in this way about $100 weekly, which was applied to the relief of the families. By this excellent method, she gave the needed help to many of the sufferers without pauperizing them, and she earned the warmest love and gratitude of the Armenians. But the market for the product of this labor was soon supplied and the cloth could no longer be sold. Besides, the draft upon the none too extensive resources of the missionary—who was doubtless aided by friends—soon exhausted them, and the end of the experiment at relief was clearly in sight, unless others came to the rescue. It was this condition of affairs, when the outlook seemed ominous, that urged Dr. Kimball to let the world know the true situation of the Armenians, and prompted her to write, in anguish of soul, that

AN ENCAMPMENT OF KURDS IN THE MOUNTAINS OF ASIA MINOR.

Continued on page 603.

FIVE PICTURES.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 7: 56-60, "Behold, I see the heavens opened."

STEPHEN had been preaching a rousing sermon, and the people could not stand it. They resolved to do as men sometimes would like to do in this day, if they dared, with some plain preacher of righteousness—kill him. The only way to silence this man was to knock the breath out of him. So they rushed Stephen out of the gates of the city, and with curse, and whoop, and bellow, they brought him to the cliff, as was the custom when they wanted to take away life by stoning. Having brought him to the edge of the cliff, they pushed him off. After he had fallen they came and looked down, and seeing that he was not yet dead, they began to drop stones upon him, stone after stone. Amid this horrible rain of missiles, Stephen clambers up on his knees and folds his hands, while the blood drips from his temples; and then, looking up, he makes two prayers—one for himself and one for his murderers. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit;" that was for himself. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" that was for his murderers. Then, from pain and loss of blood, he swooned away and fell asleep.

I want to show you to-day five pictures: Stephen gazing into heaven. Stephen looking at Christ. Stephen stoned. Stephen in his dying prayer. Stephen asleep.

First, look at Stephen gazing into heaven. Before you take a leap you want to know where you are going to land. Before you climb a ladder you want to know to what point the ladder reaches. And it was right that Stephen, within a few moments of heaven, should be gazing into it. We would all do well to be found in the same posture. There is enough in heaven to keep us gazing. A man of large wealth may have statuary in the hall, and paintings in the sitting-room, and works of art in all parts of the house, but he has the chief pictures in the art gallery, and there hour after hour you walk with catalogue and glass and ever-increasing admiration. Well, heaven is the gallery where God has gathered the chief treasures of his realm. The whole universe is his palace. In this lower room where we stop there are many [illegible]ments; tessellated floor of amethyst, and on the winding cloud-stairs are stretched out canvas on which commingle azure, and purple, and saffron, and gold. But heaven is the gallery in which the chief glories are gathered. There are the brightest robes. There are the richest crowns. There are the highest exhilarations. St. John says of it: "The kings of the earth shall bring their honor and glory into it." And I see the procession forming, and in [illegible] and the stars spring up into an arch for the hosts to march under. They keep step to the sound of earthquake and the pitch of avalanche from the mountains, and the flag they bear is the flame of a consuming world, and all heaven turns out with harps and trumpets and myriad-voiced acclamation of angelic [illegible] and so the [illegible] into it. Do you wonder that good [illegible] stand, like Stephen looking into heaven? We have many friends there. There is not a man here so isolated in life but there is some one in heaven with whom he once shook hands. As a man gets older, the number of his celestial acquaintances very rapidly multiplies. We have not had one glimpse of them since the night we kissed them good-bye, and they went away; but still we stand gazing at heaven. As when some of our friends go across the sea, we stand on the dock, or on the steamtug, and watch them, and after awhile the hulk of the vessel disappears, and then there is only a patch of sail on the sky, and soon that is gone, and they are all out of sight, and yet we stand looking in the same direction; so when our friends go away from us into the future world we keep looking down through the Narrows, and gazing and gazing as though we expected that they would come out and stand on some cloud, and give us one glimpse of their blissful and transfigured faces.

While you long to join their companionship, and the years and the days go with such tedium that they break your heart, and the vipers of pain, and sorrow, and bereavement keep gnawing at your vitals, you will stand, like Stephen, gazing into heaven. You wonder if they have changed since you saw them last. You wonder if they would recognize your face now, so changed has it been with trouble. You wonder if, amid the myriad delights they have, they care as much for you as they used to when they gave you a helping hand and put their shoulder under your burdens. You wonder if they look any older; and sometimes in the evening-tide, when the house is all quiet, you wonder if you should call them by their first name if they would not answer; and perhaps sometimes you do make the experiment, and when no one but God and yourself are there you distinctly call their names, and listen, and sit gazing into heaven.

Pass on now, and see Stephen looking upon Christ. My text says he saw the Son of Man at the right hand of God. Just how Christ looked in this world, just how he looks in heaven, we cannot say. The painters of the different ages have tried to imagine the features of Christ, and put them upon canvas; but we will have to wait until with our own eyes we see him and with our own ears we can hear him. And yet there is a way of seeing him and hearing him now. I have to tell you that unless you see and hear Christ on earth, you will never see and hear him in heaven.

Look! There he is! Behold the Lamb of God! Can you not see him? Then pray to God to take the scales off your eyes. Look that way—try to look that way. His voice comes down to you this day—comes down to the blindest, to the deafest soul, saying, "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, for I am God, and there is none else." Proclamation of universal emancipation for all slaves. Tell me, ye who know most of the world's history, what other king ever asked the abandoned, and the forlorn, and the wretched, and the outcast to come and sit beside him? Oh, wonderful invitation! You can take it to-day, and stand at the head of the darkest alley in all this city, and say, "Come! Clothes for your rags, salve for your sores, a throne for your eternal reigning." A Christ that talks like that and acts like that, and pardons like that—do you wonder that Stephen stood looking at him? I hope to spend eternity doing the same thing. I must see him; I must look upon that face once clouded with my sin, but now radiant with my pardon. I want to touch that hand that knocked off my shackles. I want to hear the voice that pronounced my deliverance. Behold him, little children; for if you live to three-score years and ten, you will see none so fair. Behold him, ye aged ones; for he only can shine through the dimness of your failing eyesight. Behold him, earth. Behold him, heaven. What a moment when all the nations of the saved shall gather around Christ! All faces that way. All thrones that way, gazing on Jesus.

His worth if all the nations knew
Sure the whole earth would love him, too.

I pass on now, and look at Stephen stoned. The world has always wanted to get rid of good men. Their very life is an assault upon wickedness. Out with Stephen through the gates of the city. Down with him over the precipices. Let every man come up and drop a stone upon his head. But these men did not so much kill Stephen as they killed themselves. Every stone rebounded upon them. While these murderers were transfixed by the scorn of all good men, Stephen lives in the admiration of all Christendom. Stephen stoned, but Stephen alive. So all good men must be pelted. "All who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution." It is no eulogy of a man to say that everybody likes him. Show me any one who is doing all his duty to State or Church, and I will show you scores of men who utterly abhor him.

If all men speak well of you, it is because you are either a laggard or a dolt. If a steamer makes rapid progress through the waves, the water will boil and foam all around it. Brave soldiers of Jesus Christ will hear the carbines click. When I see a man with voice, and money, and influence all on the right side, and some caricature him, and some sneer at him, and some denounce him, and men who pretend to be actuated by right motives conspire to cripple him, to cast him out, to destroy him, I say, "Stephen stoned."

When I see a man in some great moral or religious reform battling against grogshops, exposing wickedness in high places, by active means trying to purify the Church and better the world's estate, and I find that the newspapers anathematize him, and men, even good men, oppose him and denounce him, because, though he does good, he does not do it in their way, I say, "Stephen stoned." But you notice, my friends, that while they assaulted Stephen they did not succeed really in killing him. You may assault a good man but you cannot kill him. On the day of his death, Stephen spoke before a few people in the Sanhedrim; but on this Sabbath he addresses all Christendom. Paul the Apostle stood on Mars' Hill addressing a handful of philosophers who knew not so much about science as a modern schoolgirl. To-day he talks to all the millions of Christendom about the wonders of justification and the glories of resurrection. John Wesley was howled down by the mob to whom he preached, and they threw bricks at him, and they denounced him, and they jostled him, and they spat upon him, and yet to-day, in all lands, he is admitted to be the great father of Methodism. Booth's bullet vacated the Presidential chair; but from that spot of coagulated blood on the floor in the box of Ford's Theatre there sprang up the new life of a nation. Stephen stoned, but Stephen alive.

Pass on now, and see Stephen in his dying prayer. His first thought was not how the stones hurt his head, nor what would become of his body. His first thought was about his spirit. "Lord Jesus receive my spirit." The murderer standing on the trap-door, the black cap being drawn over his head before the execution, may grimace about the future: but you and I have no shame in confessing some anxiety about where we are going to come out. You are not all body. There is within you a soul. I see it gleam from your eyes to-day, I see it irradiating your countenance. Sometimes I am abashed before an audience not because I come under your physical eyesight, but because I realize the truth that I stand before so many immortal spirits. The probability is that your body will at least find a sepulchre in some of the cemeteries that surround this city. There no doubt but that your obsequies will be decent and respectful, and you will be asleep to pillow your head under the maple, the Norway spruce, or the cypress, or the cossoming fir; but this spirit about which Stephen prayed, what direction will that take? What guide will escort it? What gate will open to receive it? What cloud will be cleft for its pathway? After has got beyond the light of our sun, will there be torches lighted for it the rest of the way?

Will the soul have to travel through deserts before it reaches the good land we should lose our pathway, will there a castle at whose gate we may ask to the city? Oh, this mysterious within us! It has two wings, but a cage now. It is locked fast to but let the door of this cage open the and that soul is off. Eagle's wing not catch it. The lightnings are no enough to come up with it. When leaves the body it takes fifty work bound. And have I no anxiety about Have you no anxiety about it?

I do not care what you do with my when my soul is gone, or whether believe in cremation or inhumation. sleep just as well in a wrapping of cloth as in satin lined with eagle's But my soul—before I close this I will find out where it will land. God for the intimation of my text when we die Jesus takes us. The swers all questions for me. What there were massive bars between he the city of light, Jesus could remove What though there were great Sahara darkness, Jesus could illume them. though I get weary on the way, could lift me on his omnipotent What though there were chasms; his hand could transport me. Then Stephen's prayer be my dying "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." be in that hour we will be too feeble a long prayer. It may be in that hour will not be able to say the "Lord's Prayer," for it has seven petitions. Perhaps may be too feeble even to say the prayer our mothers taught us, while Quincy Adams, seventy years of age every night when he put his head on pillow:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.

We may be too feeble to employ either of these familiar forms; but this prayer Stephen is so short, is so concise, is so earnest, is so comprehensive, we surely will be able to say that: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Oh, if that prayer is answered, how sweet it will be to die This world is clever enough to us. Perhaps it has treated us a great deal better than we deserved to be treated; but if on the pillow there shall break the light that better world, we shall have no more regret than about leaving a small, dark lamp house for one large, beautiful, and cious. That dying minister in Philadelphia, some years ago, beautifully it when, in the last moment, he his hands and cried out: "I move light!"

Pass on now, and I will show more picture, and that is Stephen With a pathos and simplicity peculiar Scriptures, the text says of Stephen fell asleep." "Oh," you say, " place that was to sleep! A hard him, stones falling down upon blood streaming, the mob howling. a place it was to sleep!" And yet takes that symbol of slumber to darture. so sweet was it, so contented was so peaceful was it. Stephen had livea very laborious life. His chief work d been to care for the poor. How many ives of bread he had distributed, how ny bare feet he had sandalled, how many es of sickness and distress he had blessed h ministries of kindness and love, I do t know: yet from the way he lived, and e way he preached, and the way he died, know he was a laborious Christian. But t is all over now. He has pressed the e to the last fainting lip. He has taken t last insult from his enemies. The last ne to whose crushing weight he is sus-ctible has been hurled. Stephen is dead!

e disciples come! They take him up!
ey wash away the blood from the unds. They straighten out the bruised bs. They brush back the tangled hair m the brow, and then they pass around ook upon the calm countenance of him o had lived for the poor and died for the m. Stephen asleep!

have seen the sea driven with the hurne until the tangled foam caught in the ing, and wave rising above wave med as if about to storm the heavens, d then I have seen the tempest drop, and e waves crouch, and everything become ooth and burnished as though a camp-g place for the glories of heaven. So I ve seen a man, whose life has been toss-and driven, coming down at last to an finite calm, in which there was a hush of even's lullaby. Stephen asleep!

saw such an one. He fought all his s against poverty and against abuse.
ey traduced his name. They rattled at door-knob while he was dying, with ls for debts he could not pay: yet the ce of God brooded over his pillow, and ile the world faded, heaven dawned, and deepening twilight of earth's night was ly the opening twilight of heaven's rn. Not a sigh. Not a tear. Not a ggle. Hush! Stephen asleep.

have not the faculty as many have to l the weather. I can never tell by the ing sun whether there will be a drought not. I cannot tell by the blowing of the nd whether it will be fair weather or foul the morrow. But I can prophesy, and will prophesy what weather it will be en you, the Christian, come to die. You y have it very rough now. It may be s week one annoyance, the next another noyance. It may be this year one bevement, the next another bereavement.
t at the last Christ will come in and kness will go out. And though there y be no hand to close your eyes, and no last on which to rest your dying head, d no candle to lift the night, the odors of d's hanging garden will regale your l, and at your bedside will halt the riots of the King. No more rents to y, no more agony because flour has gone no more struggle with "the world, the sh, and the devil;" but peace—long, p, everlasting peace. Stephen asleep!

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose
Uninjured by the last of foes.
Asleep in Jesus, far from time
The inconstant thy grace may be;
But there is still a blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep.

You have seen enough for one day.
one can successfully examine more than e pictures in a day. Therefore we stop, ving seen this cluster of Divine Raphaels Stephen gazing into heaven; Stephen king at Christ; Stephen stoned; Stephen his dying prayer; Stephen asleep.

THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

HE bread that bringeth strength I want to give,
e water pure that bids the thirsty live;
ant to help the fainting day by day:
sure I shall not pass again this way.
ant to give the oil of joy for tears,
e faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears;
auty for ashes may I give away:
sure I shall not pass again this way.
ant to give good measure running o'er,
d into angry hearts I want to pour answer soft that turneth wrath away:
sure I shall not pass again this way.
ant to give to others hope and faith;
ant to do all that the Master saith:
ant to live aright from day to day:
sure I shall not pass again this way.

One Godly Woman's Work.

Continued from first page.

"unless relief comes, I pray God that I may not see the winter!" She dreaded the augmented suffering that must ensue, when the bleak, piercing winds of winter swept the mountains and plains of Kurdistan, carrying with them inconceivable distress to the wretched victims of war and famine.

Miss Kimball's picture of the condition of these people is corroborated by the letters of other missionaries as well as by official telegrams from the representatives of different governments. Already steps have been taken in England looking to the organization of a relief movement. The Armenian people, one of the most ancient races in the world, were converted to Christianity in the fourth century, and have preserved the faith amid many vicissitudes. It was the first part of the globe to be settled by the human race after the flood, and Mount Ararat, where the Ark rested, still rears its lofty crest, seventeen thousand feet in height, and overlooks the same landscape of valley, plain, and mountain that greeted the eyes of Noah and his companions when they gazed upon the new-risen earth after the subsidence of the Deluge. In a thousand ways it has a peculiar claim upon the interest and sympathy of the civilized world. Its Church has contributed many martyrs to the Christian cause; its people are brave, true, moral, and industrious. Their spiritual progress since the establishment of Protestant missions among them has been exceedingly encouraging. Much might be written on this point alone, but the present emergency in Turkish Armenia is not one of missions, but of bread, clothing, and shelter for a people rendered totally destitute by war, famine, and pestilence.

Turkish Armenia, the northwestern division of Kurdistan, is a great plateau of nearly sixty thousand square miles, bounded on the north by the Russian frontier, by Persia on the east, the plains of Mesopotamia on the west, and Asia Minor on the south. There are in all, at the present time, about 4,000,000 Armenians on the globe, of whom little more than half are in Turkey, and the rest in Russia, Persia, other Asiatic countries, Europe and America. In Armenia—the name and geographical existence of which are not recognized in Turkey—there are probably 600,000 native Armenians, or one-fourth of the whole number that are scattered throughout the Porte's dominions. The climate is temperate and bracing. Facilities for travel and transportation are exceedingly meagre, and all the methods employed by the natives are unusually primitive. "Valis," or municipal governors, are appointed by the government at Constantinople to administer the laws, and none but Moslems hold official positions.

AN ARMENIAN VILLAGE OF KURDISTAN.

Among the population are found many races, including Turks, Kurds, Russians, Circassians, and Jews, besides native Armenians. Fully one-half the people are Mohammedan. The Kurds lead a pastoral and predatory life, dwelling in mountain villages over the entire region. Their number is uncertain, but it is estimated that in the villages of Erzeroom, Van and Bitlis there are not less than 600,000. Some of these tribes are migratory, like the Bedouins of Syria. Almost all are warlike, and many have degenerated into lawless brigandage. For centuries they have made serfs of the Christians, trampling them under foot at every opportunity, and extending to them no toleration whatsoever. Our illustrations in this issue convey a fairly accurate impression of these rude mountaineers, who delight in bloodshed and pillage, and whose oppression of the Armenian villagers has precipitated the prevailing distress in Sassoun, Moosh, Bitlis, and the surrounding country. The Kurdish costumes are picturesque, and nearly all the tribesmen are magnificent horsemen. Of late years the government at Constantinople has organized them as a military force, and bestowed the name "Hamidieh" on their cavalry regiments, but their spirit, like that of the wild Arab, the Cossack, or the North American Indian, is one that scarcely brooks the restraints of military discipline. They are always formidably armed, and weapons in the hands of such a war-loving race are an incentive to disturbance and outrage. They have spread universal terror among the Armenians by their cruelty and frightful excesses for many centuries, but it has been reserved for our own time to witness such an exhibition of barbarism on their part as has filled Europe and America with horror. The slaughter at Dalvorig and Sassoun is a story too well known to be recapitulated here. The government at Constantinople has dismissed a number of officials who were guilty of extortion and of cruelly treating Armenians at Moosh, and at Bitlis a band of predatory Kurds was attacked by regular troops and punished severely for driving out Armenians and seizing their property. It is believed that important concessions regarding Kurdistan are in contemplation by the Porte, and that Christians may be represented in the government of the province hereafter. Meanwhile the missionaries and good people in different countries are extending what relief they can to the homeless and unfortunate villagers. Miss Kimball has set a splendid example of Christian effort and self-denial in her labors among those people, and she deserves to be supported in her humane, life-saving work. In our own land, now peaceful and fairly prosperous, enough is known of the terrors of famine—especially since the great crop-failure in the Western States last year—to awaken among us the sentiment of compassion for the Armenians who are now being tried in the furnace of affliction. We believe there is no quarter toward which practical Christian sympathy could turn where it would be so warmly welcomed, or would produce better results.

Rev. John Wright, another missionary, in a recent letter cites some frightful instances of Kurdish barbarity. He writes:

"In one instance, the Kurds, after compelling a family to provide food for their horses and themselves, smothered a babe which was asleep in the cradle, cut it in pieces and roasted it before the fire on their weapons, and then made the mother eat the flesh. In another case, when the Kurds had killed an Armenian, they joined hands and danced about the corpse, singing a song of triumph. They then cut up the corpse, boiled it, and forced the Armenians residing there to eat the flesh. Flocks were driven off, grain burned, and houses razed to the ground and burned. Many women died from fright, and the children also died from fright or exposure to the cold. We found that nearly half the members of the families we met had perished during the flight. They had great difficulty in securing food to eat. All of them had substantially the same harrowing tale to tell. About ten thousand refugees are estimated to have passed though the district of Khoi."

Cartoons That Caused Riots.

Some Specimens of the Pictorial Attacks on Christian Missionaries in China.

MUCH of the recent serious disturbances in China, culminating in the massacre of missionaries and the burning of mission buildings, is directly traceable to the efforts of the literary class to inflame the minds of the Chinese populace by means of cartoons and otherwise. There is a peculiar interest in perusing this incendiary literature. A book of cartoons, which belonged to the murdered missionary, Mr. Stewart, who lost his life at Whasang, has come into the possession of the London "Illustrated News," to which publication we are indebted for the illustration on this page, which is a fair sample of a very large number of cartoons of the same character.

"MISSIONARIES PUTTING OUT CHINAMEN'S EYES."

The cartoon has a grim significance in the light of the recent atrocities, for it represents the gouging out of eyes. It is the missionaries, however, who are represented as perpetrating this cruelty, and the explanatory and inflammatory letter-press accompanying the picture alleges that the agents of Christianity, "the Hog Sect," practise this barbarity on native Chinese converts, because "silver can be extracted from lead if the lead is combined with the eyes of Chinamen!" On the right of the drawing is a threatening legend to this effect—"You foreigners scoop out the eyes of men, and men will scoop out your eyes." In a second cartoon two foreigners are carrying Christianity, allegorically represented by a hog, to the door of Confucius, who will have nothing of it. Among other cartoons recently issued, is one along whose top runs the title: "The Beating of the Devils and the Burning of the Books." The "devils" are, of course, the foreigners: the books are Christian books. These cartoons are mild, compared with the majority of those in the volume owned by Mr. Stewart. Blasphemy and bigoted misrepresentations abound in them. The book is an exact facsimile of much of the Chinese incendiary literature which is prepared and published at Hunan and widely disseminated throughout the empire. Handbills, posters, placards, pamphlets of every description are brought to Hunan by the boat-load, and these are winked at by the Government, though they are a fruitful and undeniable cause of disturbance and of persecution. So certain is this, indeed, that in 1891, a reproduction was issued, under Christian auspices, "to the thoughtful few," and was entitled, "The Cause of the Riots in the Yangtse Valley—A Complete Picture Gallery." Christians are charged with almost every crime and all works of darkness.

Those who publish these extraordinary Chinese tracts are, it is affirmed, men of rank and education, who seek by downright falsehood to delude the ignorant masses, too easily swayed by verbal pictorial lies and blasphemies. Many of the cartoons cannot be described; yet it is plain that these pictures are just the very engines wherewith the mobs are most readily incited. Yet there is no trade in this literature: all is effected by voluntary subscription. In fact, the cartoons are characteristic Chinese "missionary leaflets"—the other way about.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

S.S. Lesson for Sept. 29. Golden Text 1. Kings 8: 56. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

"BLESSED be the Lord, that hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise which he promised by the hand of Moses, his servant." (I. Kings 8: 56.) Such was the testimony of the man who is described in God's Word as "wiser than all men." (I. Kings 4: 31.) In the lessons which have been before us during the past three months, chosen from the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy and Joshua, two threads may be discovered running throughout: the one is the utter failure of man, even in the most favorable circumstances, the other is the invariable faithfulness of God.

We began the Quarter with the ten commandments. Here was the knowledge of the will of God, given to a people who had been brought out from Egyptian slavery by the wondrous and miraculous interposition of God; their food, their clothing, their preservation from sickness — "there was not one feeble person among their tribes" (Ps. 105: 37)—all told of the watchful care, the intimate knowledge and loving provision of their heavenly Father. If there had been within them any goodness on which God could depend, they would have only sought to know the will of God that they might do it. But the event proved that it was not so; their words and their intentions were right enough. But they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies; and turned back and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers: "they were turned aside like a deceitful bow." And God himself said of their words at Sinai: "They have well said all that they have spoken. O that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children forever." (Deut. 5: 28. 29.)

Man failed: the law could not give life, and righteousness could not be by the law; man must break down and learn his utter ruin, so that he might understand the work of our great High Priest upon the Cross, carrying human nature embodied in his own Person to the Cross, there to be condemned and executed, and nothing more expected from it. If we have taken our part in the crucifixion of our old man on Christ's Cross, we shall make no promises to God, and no assertions of our good intentions to do his will; we shall have learned by bitter but true experience, that knowledge is not power in the things of God. But he whose body was broken, rent the veil of the temple and opened a new and living way to us, so that what is impossible to us is possible to him dwelling in us. "I am the Way," he says. "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yes, thy law is within my heart." If in every deed we have yielded ourselves up to him to dwell in, and control us, and [illegible] upon our minds, so that the law is fulfilled in us by an indwelling Christ who walks not after the flesh but after the Spirit, [illegible] to us.

The influence of Moses kept the people [illegible] them, but all their fair words and really good intentions did not make them to be really changed in heart. Idolatry was in their hearts, and circumstances sufficed to bring it out. Moses had to come down from his wondrous time of communing with God to find his people, after all God had done for them, holding a festival with heathen ceremonies to a golden calf, so breaking the holy commands of God which they had heard spoken by the voice of God himself, and which Moses had in God's handwriting on the very tables of stone which he held in his hand. And Aaron, who was to be the consecrated priest, on whom the holy anointing oil was to be poured, Aaron the brother and spokesman of Moses from whom he perhaps expected so much, was the leader in this awful idolatry!

Moses learned from the people what Paul learned from the searchlight of God's truth upon his own and other's hearts: "I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not." (Rom. 7: 16.) Later on, Moses with Elijah, saw what they never had understood during their life on earth, and on the mountain of transfiguration, these two men "spoke with Jesus of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." (Luke 9: 31.) The next generation of the priests were no better, although they had been consecrated in the most solemn manner, and the sin of Nadab and Abihu, in offering strange fire was dealt with as sin only can be dealt with by a holy God; they died before Lord. (Lev. 10: 2.)

But in spite of all the defection of his people, God's faithfulness to them was unchanged. Five times in Ps. 89, Ethan the Ezrahite celebrates God's faithfulness, and well he may. In all their journeys he continued with them, and took not away his holy presence from them. And yet they murmured again and again. They wanted to have a happy religion such as suited them, and to have everything pleasant and agreeable, everything their own way. They had grumbled and feared before crossing the Red Sea (Exod. 14: 12); they complained of the bitter waters of Marah. (Exod. 15: 26.) They murmured against [illegible] and Aaron, when they were hungry (Exod. 16: 2), and thirsty. (Exod. 17:2.) They were displeased because Moses spent so long a time with God (Exod. 32: 1); they were angry because there was no [illegible] (Num. 11: 1), and Miriam and Aaron, whom God had sent before the people with Moses (Mic. 6: 4), murmured against Moses. (Num. 12: 1, 2.) And when the spies had been sent by their own desire to spy out the land, and brought up an evil report of the land, they adopted the unfavorable report of the majority (Num. 14: 1, 2), always taking sides against God, until after the latter outbreak he was forced to send upon them the terrible judgment of wandering for life, a kind of equivalent to imprisonment for life. And even then, instead of bowing down in brokenness before him who still had not abandoned them, they became discouraged because of the way, and spoke against God and against Moses, so that he sent fiery serpents among them.

Yet in all this time of shameful perversity of the people, God was carrying out his own great purposes.

THE ROUTE OF THE ISRAELITES FROM EGYPT TO CANAAN.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

WHY do we study Jewish history? The question is natural at this time after the lessons of the past three months. Other nations have had strange and almost romantic beginnings; why select the Hebrew—a people now without national life—for minute and exhaustive study? The answer involves a momentous fact which should never be overlooked. We go to Hebrew history to learn what God is. He revealed himself to the world through that race. He made them an object lesson for all mankind. We cannot conceive of any other way in which he could so forcibly and clearly have made men acquainted with his character and the principles of his government of the world. In this record we see him as he is. Loving, gentle, tender, patient, bountiful to those who will do his will and submit themselves to his guidance; but intolerant of sin and with a fierce hatred of iniquity. The old Dispensation has passed away, but God is the same Being still. This fact invests the history of the Hebrew race with a special and momentous interest for every human being. The events of the period we have been studying during the past three months, present the lesson in most vivid colors. These events are not the myths of a child race, but a series of practical declarations of fundamental principles, set in vigorous action. Each lesson presents some phase of God's character, indicating an immutable principle of righteousness which he never suspends or abandons. When the people trust him and obey him they are protected and kept. But their obedience is not compulsory. God does not deal with men as with slaves. They refuse to obey his will, and they learn by forty years' wandering in the desert the folly of their lack of faith. God is good to them, feeding them with manna and keeping them safe from their enemies, but they suffer loss. So it is with Christians now. They suffer in themselves and they lose blessings that come only by faith and obedience. last they gain possession of the land, a so does the Christian enter at last into t rest of heaven.

God spake all these words. (Ex. 20: This should not be forgotten. People not think so badly of a man who lies ab another, or who covets something belon ing to another as they do of the man w steals or commits murder; but God forbi the one as he does the other, and he w breaks one command breaks the law, a is in need of pardon. The strength of chain is only the strength of its weak link; one wheel broken in a set of mach ery will render the whole inefficient. A m placed rail on a railway may result in fe ful disaster: one inch of wire cut out of t telegraph would prevent the use of all t rest; one failure in any law of nature m go on producing other failures. So t transgression of but one law of God pla offenders in the category of sinners, a closes all avenues to God but that of mer

Do not drink wine . . . lest ye die. (Lev 10: 9.) The obvious inference from lesson on Nadab and Abihu, was that t were intoxicated when they offered stra fire, which angered the Lord so that slew them. Many have lost their li since then from the same cause. Ju Talfourd said that he had kept a record the cases in which he had sentenced m derers to death, and it showed that in sev cases of every ten, the man had been u the influence of drink when he commit the crime. Other judges have borne s ilar testimony. One of the most path incidents on record, is that of a man w woke up from a heavy drunken sleep asked where he was. He was in a "What for?" "For killing your wif The man sprang to his feet, "My wife he shrieked, "Why I would not hurt a l of her head." The warden looked at h sadly, "You killed her, all the same, str her down with an empty bottle, fractu her skull and she is dead." The man g a deep groan and declared that if the l did not take his life, he would commit cide. He could not forgive himself.

Thou shalt teach them to thy childr (Deut. 6: 7.) Sometimes children die bef they grow up, so there ought not to be lay in teaching them the things of G John Ruskin, speaking of some people cottage, said: "Last spring they had a li boy full of intelligent life, and pearl of cl price to them. He went down to the r by the brookside (Beck Leven) one bri morning, where his elder brother was m ing. The child came up behind with speaking, and the back sweep of the scy caught the leg and divided a vein. His ther carried him up to the house and w swift binding could do was done. doctor, three miles away, coming as s as might be, arranged all for the best the child lay pale and quiet till the eveni speaking sometimes a little to his fat and mother. But at six in the evening began to sing. He sang on, clearer clearer, all through the night—so clear last you might have heard him, his moth said, 'far out on the moor there.' Sang till the full light of morning, and so pas away. 'Did he sing with words?' I ask 'Oh, yes, just the bits of hymns he h learnt at the Sunday School.'"

They brought an evil report. (Num. 13: The people were on the border of the Pro ised Land, and might have entered it i little over a year after leaving Egypt. when they heard from the spies how were the men who held it, they were afra to attack them. Thus they lost the opp tunity, and those men never had anoth They wandered in the wilderness un they died, and it was not until th children grew up to be men that the co try was conquered. Many a bless is lost because men have not fa If they would trust God and go forw in his strength the difficulties that s formidable would disappear. In the G mean War a young officer of the Eng army performed wonderful feats of br ery. On one occasion he fought his w almost single-handed into the enemy's ran and recovered the colors of his regim which the Russians had captured. Yet he caped without a wound. "What is y secret?" he was asked by some old offic who wondered at the intrepidity of one wh was little more than a boy. "I remembe my Queen and that I was fighting in cause," said the youth. If the thought an earthly sovereign could so inspire a dier, how ought the Christian to be ins ed when he thinks of his Master!

HUNDREDS WON TO CHRIST.

Mrs. Bird Writes of Her Summer Work Among the "Lost Boys of the Bowery"—How God has Blessed her Work at the Bowery Mission—Bishop Potter's Visit.

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD, A DEVOTED MISSION WORKER.

READERS of this journal are already familiar with the remarkable missionary work which has been conducted for the past four summers by Mrs. Sarah J. Bird among the outcast men and boys of the Bowery. She has consecrated her whole life and means to this work, and the spiritual welfare of her "Lost Boys," as she lovingly calls them, lies very close to her heart. Mrs. Bird has sent us this most interesting review of her summer's work among the lodging-houses, from which it will be seen that her efforts have been richly blessed, and many poor wanderers have been reclaimed and their feet set in the way of life through her earnest ministrations. She writes as follows:

"At the close of summer I feel very thankful that God has given me health and strength to spend so much of my time during these hot months in the crowded streets of our great city, and I want to tell you how wondrously we have been blessed in the work at the 'Bowery Mission.' The earnest prayers that have gone up, have brought to us a constant revival; and hundreds of lost men have been drawn to Christ.

"You will pardon me, if at this time, I tell you more particularly of my own special line of work in connection with the mission. For four summers, it has been my great privilege to be present every Sunday, and to carry on personally summer and winter my meeting for lodging-house men. As you know, our service is from ten in the morning until three in the afternoon, making five hours of praise and worship, and as I watch my summer audiences of lost men gathered from all parts of the world, sitting packed in the benches; every seat filled with most earnest listeners, and with the thermometer in the nineties, I look with wonder, for I do not believe you could keep another audience in the city five hours praising and worshipping God and deeply interested in the Gospel message. Surely the prophecy in Amos 8: 11 is being fulfilled.

"The Thursday night meeting is equally crowded, and we feel the very presence of God with us, as one after another, with tears of penitence, tells us he wants to find his Saviour. Sometimes, as I look down from my platform, I will see some poor fellow kneeling in anguish of soul in front of me, and there are no words for me to describe the agony with which he calls upon God to save his soul. No one but God knows the fight some of these poor fellows are having with temptations from without and from within, and only the mighty power of Jesus to save, gives us courage and faith to see these sad, discouraged souls struggling for life. The every-night meetings, held under the supervision of Superintendent Hughes, are greatly blessed, and most helpful to the young converts.

"I am more and more convinced that the summer is the best harvest-time of the year in our rescue work. It is a sorrow to me that so much of the Master's work comes to a stop for want of workers during July and August. While I fully recognize the need of rest for all, it does seem best that some should take their outing in the winter. A lady calling one day in a tenement on the East-side, met a little girl, and asked her if her mamma was at home. She quickly said, 'She's dead! she was awful sick; but teacher, I don't know whether my mother went to heaven or not, for all the folks that used to tell us how to go to heaven is shut up and gone to country.'

"Many of these little waifs think 'country' is the name of another city; for one day as I was giving out flowers in Essex street, a child said to me: 'Country must be a pretty city, if all these flowers grow there?' Well, it is a comfort to think that the Mont-Lawn Home has shown hundreds of these little ones what the country is! There are great opportunities for coming in close contact with the lost, both young and old, these hot days and nights. The hidden vice is now at our side. The sin, which is breeding in winter in secret haunts, is now meeting you face to face. The mass of humanity, who are half of the year in the crowded attics of our tenements, are surging through the streets from midday to midnight, starving for the bread of life, and you will find glad listeners at every step. Without Gospel wagon or platform, you can gather about you a crowd of such as Jesus came to save.

"I have this summer enjoyed gathering little groups together, and a kind word would bring to me a smile from many who thus showed their appreciation of my interest in them. It may well be said of those of us who know the joy of summer work in our great city, 'They have their reward.' I believe if one can but cast a flower in the pathway of some poor reckless sinner 'in the name of Jesus,' some soul might be touched and brought to newness of life, by this revelation of the Christ. I could give you many cases of conversion at the Bowery Mission during these hot summer days, but eternity alone must reveal all the wondrous story. Thousands of homeless, discouraged wanderers find refuge and deliverance from the mighty waves of temptation under which they would surely sink, if the Bowery Mission did not welcome them to its hospitality.

"Among the many encouraging things that have come to us this summer were some from two of the most opposite conditions of life. I asked Bishop Potter if he would come to the Bowery Mission and speak to my men, some Sunday. I wanted him to come, first, that he might see the hundreds of men sitting for five hours every Sunday, singing and listening to the Word of God. I wanted the men to feel that he was interested in them; as many of them have the mistaken idea that the clergy do not care for them. He came the next Sunday and gave the men a talk which they will not soon forget. The other was a surprise, for who should appear upon our platform one Sunday, but our opposite neighbor, Steve Brodie. With a warm grasp of the hand, he said, 'Mrs. B——, I have forty gallons of buttermilk I would like to give you for your men. Will you send for it?' The kind feeling shown by this man was a hopeful breeze at the noontime of a very hot day.

"Having been in rescue work among the lowest and most needy of God's children for over thirty years, I feel most deeply that there is no hope of bringing them out of the bondage of sin, except by giving the light of the knowledge of the glory of God through Jesus Christ. True refinement of soul must come through Jesus Christ, and I put the ethics of Jesus above all the systems of the world. Every gift to suffering humanity should be boldly stamped with the name of Jesus. SARAH J. BIRD.

Work in Indian Zenanas.

The Sad Lot of the Mothers and Daughters of Hindoo Families—Gilded Slavery in a Living Tomb.

IN a very interesting letter from India, Margaret B. Denning, a missionary in that country, gives this pathetic picture of Gospel work in the Zenanas:

"One patient woman, trying to bear up and smile when her very soul revolted against her life, has been a lesson to me often. She seemed to long to see the beautiful world of which she could only catch tiny glimpses. 'Are not God's flowers and trees for us women also?' she asked. 'I am so weary of this little back yard! Why did God make us to live so?' 'But,' we said, 'this is not God's doing, but man's. When Christ's Gospel is accepted in this land everyone will be free.' 'How long will that be?' she asked, looking into our faces with her dark, appealing eyes. 'Perhaps in twenty-five years,' we said, scarcely knowing what to say. 'Twenty-five years! Then we will all be dead,' was her despairing answer. 'If I should die to-night,' she continued, 'I should be hurried away to the grave, and my own mothers and sisters could not see me, for they do not belong to the same household. We are very strict Mussulmans here. Once two nephews came to visit us. They were sitting on the back veranda talking with my husband, and I made some nice 'pan' and took it out to them. My husband told me afterward that, though they were relatives, I should never do such a thing again. He says that, according to the Koran, there are three kinds of women. The first and best are those who cannot remember having seen in their whole lives any man save their own husbands. The second kind are those who have never seen any man but relatives besides their husbands, and the third kind are totally bad, seeing and conversing with strange men.'

"When this man gave us permission to visit his wife it was with the distinct understanding that we were not to teach the Bible. His wife wanted a sewing machine, and if we would teach her to use it he would buy her one, and we might sing our songs, but we must not read or pray. 'Well,' I said, 'we can sing Bible, and we can always carry our Bibles with us.' The machine was bought, and I often thought it was worth while going just to give the pleasure that the machine brought with it. But it did not end there. We sang Bible truths, and one day the woman asked us if our Bibles told of the same things as our songs. And when we told her they did, she asked us to read one verse. As her mother-in-law was present and offered no objection, we read a verse, and soon we were reading and praying with that family.

"This man is in government employ, and was lately sent to another station. In order to keep his wife in 'purdah,' he chartered a car. She said to us, 'I will see the country as we ride along, but when we come to a station, my husband will quickly close the window and pull the curtain. And in our new station it will be worse than here, for the house is much smaller that we shall live in, and this one is so small when it is all one's world.'

"This woman is in prison as truly as if immured for some great crime. When leaving here she was invited to spend an afternoon at each of three houses. She asked her husband about going, and he said, 'You may have one afternoon for all three houses, and you are not to be out after six o'clock.' So, veiled from head to foot, and seated in a bullock cart whose bamboo top was covered with smothering blankets, this martyr to custom and false religion took a brief respite from her prison. One day, pointing to a little girl of seven, she exclaimed, 'I am glad all my daughters died but this one. She is only seven years old, but her father has commanded that from this time she shall never go on the front veranda or the street to play with her brothers, but must sit in this little yard with us women until she is twelve years of age, and then her husband will take her away and keep her as I have been kept all these years.' This example is not an isolated case."

A FESTIVAL OF FLOWERS.

ALTHOUGH somewhat late in the season, Saratoga, N.Y., held early this month a Floral Festival which attracted widespread attention. Thousands of visitors from New York and Boston and from many other cities, as well as from a large number of towns and villages, were present. The Floral Parade (a single feature of which is shown in our illustration), was a decided triumph of brilliant hues and artistic decoration, fairly rivaling in beauty the display at similar festivals in European cities and in California and Mexico. For days before the parade, nurserymen and horticulturists had been severely taxed for plants and blossoms for decorations, to be used in allegorical, historical and mythological representations on floats, and also for the decoration of private carriages. These festivals, which have long been a prominent feature every year in Naples, Florence, Paris and Nice, have lately been introduced in England and have also been presented with success in some of the Pacific coast cities, where the climate is favorable for the production of the rarest and most varied assortment of garden products. Saratoga is practically the pioneer of the Flower Festival movement in the East, and its example promises to be followed by other cities. The floral fete this year is the second that has been held.

ONE OF THE FLOATS IN THE SARATOGA FLORAL FESTIVAL PARADE.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission during the past week:

E. H., Merchantville.
Ruth, Riverside.
Mrs. S. H. Day.
F. E. Craig.
Mrs. Geo. Denio.
Mrs Zella Huston, Kans
A family being led by Jesus, Great Bend, Pa.
A Subscriber.
Mrs H. W. Howe, Mass.
Mrs Mary M. Prentice.

All desiring to be enrolled on the list of patrons, should send their names and addresses to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-Office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers nor to make good omissions caused by delay in renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper of the paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the town and the State you live in should always be given when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York as Second-Class Matter

THE FASHIONS.

IN many circles, women are spoken of as the chief worshippers of fashion, yet men are as much the idolators of fashion as women, but they sacrifice on a different part of the altar. With men, the fashion goes to cigars, and club-rooms, and yachting parties, and wine suppers. In the United States, the men chew up and smoke one hundred millions of dollars' worth of tobacco every year. That is their fashion. In London, a man died who started in life with seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, but he ate it all up in gluttonies, sending his agents to all parts of the earth for some rare delicacy for the palate, sometimes one plate of food costing him three or four hundred dollars. He ate up his whole fortune and had only one guinea left; with that he bought a woodcock, and had it dressed in the very best style, ate it, gave two hours for digestion, then walked out on Westminster Bridge and threw himself into the Thames, and died, doing on a large scale what you and I have often seen done on a small scale. But men do not abstain from millinery and elaboration of skirt through any superiority of humility. It is only because such appendages would be a blockade to business. What would balloon sleeves and trains three and a half yards long do in a stock market? And yet men are the disciples of fashion just as much as women. Some of them wear boots so tight they can hardly walk in the paths of righteousness. And there are men who buy expensive suits of clothes and never pay for them, and who go through the streets arrayed in stripes of color like animated checker-boards. Then there are multitudes of men who, not satisfied with the bodies the Lord gave them, are so padded that their shoulders shall be square, carrying around a small cotton plantation. It seldom occurs to any of us that we must appear in judgment to answer for what we have worn on our bodies as well as for what repentances we have exercised with our souls. On that day I see coming in, Beau Brummel of the last century, without his cloak, like which all England got a cloak; and without his cane, like which all England got a cane; without his snuff-box, like which all England got a snuff-box—he, the fop of the ages, particular about everything but his morals; and Aaron Burr, without the letters that down to old age he showed in pride, to prove his early wicked gallantries; and Alcibiades without [illegible] and Mrs. Arnold, the belle of Wall street, when in olden times that was the centre of fashion, without her fripperies of vesture.

And in great [illegible] away into expatriation; while among the queens of heavenly society will be found Vashti, who wore the modest veil before the palatial bacchanalians; and Hannah, who annually made a little coat for Samuel at the temple; and Grandmother Lois, the ancestress of Timothy, who imitated her virtue; and Mary, who gave Jesus Christ to the world; and many of the present Christian Church, who through great tribulation are entering into the kingdom of God. Christ announced who would make up the royal family of heaven when he said, "Whosoever doeth the will of God, the same is my brother, my sister, my mother."

THE FAMILY MANSION.

ALMOST every family looks back to a homestead — some country-place where you grew up. You sat on the door-sill. You heard the footstep of the rain on the garret-roof. You swung on the gate. You ransacked the barn. You waded into the brook. You threshed the orchard for apples, and the neighboring woods for nuts; and everything around the old homestead is of interest to you. I tell you of the old homestead of eternity. In my Father's house are many mansions. When we talk of mansions, we think of Chatsworth, and its park, nine miles in circumference, and its conservatory, that astonishes the world; its galleries of art, that contain the triumphs of Chantrey, Canova, and Thorwaldsen; of the kings and queens who have walked its stately halls, or, flying over the heather, have hunted the grouse. But all the dwelling-places of dukes, and princes, and queens, are as nothing to the family mansion that is already awaiting our arrival. The hand of my Lord Jesus lifted the pillars, and swung the doors, and planted the parks. Angels walk there, and the good of all ages. The poorest man in that house is a millionaire, and the lowliest a king, and the tamest word he speaks is an anthem, and the shortest life an eternity.

It took a Paxton to build for Chatsworth, a covering for the wonderful flower, Victoria Regia, five feet in diameter. But our Lily of the Valley shall need no shelter from the blast, and in the open gardens of God shall put forth its full bloom, and all heaven shall come to look at it, and its aroma shall be as though the cherubim had swung before the throne a thousand censers. I have not seen it yet. I am in a foreign land. But my Father is waiting for me to come home. I have many loved ones there. In the Bible I have letters from there, telling me what a fine place it is. It matters not much to me whether I am rich or poor, or whether the world hates me or loves me, or whether I go by land or by sea, if only I may lift my eyes at last on the family mansion. It is not a frail house, built in a month, soon to crumble, but an old mansion which is as firm as the day it was built. Its walls are grown with the ivy of many ages, and the urns at the gate-way are abloom with the century-plants of eternity. The Queen of Sheba hath walked its halls, and Esther, and Marie Antoinette, and Lady Huntingdon, and Wilberforce, and Cecil, and Jeremy Taylor, and Samuel Rutherford, and John Milton, and the widow who gave two mites, and the poor man from the hospital—these last two perhaps outshining all the kings and queens of eternity.

SOUR CHRISTIANS.

THERE is a class of persons in the community whose usefulness we have just found out. We never realized until now what they were made for. They are struck through with acidity. Their disposition is celebrated for its crabbedness. You find them in every circle. They are especially known in Churches as fault-finders. Their teeth are always on edge. They are critical of minister, eldership, and choir. Whatever is done, they act as though they could have done it better. You sometimes feel like suggesting to them the propriety of going to some other Church, or retiring into less conspicuous position. You look upon them as a nuisance and hindrance. Stop! You are wrong. They have their practical uses. Church life, if happily conducted, is a banquet at which the sweet predominates. There is the sugar of helpful words, and the saccharine of genial association. The banquet is in danger of becoming flat and insipid. There ought to be at least one vinegar cruet in the castor. You need to give variety to the feast. You do not more need spices than pickles. Now you know the use to which some people can be put. Do not cast them out. Do not let them be the means of exasperation. Employ them at the Church banquet. Tarts are good in their place. Brethren, pass around the pickles.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

J. K. Agnew, Memphis, Tenn. I read lately of the "Seven Bibles of the world." What are they?

The Holy Scriptures, the Koran, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Tripitaka of the Buddhists, the Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta, and the Talmud.

Reader, Green Creek, N. J. Did any of the children of Israel enter the Promised Land except Caleb and Joshua?

Yes; but none who were over twenty years old when they left Egypt (see Num. 14: 29). The Lord's anger was kindled against Israel because of disobedience, and not the adults, but their children, were privileged to enjoy the land.

Robt. Black, Buffalo, N. Y. Were the Israelites justified in refusing quarter to the inhabitants of the cities they took?

They pleaded the explicit command of God in justification. There can be no question that the Canaanites were an exceptionally depraved, wicked people, who had in their turn destroyed the people who occupied the cities before them. The treatment they received from the Israelites was retribution.

W. J. B., Baltimore, Md. 1. What was the first Christian Church and where was it founded? 2. When was Roman Catholicism founded?

1. The first organized Christian churches were those founded by the disciples and apostles, who in obedience to the instructions of Christ, went out through Syria, Asia, Egypt, Greece, and Rome, preaching the Word and establishing many churches and congregations. The first Christian church was organized at Antioch in the first century A.D. As may be gathered from the Epistles in the New Testament, the basis of all their teachings was simple faith in Jesus Christ and obedience to his teachings. There were, however, indications of sectarian differences even in those early days. The Roman Church was founded in the second century.

Constant Reader, Jersey City. 1. How should a Christian young man act in the society of worldly people of the better class? 2. Should a Christian engage in a business in which it is necessary to work (himself or his men) Sabbath mornings until about ten o'clock, even if he himself does not work, but his men do?

1. Never hide your religion. Let the fact that you are a Christian appear at every proper opportunity, although it need not be pressed upon the attention of others at all times. Act modestly and with discretion, and by your patient persistence in true, straightforward, upright behavior you will win respect even where you may not convert others to your views. Remember that a Christian gentleman is the highest type of manhood. 2. No; if he should happen to be in such a business, he ought to make arrangements as speedily as possible to get out of it, particularly if it involves Sabbath-breaking (as we gather from your letter that it does). The way to such a change will open, if the effort be made in sincerity. There are, however, exceptional cases, where certain businesses are public necessities. We refer to such callings as those of druggists, physicians, and the like.

Sister in Christ. I hear so many church members and Christians argue that it is not in the power of human beings to keep God's laws, or the Ten Commandments, that I wish you would enlighten me on this point. It is seemingly unjust to our Heavenly Father to deny that we can do what he commands. I am the mother of a large family and I am sure I could not command one of my own children to do what, in my weak judgment, he could not do.

To unfallen man, obedience to the moral law would undoubtedly have been within human reach, but to fallen man it stands as an unattainable ideal, to which he may strive, but in vain. There is none without sin (I. John 1: 8), and as a perfect obedience to God's law implies entire sinlessness, it is obviously impossible that such obedience can be rendered by mortal man. But to those who are in Christ this difficulty is overcome. (Rom. 4: 7.) They are not under the law and consequently are not to be judged by the law. (Rom. 6: 15; I. John 3: 6. Christ by his perfect obedience and his sufferings for their sins has satisfied the law in their behalf. (II. Cor. 5: 21.) Thus, when grace enters the heart, its sinfulness is removed. The righteousness and perfect obedience of Christ being imputed to his people, they are accepted of God. (Rom. 3: 24; II. Cor. 12: 9.) Christians, therefore, should not serve the bondage of fear, as under the law (I. T[illegible] 1: 9), but in love, as under grace in Chr[illegible] Jesus. (Rom. 8: 1–15.)

M. E. W., Huntington, Ark. What became of [illegible] Manna and Aaron's Rod that budded?

The author of the Epistle to the Hebre[illegible] says they were put in the Ark, but there is [illegible] statement in the Old Testament that they w[illegible] there. Indeed, in I. Kings 8: 9 it is explic[illegible] stated that when the Ark was carried in[illegible] new Temple, there was nothing in it but [illegible] tables of the law. If the articles mentione[illegible] Hebrews were ever in it, they must have b[illegible] taken out. The Ark was for some time in [illegible] possession of the Philistines after the death [illegible] Eli, and was opened (see I. Samuel 6: 19) [illegible] they may have been removed then. It is, h[illegible] ever, more probable that the word "wherei[illegible] in Hebrews, refers to the room in which [illegible] Ark was kept. There was a coffer there v[illegible] the Ark, containing other precious things [illegible] I. Samuel 6: 15) in which the Manna and [illegible] Rod were likely to be kept.

M. E. N., Rochester, N. Y. Can you tell me [illegible] thing about the Dunkers?

The name is given to a denomination [illegible] Christians who call themselves Brethren. T[illegible] first home was Schwarzenau in Germany, [illegible] under stress of persecutions many of t[illegible] came to America between the years 1619 [illegible] 1729. They settled in Pennsylvania, but [illegible] their numbers increased, a settlement [illegible] made in Ohio, in which State there is n[illegible] larger number than in any other. In [illegible] many members, under the leadership of [illegible] Ham, seceded from the church, having ado[illegible] Universalist doctrines which were conden[illegible] by the original Brethern. The denomina[illegible] differs from other Baptists in their mod[illegible] practising their distinctive rite. The candi[illegible] is laid three time forward in the water ins[illegible] of backward, and there is laying on of h[illegible] while he is in the water. They have bis[illegible] who visit the churches at stated interv[illegible] teachers who do preaching and pastoral w[illegible] and deacons who attend to the charities [illegible] temporal affairs. Other facts about them [illegible] be found in the Baptist Almanac.

A. J. S., Sawyer, Wis. Some Seventh Day Ad[illegible] tists here tell me that I am under the cur[illegible] the law because I observe Sunday inste[illegible] Saturday. Am I displeasing God by doing [illegible]

We give you the advice that Paul gav[illegible] people who were troubled by similar legal[illegible] in his day: "Let no man judge you in me[illegible] in drink or in respect of . . . the Sabbath d[illegible] (Col. 2: 16). In every generation since C[illegible] and before his time, there were people who [illegible] more stress on days and forms and ceremo[illegible] than on essentials. The Pharisees foun[illegible] much easier to give tithes of their kitc[illegible] gardens than to do justly and refrain from [illegible] bing widows and orphans. You as a Chri[illegible] are not under the law at all. When Gen[illegible] were first admitted to the Church it was [illegible] pressly declared that they were not req[illegible] to observe the Jewish code of laws. The [illegible] tion came up at a solemn council at [illegible] the Apostles were present and was de[illegible] once for all. You will find the result of th[illegible] cussion in Acts 15. In the name of the [illegible] Spirit the decision was given as stat[illegible] verses 28 and 29, and it was expressly s[illegible] that no other burden was laid upon t[illegible] They naturally and properly celebrated th[illegible] ay on which Christ rose from the dead, no[illegible] Jewish Sabbath, with which they had no[illegible] ng to do, and we follow their example.

M. A. J., Utica, N. Y. No.——John Hillborn[illegible] quehanna, Pa. We believe not, although the[illegible] doubtless had certain persons and events i[illegible] when he wrote it.——C. C. Saeger, Brooklyn, [illegible] We do not know of such a book. Better cons[illegible] architect ——Romeo, Mich. We cannot supp[illegible] information. You can find what you want b[illegible] rusing, or by engaging some reputable law firm [illegible] make a specialty of such cases——Subscri[illegible] P. N. H. No, she would not be justified in re[illegible] forgiveness, although the provocation we[illegible] tainly be severe ——G. S. C., Sharpleigh Mo. [illegible] information regarding the education of native[illegible] dren of India, write to Miss Margaret W. Leit[illegible] na, Ceylon.——H. Geiger, Brooklyn. The pe[illegible] ages are about equal, being 33 in both cases [illegible] leave.——New Subscriber, New York. We [illegible] undertake to advise in the matter. Personal p[illegible] ence and adaptability, together with oppor[illegible] will always decide.——Subscriber, Alexan[illegible] 1 Write to Salvation Army Headquarters, [illegible] tenth street, New York. 2 The "King and h[illegible] web" story was told entire in a Mid-Day parag[illegible] recently.——Subscriber, M. C., Va. 1. The [illegible] has a perfect right to take any paper he choos[illegible] She would be a very frivolous person indeed [illegible] a course. 3. We do not believe such prayers [illegible] be offered.——M. E. Dottie, Philadelphia. W[illegible] the paper of the same name in New York C[illegible] Shepherdstown, Winchester, Va. By sm[illegible] and probably by camping at the various co[illegible] water spots along the route.——Geo. F. D. H[illegible] Pa. There may be circumstances in which [illegible] do so with perfect propriety ——Mrs. A. M. [illegible] Little Falls, N. Y. We believe it is not yet pu[illegible] ——Reader, The young lady would do we[illegible] cape from such a bondage as quickly as p[illegible] else the wicked parent may wreck her entir[illegible] ——Reader, Champaign, Ill. His conduct i[illegible] fensible from any point of view. To pretend [illegible] such a course is approved of God is rank bla[illegible] ——Mrs. M. R. Stephens, Grand Rapids, Minn. [illegible] poem to which you refer is "The Better Land." [illegible] author is Mrs. Hemans.——F. D. Hapley, W[illegible] see the Institute people and get the best a[illegible] ment you can as to pay.——Subscriber, Y[illegible] presence prayer took through almost any [illegible] publisher ——Inquirer, Spencer, Mass. It [illegible] both ways and prepare yourself to [illegible] as far as possible. We heard [illegible] best [illegible] Exercise comparatively few [illegible] gifted effective extemporaneous address.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

MADAGASCAR'S PLIGHT.

RECENT dispatches from Madagascar indicate that the French invasion is not the only difficulty the brave Queen has on her hands. There are, it appears, a large number of people in the capital who advocate making the best terms possible with the French, even though they include the surrender of the whole island and the deposition of the Queen. These people embarrass the government and raise obstacles to every measure proposed for defence. Col. Shervinton, who has just returned from the island, abandoned his position as military adviser to the government in disgust at the setback these friends of the French had succeeded in making. He was convinced that successful defence might be conducted with the men and war materials in the possession of the Hova government. The route the French must travel to reach the capital is one presenting most favorable opportunities for native defence. There are rivers to be penetrated and mountains to be scaled, in both of which a small native force well intrenched could defy an army of twice the strength of the French expedition. At Tsingasoavina, the defile through which the invading army must pass, is flanked by positions which could be held by a handful of men, which could not be turned, and which such a fire could be kept up as would effectually bar an entrance. The Hova government, however, was prevented by the traitorous subjects from occupying and fortifying these positions, and the resultant delays convinced Col. Shervinton that the opportunity of making a successful defence was being lost. The climate, however, is already proving a valuable ally to the poor natives. A Paris journal publishes a letter from its correspondent with the expedition, in which he says that 600 are now in the hospitals at Majunga with French soldiers, who will have to be invalided even if they recover. Of one company of 225 engineers sent forward to build a road, only 25 men came back and these scarcely able to crawl. The remainder had succumbed to the deadly fever, without accomplishing the work they were sent to do. Gen. Duchesne is now sending a flying brigade forward of his main army to make a bold dash for the capital, and if the Hovas were prepared for defence the brigade might be annihilated on the way. Gen. Duchesne bitterly complains of the inadequacy of his equipment. The departments appear to have proved as incapable as they were in the Franco-Prussian war. The stores and provisions are of the poorest quality, and the expedition is suffering hardships that the commonest prudence and foresight might have prevented. The hospitals especially, are paralyzed by lack of supplies. They are mere sheds containing tiers of beds, one above another, the topmost in contact with the canvas roof. The physicians are few in number, and most of them incompetent. This is from a Frenchman on the spot, who says how careless the high officials in the Government have been in fitting out the expedition. That the French will finally succeed in gaining possession of the island, there is little doubt, but the conquest will involve a frightful loss of life. One cannot but be sorry for the men thus sacrificed to advance the political fortunes of unscrupulous politicians in Paris, who are making capital out of this cowardly attack on a weak people. Meanwhile the cry of the Hovas is to Him who said that he would Raise strong nations afar off. (Micah 4: 3.)

Death as a Joke.

An eccentric woman living in New York perpetrated a grim joke on Sept. 6. Her honor is in a flat house in Fifty-third street, where she was on friendly terms with the other families in the house. She has been in the habit of talking recklessly, but her strange remarks were attributed to high spirits and a lack of discretion. Not long ago the conversation in one of the rooms turned on a death which had just occurred, and the woman gave it as her opinion that a great deal more fuss was made about the end of life than it deserved. All beyond the grave was so utterly unknown to us that going into it would be a novel experience in a world where everything was so flat and insipid. For herself, she regarded it as a good joke. Her remarks shocked her hearers, and one and another told her that death was too serious a matter to be regarded as a joke; but the woman reiterated her observation. Later in the day she drank some whiskey, as she often did when her husband was detained at his business in the evening. Shortly afterward she sent for the janitress of the house to tell her a good joke. She repeated to her what she had said in the morning about death, and then told her that she had put it to the proof by taking poison. The janitress thought the woman was only trying to scare her, and she went away laughing. But a few minutes afterward she heard a heavy fall, and going up to the woman's rooms, found her on the floor writhing in agony. A policeman was called who summoned an ambulance and the woman was taken to the hospital. The doctors there think there is little hope of saving her life.

TYPICAL NATIVES OF THE COUNTRY DISTRICTS OF MADAGASCAR.

She is doubtless convinced now that death is a more serious matter than she supposed. Most people realize the fact without making such a test as she has done; but there are many who are as foolish as she in regarding as a joke the sins which lead to eternal death.

Fools make a mock of sin. (Prov. 14: 9.)

A Murderer's Fortune.

The risk of being hanged is believed to be keeping a man in Minnesota from the possession of a fortune. Some years ago he quarrelled with his widowed mother and left home. After residing in Chicago for some time he settled in Minneapolis where he lived a wild, vicious life earning money easily and spending it freely. In the course of his dissipated orgies in that city he killed a man and was obliged to fly to avoid arrest. Since the crime he has not been heard of, though the officers of justice made diligent search for him; and his mother took up the search after they abandoned it. In her later years the mother became very rich owing to the death of a childless uncle and a brother. She died recently and left the whole of her property to her scapegrace son, who, she firmly believes, is still alive. The property is to be held in trust for twenty years and if at the end of that time her son has not been found, the estate is to be given to St. John's Home at Milwaukee, Wis. It is believed that the son will never claim the wealth bequeathed to him. He knows that the very day that he appeared to claim it would see him in a felon's cell; and that there would be a strong probability of his being hanged. Then, as he very well knows, the money would be of no use to him. It is a pity that people do not more generally argue in the same way about their souls. Many a man who would not part with the life of his body to get a fortune, will sacrifice the life of his soul to get one

What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? (Mark 8: 36.)

A Judge as a Witness.

In the recently published reminiscences of a prominent lawyer he relates an incident in which a judge decided a case on his own evidence. It was a suit involving some lands in Echcols County, Georgia. There were two claimants, each of whom held title deeds purporting to be signed by the same man. As it was certain that the man did not sell the same lands to two different parties, it was obvious that one set must be forgeries, but the problem of deciding which was false and which genuine was difficult. Each claimant had an array of witnesses among whom were experts on handwriting who contradicted each other. Counsel made long and elaborate arguments recapitulating the points made by the experts and the court listened patiently to the theories set up. At the close the two sets of deeds were passed up to the bench for examination. Judge Hansell, who was presiding, looked at them with keen interest and taking up one set, examined them minutely. As he looked from place to place a peculiar smile spread over his face. "Gentlemen," he said, holding up the deeds he had been examining, "this is the genuine conveyance. I know it is so, for I drew the deeds myself when I was a clerk in the lawyer's office. This is my own writing and I know that the deeds were drawn for the original owner and signed by him. The other deeds must be the forged ones."

Judgment was given accordingly and the evidence of the experts on one side went for nothing. The criticism of the Bible that has been going on so long will terminate at last in the same way. The Christian is often distressed by it now but in the end the Divine Author of the Book will attest its genuineness and they will be vindicated who, in spite of learned experts, have Received it not as the word of men; but as it is in truth the Word of God. (1 Thess. 2: 13.)

A Student's Object Lesson.

An official at Harvard relates a story of a practical reproof administered some time ago by some students to a companion. It appears that during his first term, one of the students had made himself very popular. He was not only a hard worker, but a very sociable fellow, who was the life and soul of the evening parties. But in the second term he was missed from his usual haunts. He kept up his studies, but began to desert the social meetings. It was found that he had become engaged to a young lady in the neighborhood and was spending his evenings at her father's house. At first he went there only one or two evenings in a week, but after a short time he could not be induced to attend any of the students' parties and it was inferred that he was spending every evening in the lady's company. Expostulation had no effect on him and the students determined to give him an object lesson. One night after spending two hours at the lady's house, he took his leave and stepped out on the piazza to return to college. There, to his astonishment, he found all his belongings, books, clothes, furniture, curtains and pictures. They had been brought there during the evening by his college mates and disposed artistically about the yard and piazza. It was a hint to the young man that as he had allowed the new connection to encroach on the old to such an extent, he had better sever the old in form as well as in fact. There are some Christians who are in need of a similar hint. Although they have made a profession of Christ, they are to be found continually in the places of worldly amusement. The appeal Elijah made to his people needs to be made now in many circles:

If the Lord be God, follow him: But if Baal, then follow him. (1. Kings 18: 21.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. George C. Needham has been Holding special services in Dublin. They were held in the Christian Union Buildings and were largely attended. They were blessed to the conversion of many.

Revival Services are to be Held in the Protestant Episcopal Churches of Canada during the next nine months by the Rev. W. Hay Aitken, who held services in Trinity Church, New York, some years ago.

The Latest Report issued by Mr. George Muller shows that during the sixty-four years in which he has been caring for the orphans at Bristol, England, he has received for all purposes and disbursed $6,869,130. This without once making an appeal for funds or incurring debt.

A Baptist Journal having a Correspondent in Cuba predicts that if the revolution succeeds, the obstacles which have so long hindered Evangelical work in Cuba will be removed, and there will be such an opening for missions there as the island has never presented before.

The International Executive Committee Representing American Sunday Schools, at a meeting recently held at Chautauqua, voted to send a Sunday School worker and organizer to Japan. The sum of $1,100 was raised as a beginning and a subcommittee appointed to secure the right.

The Circulation of the Bible in Egypt has increased rapidly. The statistics of the American Bible Society in the thirty years from 1865, show that during the first ten years of the period, the numbers of Bibles sent to Egypt was 6,630; during the second ten 45,586, and during the last ten 116,474.

The Death of Rev. Dr. Charles R. Mills is reported from Tung Chow, in Northern China. Dr. Mills was for nearly forty years one of the most devoted Presbyterian missionaries in China. He labored first at Shanghai, and afterwards for over thirty years at Tung Chow. He was born at Buffalo, N. Y., and studied theology at Auburn Seminary.

Mr. Loomis Reporting on his Work of Distributing Bibles and Bible portions to Japanese soldiers says: "Up to 15th of June, the actual number donated is about 2800 Testaments and 12,000 Gospels. Some of these are yet in the different places of deposit, but all will probably be used for the purpose indicated and very likely many more."

During the Recent Northfield Conference Mr. Moody received a check for twelve thousand dollars to endow three scholarships for the Mount Hermon School for boys. Scholarships are the great need of the school, as the charge of $100 a year for tuition and board no more than pays half the expenses for each student.

The Active Floating Society of Christian Endeavor on board the "Thetis" had a part in forming the society on board the "Philadelphia," and has been trying to start one on the "Olympia." There are said to be some Christians on board every United States cutter in the Behring Sea fleet, and on one vessel two prayer meetings are held every week.

The Rev. Andrew Murray, who was so popular and effective a speaker in the Moody meetings at Northfield, has been conducting a series of meetings in connection with the Bible Institute in Chicago. This week he is holding daily conferences in the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth avenue and 29th street, New York.

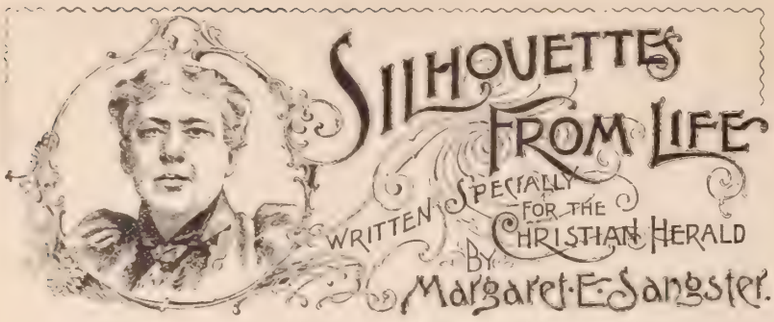
Successful Evangelistic Services Have Been held recently at Campbellsville, Ky., by Rev. W. O. Fife. A pastor reports that people came from adjoining districts to attend the meetings until the usual congregations often numbered over fifteen hundred persons. There were many conversions, and the influence will be felt over a wide area.

The American University at Washington, D. C., which will be the chief seat of learning of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country, has received a gift sufficient to erect a School of Languages from Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, of Tivoli, N. Y. The institution is to cost $150,000 the site $100,000, and a New York lady has started the endowment fund with a gift of $100,000.

The Tabulated Religious Statistics of the Census of 1890 show that of the total population of 62,622,259, the persons who are communicants or church members number 20,616,806. The proportion of communicants to population is larger in the cities than in the country districts. The average in the cities is 379 in every 1,000. In the country it is 328 in the 1000. Philadelphia has the largest number of churches. Brooklyn has the largest proportion of communicants to population.

A Novel Way of Raising Money for Religious work has been adopted at Syracuse, N. Y. The Syracuse Street Railroad Company instead of making a direct gift to the Women's Christian Association has placed fifteen cars on various lines at the disposal of the ladies for one day at a nominal sum. The ladies will run the cars and collect the fares and expect to make a profit on the venture for the Association. Not long ago they brought out one edition of the "Post," under a similar arrangement.

One of the Most Successful College Settlements yet established is Whittier House, 174 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. It was begun by Miss Bradford, a sister of Dr. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, N. J. Dr. Scudder's congregation provided a small room and a few articles of furniture to start with. It now occupies a large house with rooms for kindergarten study, an infirmary, a music room, a penny bank, a loan office, &c. An immense amount of good has been done there in a densely populated neighborhood.



A Cup of Cold Water.

MRS. ALLEN BENSON was in Church this morning, Susie," said the minister to his wife, as he passed her his cup for a second filling. It was Sabbath noon, and the pastor was still feeling the excitement of his morning's preaching, and was lingering over the dainty luncheon which was ready to greet him, when he came home. Susie, Mrs. Fairchild, had not been out. Three small children, one a six months' baby wailing with premonitions of teeth soon to prick their way through the gums, held her captive at home. Still, so far as the sermons were concerned, she knew a good deal, for Mr. Fairchild liked to talk them over with her and many a bright thought and apt illustration were of her suggestion, and were cleverly woven in as he wrote in the little book-lined study just off the dining-room. But she did yearn sometimes for the privilege, comparatively seldom hers now, of sitting restfully in her own pew, of joining in the singing, of worshipping with the congregation of God's people, of walking to and from church with her husband. She gave a little sigh, when Tom told her of Mrs. Benson's having been in church, and as she cut for him a triangle of delicious lemon pie, she wondered much how Mrs. Benson had managed it. For she, too, had a baby six months old and her twins were not yet past their third birthday.

"I wished so much that you had been there, Susie," Mr. Fairchild went on. "The service to-day was so harmonious and Miss Spalding sang 'Consider the lilies' in a voice which was like the lark's soaring upward. Everybody would be so glad to see my wife, I, most of all, these summer Sunday mornings. Couldn't you next week, give Elise her bath early, put her to sleep, and leave Fred and Charley with Katie in the kitchen?"

"Perhaps so, Tom! I'll think about it," she answered gently repressing a natural desire to say instead, "No, Tom, the thing is out of the question."

Tom went away to his books, for an hour's respite before Sunday School, where he taught the young men's Bible class.

But Susie, having told Irish Katie, her faithful maid-of-all-work, that she was free for the afternoon betook herself to the nursery and the company of her little flock.

Now, a mother may so love her little children that she will cheerfully lay down her life for them, may consider no duty a tax, may spend all her powers ungrudgingly for her darlings, and yet may sometimes, and no shame and no blame to her, grow tired of her children, and be thankful for a little while to be out of their sight. This was the case once and again with you and me, was it not? I ask the question of the older mothers, whose children have grown out of their arms, and are now in the world, making their own way, fighting their own Apollyons, knowing trials and troubles that mother's arms, and mother's kisses can no longer soothe. It does not argue any lack of love, that a young mother should be glad of a little freedom, a little change, going back to her home nest, the brighter for a brief respite.

I am sure three of the church girls had been talking things over, as girls do, and looking about for some Christian work outside of their accustomed channels. As members of the Christian Endeavor Society, they felt [illegible] and it had occurred to one of them, Patty Marshall by name, that perhaps in searching for opportunities at the ends of the earth, they were ignoring excellent loopholes for effort at their very doors.

"Suppose girls," said Patty with persuasion in her tone, "we quietly organize ourselves into a trio of cup-bearers. One can carry a full cup with ease if it's only a few steps, but if you have to cross the desert and the ocean, some of the cold water may get spilled on the way."

"What do you propose?" said Geraldine Smyth.

"Why, for one thing, we might do substitute duty sometimes on Sunday mornings relieve young mothers like Mrs. Fairchild and Mrs. Benson and let them go to church for a change, while we take their places as child-tenders; of course we would lose the uplift and help of the service, but it would be that they might gain it, and I'm in favor of making them the offer of our services."

"Mrs. Fairchild hardly ever hears her husband preach;" said Alice Bell musingly.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY OF THE U. S. S. "CHARLESTON."

"And young Mrs. Barnes hasn't been in church for a year and a half," said Patty, thoughtfully, "while Mrs. Allen Benson never gets there!"

"The Theodore Bensons could help her," suggested Geraldine.

"They probably could, but they don't, you know," said Patty,

> Evil is wrought by want of thought
> As well as want of heart.

"But we will not spend our time criticising other people. The question is, what can we ourselves do in the case?"

Their waiting angels invisibly watching, no doubt smiled to see the eager consultation of the three bright heads close bent together, and the outcome of the confab was pleasing to the angels, and to men.

Its first fruits had been, though no one suspected it, for the girls did not sound a trumpet before them, and told nobody that there was a plan in what they were doing, preferring to have it look as if the proposal were by way of accident. Its very first fruits were seen when young Mrs. Benson went to church, leaving her baby with Geraldine.

During the week Patty found that she had an errand at the Parsonage, partly to return a book Mrs. Fairchild had lent her, partly to carry that lady a bunch of roses. Talking with her minister's wife, she took the plump, cooing baby in her arms, and [illegible]

"You dear, sweet, wee midget!" she exclaimed. "I wonder how long you'd be good with me. Mrs. Fairchild, if I should come here next Sunday morning, and stay with Elise and her little brothers, would you go to church? I'd love to sit here with the baby, and I'd amuse the boys, and wouldn't you find it a nice little rest? I wish, dear lady, I do wish you'd let me try my hand."

"Are you quite in earnest, Patty, or are you only tempting me?" laughed Mrs. Fairchild.

"I mean it, every word," Patty declared with emphasis.

"Well then, I accept," Mrs. Fairchild answered promptly. "Why, child, you are offering me a cup of cold water, and I am thirsty enough to snatch it eagerly. Thank you for the kind thought."

And next Sabbath morning, in her best black silk, and her pretty straw bonnet with the pink roses and the black feathers, Mrs. Susan Fairchild walked to church, side by side, with Tom, the minister.

"There go Mr. and Mrs. Fairchild together!" said Aunt Phebe Rand, looking from the window where she sat in her invalid chair. "Some saint or other has relieved her this morning and taken charge of her babies! A good idea! Maybe her mother, or his, is visiting her. I must find out. A body never hears a thing, shut up with a lame knee."

"Tom dear," said Susie, as they took luncheon when Patty had gone home, that Sunday, and she had nursed Elise and kissed the boys, "Tom, I want to tell you that your preaching is better than it used to be. I did enjoy it this morning. You helped me very much, and I saw how every one listened."

"My love," said the minister, "you are my dearest and my severest critic. I am always happier in the pulpit when you are in the pew."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A GAMBLER'S CONVERSION.

This incident is related by Mr. Crosskey, a Christian worker in England: "I heard of a young fellow who was in the habit of betting; he felt that he was on the way to destruction, but the gambling passion was too strong within him to be resisted. He told his Sunday-school teacher that he had given up many bad habits, but that from this one he did not feel able to escape.

'Were you always with me,' he said, 'I might manage it.' 'I cannot always be with you,' replied the teacher; 'but when and where do you gamble?' 'Oh, every day at dinner hour; I go down to the saloon at one o'clock,' was the answer. 'Well, I will tell you what I will do,' said the teacher: 'Every day as the clock strikes one, I will pray for you.' The young fellow was conquered. He came after a day or two, and said, 'I shall bet no more. Yesterday I wanted to go to the saloon, and I could not. I thought what a shame it was that you should be praying for me and that I should be gambling at the saloon, and I could not do it.'"

Thus by the patient, loving persistence in prayer of a good man, a sinner was brought into the Gospel fold. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

SEAFARING ENDEAVORERS.

ONE of the most interesting depts. ments of Christian Endeavor w[ork] is the Floating Society. It was ganized in 1890 specially for benefit of Christian sailors. comprised two departments: in organized societies on shipboard; the other of societies on shore in the ne[ighbor]hoods of ports and dockyards for w[ork] among the sailors. Both soon foun[d] most hopeful and encouraging field of[la]bor. In a short time societies were org[an]ized on several United States and merch[ant] vessels, and they have been sustained [with] excellent results, the members proving fa[ith]ful to their pledge and doing aggressive work among the crews. Many instan[ces] are on record of sailors coming on board [in] that condition of mobility when influ[ence] for good or ill would determine their w[hole] future; of their being brought under th[e] influence of the Christian Endeavor So[ciety] on the ship and so held for Christ from [the] first as they might not have been had [there] been no organization whose special [business] it was to look after them. The S[ocie]ties grew in number and in member[ship] especially on the United States vessels [in] this page is a picture reproduced fr[om a] photograph of the Society on board th[e] U. S. S. "Charleston." At the thirteenth [con]vention Miss Antoinette P. Jones, the [Su]perintendent of the work, was able to r[epo]rt fifty-one Floating Societies, of which s[ix]teen were on shore and the remainde[r on] shipboard, and she said that the reco[rd of] fidelity was equal to the records of soc[ieties] on shore.

Probably no class of men need so g[ra]ently the help that Christian End[eav]orers render. Cut off by their occupation fro[m the] advantages of church connec[tion], and to a large extent from re[gular] Sunday services, the Chri[stian] life in the soul is deprived of the s[pir]itual nourishment which he [ne]eds to sustain the religion of those [who] dwell ashore. Yet the sailor [as] others needs such nourish[ment]. He is brought into close as[so]ciation with the dissolute char[acters] for whom sea life has alway[s had] an attraction; he must hear [such] profanity, and when his ship[s] into port, temptations assail [him] on all hands. He needs en[cour]agement in his Christian p[rofes]sion, and an expression o[f the] kindly interest of his brethr[en in] the Lord. Beside this, the are happily on many ships qu[ite a] company of God-fearing [men], small generally in proporti[on to] the entire number of the [crew], but often sufficiently large t[o] der a religious meeting po[ssible]. Christian Endeavor comes [to the] sailor's help on both hands By visiting the ships in port a[nd by] providing the seafaring En[deav]orer with an introduction, as[sur]es him of finding brethren in Ch[rist in] any city where he may be staying and by supplying him with a basis of f[ellow]ship, it gives him the opportunity fo[r com]munion and mutual helpfulness afloat. On both the Atlantic and Pacific coast this good work is now going on with the most encouraging results.

HOW A COREAN KING DIE

The king of Corea, it is said, may [not] be touched with a metal weapon. The f[ate of] Tieng-tseng-Tai-Oung, an early rule[r was] taken sick with an abscess on his nec[k and] cried loudly for relief. All the great d[oc]tors of several nations thereabouts were g[ath]ered together, and agreed that all the[y] was to do was to lance it, but as this wo[uld be] touching the royal person with a [met]al weapon, and as the law was explicit [as to] the penalty for such an offence, the doct[ors all] refused to be dropped in molten lead [for] the mere purpose of saving the life of the [king], and so Tieng-tseng-Tai-Oung died in[hor]rible agony.

This very inconvenient law also [pre]vents the king being shaved, and [the] kings of Corea wear full beards. [On] other hand, for the king to touch an [ox] is considered such an extraordinary [thing] that very serious obligations ever aft[erwards] upon the person so touched. The mo[st] midable of these is the necessity of w[earing] forever a brass plate over the spot [of] royalty touched. This is partly in [order] that the spot may be kept sacred [from] other contact, and partly, of cours[e, for] purposes of public display.

CHRISTIAN PROGRESS.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the week Beginning September 29. II. Peter 1: 1-11.

REAL life includes development. It can never be stationary. The moment it stands still it begins to decline. However dearly the parent loves his infant son he could imagine no more terrible evil than to have him remain an infant. He loves him, desires him, cherishes him, thinks him perfect as he is, but it would be an awful thing to have that perfect form and charming mental condition crystalized, as it were, arrested and fixed. He expects development and would be disappointed if it did not come. Mental and physical life must expand and develop, otherwise it is not life. Spiritual life has the same conditions although the fact is not so generally recognized. The second birth should be the beginning of a development as capable as that which follows the first birth. The first experiences of the soul that is brought in contact with Jesus, glorious and delightful as they are, will become rudimentary in God's eyes, if the new life is not checked, but expands and strengthens as it should. The text suggests the question of ideals. When a soul enters the kingdom of Christ what is expected of it? What is the difference between the child in Christ and the full grown man? It is not unlike the difference in physical life. He has more control of his powers and understands better how to use them. He has more intelligence, more knowledge, has the benefit of experience, can endure more than the child, can apply his knowledge with more effect, can exercise more influence. He is stronger, more skilful, more effective. All these differences could characterize the stages of spiritual life. The experienced Christian should be in all these respects a better and more useful man than he was when he first opened his eyes in Christ's light. Peter marks the stages in the passage on which the Topic is based: Faith is the beginning. That he has otherwise he would not be in the condition where growth is possible. Faith must go on to virtue, to knowledge, to temperance, to patience, to godliness, to love. The Apostle considers that a man who does not strive to grow along this line does not know what is good for himself. "is blind and cannot see afar off." It is in this way, he believes, that men may escape the corruption of the world, may be made spiritual men instead of self-indulgent animals. The method, it will be seen, is not that of repression. It is not the "Thou shalt not" of the Mosaic dispensation, but the positive force of spirituality. It is the method that the old alchemists dreamed of applying to the body. They believed that somewhere in nature there was a potent agent, an elixir of life, armed with which, the physician need no longer fight disease or injure it, but administering the elixir would so strengthen the the life of the patient that he would throw off disease and even senility. That secret has never been discovered but the power has been found that will render a like service for the soul. "His divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." Union with the divine nature in Christ gives this potent force which insures everlasting life. It permeates the soul excluding the love of sin and the desire for self-indulgence; it quickens and strengthens the desire for spiritual attainment, so that the longing to be like God is the paramount force of the spiritual nature. It is to this power that Paul refers: II. Cor. 3: 18.

THE BOUNTIFUL HARVEST.

"THE HARVEST TRULY IS GREAT."—Luke 10: 2.

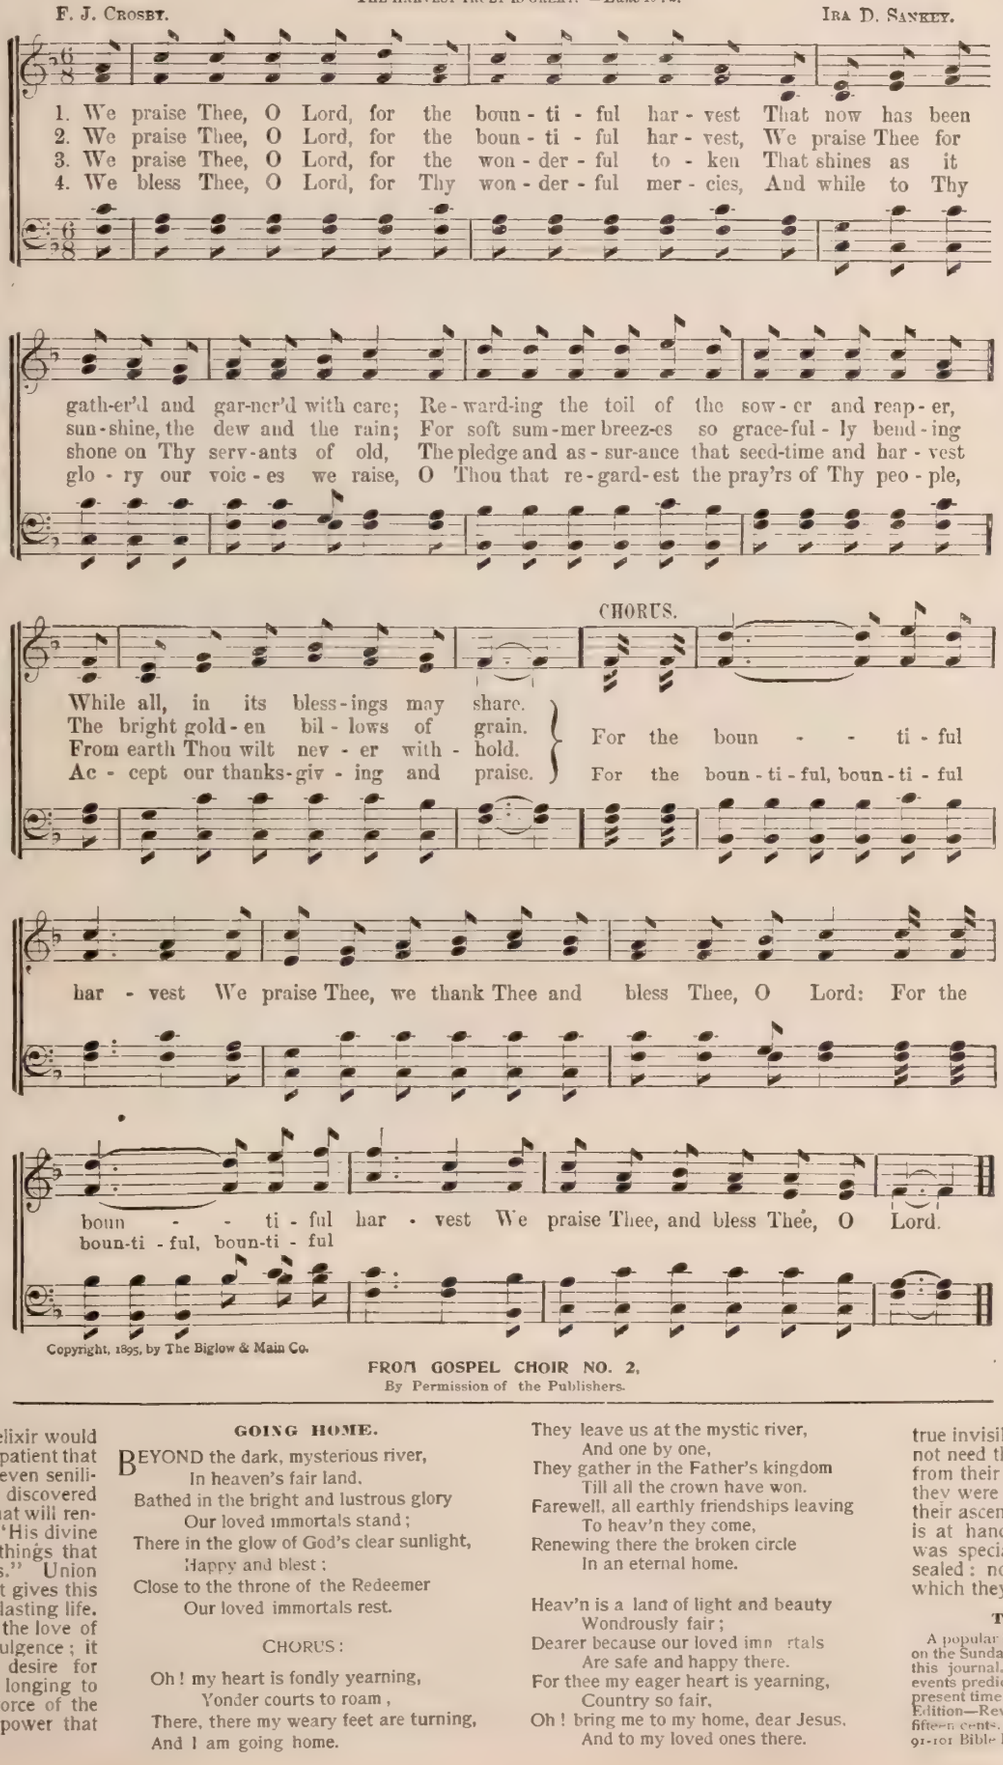
F. J. CROSBY. IRA D. SANKEY.



1. We praise Thee, O Lord, for the boun - ti - ful har - vest That now has been
2. We praise Thee, O Lord, for the boun - ti - ful har - vest, We praise Thee for
3. We praise Thee, O Lord, for the won - der - ful to - ken That shines as it
4. We bless Thee, O Lord, for Thy won - der - ful mer - cies, And while to Thy gath-er'd and gar-ner'd with care; Re - ward-ing the toil of the sow - er and reap - er, sun-shine, the dew and the rain; For soft sum-mer breez-es so grace-ful - ly bend - ing shone on Thy serv-ants of old, The pledge and as - sur-ance that seed-time and har - vest glo - ry our voic - es we raise, O Thou that re - gard - est the pray'rs of Thy peo - ple, CHORUS.
While all, in its bless-ings may share.
The bright gold - en bil - lows of grain.
From earth Thou wilt nev - er with - hold.
Ac - cept our thanks-giv - ing and praise.
For the boun - - ti - ful
For the boun - ti - ful, boun - ti - ful har - vest We praise Thee, we thank Thee and bless Thee, O Lord: For the boun - - ti - ful har - vest We praise Thee, and bless Thee, O Lord.
boun-ti - ful, boun-ti - ful

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2,
By Permission of the Publishers.

GOING HOME.

BEYOND the dark, mysterious river,
In heaven's fair land,
Bathed in the bright and lustrous glory
Our loved immortals stand;
There in the glow of God's clear sunlight,
Happy and blest;
Close to the throne of the Redeemer
Our loved immortals rest.

CHORUS:

Oh! my heart is fondly yearning,
Yonder courts to roam,
There, there my weary feet are turning,
And I am going home.

They leave us at the mystic river,
And one by one,
They gather in the Father's kingdom
Till all the crown have won.
Farewell, all earthly friendships leaving
To heav'n they come,
Renewing there the broken circle
In an eternal home.

Heav'n is a land of light and beauty
Wondrously fair;
Dearer because our loved immortals
Are safe and happy there.
For thee my eager heart is yearning,
Country so fair,
Oh! bring me to my home, dear Jesus,
And to my loved ones there.

PROPHETIC STUDY.

Why the Prophecies Have Failed to Give the Light to the Church they were Designed to give.

BY GEO. H. PEMBER, M. A.

Concluded from page 593.)

PROPHECY has been studied chiefly by men belonging to three separate and distinct schools of thought. The Præterist cannot believe that the Lord will return to the earth in glorious bodily presence, even as he ascended up into heaven. So he suggests that by "the coming of the Lord" we are to understand the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus!

The Post-millennialist does not absolutely deny that the Lord will return to the earth in person: he is, however, sure that the great event cannot take place at any unexpected hour, but only in the distant future, at a time far too remote to make it a matter of concern to the present dwellers upon the earth. Therefore, he places the thousand years of the Millennium between himself and the Appearing for which he has so little love. Hence he is compelled to make "the coming of the Lord" signify the death of a believer, and to understand many other phrases and passages in a non-natural sense—a practice which speedily reduces the whole Bible to vagueness and uncertainty.

The Historicist distributes the woes of the end over some eighteen centuries. Then, because in the interval between the advents the earth has been threatened by no such plagues as those which are threatened in the Apocalypse, he teaches that these supernatural plagues are merely figures of ordinary events in the history of the world the greater part of which are already past and gone! And so the terrors of the Book of Judgment are dissipated, and men are persuaded that God's wrath is not in proportion to the fear which his words inspire.

When Daniel had seen all his visions the angel said to him: "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the end: many shall search it through and through, and the knowledge of it shall be increased." Though the prophet himself comprehended the revelation, to others the words must be hidden, and the book sealed, until the time of the end. It was not for a near, but for a distant, future, even for the end of the indignation: therefore, it should remain a secret, until the time appointed for its accomplishment should be drawing near.

Very different, however, were the directions given to the Apostle John in regard to the Apocalypse;—"Seal not up the words of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand." But John was writing exclusively for those who are "servants" of the Lord Jesus, who are filled with the Holy Spirit, and can, therefore, understand the things of God. And because they are such, being the true invisible Church of Christ, they will not need the discipline of an age-long exile from their God: the dispensation in which they were born upon earth will also witness their ascent into glory: for them, the time is at hand. Therefore, the Book which was specially given to them could not be sealed: nor will there be any other age in which they will need it.

THE LORD'S COMING.

A popular little work by Mrs. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear every week in this journal. It contains fifteen chapters on the events predicted in the Bible to occur between the present time and the close of the Millennium. Third Edition—Revised and Enlarged. 104 pages. Price fifteen cents. Published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91-101 Bible House, New York.

A Mother in Israel.

How the Famous Tuesday Meeting in New York was Established by a Trio of Consecrated Christian Workers.

TO many believers in distant States and in other lands, "The Tuesday Meeting" in New York is a familiar name. For nearly three score years it has been held regularly every week and its echoes, and the high and pure spirit it has stimulated, have penetrated far and near. The Meeting was established by the venerable lady whose portrait appears on this page. Mrs. Palmer sat for the portrait on her eighty-ninth birthday, designing it as a gift to her friend, Mrs. Bella Cooke, in the hope that through the sale of copies of it, Mrs. Cooke might obtain additional funds for the charitable work she does in that little room, where she has lain helpless now nearly forty years.

At the time the Tuesday Meeting commenced, Mrs. Palmer was the wife of Mr. Thomas A. Lankford. She and her younger sister, Phœbe, then the wife of Dr. Walter C. Palmer, were almost from the beginning associated in the conduct of the meeting, at which they earnestly strove to induce all who came to seek the privileges which they declared God had promised to all of his children who would give themselves wholly and unreservedly to his leading. Both Mrs. Lankford and Mrs. Palmer had been converted in early life. They were the daughters of Mr. Henry Worrall, an Englishman who was received into church membership by John Wesley himself, and whose member's card bore the signature of the celebrated divine. He was living in his father's home at Sheffield, England, at that time, but afterward he came to America and settled in New York, where his two daughters were born. Their early love for each other was very tender and it continued after both were married, and down to the day when the younger sister was called from her earthly labors By that time Mrs. Lankford also had lost her partner in life, and their common loss, drew the bereaved husband and the desolate widow together. Finally Mrs. Lankford consented to fill the place her sister's death had left vacant, and in 1876 she became Dr. Palmer's wife.

The Tuesday Meeting had been a regular institution for nearly forty years, at that time, and its influence had been widely felt. It was the offspring of two meetings of which Mrs. Lankford was leader. One of these was held on Monday afternoons in Allen street Methodist Episcopal Church, and the other on Wednesday afternoons in Mulberry street Methodist Episcopal Church. They were the ordinary Methodist class-meetings, but the leader's influence was sufficient to give them a character of their own. She had entered more fully than most Christians into the doctrines of the higher life and was strongly moved to bring others to seek the blessing for themselves. Even among her nearest friends there were some who could not understand her enthusiasm, and some who misunderstood it. The class-meetings became so thoroughly identified with these doctrines, and were besides so much a duplication of labor, that it was thought wise to discontinue them and hold one meeting apart from the churches. The meeting was accordingly fixed for Tuesday afternoon, at 54 Bleecker street, where the Lankford and Palmer families had their common home.

The first meeting was held on the second Tuesday of February, 1836, when about forty ladies attended. The exercises were simple, but very solemn. One and another testified that their souls had caught views there of Christ, as their all-powerful Deliverer, such as they had never before experienced and one lady who besought prayers, rose from her knees with so wonderful a revelation in her heart that her face was glowing with light and joy. Several meetings were held with similar results. Mrs. Lankford was profoundly, humbly thankful, rejoicing in the evident tokens of God's approval. One blessing, however, her soul yearned for. She longed with an unutterable longing that [illegible] that was filling her own heart. She spoke to her often on the subject, but Mrs. Palmer, though a sincere and earnest Christian, had little faith in the possibility of obtaining "the second blessing," or in the real existence of such a blessing apart from the imagination of the receiver. Mrs. Lankford, one morning, made an unusually earnest appeal to her and resolved to spend the whole day in fasting and prayer, that her sister might see the matter as she saw it, and gain the same experience. That very day, the work began in her heart and very soon she was rejoicing in the same conviction as her sister, that God had wholly delivered her from the power of sin. Shortly afterward Dr. Palmer was brought in and he, too, became an earnest advocate of the doctrine. His accession led to the meeting being opened to men and after that, the attendance was limited only by the accommodations of the house.

Dr. Palmer's medical engagements occasionally prevented his being present, but either his wife or her sister were always there, and generally both took part in the exercises. They consisted chiefly in teaching, in testimonies and in prayers for such as were seeking the blessing. Rev. George Hughes who has written the story of the Meeting says that Dr. Palmer's prayers especially were "unctuous pleadings at the throne of grace." However that may be, it is certain there was an unction in them and in all the proceedings which was felt by every one present. The attendance was remarkable, almost from the beginning, for its undenominational character. Earnest Christians of every name, were to be met there, for even those who believed perfection in this life was a vain hope and higher attainments in the Christian life were to be gained by slow and continuous effort, rather than by a sudden gift from God, realized there, more than elsewhere, how dependent all such effort must be on the Holy Spirit, which is given in answer to such believing prayers as went up from that company of earnest souls. The meetings are still continued and every year at Ocean Grove there is an additional meeting for the the sojourners at that famous religious resort. Dr. Palmer was called home twelve years ago, but his widow is as devoted to the meetings as ever, and, though she is now in her ninetieth year, she is seldom absent from her place. Mainly to find room for the increasing numbers at the meeting, Dr. Palmer removed twice, and even now Mrs. Palmer's commodious home at 316 East Fifteenth street is often inconveniently crowded by strangers attracted to the meetings.

Bishop Mallalieu, writing of the hallowed service inaugurated by the subject of this sketch, gives the following testimony: This Tuesday Afternoon Meeting, commenced by those eminent saints of God, Mrs. Lankford and Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, continued for fifty years, has been blessed of God in the uplifting of many souls.

The work wrought in all those years will not [illegible] the words of testimony, the prayers of faith, the songs of holy joy and victory all live, and will for many, many years. True, many of those who have shared in the privileges of this gathering have gone to their reward, but this influence, like fragrance, perfumes, yet lingers to gladden and bless and encourage [illegible]

MRS S A LANKFORD PALMER FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN ON HER EIGHTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY.

Closing Days at Mont-Lawn.

Diphtheria in New York Tenements Gives a Halt to the Season's Work—What has been Accomplished this year

OWING to an outbreak of diphtheria of a malignant type, among the children of the city tenements in those neighborhoods from which the next company of little convalescents was to be taken for a ten days' health-recruiting stay at Mont-Lawn, the arrangement to keep open until October 1st has necessarily been modified. This dreaded disease, which at this season of the year is always more or less prevalent among the juvenile population in the poorer sections of New York, renders it impossible to take any further drafts of tenement children to the Home without incurring a great danger, and rather than run the risk of exposing our little guests to such perils, it has been decided to take no more tenement children to Mont-Lawn after to-day and to close the Home at the end of the current week. Thus far, during the whole season, there has not been a single serious case of sickness among our children. Including those now there, nearly 2400 children in all have been entertained this summer, as against 1124 last year. In every department, our Fresh-Air Fund's work has expanded, and a larger measure of health, happiness, and moral and spiritual improvement among the children of the very poor, the little waifs and outcasts of the great metropolis has been the result.

In announcing the close of the second season of our Fresh-Air Fund, we desire to express, in behalf of the children and their fathers and mothers—and also in behalf of those little guests who are orphans and alone in the world—the gratitude they feel, in their hearts and on their lips, for all the kindnesses that have been extended to them, for the pleasant days they have passed at the Home, and for the spiritual teachings they have enjoyed there. This is the message of our 2400 little guests to the good friends who have aided, by their kind letters, their prayers, and their gifts, in the support of the Home during the summer months. It is not likely that any one of the little beneficiaries will ever forget it, or will fail to recall, in days to come, the good times they had, the strength that was imparted by the nourishing fare, the sweet sleep, and the rompings in the pure air of Mont-Lawn; nor can they forget the hymns, the prayers, and the kindly monitions of the mission teachers. How many little lives were saved, how many wee hearts brightened, and how many dull tenement homes made summer even by the measure of a single gleam, as the result of all this kindness, may never be fully known save to the loving Father above, from whom alone the reward for such good deeds can come. It has afforded the proprietor of this journal unmixed pleasure to have been the means of originating and conducting a philanthropy that has met with such glorious co-operation, and been productive of so much good. In a short time, a financial statement of the season's work at the Home will be presented in TH CHRISTIAN HERALD, which will be re with interest by all who have had a sha however slight, in this labor of love for t tenement children.

Some of the letters received at the Hor from our children, are full of expr sions of love and gratitude. Otto a Theodore S——, write: "We thank y ever so much for being so patient in te ing Theodore. Kindly remember yo friends." "I was sorry that I left Mo Lawn, because it was very nice out there wrote B. B——. Little George M——, East Tenth street, New York, write "We are missing all the pleasure we had the country, and I would like to return. \ are not let play ball in the city."

A pretty letter, which is a sample many others, is that of Florence Sa ders, of Danvers, Mass., who says:

We are boys and girls who meet every Sun afternoon in a barn. Our teacher has told us of "Cry of the Children," and shown the pictures your paper. Some of us do not go to any other S day School, and people have been very kind to and we wish to do some good with the money give. To-day we counted our pennies and had s in the money-box-collections for three months. voted to send you $1 for the Fresh-Air Fund fi the Conant Street Sunday School, of Danvers, Ma

Mr. M. Shrenk, Bloomingdale, Ga., f warded $6 for the work of the Childre Home.

Mrs. C. B. Canthron, Avondale, Te ($10) writes:

I spoke of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Fresh Air I in Sunday School, and asked all to donate. Whe started home the Superintendent and teacher g me twenty-five cents a piece; later another gave twenty-five cents. I added more and sent for s ice. A few friends gave some sugar and cakes we had an ice cream supper and cleared ten lars, which I'm thankful to send for so good a cau

Mrs. C. H. Walker, Denver, Col writes:

Here are one dollar each from my two l nieces, aged eleven and thirteen, an I one from They have earned the money picking wild ber and knitting for me. Their little hearts are gre touched and go out in tender sympathy toward poor children they read about in THE CHRIST HERALD.

Contributions to the Work.

The following sums have been receiv during the week for the Children's Hon

Previously Acknowledged	$4,893.
A friend, Salisbury
Susan A McMurray and Lillian Blandford,	1
Mrs M F Crafton and others	1
Sylvia Schoch
——, Stockton	2
A mite from a widow, Northampton
Carson Presbyterian Juniors
Dev Drop Band, Harlemville	1
M C P and A L P, Foxboro
C E Richards	3
Frank W Cram
In His Name, Biddeford	1
Blanch and Rhea S. and Mary Miller
Mrs Z. Stowe
Gideon, Lovica and Annie Stofford
A V Arnonett	3
"All of us" Woodbourne	11
Mrs Caroline H Cook	6
Subr. Freedom	1
N. C	2
Sympathizer
Cynthia M Cam
I Girod	2
Mrs J M Densmore	1
W Reid	2
B E Wilcox	5
Mrs Alex Marcoux, Sr	10
Florence Webster	1
"Vision," Granville	5
In His Name, Balto
Mrs L M Merrow	3
Mrs J R M, N Y
Nellie B Shipp	1
Visitor to Children's Home
Proceeds of an ice cream supper, Avondale	10
Q McAdam	5
J R Mitchell	1
——, Brownsdale, Pa	1
H L Jones
S Mapson
Mother and Daughter, Sandwich
Walter McLaren	3
Willing Workers, 8th Chest Pres Church	5
Subr	1
Ada M Gray	1
Mamie G Johnston	1
H & W, Louisville	1
Mrs D M K, Brooklyn	5
One interested in the work, Umatilla	1
Helping Hand Bound Brook	5
Frances M Ruby
Mrs Alex Whittet	5
Jr. Chr. Endeavor So. Terrace Cong'l Church	5
V H Field	10
J T M, Kingsford	3
Mrs Minnie Green	1
Palmyra Corners Sunday School	3
C M, Brooklyn	5
Mrs Mary F Warner	2
Lula Wax Sibley	3
A wayfaring mother, Ohio	1
Two Readers of the C H, Green Cove Springs	1
Contributed by one who loves children, Stony Creek	7
Mrs. Helen Powers
Katie Ball - S S Class	5
M F C, Leadmine, Wis	1
Drop one among many, Bear's Landing, Pa	1
A friend, Clinton	5
Rae and Edith Hubbs	3
A Sum, Richfield	4
Mother and daughter	1
E B Paterson	3
Mrs Wm McCutcheon	5
Three friends, Camden	10
Mrs Mary C Beach	10
Friend New Haven	10
Friend E Brooklyn
Donald Lines Jacobus
Total	$5,117.2

King's Daughters, Marathon, N. Y., bbl clothing

Housekeeping in Arabia.

It Primitive Enough and Yet it Contains Some Good Suggestions — The Room and its Domestic Office.

AMERICAN housewives will naturally smile at the suggestion that even a hint of practical value can be taken from the conduct of a home, such as that shown in the illustration on this page. They will look in vain for the convenient cooking-range, the ovens, and the boiler, and even the indispensable kitchen table seems to be wanting. Those simple housewives of Arabia have apparently not yet come into contact with these implements of civilization. This is all the more strange, in view of the fact that the Arabs, who are industrious and enterprising as a race, led the world, by their invention and skill, to most of the more complicated inventions and manufactures of our own times.

Their work in metals has never been excelled, and the sword-blades of Damascus, the copper-work of Baghdad, and the gold and silver workmanship of Oman have been famous the world over. In preparing and dyeing leather, and in the production of the most delicate fabrics of the loom, the Arabian women excelled all others. Civilization owes to that country the introduction, if not the invention, of the pendulum, and the semaphoric telegraph, as also the manufacture of silk and cotton. The mariner's compass came to us from the Arabs, and writing-paper was made at Mecca as early as the eighth century, whence it spread throughout the Western world. Arab culture and philosophy, Arab architecture and science have possessed a wider sway than Arab conquest. Very many of the useful arts and practical inventions perfected by younger nations had their origin in Arab skill and ingenuity.

The Arab loom, shown in the picture, is easily recognizable as the prototype of the old-fashioned domestic loom, so common a few generations ago, in this country and Europe and which may still be found in some out-of-the-way sections of Switzerland and Holland. With such a crude machine, the skilful house-mother or the daughter would produce, not silk as the Arab woman is doing, but a very excellent and durable quality of cloth, for the use of the members of the household. One can imagine how slow and laborious must be the process of operating such a loom—labor which to-day is simplified and reduced by many later inventions. But in the Orient, time moves on tardy pinions, and changes and innovations are few. Arab housewives, except in rare instances, are content to do as their grandmothers did, and to cook, bake, sew, slave and work generally with implements that have long since been cast aside by the more progressive peoples of the West.

***

The Nagging of Children.

There are many parents who seem to suppose that their chief work in the training of a child is to be incessantly commanding or prohibiting; telling the child to do this or to do that, and not to do this, or that, or the other. But this nagging a child is not training a child; on the contrary, it is destructive of all training on the part of one who is addicted to it. It is not the driver who is training a horse, but one who neither is trained nor can train, who is all the time "yanking" at the reins, or "thrapping" them up and down. Neither parent nor driver, in such a case, can do as much in the direction of training by doing incessantly, as by letting alone judiciously. "Don't be always don't-ing," is a bit of counsel to parents that can hardly be emphasized too strongly. Don't be always directing, is a companion precept to this. Both injunctions are needful, with the tendency of human nature as it is. Of course, there must be explicit commanding and explicit prohibiting in the process of child-training; but there must also be a large measure of wise letting alone. When to prohibit and when to command, in this process, are questions that demand wisdom, thought, and character; and more wisdom, more thought, and more character are needful in deciding the question when to let the child alone.

***

Concerning Table-talk.

There are obvious reasons why the social talk at daily meals should possess a value not attainable under other circumstances in the ordinary Christian household. Just there is the place where all the members of the family must be together. However closely and however diversely they may be occupied at other times, when the hour for the household meal has arrived, everything else must be dropped by them all for the one duty of eating and drinking; and they must all come together for that common purpose. In the very nature of things, too, those who have gathered at the family table must, for the time being, have left all their work behind them, and be in a state of relaxation and of kindlier feeling accordingly. Only now and then is there a family circle the members of which recognize at the fullest, and make available at the best, the value of table-talk as a training agency for all who have a share in it, or who are under its immediate influence.

***

A Test of Our Love.

It is related that a little girl often followed her father around when he came into the house, with this question: "Father, what can I do for you?" And never was she happier than when he gave her something to do for him. Once he said, perhaps tired with her asking, "Child, why do you ask that question so much?" "Oh, father," she answered with tears in her eyes, "because I can't help it." It was love that put the question; and her readiness to undertake whatever he set her about was proof of the genuineness of that love. She wanted always to be doing something for her father. People sometimes are in doubt whether they love God or not. We will tell them how they can find out. Are you often asking your heavenly Father the same question this little girl asked her earthly father? Is it one of your first thoughts, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" And do you keep on asking because you cannot help it? It so fills your heart that it must come out. And you not only ask, but are on the lookout all the time to hear what he bids. This is the way to know whether you love God or not.

A GLIMPSE OF THE INTERIOR OF AN ARABIAN HOME.

***

A Little Girl's Prayer.

A little girl once said to her father, (writes Prof. Drummond,) "Papa, I want you to say something to God for me—something I want to tell him very much. I have such a little voice that I don't think he could hear it away up in heaven, but you have a great big man's voice, and he will be sure to hear you." The father took his little girl in his arms, and told her that even though God were at that moment surrounded by all his holy angels, sounding on their golden harps, and singing to him one of the grandest and sweetest songs of praise ever heard in heaven, he was sure that he would say to them: "Hush, stop singing for a little while. There's a little girl away down on the earth who wants to whisper something. Please, dear Lord, to listen."

A HOME IN HEAVEN.*

A HOME in heaven! What a joyful thought,
As the poor man toils in his weary lot!
His heart oppressed, and by anguish driven
From his home below to his home in heaven.

A home in heaven! As the sufferer lies
On his bed of pain, and uplifts his eyes
To that bright home; what a joy is given,
With the blessed thought of his home in heav'n.

A home in heaven! When our pleasures fade,
And our wealth and fame in the dust are laid,
And our strength decays, and our health is riven,
We are happy still with our home in heaven.

A home in heaven! When the faint heart bleeds
By the Spirit's stroke for its evil deeds;
Oh! then what bliss in that heart forgiven,
Does the hope inspire of a home in heaven.

Our home in heaven! Oh, the glorious home,
And the Spirit, joined with the bride, says "Come!"
Come, seek His face, and your sins forgiven,
And rejoice in hope of your home in heaven.

—REV. WILLIAM McDONALD.

* Published by request of numerous readers.

***

The Influence of a Good Home.

I know how much I owe personally to the fact of being brought up in a home where I was taught to appreciate the greatness of righteous authority, the vastness of its meaning, the advantage of submitting to it, and the serious risk of resisting it, writes the Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst. No anarchist could ever have graduated from the home I was born, loved and cherished in. Such experience makes me pity the children who know no discipline but that of caresses and sweetmeats, and makes me more than pity the parents who have neither the discernment in their mental constitution nor the iron in their moral constitution to perceive that nothing which a child can know or can win, can begin to take the place of the sense of superior authority, and of the holy right of that authority to be respected, revered and obeyed. The moral strength of a man is measured pretty accurately by the cordial reverence with which he regards whatsoever has the right to call itself his master. Estimated by this criterion, the average American boy is a discouraging type of humanity, and is a severe reflection upon the crude attempts at manhood manufacture evinced by the typical American home. If our homes cannot turn out children that will respect authority, there will be no authority in a great while either at home, in the State or anywhere else, that will be worth their respecting.

***

The Children's Sleep.

Sleep is regarded as the time when only good arrives to the sleeper, and in the case of adults this is so; with children, however, the matter is different. The actual fact of sleep is good, but the matter of sleep is not always so by any means, for, during these periods of repose, a child may contract a habit of position which will cause a lasting deformity. In the first place, children are often put to sleep always on the same side. The mother finds them less restless so, and thoughtlessly lays them that way. Sometimes this restlessness is caused by physical defects, but it mainly arises from habit. No creature on earth is more liable to habit than a tiny, soft baby that you wouldn't think could possess any distinct quality. A mother, for some reason peculiar to herself, finds it most convenient to place the little one on its left side, we will say, for about three days; when the fourth day arrives, master baby decides there is something wrong if he is put on his right side, and forthwith begins to squirm and twist until he fidgets himself awake. Mamma places him on the other side and he serenely settles himself.

***

Papa's Prayer and its Answer.

At his family altar one morning, a man prayed that God would help a poor neighbor who lived just across the street. The neighbor was in a great deal of distress that money could relieve. In his prayer, the well-to-do brother told the Lord all about how badly off his poor neighbor was, and asked him to do everything for him that was needed. As he arose from his knees and wiped his moist eyes, feeling pretty well satisfied with himself, his little boy went up to him and said: "Give me your pocketbook, papa, and I'll go over to Mr. Smith's and answer your prayer myself."

...NADJA;...

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

CHAPTER X.

Before the Icon.

FOR two days Nadja remained a close prisoner in her own room. Save that her father kept a strict watch on her movements she was not molested in any way. She had no desire to leave the house, and told her father so, but it seemed as though he could not trust her. He sat reading in his carved chair outside the cottage all day long, only leaving it to perform his prolonged devotions before the icon. Grisha attended on his young mistress, leaving his cows and sheep to wander over the dunes at their own sweet will. He made tea for her, and ran into the cottage every now then to report that a certain peasant had gone along the river path, and that another had crossed the river, that a woman had gone to cut rushes, and so on. His artless, half-foolish gibberish which only she could perfectly understand, helped to interest the girl, and the simple kindness of his every word and action did something to compensate her for her loss of liberty, if it failed to banish the thoughts of the terrible interview with her father which she knew was coming, and which weighed so heavily on her spirits.

At last the afternoon of the departure came, and Nadja could hear the voices of the peasants on the road as they awaited the coming of the traveling carriage. Her father was at the ferry with the hired man, and she and Grisha were alone, he running in and out in a state of the utmost excitement.

"Tell me, Grisha," asked Nadja at last, what are those voices? I hear the people in front of the house."

"Oh, it is grand, Nadja! I was waiting for you to ask. The sun is shining low down, and Panitch Sergei and Panitch Volodia are going away to fight, and they say they are going in the carriage, and the carriage will be coming down the hill presently; and Mikhail the Stundist is going also, and all the people are waiting to see them."

"But Mikhail the Stundist! Is he going also!" Nadja's heart sank.

"Yes, they say he's sick, and that if he does not go away he'll die. Panitch Sergei is taking him."

Nadja bowed her face in her apron and wept, and Grisha stood by silent and wondering. She raised her tear-stained face, and told him to go away and tell her no more, and he went lingeringly and looking longingly from the doorway. Nadja heard the clamor of the peasants outside, caught a word here and there, but nothing connected.

A [illegible] followed as they went up the hill to meet the carriage, then the crackle and crunch of the wheels on the road and the subdued voices of the returning villagers. Now and again she could hear her father giving orders about the ferry, and at last Sergei's cheery voice as he [illegible] But the voice that she was straining every nerve to hear was silent. She threw herself on her bed and [illegible]

It was not long before her father returned. She heard him drag his heavy chair [illegible] in its usual place before the stove. She heard him pace silently backwards and forwards in the little outer room until it was quite dark, until Grisha had come in and lain down on the straw under the table. Sometimes he tramped slowly and methodically, sometimes in haste, smiting his hands together and sighing. Apparently worn out, he sank down at last in his chair in the dark and slept.

Towards midnight he wakened and rousing Grisha ordered him to light the lamp, he himself lighting the little blue lampada hanging by its silver chain before the icon. He then drew the chair into the centre of the room facing the shining picture of St. Nicholas the Wonder-Worker.

"Nadja," he said in grating tones, "are you asleep?"

"No, father."

"Then dress yourself quickly and come here; I have much to say to you."

In a few minutes Nadja appeared, pale, worn, hollow-eyed.

"Sit down, child in the chair. Grisha, bring the lamp here and set it on the stove. Look up, girl. Why have you been weeping?"

"Oh father, I am so miserable! I am so lonely. I am frightened. I am not like other girls. I see them with their friends laughing and happy. I see them working and playing; they are brown and strong and always smiling. Let us go away, father, from this place. I hate it. Let us go to Kief that I heard you talk of. We will be happier there."

"Nadja, don't try to deceive me. Look at the icon and answer this question: Have you given the true reason for your unhappiness? You are trying to blind my eyes."

The girl made no answer. She only sobbed. Sozontieff, ceasing to speak in the quiet passionless tones he had hitherto used, raised his voice threateningly. Turning first to Grisha, he ordered him to leave the room, and Grisha obeyed with a scowl. The door was looked behind him. Then Sozontieff returning close to Nadja seized her roughly by the shoulders and shook her.

"Girl, the truth—tell me the truth."

Nadja cried out in pain and terror, and tried to speak, but her tongue refused to utter a coherent word.

"You won't speak? You think you can hide things from me? I'll let you know to the contrary." He went to a recess in the stove, from which he took an old leather-bound Slavonic Bible, which he placed in her hands. "Now, girl, with this in your hands, if you speak not the truth the holy Wonder-Worker before whom you sit will strike you with blindness. It was with this book that your grandfather Piotr Samuilitch struck blind the 'ataman' Akseni when he came in pursuit of us as we were escaping from the Cossacks. Now answer!"

"You know Mikhail the Stundist!"

"Yes."

"When did he speak to you last? When did you last see him?"

"Two days ago."

"Quite right. Where did he speak to you?"

"Along the river; under the Blue Cliffs."

"What did he say to you? What passed between you?"

"I don't know. Oh, father, you torture me. Don't ask me any more questions. For God's sake leave me alone! I cannot answer you."

"You shall answer me," he said fiercely; "you have been carrying on a secret intrigue with my enemy, with a man who is fast leading the people into such error that

(Continued on page 613.)

* Published by arrangement with Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto.

Women and Women only

Are most competent to fully appreciate the purity, sweetness, and delicacy of CUTICURA SOAP, and to discover new uses for it daily

In the form of washes, solutions, etc., for distressing inflammations, irritations, and weaknesses of the mucous membrane, it has proved most grateful

CUTICURA SOAP appeals to the refined and cultivated everywhere, as the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet and bath.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

DYSPEPSIA! NEW CURE!

A new and positive cure has been discovered in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. So great is the faith of the proprietors that they will send a free trial package to any sufferer. Full sized package sold by druggists at 50 cts. Address

F. A. STUART CO., Marshall, Mich.

It is Known By Its Cures

The thousands of people whom it has raised from disease and despair to happiness and health, are the strongest and best advertisements Hood's Sarsaparilla has. No other preparation in existence has such a record of wonderful cures.

This is why Hood's Sarsaparilla has the largest sale, and requires for its production the largest laboratory in the world.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Is the Only True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eye. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla. 25c.

Professional Men Are Apt to concentrate their nervous force in mental work to the utter neglect of their physical welfare, and in a short time they suffer from debility, exhaustion, mental depression, etc., and are obliged to yield to restless, sleepless prostration. Rev. J. R. Miller, of the Erie Conference, M. E. Church, wrote Oct. 24, '92: "I broke down because of overwork, my nervous system being overtaxed. But I kept on until completely overcome. I tried several physicians; traveled and took medicine of all sorts without relief, until I took Dr. Miles' Nervine which cured me." April 10, '95, Dr. Miller wrote: "I have done full work on an important charge, and my health has been good ever since I took the Nervine."

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold on guarantee. that first bottle benefits, or money refunded.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Restores ...Health

Buy Comfort Powder. What for?

For Chafing, Nettle rash, Smarting feet, Itching, Sunburn, Fetid sweat, Eczema, Insect bites, and all Inflammation.

Comfort Powder is a quick cure. It is the summer medicine box.

THE COMFORT POWDER CO. HARTFORD, CONN.

Send four cents in stamps for sample.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 40 Rose St., New York.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE, OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

If you have never tried

POZZONI'S you do not know what an ideal complexion powder is. Sold everywhere.

"Use the means and heaven will give you the Blessing." Never neglect a useful article like SAPOLIO

Beecham's pills for constipation 10¢ and 25¢. Get the book at your druggist's and go by it.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

THE DOCTOR'S COLUMN.

Anna, New Orleans.—For some time I have been troubled with dyspepsia and constipation. What shall I take?

Take Gastrine, a teaspoonful three times a day, after meals. Twice a week take a teaspoonfuls of Natrolithic Salts, in a tumbl of water, a half-hour before breakfast.

Chas. W. W., St. Louis.—Am troubled with ma. Please advise.

Take Thyroidine, extract of the thy gland, in three-drop doses, twice daily, two months.

S. M. B., Pittsburgh.—Am almost prostrated nervousness. Very constipated. Please state ten.

Take Cerebrine, extract of the brain, in drop doses, three times daily, on the tong for two months. A dose of Natrolithic S. twice a week, before breakfast.

H. Yonkers, N. Y.—I have had a severe ill that has left me with a weak heart. Will a your remedies help me?

Take Cardine, extract of the heart, in th drop doses, on the tongue, twice daily.

George, New York.—Send full name; advise by mail.

W. T. PARKER, M. D. Med. Dept., Col. Chem. Co., Washington, D. C.

THE ANIMAL EXTRACTS.

CEREBRINE, From the Brain. MEDULLI From the Spinal Cord. CARDINE, From Heart. OVARINE, THYROIDINE. Dose, 5 drops. Price, Two Drachms, $

GASTRINE.

A new and valuable remedy for Dyspepsia. $

FEBRICIDE PILLS. For Malarial Affecti Neuralgia and Sick Headache. 50 c

CATARRHINE. For Catarrh, Hay Fever, Month's treatment, including Insufflator, $

NATROLITHIC SALTS

For Habitual Constipation, Torpor of the L and Inaction of the Liver. 50 c

At all Druggists, or from COLUMBIA CHEMICAL CO., Send for Literature. (182) Washington, D.

FREE. A Deaf Man's Slate

25 years I was almost totally deaf; could not understand a word; had to carry a slate so that people could "talk" to me. In one week after commencing Aerial Medication, I surprised my friends by discarding the slate, I steadily improved, and now can hear the slightest noise and can understand conversation perfectly.

Edward E. Williams, Lead, S. Dk.

Medicines for 3 Months' Treatment Fr

To introduce this method and prove beyond that it will cure Deafness, I will for a short time Medicines for three months' treatment free. Ad J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati.

THE SPRING'S THE THING that makes THE EGAN TRUSS so helpful. A constant and unerring pressure that re places, relieves & CURES RUPTURE

No other like it. A painless and perma remedy for all cases of rupture. Fully Guar teed. 1000's of testimonials and physicians end ments. Used by the government for pensioners

Write THE EGAN TRUSS CO., 27 Huron St., ANN ARBOR, MI

EVERY WOMAN

Wants HARTMANN'S W. W's. for Home Traveling, etc: Invaluable and Indispensable: Light, Antiseptic, Deodorant, and sold at less cost of washing. For sale at all Dry Goods and Stores. Send for Circulars: agents wanted sam cents. HYGIENIC WOOD WOOL C 56 Broadway, New Yo

BEFORE BUYING A NEW HARNESS

Send 2 cent stamp for 80 page illustrated Catalogue of Custom Hand made Oak Leather Harness direct to consumers at wholesale prices. Why not buy from first hands and save the middlemen's profit. You can buy by mail as well as though here in person. Making to order a specialty KING & CO., No. 42 Church St., Owego

BINDERS.

With the PARAGON BINDER "Herald" can be bound as rece each week in book form. Every per in neat order for reference future readings. Binder guarant Sent post-paid 20 cents each CHAS. S. BEEB 129 Lincoln Place, Brooklyn.

ABDOMINAL BEL for Corpulency and Umbilical Rup Immediate relief and solid cur Write for particulars and prices I. B. SEELEY & CO., 25 S. 11th St., Philadelphia, P in mparison what they call Orthodoxy is pu y and truth itself. I have guessed it all ong. As a child he used to seek to lead yo astray. Now he is a man and you are a man. You know what you are doing. Yo shall tell me fully and clearly every de- tai f this miserable love-making of yours or shall kill you, yes, kill you like a dog. Do ou hear me?"

"ather," whispered Nadja hoarsely th gh parched lips, "I have told you the tru Why will you torment me? I did no to that place to meet the Stundist. I did not even know he was there. Oh, if I had known he was to see me there, I would ne have gone—never! Look, I am telling e truth. I hold the Bible in my hand an look at the Wonder-Worker. I see, an m not blind."

"id you go to the Blue Cliffs to meet son one else? So the Stundist then is not the only one whom you have allowed to con near you? If it was not the Stundist, it was one of the Orthodox, one of those wh are condemned to hell fire. Who was it. Isk?"

Nja gave no answer. She recognized tha er father did not know so much as she id feared, and that his suspicions had ta n on the wrong person. But she was determined not to divulge her secret, or bathe a syllable that would implicate Vla nir.

"ou are silent, girl; you think to hide this thing from me," began her father, "bu I must know it. I have lived all the years an honored and honorable man. I ha kept myself and all that is mine unsp ld. Now in my old days it is revealed me, but not by the voice of man, that my ly child, the daughter whom I dearly love who was all I had on earth, is false to herself, false to me, false to her religion; tha she has her secrets, her intrigues, that she in terrible danger of falling into the deep t sin, if"—here he shot a quick glan at her—"if she has not fallen already." Then turning to the icon: "Answer me, Wonder-Worker. Has my daughter spok truly?"

The half-crazed fanatic waited a moment for answer, and then in deep tones he ans red himself:

"She has spoken truly, but she has not told u all."

"Will she tell me all, O holy Nicholas?"

"She will tell you nothing more. I will tell u all."

"Has she been true to her faith? Has she gone hankering after a man of the false chu ch? Has she brought disgrace on my grey airs?"

"Yes, all that you say she has done."

"Wonder-Worker, teli me how to win her ck." Here his voice took an accent of in scribable pathos. "Tell me how she may e redeemed. May I not know who it is that has led her astray? May I not hear his name that I may keep his shadow from my door, that he may not further pollute y house?"

A long pause followed. Nadja's head had sunk low on her bosom; she had clasped h hands, and her long golden hair, which had been loosened in the fierce grip of h father, had fallen all about her shoulders. Sozontieff busied himself in lighting tapers before the icon until it glittered with ten thousand reflections; then extinguishing the lamp and kneeling down in fr t of his daughter, but with his face to the icon, he waited the answer. It came at la , the father speaking as if he was repeating something spoken to him. The questions were in his ordinary voice, and the answers deep and hoarse.

"Yes, you shall know his name."

"Is not the Stundist preacher?"

"No."

"One of his cursed flock!"

"No."

"Is it the Jew "kabak" keeper?"

"No."

"The priest? One of the silly crowd of idolaters?"

"No."

"Yes he live in Slavo?"

"Not now."

"Where is he?"

"On the road to Kief."

"What!" Sozontieff turned with a fierce yell to his daughter, and seized her hand in his. "It is the Panitch. It is Pan Vladimir. Have you sunk so low? Have you forgotten what purity and honor are? You are a peasant's daughter, he is a noble! Do you know what that means? You are an Old Believer, he an idolater. Do you know what that means?" He flung her hands away and they came in sharp contact with the arm of the chair. The pain of the blow must have been acute, but she made no sign of having felt it. He looked at her eyes—they were shut. He put his hands on her cheeks—they were cold and clammy. He rose to his feet and turned again to the icon.

"One more question, O Wonder-Worker! What am I to do to redeem her? Can she not be brought back to me?"

"Impossible, save by death!"

"And will death purify her? Will she then become as one of the blessed? Will sin no longer cleave to her and do her injury?"

"Death will set her free, and only death. Read what the Lord told Abraham to do with Isaac."

At this answer Sozontieff staggered back, pushing away the tangled grey hair from his forehead and staring at the Wonder-Worker. Then taking his Slavonic Bible from Nadja's lap he turned the leaves to find the terrible chapter where Abraham journeyed to Mount Moriah to sacrifice his son. He read the passage aloud, and when he came to how a ram was caught by its horns in the thicket and was offered up instead of Isaac his face brightened; he looked up at the icon.

"Will a substitute be provided for my daughter?"

"You shall see. Do as you are told. Have faith. Your daughter shall not die."

(To be Continued.)

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Prostration.
Mental Depression.
Nervous Dyspepsia.
Mental Failure.

Freligh's Tonic (A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant)

will cure when everything else has failed. Prescribed and endorsed now, and for ten years past, by over 40,000 Physicians. Sample by mail 25c., ten days' trial. Regular bottle $1 by mail. Small bottle, but 100 doses in each.

Concentrated, Prompt, Powerful.

Formula, descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton St., New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Don't think because you can buy Copco Soap for 5 cts., that it is anything like the common soap usually sold at this price.

COPCO
TRADE MARK.

the perfect soap, is purer and better than any you have ever used. Ask your dealer to let you see a cake, then you'll buy it.

Made only by
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, New York,
St. Louis.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh
ANCHOR,	Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC,	New York.
BEYMER-BAUMAN,	Pittsburgh.
BRADLEY,	New York.
BROOKLYN,	New York.
COLLIER,	St. Louis.
CORNELL,	Buffalo.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS,	Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN,	Cincinnati.
FAHNESTOCK,	Pittsburgh.
JEWETT,	New York.
KENTUCKY,	Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY,	Cleveland.
MISSOURI,	St. Louis.
RED SEAL,	St. Louis.
SALEM,	Salem, Mass.
SHIPMAN,	Chicago.
SOUTHERN,	St. Louis and Chicago.
ULSTER,	New York.
UNION,	"

Taking

it for granted that you want to get the best results in painting, you will have to use Pure White Lead to obtain them. There are many mixtures branded "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc., which contain little, if any, White Lead, but are principally barytes, which is of little value, if not worthless. To be sure, accept only a genuine brand (see list).

If you want any shade of color, tint the White Lead with National Lead Co.'s tinting colors, prepared expressly for this purpose. A feature of these colors is the ease with which they are used and the exactness with which the desired shade is obtained. For particulars send for pamphlet, free.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

U. S. Census for one year, 1880, reports
35,607 Deaths from Cancer.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,

An institution for the thoroughly effective and perfectly scientific treatment of Cancer, Tumors, and all malignant growths, without the use of the knife.

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity for treatment.

Book giving a description of our Sanatorium and treatment, with terms and references, free. Address DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

Clark's Patented Rotary Upholstery Brush.

(Moth Exterminator.) For cleaning Button indentations in Furniture, Carriage Linings, Mattresses, etc. "No moths live where this brush is used." Agents wanted everywhere. Sample by mail 50c. E. H. PHILLIPS & CO.,
Sole Owners, 180 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, etc. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

Pass-It-On

BROOKLYN, N. Y., February 8, 1895.
The pocket inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the "PASS-IT-ON-SOCIETY."
Sincerely yours,
REV. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.

TRADE BOOTH'S HYOMEI MARK
"DRI-AYR"

The phenomenal success of Hyomei has been built up largely on the personal recommendation of those cured. From the sale of one Inhaler outfit, we can trace, in some instances, the sale of fifty others.

PRICE (by mail) $1.00.

BOSTON, MASS., April 20, 1894.
Dear Sir: (Care Jordan, Marsh & Co.)
I had cartarrh for twenty years, and the last ten years (all of which time has been passed in this great establishment) I suffered fearfully. One half-dozen hankerchiefs per day would be used. It extended to my throat; the base of my tongue was badly affected. I constantly kept in my mouth cardamon seeds or some such breath purifier. I could not sleep with my mouth closed. I began using Hyomei in December, 1893, and in two weeks I was entirely—and now after four months and no return of the disease, I can say, permanently—cured. I am going to ask the head of this firm, Mr. Eben D. Jordan, to endorse this statement.
Yours for the cure of millions,
ELVIRA E. B. GIBSON.
Endorsed, Eben D. Jordan.

TEMPLE COURT, NEW YORK CITY, November 26, 1894.
MY DEAR MR. WYCKOFF—On your suggestion, I procured from your friend, Mr. Booth, one of his pocket inhalers. It has worked like a charm. The bronchitis has entirely disappeared, and, thanks to you, is the first thing I have found in ten years that has given permanent relief. Cordially yours,
F. H. WILSON.
[The above letter to the late W. O. Wyckoff, Esq., President Remington Typewriter Co., from Hon. Francis H. Wilson, Member of Congress, speaks for itself. The letter is published with the consent of Mr. Wilson.]

PUBLIC SCHOOL NO. 37, BROOKLYN, February 21, 1895.
Hyomei is a wonderful compound. A few inhalations almost instantaneously banished my asthmatic trouble. I was first led to use it by the startling testimony of intimate friends.
GEO. L. A. MARTIN,
Principal Public School No. 37.

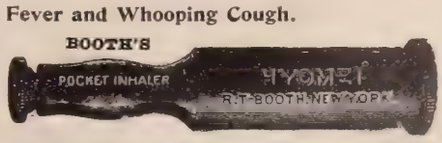
By inhalation only, the Australian "Dry-Air" Treatment of Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Laryngitis, Hay Fever and Whooping Cough.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, inexpensive, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

BOOTH'S



Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00 (consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using). If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure.

Are you open to conviction? Consultation and trial treatment free at my office. R. T. BOOTH, 18 East 20th St., New York.

Good Causes Helped.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Bethesda Home for Friendless Women.

Previously ack'd	$441 93
Mrs J C Keyes	1 00
Mrs J C Houghton	1 00
Mrs W Davies	1 00
In the Name, Elkhart Ind	1 00
Unknown	4 00
A friend, Wyo	2 00
Total	$451.93

For Mrs. Bella Cook's work.

Previously ack'd	$40 25
Mrs W Davies	1 00
Mrs N E Muartz	2 00
Unknown	4 00
Mrs Bumgardner	1 00
Total	$48.25

For Mooty Gospel Fund.

Previously ack'd	$125 02
Sister Black Rock	2 00
Unknown	4 00
Total	$131.02

For Foreign Missions.

Previously ack'd	$117 50
Unknown	20 00
In His Name, Dimmer Pa	5 00
Total	$142.50

For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Previously ack'd	$208 75
Christian Lessons	1 00
A Subscriber, Placerville, Cal	1 00
Mrs S M Davis	1 00

For Mrs Eliza J Cook

	5 00
Anna Yound	1 00
Wm S Magee	5 00
M A H N Y C	10 00
J McClun	1 00
Unknown	4 00
Old Subr, Ga	50 00
A friend, Wyo	2 00
Total	$289.75

Home Missions.

Previously ack'd	3 00
D C Steiner	10 00
Total	$13.00

For Mrs. Jamal's Training School, Jerusalem.

Previously ack'd	$448 00
Mrs Elizabeth J Mussell	1 00
Mrs E A Peers	2 00
Hurdville S S. Parry Sound	12 30
Unknown	4 00
Mrs P P M Middle Granville, N Y	2 00
Mr and Mrs T N Boggess	2 00
J M Lewis	50
—, Fonthill, Ont.	1 00
Total	$472.80

For Rev. C. H. Mead, Sec'y Nat'l Temp. Soc'y.

Unknown	20 00

For Any Good Cause.

Previously ack'd	$66 45
J D Smither	2 00
Thank offering, Ind.	1 00
Total	$69.45

Y. M. C. A. EDUCATIONAL WORK.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New York has arranged to commence a thorough educational department early in the fall. The classes will [illegible] bookkeeping, phonography, commercial law, typewriting, and business correspondence.

Are you Nervous? Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. B. Brusstar, Birdsboro, Pa., says: "I have used it in nervous troubles for years, and always with good results."

Do You Have Asthma?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery that they are sending out free by mail large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card. Write to them

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.

We will give $200.00 to anyone who will sell within the next three months 200 copies of "Talks to Children About Jesus." One of the most popular books ever published. Over 150,000 copies already sold. Agents sell from 10 to 100 copies a day. Beautifully illustrated. Freight paid and credit given. Complete canvassing outfit and full information [illegible]

$100.00 BICYCLE GIVEN to anyone who will sell 20 copies in two months. Agents who do not secure any of the prizes are given very liberal commission Best book published for the Holidays. We offer also most liberal rates on other books and Bibles. Write at once.

R. H. WOODWARD COMPANY,
Baltimore, Md.

★★★★★★CLSC★★★★★★

CHAUTAUQUA

(Literary and Scientific) Reading Circle

THE AMERICAN YEAR

A systematic course in American politics, industries and literature illustrating the Development of National Life.

Why not supplement your desultory reading with a well-directed course for the coming winter? Chautauqua offers a practical, comprehensive plan.

JOHN H. VINCENT, Dept. 25, BUFFALO, N. Y.

★★★★★★CLSC★★★★★★

The Leading Conservatory of America
Carl Faelten, Director.
Located in Unity
E. Tourjee.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. BOSTON MASS.
Franklin Sq.
Send for Prospectus giving full information.
Frank W. Hale, General Manager.

N.Y.U. Evening Law School Founded in Metropolitan Law Centre. Opens Oct. 1, 1895. LL.B. course three years. Excellent courses. AUSTIN ABBOTT, Dean. Address for catalogue REGISTRAR, University Building, Washington Square, New York. Vice Dean, CLARENCE D. ASHLEY, 207 Broadway, N. Y. City

Improve your spare time. You can [illegible] Penmanship, Lettering and Mercantile Arithmetic. Send 10 cents for Lessons and Catalogue. PENN'S CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Penn Building, Pittsburgh, Pa. Box 1254

No matter what burner or lamp you use, do you get the right chimney for it?

Write Geo A Macbeth Co, Pittsburgh, Pa, for "Index to Chimneys."

Pearl glass, pearl top, tough glass.

Solved!—The Sunday Evening Problem.

A new plan has been introduced for the Sunday evening service, and it is successful. Wherever used, churches are crowded, the people delighted and instructed in Divine truth; spiritual results are secured and finances helped.

Write for pamphlet, "Solved: or, The Sunday Evening Problem." Read its hints, and the actual experience of pastors who have tried the new plan. It is mailed for the asking. Illustrated catalogue 20 cents.

RILEY BROTHERS,
Branches: 16 Beekman St., New York.
Boston 244 Washington St. Chicago 196 La Salle St. Kansas City (Mo.) 815 East 18th St. Minneapolis 1564 Hennepin Ave Chattanooga 708 Market St. San Francisco 430 Kearny St. Portland 411 Couch St.

Spencerian Steel Pens.

For THIRTY-FIVE YEARS have maintained their superiority for

Quality of Metal, Workmanship, Uniformity, Durability.

Sample card, 12 PENS, different numbers, for all styles of writing, sent on receipt of 4 CENTS in postage stamps.

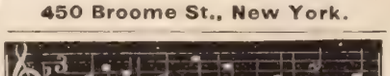
SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
450 Broome St., New York.



Golden Sheaves. A Service of Song and Readings for Harvest Festivals and Thanksgiving. Price, 5 cents per copy.

Royal Organ Method. A new and very complete method for the parlor organ, prepared by a thoroughly competent organist. A large variety of the best music carefully arranged for the organ. Price, $2.00.

Branzoli's Mandolin Method. An elegant edition of this celebrated work, printed complete from the original Italian work. Other American editions are abridged. Price, $2.00.

Gospel Hymns, Nos. 1 to 6, Complete. Music edition, cloth, $1 18 by mail. Words only, small type, 12 cts by mail. Words only, large type, Boards, 30 cents by mail.

Model Music Course for Public Schools. The following books of the series are now ready: Primer (25 cts), First Reader (30cts), Second Reader (30cts), Third Reader (30cts) Circulars and specimen pages Free.

The Musical Visitor commencing with September number, will contain Songs and Piano Music instead of Anthems and Organ Music. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

NEW MUSIC.

COSPEL CHOIR NO. 2. By Sankey, McGranahan and Stebbins. Now ready. 192 Pp. Music by Northfield Songsters. Complete Sample Copy, paper cover, 25 cts

HIGHEST PRAISE. For Sunday Schools. By W A Ogden. $30 per 100. Sample Copy, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 Bible House, Astor Place, New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

Seven Gables FOR GIRLS of all ages. Looks to their physical as well as higher mental culture. Boarding strictly limited. Commodious and well appointed building. Gymnasium. A thorough preparatory course. Native French and German teachers. Special certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, Wellesley and Boston Universities. Address for Catalogue Mrs. Sarah S. Wescott, Principal, Bridgeton, N. J.

What do You Think of This!

TIME speeds on—before you realize it Christmas is at hand and the worry of selecting gifts begins. An inexpensive gift that will give pleasure and be of utility and at the same time suggest appropriateness is one of the most difficult problems that confronts us at holiday times. The trouble is we put it off too long. Nothing seems to suggest itself as "just the thing" and thus the important duty of selecting our gifts is left till the last minute and one must then "take what is left." The readers of The Christian Herald should not be of the dilly-dally sort. The World's Fair souvenir spoons are just the thing. And as bridal or birthday gifts it would be a hard matter to find another gift so pleasing to the donor, at such a small price. One lady writes:

Staunton, Va., June 27, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I received the spoons O. K and am more than pleased with them. I am delighted.

I presented one set as a bridal present and they attracted more attention and admiration than any of the other presents.

Enclosed please find postoffice order for the amount $6.00 for which you will please forward six sets of your "World's Fair souvenir spoons and the cake basket which you offer as premium for same. Yours truly,

(Signed) Lillie V. Croft,
318 Fayette St.

Tom's Creek, P. O., McDowell Co., July 2 [illegible]

Gentlemen:—The half dozen [illegible] spoons came safely and I am pleased with them. Respectfully

(Signed) Jas. Harvey Green

Dear Sirs:—My spoons are beauties. I am very proud of them. There are not more than 25 people here but I will try to get up a club, I want some more so much.

(Signed) Mrs. Flora G. William
Inter Lachen,

Parkersburg, W. Va., July 15, 95.
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Dear Sirs:—Your prompt delivery appreciated. The spoons received and are very much pleased with them. They are pretty I think you will get another order from here, from a party who has seen mine.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) Miss M. L. Bartl
1330 St. Mary

Stuart, Neb., July 2 [illegible]
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:—Enclosed find postoffice order for $11.88 which please send me [illegible] sets of souvenir spoons and premium.

The set I received yesterday are pronounced excellent.

DESCRIPTION OF SOUVENIR SPOONS.

They are standard after-dinner coffee size, heavily coin silver plated, with gold plated bowls, each spoon has a different World's Fair building exquisitely engraved in the bowl, and the handles are finely chased, showing a raised head of Christopher Columbus with the dates 1492-1803, and the World's Fair City. The set is packed in an elegant plush lined case. The entire set is sent prepaid for 99 cents, and if not perfectly satisfactory your money will be refunded.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Below will be found a few of the many thousands of cordial letters we are receiving from delighted purchasers. These are not old letters but new ones as may be seen from their dating. They are all letters from subscribers of religious papers.

Baltimore, July 2, 1895.
To the Messrs. Leonard Mfg. Co.

I received the spoons and berry dish in good condition. Many thanks for your kindness. Please find money order for six more sets with which you will also send the spoons as premium. By so doing you will oblige,

Mrs. Dr. August Horn, 732 W. Mulberry St.

Meriden, Miss., Aug. 6, 1895.
Leonard Mfg. Co.

Gentlemen:—I send enclosed postoffice order for $7 30 for which please send to my address, one case of your silverware, containing tablespoons, teaspoons and butter plates, six of each and butter knife and sugar spoon. Also six sets of World's Fair spoons. Please send a cake basket as premium for the souvenir spoons. I think I can get orders for several cake baskets when I have one to show the ladies, also butter dishes. This is the tenth set of spoons that I have ordered of you. All are pleased with them. Please address,

Mrs. Frank Meyers, 343 41st Ave

Trusting to hear from you promptly I did on my last order, I am, Yours truly

S. L. An[illegible]

Little Rock, Ark., July [illegible]
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I enclose a money o[illegible] $5.94 for six sets of your souvenir spoons 99c. for each set.

Would say I am very much pleased with set of souvenir spoons and they are [illegible] by every one. Very respectfully,

(Signed) Miss Mary Vassie Har[illegible]
1511 K[illegible]

5 Mansfield St., Alston [illegible]

Dear Sirs:—I feel very much pleased with my spoons, and will endeavor to send [illegible] orders soon. Yours respectfully

(Signed) Miss [illegible]

Fort Morgan, Colo., July [illegible]
Leonard Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen:—I received your card the morning in regard to the spoons sent us. They came all right and we were well pleased with them. Mrs. Seckner showed them to a number of her lady friends, and all wanted them, but all did not feel as though they could take [illegible]

Yours truly
Rev. H. D. S[illegible]

SUMMARY.

If the reader will glance over the "Description of the Souvenir Spoons" there can be no doubt of the genuine bargain that is offered.

The six spoons in plush lined case will be sent prepaid on receipt of 99 cents by postoffice or express money order. Do not send personal checks. If you are not satisfied with the spoons your money will be refunded. No goods sent on approval. Address order plainly. Leonard Mfg. Co.,
152-153 Michigan Ave., G. B., Chicago

MISSIONS IN MADAGASCAR.

Madagascar, which the natives know by the name of the "Isle of the Wild Boars," is separated from the African continent by the channel of Mozambique. Its area is 5[illegible],000 square kilometers, or 64,000 kilometers greater than France; its greatest length, 580 kilometers, with a coast line of 4[illegible]0 kilometers.

Its inhabitants number in the neighborhood of 5,000,000, and are in great part Mays, then Hindoos, Arabs, and negro slaves brought in from Africa. The Hovas are the most powerful race, and are the rulers of the centre and eastern part of the island, and after them the Sakalaves, who, sustained by the French, preserve a certain independence.

The London Missionary Society in 1869 succeeded in converting the queen to Protestantism, having persuaded her that she would gain greater control over her people, and a number of natives did follow her example. Naturally this has become the most powerful of the Christian societies, and it claims twenty-seven stations, with twenty-nine European missionaries (four females), 895 native pastors, 4,208 evangelists. These have baptized 46,000 natives, and 200,000 others attend their services. The society has founded 893 schools, attended by 66,000 children. The English Quakers also have 139 churches, a hospital capable of accommodating 600 patients, and a school for medical students and nurses. Among the Sakalaves the Norwegians have a mission with twenty-one stations, 424 schools, a normal school, a printing office, etc., and 60,000 adherents.

New Kidney and Bladder Cure.

A new botanic discovery Alkavis, is an assured cure for kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back and rheumatism. The best proof is that the Church Kidney Cure Company, 41 Fourth Avenue, New York, will send you treatment by mail prepaid free, if you send them your name and address. Alkavis has certainly wrought some wonderful cures, and we advise our readers to try it, as it is offered free.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has permanently cured many thousands of cases of scrofula, rheumatism, nervousness, and other troubles because it purifies and vitalizes the impoverished blood.

Wakeful Nights

Will wear out anyone—pain is about the same whoever has it—but nervous or sick headache is almost at once relieved by Phenyo-Caffein trial box free.—if others who suffer from neuralgia or periodic pains can have refreshing sleep, so can you—ask them.

All druggists, 25c. A 10c. trial box mailed free.

Phenyo-Caffein Co. Worcester, Mass.

5

BAILEY'S RUBBER

GLOVE-CLEANER

Cleans kid gloves by rubbing the dirt off, not in. Requires no moisture, no soap nor other preparation whatever; tends to injure the kid. At all dealers or sent by mail post-paid, 10 Cents.

Catalogue of Everything in Rubber Goods Free.

C. BAILEY & CO., 22 Boylston St., Boston.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.

OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.

SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

THE LUXURY OF SECURITY IS FOUND IN THE DE LONG PATENT HOOK AND EYE. SEE THAT HUMP?

RICHARDSON & DE LONG BROS. PHILADELPHIA

Leaders of Fashion

Endorse Fibre Chamois as the best support for puffed sleeves and flare skirts in the market.

CAUTION—Beware of imitations. The genuine article is plainly stamped .....

Fibre Chamois

All dry goods stores. Three weights.

Don't Buy Dry Goods

UNTIL YOU SEE OUR

ILLUSTRATED

FASHION CATALOGUE

(For Fall and Winter, '95-'96).

Get all the others you please, but before purchasing get ours; it is yours for the asking,

FREE OF POSTAGE.

WE OFFER:

Only reliable goods at bottom prices. Your money back for any goods not satisfactory. Goods delivered FREE OF CHARGE to all parts of the U. S. when orders amount to stated sums.

$500 IN PREMIUMS given semi-annually to the purchasers through our catalogue.

Watch for the Bargain Sheet in our catalogue. Goods offered at 25 per cent below regular prices.

Send postal for our Catalogue C, containing over 100 illustrated pages with special bargain offers.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.

West 125th St. bet. Lenox and 7th Avenues New York.

A LESSON IN COOKING

When a recipe calls for a cupful of lard or butter, use two-thirds of a cupful of Cottolene—the new shortening—instead. It improves your food, improves your health, saves your money—a lesson in economy, too. Genuine COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK CO., CHICAGO.

St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

CATALOGUE

FREE

Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturers in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. Don't pay a profit to agents and middle-men. TERMS to suit. No money asked in advance. Privilege of testing organ or piano in your own home 30 days. No expense to you if not satisfactory. Warranted 25 years.

REFERENCE Bank references furnished on application, the editor of this paper; any business man of this town, and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials sent with every catalogue. As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $159. The first Organ only $25, Stool, Book, &c., FREE, If you want to buy for cash, If you want to buy on instalments, BUT DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU Write Us.

BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO., P. O. Box , WASHINGTON, N. J.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

TRADE + AMOLIN + MARK

the only Odorless Antiseptic Dress Shield

PAT. JAN. 26 1897

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

(A new coal tar product.)

The Only A New Remedy

odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.

soothing, healing, antiseptic for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

Do You Knit, or do other Fancy Work?

Crochet

If so, ask your dealer for the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread or send ten cents in stamps and receive a sample spool, 500 yards, by mail. You will pronounce it as thousands of other ladies have, the best you have ever used. Try it.

Glasgo Lace Thread Co., Glasgo, Conn.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR MUSIC STUDENTS, with unusual advantages. Number limited. Send stamp for particulars. Address Madame A. PUPIN, Chickering Hall, N. Y. City.

Turkish TOWELS

A big Turkish Towel—not too harsh—affords the most refreshing rub after the bath. We have just the right kind, they are 22 by 45 inches in size and are made of undressed, double yarn. Shrewd buying enables us to sell them at the remarkably low price of

18 Cents Each,

or Two for 35 Cents.

We pay the postage.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER,

Dry Goods, PHILADELPHIA

The Pin That Pins

as stiff as a nail—as sharp as a needle—the Puritan Pin—sold everywhere

If you can't buy them at your store, send five 2 cent stamps to American Pin Co., Waterbury, Conn.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Ladies Send this adv and 15c. in Stamps and we will mail you one-quarter lb Sample of Best T Imported. Any kind you may order. GOOD INCOMES—BIG PREMIUMS, &c.

C. H. The Great American Tea Co. Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York

WALL PAPER.

Samples free from largest Wall Paper concern in U. S.

KAYSER & ALLMAN 932-934 Market St. 418 Arch St. Philada.

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES.

From New York. A DELIGHTFUL TRIP BY SEA to the Ports of TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Through Tickets. Single and Return, to all points in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, &c., Georgia and Florida. Write for our 64-page Prospectus, mailed free

C. H. MALLORY & Co., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

At all grocery stores east of the Rocky Mountains two sizes of Ivory Soap are sold; one that costs five cents a cake, and a larger size. The larger cake is the more convenient and economical for laundry and general household use. If your Grocer is out of it, insist on his getting it for you.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

"Pure and Sure."

Cleveland's BAKING POWDER

Strongest of all pure cream of tartar baking powders.
See the latest U. S. Govt. Report.

There are two classes of bicycles—

COLUMBIAS

and others

Columbias sell for $100 to everyone alike, and are the finest bicycles the world produces. Other bicycles sell for less, but they are not Columbias.

POPE MFG. CO., HARTFORD, CONN.

You See Them Everywhere

ELEGANT FLOWERING BULBS.

Sent by Mail, postpaid, at the following special prices:

3 named	HYACINTHS,	different colors, fine, for	10 cents.
5 "	TULIPS,	lovely sorts, all different, "	10 "
4 "	NARCISSUS,	" " "	10 "
3	JAPAN LILIES,	" " "	10 "
10	CROCUS, 5 sorts, named,	"	10 "
10	FREESIAS, fine mixed sorts,	"	10 "
1	BLACK CALLA, new, from Palestine,	"	10 " or the whole 36 Bulbs, postpaid, for 50 cents.

OUR CATALOGUE, ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED, of all kinds of Plants and Bulbs, for Fall Planting and Winter Blooming, also new Fruits, Shrubs, etc., is now ready, and will be mailed FREE to all who apply. Choicest Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, and other Bulbs, at greatly reduced prices. Write for it at once. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, FLORAL PARK, N.Y.

Cut this out and PIN IT where YOUR WIFE will See it.

THE Shawknit HALF-HOSE

Save the Housewife Work

THEY WEAR A LONG TIME

BEFORE DARNING BECOMES NECESSARY.

They are the Most Durable half-hose in the market. They are also the Best-Fitting.

Descriptive Price-List, FREE, to any Applicant.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass

THE JACKSON SANATORIUM

At DANSVILLE, NEW YORK

For thirty-seven years the leading Health Institution in America, is under the personal care of regularly educated and experienced physicians, and is distinctive in its methods and character.

A delightful home for health and rest seekers in which every provision is made for recreation, comfort, and good cheer as well as for skilled medical care and treatment.

Main Building Absolutely Fire-proof.

For illustrated pamphlet address
J. ARTHUR JACKSON, M. D., Sec.
P. O. Box 1865.

The Puritan Oil Heater

(No. 44 only $6, freight prepaid) is a great comfort where heat is needed a short time only—rather than use a chilly room or attic—good for regular heating, too. You can carry it to any part of your house without trouble. Always ready—starts in a moment—stops as easy—entirely free from smell, ashes, dust and perfectly safe—guaranteed to satisfy or money returned—larger and smaller sizes, catalogue free. Sold also by dealers

The Cleveland Foundry Co.,
81 Main St., Cleveland, O.

4

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Grown Cleaning. NO Cracking, Crumbling.

Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-86 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

FREE! FREE!

SAVE MONEY!

Send for our new 1895 Catalogue, illustrated in colors, containing full descriptions of and our Pianos and Organs. REMEMBER, we are the only firm of actual manufacturers selling exclusively to the general public direct, at factory cost—the only firm where you get the Real Exact Value for your money. There are no agents', dealers' or middlemen's profits added.

CASH or on EASY PAYMENTS, to suit your circumstances. Pianos and Organs shipped on 30 days' trial in your own home under our special warrant for 25 years. No money required in advance. Safe delivery to purchaser guaranteed. TERMS.—No Satisfaction, No Pay.

REFERENCES: Our bank, your bank any bank, the editor of this paper, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars worth of instruments from us during the past 30 years. A list of ten thousand recent patrons sent with every catalogue free.

NOTE.—As an advertisement we will sell to the first purchaser in a place one of our finest PIANOS, specially fitted and finished for only $160, or one of our latest PARLOR ORGANS for $25. ALL EXTRAS for each instrument FREE

Don't fail to write at once to CORNISH & CO., Washington, New Jersey. Established nearly 30 years.

FENCING

DURABLE LIGHT STRONG

Costs LEAST, Lasts LONGEST, Looks BEST.

—FOR THE—

Farm, Garden, Lawn, Cemetery & Railroad.

Catalogue Free. CLEAVELAND FENCE CO., 46 Biddle Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power

Power Leverage 64 to 1 STEEL

Send for 64 page Illustrated catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

400 Consumptives Cured

By using Congreve's Balsamic Elixir

Send 25 cents for Treatise on Consumption, containing interesting accounts of nearly all the above cases, and the late Rev'd C. H. SPURGEON'S hearty endorsement of the treatment. Treatise will be sent free with Trial Bottle of the Elixir for $1.00. Other sizes, $1.75, $3.75 and $7.00.

and London, England. GEO. T. CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York

SUITS FROM $6 UP.

OVERCOATS, $8, $10, $12.

WE ARE MANUFACTURERS and sell WARRANTED ALL WOOL and WELL MADE SUITS and OVERCOATS, certain to fit, at such prices as these:

Men's suits $5 to $12. Overcoats, $8, $10 and $12. Boys' suits $2, $3, $5, $8. Children's suits $1, $1.50. Boys' overcoats, $6 and up. Every suit and overcoat is shipped C. O. D. with privilege of examination. If you don't like it send it back—the expense is ours. Elegant sample book with clothes, style prices and measuring instructions FREE. We refer by permission to the Merchants' Nat'l Bank, Chicago.

Address All Wool Clothiers, Dept. A Chicago.

To Hatch 80 per cent. Self Regulating. Durable, Correct in Principle. Leader at World's Fair. 6cts. in stamps for new 112 page Poultry Guide and Catalogue, POULTRY FOR PROFIT made plain. Bed-Rock Information.

Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co., Quincy, Ill.

WRINGING WET

AMERICAN WRINGER CO. WARRANTED.

AMERICAN WRINGER CO. WARRANTED.

Clothes is a part of every wash. Does your wringer wring dry? Do the rolls wear well? Be sure on both these points, when purchasing a Wringer, by insisting on having the WARRANTED ROLLS of the AMERICAN WRINGER CO., the largest manufacturers of wringers and Rolls in the world, with a capital of $2,500,000 back of their warrant. See our name and warrant stamp on Rolls. Books of useful wringer information FREE. Address 99 Chambers Street, New York.

BERKSHIRE, Chester White, Jersey Red & Poland China PIGS. Jersey, Guernsey & Holstein Cattle. Thoroughbred Sheep, Fancy Poultry, Hunting and House Dogs. Catalogue.

S. W. SMITH, Cochranville, Chester Co., Pa.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. Some scientific invention different from all other devices. Thoroughly safe, simple, comfortable and invisible. Use Drums in the world. Helps nature as medical skill fails. Sold on trial—if not satisfactory after a month. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices: 1223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky. 1122 Broadway, New York.

CRIPPLES, Ladies and girls. If you want air or exercise, buy a FAIRY hand or foot power TRICYCLE CHEAP FOR ALL.

FAY MFG. CO., 1 Pine St., Elyria, O.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free of charge, recipe how to grow hair upon a bare head or baldness, however long standing. Address

Altenheim Medical Dispensary,
40 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

CARD PRINTER FREE

E. H. Ingersoll & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

A CHAUTAUQUA RECLINING CHAIR FREE WITH A CERTAIN BOX OF "SWEET HOME" SOAP FOR $10.00. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO. BUFFALO, N.Y.

ONLY $1 FROM NOW UNTIL AFTER ELECTION, November, 18

The New York Weekly Recorder, largest and best family newspaper, will be sent from now until after election, November, 1896, for only $1. Keep posted from start to finish. THE WEEKLY RECORDER has all the news and opinions every deserving cause, whether Republicans or Democrats be the guide. Special Department for Women, edited and illustrated by women, containing latest New York and Paris fashions.

12 Beautiful Colored Pictures perfect copies of famous oil paintings, size 16 1-2 by 8 3-4 inches, will be presented free to all who accept this offer. FR

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED

by INVISIBLE Ear Cushions. Have helped more to good HEARing than all other devices combined. Whispers HEARd. Help ears as glasses do eyes. F. Hiscox, Mail Bldg., N.Y. Book of proofs FREE.

WONDER CABINET FREE, Missing Link Puzzle, Fairy Bottle, Pocket Camera, Latest Wire Puzzle, Spirit Photos, Total Value 60c sent Free with immense catalogue of 1000 Bargains for 10c, for postage. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

Ideal Spring Beds Our booklet, "Wide awake about sleep," illustrating and describing them, together with an up-to-date pocket map of State, sent on receipt of three two cent stamps.

Foster Bros. M'f'g Co., Clay St., Utica, N.

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need boiling. Made in a jiffy, in boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 18. NUMBER 39.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 25, 1895.

PRICE 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

COPYRIGHT, 1895, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

CHRIST'S WORK IN FORMOSA.

How Faithful Missionaries Have Lifted Up the Cross Among Savages—The Story of Rev. George L. MacKay's Twenty-three Years' Consecrated Labor.

FORMOSA, an island in the Pacific, and less than a hundred miles from the Chinese mainland, is rapidly coming into prominence. Japan has transferred a portion of her fleet and armies thither, with the purpose of subduing the courageous and warlike aborigines, who, during the present month, have been making a desperate resistance to the Mikado's victorious progress. Little doubt remains that a military occupation of Formosa will result early in the Japanese possession of the island and that it will soon pass entirely into Japanese control. The latter portion of the island has been a persistent and successful—

FORMOSA ABORIGINES EATING RICE.
Photographed by Dr. G. L. MacKay.)

—ly so than any other man living, to enlighten the world concerning Formosa and its people. Rev. George Leslie MacKay is the missionary hero of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and has labored in Formosa for the last twenty-three years. When his labors began in North Formosa in 1872, that country was a virgin field for the Gospel; in all its cities, on its plains and its mountains, there was not a church or chapel. Dr. MacKay carried on the work almost without foreign helpers and under his faithful care, it has been most signally blessed. To-day there are in his mission, scattered throughout North Formosa, 60 organized native churches, four of them self-supporting—a living active membership of 2719, a communion roll of 1805 and sixty native preachers, one in each of the churches. At Tamsui, he has established a college, where a number of students are in training for the ministry, besides a school for the education of girls and Bible-women, and a hospital dispensary. Fourteen college and church buildings have been erected at Tamsui, Bougkah, Toa-tin-tia, Sin-tiam and other cities, nearly all of them of an architectural style and general character that would be creditable in Europe or the United States. The better to carry on his work, he married a Chinese lady of position and culture. Dr. MacKay has lately had in preparation a book on Formosa, which is intended to afford the reading world an opportunity of better acquaintance with that practically unknown country. It is not alone the record of his twenty-three years of mission-

(Continued on page 619.)

A VILLAGE IN EASTERN FORMOSA
(Photographed by Dr. MacKay.)

DR. G. L. MACKAY AND A GROUP OF YOUNG FORMOSAN SAVAGES.
(By Permission Fleming H. Revell Co., Publishers.)

—the coast, however; for although the pig-savage mountain tribes—immediate descendants of wholly savage aborigines—are still wild and unconquered, the people of the plains and the coast have, through long intercourse with the Chinese

ROUGH SAILING.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Mark 4: 36, 37, "And there were also with him other little ships, and there arose a great storm of wind."

TIBERIAS, Galilee and Gennesaret were three names for the same lake. It lay in a scene of great luxuriance. The surrounding hills, high, terraced, sloping, gorged, were so many hanging gardens of beauty. The streams rumbled down through rocks of grey and red limestone, and flashing from the hillside, bounded to the sea. In the time of our Lord the valleys, headlands, and ridges were covered thickly with vegetation, and, so great was the variety of climate, that the palm tree of the torrid and the walnut tree of rigorous climate were only a little way apart. Men in vineyards and olive gardens were gathering up the riches for the oil-press. The hills and valleys were starred and crimsoned with flowers, from which Christ took his text, and the disciples learned lessons of patience and trust. It seemed as if God had dashed a wave of beauty on all the scene until it hung dripping from the rocks, the hills, the oleanders. On the back of the Lebanon range the glory of the earthly scene was carried up as if to set it in range with the hills of heaven.

No other gem ever had so exquisite a setting as beautiful Gennesaret. The waters were clear and sweet, and thickly inhabited, tempting innumerable nets, and affording a livelihood for great populations. Bethsaida, Chorazin, and Capernaum stood on the bank, roaring with wheels of traffic and flashing with splendid equipages, and shooting their vessels across the lake, bringing merchandise for Damascus and passing great cargoes of wealthy product. Pleasure boats of Roman gentlemen, and fishing smacks of the country people who had come down to cast a net there, passed each other with nod and shout and welcome, or side by side swung idly at the mooring. Palace and luxuriant bath and vineyard, tower and shadowy arbor, looked off upon the calm sweet scene as the evening shadows began to drop, and Hermon, with its head covered with perpetual snow, in the glow of the setting sun looked liked a white-bearded prophet ready to ascend in a chariot of fire. I think we shall have a quiet night! Not a leaf winks in the air, or a ripple disturbs the surface of Gennesaret. The shadows of the great headlands stalk clear across the water. The voices of evening-tide, how drowsily they strike the ear—the splash of the boatman's oar, and the thumping of the captured fish on the boat's bottom, and those indescribable sounds which fill the air at nightfall. You hasten up the beach of the lake a little way, and there you find an excitement as of an embarkation. A flotilla is pushing out from the western shore of the lake—not a squadron with deadly armament: not a clipper to ply with valuable merchandise; not [illegible] to hug to death whatever they could seize, but a flotilla laden with messengers of light, and mercy, and peace. Jesus is in the front ship; his friends and admirers are in the small boats following after. Christ, by the rocking of the boat and the fatigues of the preaching exercises of the day, is induced to slumber, and I see him in the stern of the boat, with a pillow perhaps extemporized out of a fisherman's coat, sound asleep. The breezes of the lake run their fingers through the locks of the worn-out sleeper, and on its surface there riseth and falleth the light ship, like a child on the bosom of its sleeping mother! Calm night. Starry night. Beautiful night. Run up all the sails, and ply all the oars, and let the boats—the big boat and the small boats—go gliding over gentle Gennesaret.

The sailors prophesy a change in the weather. Clouds begin to travel up the sky and congregate. After a while, even the passengers hear the moan of the storm, which comes on with rapid strides, and with all the terrors of hurricane and darkness. The boat, caught in the sudden fury, trembles like a deer at bay, amid the wild clangor of the hounds. Great patches of foam are flung through the air. The loosened sails, flapping in the wind, crack like pistols. The small boats poised on the white cliff of the driven sea tremble like ocean petrels, and then plunge into the trough with terrific swoop until a wave strikes them with thunder-crack, and overboard go the cordage, the tackling, and the masts, and the drenched disciples rush into the stern of the boat, and shout amid the hurricane, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" That great Personage lifted his head from the fisherman's coat, and walked out to the prow of the vessel, and looked upon the storm. On all sides were the small boats tossing in helplessness, and from them came the cries of drowning men. By the flash of lightning I see the calmness of the uncovered brow of Jesus, and the spray of the sea dripping from his beard. He has two words of command—one for the wind, the other for the sea. He looks into the tempestuous heavens, and he cries, "Peace!" and then he looks down into the infuriate waters, and he says, "Be still!" The thunders beat a retreat. The waves fall flat on their faces. The extinguished stars rekindle their torches. The foam melts. The storm is dead. And while the crew are untangling the cordage and the cables, and baling out the water from the hold of the ship, the disciples stand wonder-struck, now gazing into the calm sky, now gazing into the calm sea, now gazing into the calm face of Jesus, and whispering one to another, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"

I learn, first, from this subject that when you are going to take a voyage of any kind you ought to have Christ in the ship. The fact is, that those boats would all have gone to the bottom if Christ had not been there. Now, you are about to voyage out into some new enterprise—into some new business relation; you are going to plan some great matter of profit. I hope it is so. If you are content to go along in the treadmill course and plan nothing new, you are not fulfilling your mission. What you can do by the utmost tension of body, mind, and soul, that you are bound to do. You have no right to be colonel of a regiment if God calls you to command an army. You have no right to be stoker in a steamer if God commands you to be admiral of the navy. You have no right to engineer a ferry-boat from river bank to river bank if God commands you to engineer a Cunarder from New York to Liverpool. But whatever enterprise you undertake, and upon whatever voyage you start, be sure to take Christ in the ship. Here are men largely prospered. The seed of a small enterprise grew into an accumulated and overshadowing success. Their cup of prosperity is running over. Every day sees a commercial or a mechanical triumph. Yet they are not puffed up. They acknowledge the God who grows the harvests, and gives them all their prosperity. When disaster comes that destroys others, they are only helped into higher experiences. The coldest winds that ever blew down from snow-capped Hermon and tossed Gennesaret into foam and agony could not hurt them. Let the winds blow until they crack their cheeks; let the breakers boom—all is well, Christ is in the ship. Here are other men, the prey of uncertainties. When they succeed, they strut through the world in great vanity, and wipe their feet on the sensitiveness of others. Disaster comes, and they are utterly down. They are good sailors on a fair day, when the sky is clear and the sea is smooth; but they cannot outride a storm. After awhile the packet is tossed abeam's end, and it seems as if she must go down with all the cargo. Push out from the shore with lifeboat, longboat, shallop, and pinnace. You cannot save the crew. The storm twists off the masts. The sea rises up to take down the vessel. Down she goes? No Christ in that ship.

I speak to young people whose voyage in life will be a mingling of sunshine and of darkness, of Arctic blast and of tropical tornado. You will have many a long, bright day of prosperity. The skies clear, the sea smooth. The crew exhilarant. The boat stanch will bound merrily over the billows. Crowd on all the canvas. Heigh, ho! Land ahead! But suppose that sickness puts its bitter cup to your lips; suppose that death overshadows your heart; suppose misfortune with some quick turn of the wheel, hurls you backward; suppose that the wave of trial strikes you athwart-ships, and bowsprit shivered, and halliards swept into the sea, and gangway crowded with piratical disasters, and the wave beneath, and the sky above, and the darkness around are filled with the clamor of the voices of destruction. Oh! then you will want Christ in the ship.

I learn, in the next place, that people who follow Christ must not always expect smooth sailing. When these disciples got into the small boats they said: "What a delightful thing this is! Who would not be a follower of Christ when he can ride in one of these small boats after the ship in which Jesus is sailing?" But when the storm came down these disciples found out that following Jesus did not always make smooth sailing. So you have found out and so I have found out. If there are any people who you would think ought to have a good time in getting out of this world, the Apostles of Jesus Christ ought to have been the men. Have you ever noticed how they got out of the world? St. James lost his head. St. Phillip was hung to death against a pillar. St. Matthew was struck to death by a halberd. St. Mark was dragged to death through the streets. St. James the Less had his brains dashed out with a fuller's club. St. Matthias was stoned to death. St. Thomas was struck through with a spear. John Huss in the fire, the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the Scotch Covenanters—did they always find smooth sailing? Why go so far? There is a young man in a store in New York who has a hard time to maintain his Christian character. All the clerks laugh at him, the employers in that store laugh at him; and when he loses his patience they say: "You are a pretty Christian." Not so easy is it for that young man to follow Christ. If the Lord did not help him hour by [illegible] he would fail. There are scores of [illegible] men to-day who would be willing to testify that in following Christ one does not always find smooth sailing. There is a Christian girl. In her home they [illegible] like Christ. She has hard work to get a silent place in which to say her prayers. Father opposed to religion. Mother opposed to religion. Brothers and sisters opposed to religion. The Christian girl does not always find it smooth sailing when she tries to follow Jesus. But be of good cheer. As seafarers, when winds are dead [illegible] by setting the ship on starboard tack and bracing the yards, make the winds themselves propose the course propel the ship forward, so opposing troubles, through Christ, bring around the bowsprit of faith, will waft you to heaven, when, if the winds had been abaft, they might have rocked and [illegible] you to sleep, and while dreaming the destined port of heaven you could not have heard the cry of warning and would have gone crashing into the breakers.

Again, my subject teaches me that good people sometimes get very much frightened. From the tone and manner of the disciples as they rushed into the stern of the vessel and woke Christ up, you know that they are fearfully scared. And so it now that you often find good people wilderness tated. "Oh!" says some Christian man, "the infidel magazines, the bad newspapers, the spiritualistic societies, the importation of so many foreign errors, the Church of God is going to be lost, the ship is going to founder! The ship is going down!" What are you frightened about? A old lion goes into his cavern to take sleep, and he lies down until his shaggy mane covers his paws. Meanwhile, the spiders outside begin to spin webs over the mouth of his cavern, and say: "That lion can not break out through this web and this web and they keep on spinning the gossamer each until they get the mouth of the cavern covered over. "Now," they say, "the lion's done, the lion's done." After awhile the lion awakes and shakes himself, and he walks out from the cavern, never knowing there were any spiders' webs, and with his voice he shakes the mountain. So the infidels and the sceptics of this day go on spinning their webs, spinning their flimsy gossamer theories, spinning them over the place where Christ seems to be sleeping. They say: "Christ can never again come out; the work is done; he can never get through this logical web we have been spinning." The day will come when the Lion of Judah's tribe will rouse him from and come forth and shake mightily the [illegible] What then all your gossamer theories? What is a spider's web to an aroused lion? Do not fret, then, about the world's going backward. It is going forward.

Your stand on the banks of the sea when the tide is rising. The almanac says the tide is rising, but the wave comes up to a certain point, and then it recedes. "Ah," you say, "the tide is going back." No it is not. The next wave comes up a little higher, and it goes back. Again you say the tide is going out. And the next time the wave comes to a higher point, and then to a higher point. Notwithstanding these recessions, at last all the shipping of the world knows it is high tide. So it is with the cause of Christ in the world. One day it comes up to one point, and we are greatly encouraged. Then it seems to go back next year. We say the tide is going out. Next year it comes to a higher point and falls back, and next year it comes to a still higher point and falls back; but all the time it is advancing, until it shall say the tide, "and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of God as the waters fill the sea."

Again, I learn from this subject that Christ is God and man in the same person. I go into the back part of that boat and I look on Christ's sleeping face, and see in that face the story of sorrow and weariness, and a deeper shadow comes over his face, and I think he must be dreaming of the cross that is to come. As I stand in the back part of the boat looking on his face, ay: "He is a man! He is a man!" But en I see him come to the prow of the at, and the sea kneels in his presence, d the winds fold their wings at his com-and, I say: "He is God! He is God!" e hand that set up the starry pillars of the iverse wiping away the tears of an oran! When I want pity and sympathy, I into the back part of this boat, and I ok at him, and I say: "O Lord Jesus, u weary One, thou suffering One, have rcy on me." "Ecce homo!" Behold the n! But when I want courage for the nflict of life, when I want some one to lt down my enemies, when I want faith the great future, then I come to the front the boat, and I see Christ standing there i all his omnipotence, and I say: "O hrist, thou, who couldst hush the storm, u hush all my sorrows, all my temptans, all my fears." "Ecce Deus!" Bed the God!

learn also from this subject that Christ n hush the tempest. Some of you, my arers, have a heavy load of troubles.
me of you have wept until you can weep more. Perhaps God took the sweetest ld out of your house—the one that aske the most curious questions—the one that ng around you with greatest fondness.
e grave-digger's spade cut down through ur bleeding heart. Or perhaps it was t only one that you had, and your soul s ever since been like a desolated castle, ere the birds of the night hoot, amid the ing towers and along the crumbling rway. Or perhaps it was an aged ther that was called away. You used send for her when you had any kind of uble. She was in your home to welme your children into life, and when they d she was there to pity you. You know t the old hand will never do any more dnesses for you, and the lock of white h that you keep so well in the casket of e locket does not look so well as it did the day when she moved it back from e wrinkled forehead under the old-fashned bonnet in the church in the country.
perhaps your property has gone. You id: "There, I have so much in bank ck, so much I have in houses, so much ve in lands, so much I have in secures." Suddenly, it is all gone. Alas! for e man who once had plenty of money, d who has hardly enough now for the rning marketing. No storm ever swept er Gennesaret like that which has gone mpling its thunders over your quaking ul. But you awoke Christ in the back rt of the ship, crying, "Master, carest ou not that I perish?" and Christ rose d and quieted you. Jesus hushing the mpest.

here is one storm into which we must run. When a man lets go this life to ke hold of the next, I do not care how uch grace he has, he will want it all.
hat is that out yonder? That is a dying
Christian rocked on the surges of death.
inds that have wrecked magnificent llas of pomp and worldly power come wn on that Christian soul. All the mits of darkness seem to be let loose, for it their last chance. The wailing of kin-ed seems to mingle with the swirl of the ters, and the scream of the wind, and e thunder of the sky. Deep to deep, bil-w to billow; yet no tremor, no gloom, no ror, no sighing for the dying Christian.
The fact is that from the back part of the at a voice sings out: "When thou pass-st through the waters, I will be with thee."
In the flash of the storm the dying Chris-an sees that the harbor is only just ahead.
From heavenly castles voices of welcome me over the waters. Peace drops on the ary wave as the storm sobs itself to rest ke a child falling asleep amid tears and ssible. Christ hath hushed the tempest.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are found in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Christ's Work in Formosa.

Continued from first page.

ary effort—though that of itself were sufficiently remarkable to command the widest attention; it is the outcome of the most thorough study of the country and its people. It has been the privilege of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to peruse the advance sheets of Dr. MacKay's book: "From Far Formosa," shortly to be published by Fleming H. Revell Co., and to gather from the abundance of its narrative, some acquaintance with the strange people among whom he has labored. North Formosa has a teeming population, for whose souls, as it seemed to the young Gospel pioneer in 1872, "no one cared." Therefore he decided to cast his lot there.

The population of the island he soon discovered to be composed of Chinese or Mongolians, Pepohoan or civilized natives, and savages (probably of Malay origin), and he at once began to preach the Gospel in the Pepohoan villages. Many of those villages were in savage territory, where no white man had ever come. There was constant strife between the Pepohoan and the mountain tribes. The Chinese, being the dominant race, had brought with them their habits, religions and their household gods. The Pepohoan or "barbarians of the plains," are natives who have bowed to Chinese supremacy, while the "Lam-si-hoan" ("barbarians of the South"), are another class of aborigines, who have done likewise. The unsubdued and savage mountaineers are the "Chhi-hoan" or "raw barbarians," and the native who have settled among the Chinese in the west are styled "Sek-noah," or "ripe barbarians,"

FORMOSAN SAVAGES EQUIPPED FOR THE WARPATH.

Many were the trials encountered by the missionaries in their work among the natives of the interior and along the seacoast, and thrilling were some of their escapes from head-hunting expeditions led by savages from the interior, or from the "Black Flags" in the mountains. The mountaineers are armed with spears, swords, bows and arrows, in the use of which they are exceedingly skilful; indeed, some of the more expert could boast that they had slain hundreds of Chinese dwellers in the seacoast villages.

Dr. MacKay labored among the Chinese, the Sek-hoan, and in the Pepohoan villages with remarkable success, although the bitterest opposition was encountered by the missionary in his work on many different occasions. At the village of Chin-nik, regular preaching was begun by the kind invitation of a merchant of the place. The work prospered, and natives flocked to the meetings from distant parts of the country. Converts were made, and then the opposition among the outside population began to show itself in violent acts. Two converts were seized and brought before the mandarin, who declared that it was insolent on their part to forsake the religion of their fathers and to follow the "barbarian." With others they were dragged to prison, put in stocks, beaten with bamboo rods, compelled to kneel on red-hot chains, and finally both were executed. The two heads were put into buckets and carried to Bang-kah, the buckets being inscribed, "Jip kow-e lang than" (the heads of the Christians). Finally the heads were placed on the city gates. Several others of the same party of converts also yielded up their lives for Christ, and thus by the blood of martyrdom was the Gospel established.

Other and happier experiences were, however, not wanting. At Lam-hung-o ("south wind harbor"), the workers began to tell the Gospel message, but were repulsed at all hands. A second visit to the place elicited the same gruff reply, "No room here for barbarians." At last a hospitable native gave them shelter in a stable—for it was a stormy night. This was the first encouragement they had received there. Soon many were won over, and now a chapel, which the natives have named "MacKay Church," stands at Lam-hung-o in token of complete submission of the once heathen people to the gentle rule of the Redeemer.

Despite a multitude of obstacles and discouragements, the Gospel seed, sown in such perils, began to bear fruit among the Chinese, the Pepohoan, and the Lam-si-hoan. Of his efforts among the Pepohoan, Dr. MacKay writes:

"Having gained a foothold for the Gospel and established churches among the Chinese in the north and west, our attention began to be directed towards the civilized aborigines in the Kaptsu-lan plain on the east. I had already learned something of the Pepohoan character, and was prepared to find them more emotional, approachable and responsive than the Chinese, although perhaps less solid and stable. The obstacles to the Gospel among them were not different from those meeting us everywhere. They were all heathen, blinded by superstition, degraded by idolatry, and with few and weak aspirations after higher things.

"Setting out from Tamsui with a party of students, we made our way over the mountain ranges south of Kelung and entered the Kaptsu-lan plain. Traveling near the base of a mountain, we passed by the mouth of a ravine, and there we heard yells and screams. Immediately a Chinese came up, breathless, and reported that four of his companions had just been speared and beheaded by the savages, and that he escaped by dodging.

